Mr. Armstrong maintained that if the companies decided to utilize the profit sharing principle as a basis for negotiating their transit problem, they would not necessarily have to apply it immediately. The companies could continue negotiating for minimum payments, having the 50–50 principle in mind as a limit. If this limit should be reached, then the principle could be used as a basis for refusing to go further.

Mr. Hart disclosed that some consideration has been given to the possibility that the pipe line companies incorporate as separate entities and then make available blocs of stock to the public in the transit countries. This might create some internal pressure to help in limiting the governments' demands.

M. Blancard believed, however, that this possibility could cause considerable difficulties and could even become dangerous. He pointed out that as the investments in pipe lines are huge, the public could only afford a negligible share of ownership. Also such difficult questions would be raised as the price per share to be charged and whether or not the shares would be voting shares. Finally, it might be very difficult to refuse to permit the local government, if it should desire to do so, to obtain some of the outstanding shares.

Fourth Meeting, December 21, 1953, 3:00 p. m.

This final meeting began with a discussion by the group of the Iranian oil problem focusing attention primarily on the possible impact of its return to the world markets.

M. Clauzel outlined the French attitude concerning this problem. He noted that the most desirable solution would be for AIOC and the Government of Iran to negotiate a settlement between themselves. This would serve to uphold the important principle of the sanctity of contracts. M. Clauzel observed that the orderly return of Iranian oil to the world markets might require international cooperation. If a consortium should prove necessary then CFP believes it should be represented.

M. Blancard mentioned a few additional points of concern to France. He expressed the hope that any new solution proposed would not adversely affect existing concessions in neighboring countries. He noted that any additional advantages accruing to Iran under the settlement are sure to be requested by the neighboring countries. With respect to the marketing of Iranian oil, M. Blancard stated that the ideal solution would be for the oil to return to the world markets at a pace that would allow the increased production to be absorbed by the steadily increasing world consumption. However, if cutbacks in production in other countries should prove necessary, then they should preferably be applied world-wide rather than just in the Middle East. He noted that the cutbacks would be negligible on a world basis, but could be troublesome if confined to the Middle East.

Mr. Armstrong stated that the U.S. is interested in a prompt solution to the Iranian oil problem primarily because of strategic considerations. He observed that the current government in Iran is better in our view than any other that might replace it, but we cannot expect it to remain in power unless it manages to export some of its oil. Mr. Armstrong, however, recognized the British reluctance to agree to any arrangements without receiving just compensation for their properties. He agreed with the French that a solution should not endanger neighboring concessions. He also agreed that it would be preferable for the Iranians and the British to reach agreement themselves.

Mr. Armstrong continued by reporting that he had no information as to the specific compensation and marketing proposals being considered in London. He believed that a combination of increased world demand and cutbacks in the production of other Middle East countries would probably be necessary to allow Iran to resume exporting its oil. Mr. Armstrong concluded by noting that the domestic import problem will have to be taken into account by the U.S. Government in considering any solution. The domestic producers are gravely concerned over any international arrangements that might possibly lead to increased imports.

The group then agreed to turn the discussion to the problem of the appearance of Soviet oil on the world markets. M. Clauzel stated that for the first time since World War II, France has received offers of Soviet oil. Recently France was offered 400,000 tons of crude under the Franco-Russian Trade Agreement. Finland offered to resell to France 1,000,000 tons of Russian oil. Similar offers have been received from Israel and Austria. In addition, that Argentina, Uruguay, Italy and India also have been offered oil from the Soviet Bloc. M. Clauzel concluded that these Soviet attempts to increase exports could represent an effort to release a temporary surplus, an effort to gain long-term foreign markets, or an effort to disrupt the oil markets of the free world. If they represented either of the latter considerations, they would be of concern to the West and should be carefully watched.

Mr. Eakens noted Russia is committed to export about 3,000,000 tons of oil in 1953 as compared to 500,000 tons in 1952. He added that it was doubtful if Russia could fulfill all of its commitments for the year. Even so, their exports of only 60,000 barrels daily are very small as compared to the world consumption of 13,000,000 barrels daily.

Mr. Armstrong observed that up to now the Russians have generally attempted to obtain as much for their exports as possible and have avoided upsetting outside markets. He concluded that a danger signal to watch for would be Russian offers at a level under the current market prices.

In discussing the petroleum price situation, M. Clauzel noted that recent price behavior did not appear normal. At a time when large offerings of oil are on the world markets, prices should show a tendency to decrease. However, contrary to the laws of supply and demand prices have recently increased. M. Clauzel believed this tendency stemmed from the demands of the local rulers and the lack of solidarity on the part of the companies.

M. Blancard reiterated Western Europe's need for lower and more stable prices for oil. He pointed out that oil ranks with wool and cotton as the principal commodities requiring payment in dollars or sterling. He stated that he firmly believed that it is in the best interests of all concerned that the future consumption of petroleum products should not be retarded by too high a price level.

Mr. Eakens agreed that low oil prices were desirable in Western Europe. He stated that the recent increases in petroleum prices in the Middle East prevented those prices from becoming out of line with the prices prevailing in Venezuela and the U.S. Mr. Eakens added that the domestic producers justified their increases on the grounds that there had been no increase since 1948, while the costs of producing oil had risen markedly since that time. The domestic producers also claimed that increased prices were necessary to assure continued exploration and development in the U.S.

Mr. Hart began the group's discussion of existing government attitudes towards guiding or interfering in oil companies' negotiations with the ruling governments. He noted that Aramco has, from the beginning of its operations in 1933, dealt with the Saudi Arabian Government on its problems. During this time, the U.S. Government has not found it necessary to intervene on behalf of Aramco, although there have been frequent discussions between Aramco and the U.S. Government concerning those cases where U.S. interests are involved. Mr. Hart concluded by stating that he believed this has proved to be a particularly healthy situation.

M. Clauzel commented briefly on the French attitude as follows. He agreed that the companies should be given as much latitude as possible in their negotiations with the local governments. However, he noted that the companies, in view of their specific responsibilities, are mainly guided in their negotiations by mercantile considerations. Yet negotiations between the local governments and the oil companies usually involve problems that transcend purely mercantile interests and should not properly be left entirely up to the companies. M. Clauzel suggested that current problems should be discussed on a governmental level from time to time. The individual governments concerned could then make their viewpoints known to the companies, who in turn would negotiate within the framework of their governments over-all objectives. M. Clauzel then questioned whether the U.S. would agree to meet with England, France and Holland to discuss current petroleum problems.

Mr. Hart noted that such a meeting would have the danger of appearing to the Middle Eastern countries as though we were ganging up against them. Mr. Armstrong recalled the strong domestic reaction to the Anglo-American oil agreement and questioned whether the domestic reaction to a quadripartite meeting might not be so severe as to defeat its objectives.

M. Clauzel observed that the group agreed that such a meeting would be valuable, but that any publicity could be harmful. He therefore proposed that the meetings be confined to the usual diplomatic channels in an endeavor to avoid publicity.

Mr. Hart replied that we would have to defer an answer as to our position concerning the proposed quadripartite discussions. He then stated that Mr. Eakens had agreed to draft a paper setting forth the ideas expressed by the members of both delegations on each of the problems discussed. It was agreed by the group that the contents of these papers would not necessarily represent the official positions of the respective governments.

The group agreed to meet at 11:00 a. m. the following morning to discuss the draft papers.

883A.2553/12-2253: Telegram

CONFIDENTIAL BEIRUT, December 22, 1953.

542. Following are Embassy's comments on request of Prime Minister Yafi that USG urge American participants in IPC to accept renegotiation (Embtel 531, December 18): [2]

(1) Although there may be a certain degree of sincerity in request of Yafi and in agitation by others, primary motivation believed to be desire to exploit issue for local political or personal reasons. For example, in case of Prime Minister Yafi, it is former; in case of former Prime Minister Salaam, it is latter.

(2) Along with foregoing, there is no gainsaying fact that Lebanese, despite their inherent business sense, have allowed themselves to succumb to fallacious doctrine that the world, especially as epitomized in oil companies, owes them a living regardless of their own efforts at self-help or of value received by the companies.

(3) However, Embassy feels, as apparently do British and French Ambassadors, that present system of payments is defective in sense that it has no definable base of computation and is therefore difficult to defend irrespective of amount of revenue provided. Embassy understands that IPC management and participating companies also tend share this view and it is recalled that detailed studies of subject were submitted by former Petroleum Attaché here.

(4) Embassy also is inclined agree with British Ambassador that present government would probably be as amenable to reason as any which might be expected to replace it but it seems doubtful if, in view weakness of present regime, it could be expected to survive a normal period of negotiation.

(5) Foregoing leads to conclusion that, although present approach is partly a tactical move by present government in attempt to improve its tottering position, and although there is obvious fallacy in effort to relate increased oil revenue with alleged plans for raising living standard, basic situation is not satisfactory and should be reviewed in due course. Question is how to do so without giving impression of yielding to improper pressure. Answer must rest with IPC where British interest predominant, but believe we should at least tell American participants of approach by Prime Minister and how situation looks to us. Wish emphasize, however, that Embassy would not recommend opening negotiations at present time which would merely result in increased payments without a change of computing procedure. To do so would merely be interpreted as evidence of weakness and would set the stage for repeat performances. Possible compromise might be to insist on ratification of 1952 agreement as interim measure on understanding that negotiations for revised procedure would be undertaken and actively pursued. This could have advantage of saving face of both sides while assuring GOL of increased revenues, including back payments, until negotiations (which would probably be protracted) completed.

(6) Bearing of foregoing on Tapline is of course obvious and Embassy assumes Tapline interests would be fully considered in connection with any discussions with American participants in IPC.

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] January 13, 1954.

Replies have come in from five of the eight posts addressed. [2] Several reactions run consistently throughout these replies. In general there is doubt and skepticism in respect of the specific proposal. All recognize the needs and dangers in the present situation but tend to feel that a formal treaty is not, at least at this time, the best way to meet these needs and dangers. There is a fear it is too rigid and might bring more politics into petroleum matters.

There appears in several of the replies a preference for some kind of an international petroleum forum or council for advisory and study purposes which might evolve into a more formal relationship. The details vary but all picture something informal, free of any coercive arrangements, something along the lines of the Rubber Study Group.

The idea that the Arab countries are ganging up against the oil companies and the Western Governments tends to be discounted. There is, in fact, frequent recognition of the continuing lack of identical interests among the producing countries and the consequent possible advantage in pursuing our objectives on a country-by-country basis. It is admitted that conditions may get worse but feared that formal injection of Western Governments into the picture might hasten undesirable trends.

There follows a brief synopsis of the several replies that have come in:

1. Mr. Penfield—London [3]

Mr. Penfield and his associates consider any formal treaty premature—too much tension in Middle East for present launching of such an undertaking. Instead he sets forth the advantages of some kind of petroleum council along the lines of the Rubber Study Group which would publish statistical bulletins and various studies. Such an international forum would stimulate attention on common problems such as consumers trends, prices, transportation, etc. He thinks this would meet two of Mr. Beeley's three points and that London would view it with sympathy. He is not worried that a council of this type would stimulate "ganging up" on the part of Arab Governments.

[3] Letter from Penfield to Jernegan, Nov. 16, not printed. (880.2553/11-1653)

2. Mr. Moose—Damascus [4]

Ambassador Moose doubts if the proposed treaty is the best means of achieving U.S. objectives since the Near Eastern countries resist efforts to organize them; it is more difficult to deal with them collectively than individually. He feels that bringing in the transit states would not provide a helpful influence on producing states. He thinks government-to-government action tailored to each government is the best means towards fending off any trend toward nationalization. He sees need for more consultation all along the line but thinks that a treaty would add too much rigidity and formality. He recognizes, however, that our antitrust legislation limits less formal methods of consultation. He does not place great importance on the Petroleum Committee of the Arab League pointing out that much of the "ganging up" is done by newspapers and certain other elements which a treaty would not touch. Mr. Moose does not think Syria would be a party to any multilateral treaty.

3. Mr. Caffery—Cairo [5]

Ambassador Caffery does not think the Arab States would buy the treaty in the form proposed but only if it were set up in a way that would enable them to manipulate to their own advantage. Like Ambassador Moose he does not see the Petroleum Council as a great menace. He emphasizes the difficulties the Arab States have in achieving coordination. Egypt might like the treaty idea if it could be top dog or if it felt the treaty would enhance its relative position among petroleum states.

4. Mr. Berry—Baghdad [6]

Mr. Berry thinks IPC's relations with the Iraqi Government are as good as they have ever been; they have enjoyed a two-year honeymoon. The current pricing problem has been held to the technical level. He fears the proposed treaty would project oil into the political picture with potentially grave dangers. He notes that the Middle Eastern leaders have tended to shun partnerships with the West and that efforts toward cooperation have been singularly unsuccessful. He suggests as a possible alternative proposal some kind of an advisory group to study problems and make recommendations—a sort of international oil conference, meeting at a neutral place and having broad membership. He conceives of it as a technical forum with a limited advisory role which might reduce friction and help well intentioned governments resist undesirable local pressures. Such a scheme could evolve into a more binding arrangement.

5. Mr. Henderson—Tehran [7]

Ambassador Henderson sees problems in the proposed treaty yet conceives it possible that some kind of a form for advisory purposes might be useful. The treaty, he thinks, would increase the likelihood of Arab Governments consorting against the governments representing concession interests and thinks emotional and political factors would come more into the picture. The treaty would tend to align the United States back of the companies of other Western powers. If the proposal served an educational purpose, he is afraid the increased knowledge would be used against us. He recognizes the weaknesses in the present situation and the limiting nature of our antitrust legislation, but feels that the companies are in a fairly strong marketing position and that the Iranian nationalization episode may provide a lesson to other governments. The Arab Governments may eventually come together, yet their interests are not identical; they would tend to be coy in respect to an international treaty and suspicious of foreign governments injecting themselves into oil disputes. He surmises that Iran in the present state of affairs would not likely be able to participate. He suggests the safest long-range method of meeting the inevitable and formidable ganging together of the oil producing countries to be in the direction of probing other areas for new sources of petroleum thus making the United States and Europe less dependent on the Arab region. [8]

[7] Letter from Henderson to Jernegan, Nov. 12, not printed. (880.2553/11-1253)

[8] In a memorandum to Byroade, dated Jan. 19, not printed, Hoover agreed with Byroade's analysis of the problem. Hoover's reply stated that a situation existed which made the operations of American oil companies difficult in the Middle East, but he did not believe an International Petroleum Treaty as proposed in the Staff Study was the practical answer to the problem, and he agreed with the arguments against it. Editorial Note

On December 18, 1953, attorneys from Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Standard Oil Company of California, and The Texas Company met with Stanley Barnes, Assistant Attorney General, and Leonard J. Emmerglick, the prosecuting attorney for the Department of Justice in the case of The United States v. Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey) et al. The oil company representatives urged the Department of Justice to reappraise the suit because information in the possession of the companies caused them to believe that the national security, to the extent that it depended on Middle East oil, was being harmed by the suit.

In a letter to the General Counsel of The Texas Company, dated December 24, not printed, Barnes informed him that "it is our conclusion that we [the Department of Justice] must look to official governmental sources for information, and more particularly, evaluation of developments bearing upon a proper weighing of the relationship between anti-trust litigation and the national security . . . if any of the companies is in possession of information which it believes is not known to our Government and which has national security significance, we must assume it will come to us through the responsible governmental agencies, such as the State Department and the Central Intelligence Agency, to which it should be made available." (880.2553/4–554)

On January 5, 1954, representatives of Socony-Vacuum, Standard Oil of California, and The Texas Company wrote to the Secretary of State and requested an opportunity to present information in their possession which had national security significance. They advised that they were sending a similar letter to the Director of Central Intelligence. (880.2553/4–554) In a letter dated January 20, not printed, the Under Secretary of State informed the General Counsel of Socony-Vacuum that he would be happy to meet with representatives of the three companies on January 23 to discuss the information mentioned in the letter. (880.2553/4–554)

The only record of the January 23 meeting found in Department of State files is a 57-page (presumably verbatim) transcript. The first 43 pages of the document consist of a report given by James R. Withrow, a partner in the firm of Donovan, Leisure, Newton, and Irvine, attorneys for Socony-Vacuum. His report concerned a survey he had made on a trip to the Middle East with King and George W. Ray, General Counsel, Aramco, neither of whom was present at the meeting. Only some extracts of Withrow's Report are printed in the transcript of the January 23 meeting, infra. The last 14 pages of the document cover the question-and-answer period following Withrow's report, and that part of the transcript is printed in full. A complete copy of the transcript is in Department of State file 880.2553.

Assistant Secretary Byroade: We are here, I think, to listen and learn. I'd like to turn the meeting over to Mr. Foster. The show is yours.

Mr. Foster: Gentlemen, I'm going to apologize for a very bad voice and, because of that in part, I'm going to say very little except to introduce Mr. Withrow. You all know of the survey which we had made in the Middle East by Mr. Withrow and Mr. King with the assistance of Mr. Ray of Aramco.

Mr. Withrow is a lawyer. He is a partner in the firm of Donovan, Leisure, Newton and Irvine, and during World War II he was Chief of Mission in Indochina. So he made the survey not without background.

As I say, I'm not going to make any introduction. You know what we are talking about and what Mr. Withrow is here to explain to you, so I will ask Mr. Withrow to proceed.

Mr. Withrow: As Mr. Foster told you, I was one of two or three that made this survey in the Middle East. I went out there and tried to make this survey and reach my conclusions from the same point of view and with the same assessing of the people I talked to that I had employed when I was an officer in the service of the United States during the war and for a short period after the war.

Now, I'm here to present the facts as we found them on the very narrow issue of what would be the effect on the national interest of the United States if the civil case called the international oil cartel case would be revived in open court and with the attendant publicity that a case of that kind would have. This presentation is based on current information. We got back just before Christmas and we had been out there talking with people throughout the Middle East. The facts that we have are directed to the one narrow issue, as I say, of the effect of a revival of the case.

We tried to check and recheck our information with officials, business men and other people, so that I think all told we actually have assessed the opinions of around 75 or 80 people by firsthand contact. I think not all of you are aware of the development of this international oil cartel case. Let me just run over it.

Back in August of 1952 a staff report of the Federal Trade Commission on international oil was published and Grand Jury proceedings were begun here in Washington. Decisions were reached first by President Truman and his Security Council and apparently later by President Eisenhower and his, which resulted in the bringing of a civil suit and the dropping of the Grand Jury proceedings. The next step was on the first of September in 1953 the defendants filed their answers in considerable detail, setting forth their defenses.

It wasn't until we worked on the answer and filed the answer that we began to realize, as lawyers, that the issues in the civil case were at least equally damaging to the oil companies in the Middle East and, as we studied it further, we began to realize that the rumors that had been coming back in the form of reports from the field that the civil case was very dangerous, that the prestige of the United States and of the oil companies had been affected by the initial criminal case and that a publication of the civil case would also be detrimental.

I think that when the matter was changed from criminal to civil that, as American lawyers, we had the normal reaction, well, that is an improvement. But I think later on, as I go on with our story, I can show you—as it finally dawned on us—that actually the civil case is a greater threat than the crinimal case ever was or could have been because it's in the civil case that you drag out in the open the fact of an American court reviewing acts taking place within the inside of these Arab states; where an Arab, by the mere fact of the daily publication of what goes on in the trial, would get to learn that their own sovereignty or their control over acts in their country was being litigated and questioned in an American court.

It's in the civil case and not in the criminal case where the court considers the matter of the price of crude oil at the well, the level of those prices; and of course the level of those prices, if they are too high, in the civil case, you would force them down. That affects the economy of the Arab states very, very directly. And it's in the civil case and not in the criminal case that the court and the prosecution and defense will be discussing in detail the terms of the concession agreement, whether the concession agreement is proper under our law, whether the agreements to take the crude oil as produced are proper under the law. All of those things actually become more important to the Arab states and are more apparent to them under the civil case than under a criminal case.

[At this point General Smith joined the meeting.]

We came back, we offered the results of our survey to the Department of Justice and they referred us here and that is the reason we are here with this group.

Now, this survey did not purport to survey the tensions that exist in the Middle East. You people are more aware of them probably than we are. They certainly exist and everything that I say here, of course, must be taken in the background of those tensions that are there. We didn't go out to investigate the effect on the oil companies but rather the effects on the American community generally and on our national interest.

The conclusion, of course, is—or else I wouldn't be here—that it would have a very adverse effect, that any revival would be repeatedly exploited by the Communists directly or through the local nationalist movements in an effort to alienate the Middle East from America.

They had great difficulty—or rather even I would say an impossibility—of understanding how the United States Government could attack one of its companies out there. They just couldn't believe that there wasn't some connection between Aramco and the United States. I think that stems, as a matter of fact, as I cross examined and talked with them, from the fact that they are used to British and French companies in that area. And, of course, with these ones, when they get in trouble you find the French Government or the British Government out there fighting the battle for the company.

But they also had another point. They said, "Look, we are important business people, we have a lot of money. But we never could have gotten an oil concession in Saudi Arabia. It must have been the American Government that got that concession for Aramco." And they said the same thing about the Pipeline concessions through Syria, Lebanon and Jordan. They said, "We, as substantial businessmen out here, would never be given that sort of right. It must be your government."

Now, the important answer to that is, I think twofold. One, it means it's absolutely impossible for them to understand why the United States Government is bringing a suit and, second, and perhaps more important, that any time they get distrust of an American business interest of the type I'm talking about that distrust also covers the United States. I mean the Arab is not a completely logical person, at least on this point, so that any time the oil companies are torn down it in effect is a tearing down of the United States' own position. They just identify them that closely together.

I want to make it clear that I am distinguishing or trying to distinguish between the fact that these charges are used against the oil companies to get a bigger slice for the local country—I mean, that is true, they are used every day for that purpose, but what I am primarily talking about is the effect over and beyond the oil companies. Of course, when the effect on the oil companies is nationalization, I think you can see that that perhaps is an effect on the United States.

We talked, of course, in Saudi Arabia to the Aramco people, and looked around for what other people we could talk to. We were advised both by some representatives of the Company and by everybody we talked to that it was completely unsafe to talk to any Saudi Arab about this, that it would only result in the very thing that we were examining into, namely a use of the existence of the case against the United States in some way. Of course the Aramco people expressed a very clearcut opinion on this. They are at the firing line. They feel the effects every day. They feel the distrust and hostilities of the Saudi Arabs. As a matter of fact, 1953 was sort of a special year to the people in Aramco. For a while after the Federal Trade Commission report was handed down, nothing was said in Arabia about the report. Things seemed to be going along very nicely, except for one remark in the fall of 1952 about finally Saudi Arabia had a secret weapon. Well, nothing was said about this secret weapon until May, 1953, and the secret weapon turned out to be a copy of the staff report in Arabic. This was the first time that the existence of the case had ever been mentioned in any of the governmental negotiations, and beginning in May of 1953, the oil officials have been berated with the use of this report on the occasion of absolutely every meeting between the Saudi Arab Government representatives and representatives of the Oil Company. The Saudi Arabs have made it quite clear on some occasions that they think that maybe Aramco has been repudiated by the United States. The new King, in some of his first remarks, said that "I will deal fairly with anybody that deals fairly with me, and if my present friends are false, I will find friends elsewhere." That in effect was the gist of his remarks. There are people who feel that the whole structure of Aramco is even now undermined, but that is not the general feeling. They pointed out that the Saudi Arabs do not yet understand that the real gist of what is going to go on will be an examination into the actions which take place in Saudi Arabia. Up until now the use of that report has been—well, the innuendoes and things in that staff report which indicate perhaps sharp dealing or price fixing or things of that kind, and not the type of thing which is going to be investigated into in the civil case, which is whether or not there should be joint ownership of production in Saudi Arabia, and what the arrangements should be for the off-take of oil.

Frankly, when I went out on this trip I was skeptical about the results. I was skeptical that the effect would be as cataclysmic as some of the people had forecast in their letters back. I came back then, after what I think was a pretty thorough investigation, conducted with a willingness to have any thesis disproved and examination and reexamination and evaluation at every stage of the game. I might say—I should say that upon completing this, we, even in the field, threw up a part of this picture or all of it to the local American Ambassador for him to punch whatever holes or take whatever stand he wanted to. I feel a strong conviction myself that a revival of this case, with how it is going to be used out there, in the atmosphere that is there, would be very bad. I have a feeling that the result would be such a diminishing of U.S. influence and prestige that there would be a sort of vacuum in the Middle East, and I can't believe that a vacuum would exist there very long. I think Russia has indicated all too well its intentions and interests in the Middle East and would be only too glad to step in.

Assistant Secretary Byroade: I would like to ask one question. If this case proceeds—I am not a very good lawyer, but presumably it will cover matters internal in these countries and also cover matters of marketing that would be outside the Middle East. Isn't that correct?

Mr. Withrow: That's right. I was addressing myself entirely to the case as it affects the Middle East. If that aspect of the case weren't there, why, I wouldn't be here.

Assistant Secretary Byroade: In other words, the difficulties here in court about marketing this oil somewhere else in the world aren't really so much of a factor in your mind as the internal settlement?

Mr. Withrow: That's right.

Mr. Dorr: It's the inherent situation in this case on the company as it now stands and on the position the Government would appear to them to take of the invasion of the sovereignty and of the interests of these countries.

Assistant Secretary Byroade: But as the case now stands, these two, the external-internal aspects, are all thrown together?

Mr. Dorr: They are thrown together and are pretty inextricable in the minds of the people out there. They would never understand any attempt to separate them. It is really, as I would say from the things Jim has been putting before you, the effect on the oil companies is very largely the repercussions on them of the attitudes toward the United States for these positions, which appear to invade the sovereignties and economic interests of these various countries.

Assistant Secretary Byroade: But you don't think the external and internal could be separated. Is that right?

Mr. Dorr: I don't know how. You certainly can't do it to a substantial extent, and I don't believe you could do it in the minds of these people out there.

Mr. Foster: I don't believe it could be in this lawsuit. Another lawsuit might be brought that would extend to another aspect of the business, but this suit involves the production and marketing in the Middle East. I scarcely think it could be sorted out, and at least in the minds of the people of the Arab world, I suspect—although this could be examined—that it is one lawsuit.

Mr. Dorr: But, you see, even these particular situations in the Middle East are set forth as a cardinal part of the complaint, and the whole IPC arrangements, the Aramco arrangements, the Kuwait arrangements—they are all in there as the very foundation of the situation. Now those are the facts. Those all exist, and it is not on something new which the Government is going to prove: it is a position which is known to be the fact, which is the damaging thing to the United States.

Mr. Kalijarvi: Mr. Withrow, I have a number of questions. I don't want to monopolize any part of this period, but I think they are all addressed to the framework within which your report was prepared. I think you said that when you started out, that you were skeptical that the results would be "as cataclysmic" as some of the people interviewed feared. What did you expect to find when you started on your report?

Mr. Withrow: Well, I can remember from the conversation that Larry King and I had just before we took the plane, and some people had thought that even going out to make the report was not worthwhile, that we couldn't find anything. We were told, for example, by the people in the field that no one outside the oil companies would really talk on this subject. We found them wrong. So as we talked, just before we left, we said, "Well, we wonder whether it is worth risking not being home by Christmas in order to make this survey?" I mean, that is how skeptical we were.

Mr. Kalijarvi: I see. Well, then, the second question—and I hope whoever is presiding here will shut me off if I ask too many of them—is, how many non-English-speaking people did you interview?

Mr. Withrow: Quite a few. Most of them, fortunately, spoke French if they didn't speak English, and I can get by in French, having been educated there. I don't recall but perhaps one or two that were unable to make themselves understood in either French or English. With those I used as translator either Saba Habachy or Col. Eddy, so of course they were there. But you find most of the people of the type that we are speaking of—well, they talk either French or English. Syria and Lebanon having been French mandates, anybody of much consequence speaks French or English.

Mr. Kalijarvi: Well, then, the third one, and that will be all. Suppose the case were dropped, how does this prove the charges were not true? If the charges were not proved untrue through court action, how do we avoid leaving an even worse opinion?

Mr. Withrow: Well, I think the answer is probably twofold. One, most of the people out there think the case is dead, and to a certain extent, even with the attempts like the attempt I mentioned in the newspaper that announces it is going to talk about the case once a week, those attempts haven't been too successful at keeping it alive, as a living issue. It kind of dies off, and so if nothing more is ever said, eventually it will wear off, and you enable the people who are out there to rebuild the belief in themselves and their integrity and their position. That is one thing.

The other thing is, if the suit is called off, I should think that the American Government and the companies would have a very definite interest in the form and substance of the statement which is issued to the press at the time it is called off, and it could be done in such a way that it would not be damaging. We talked to various people out there a little on that subject, when we thought we could, when we got that far, particularly with the lawyers I mentioned—I mean the local lawyers—and the people like Col. Eddy, and so forth. Is that an answer?

Mr. Kalijarvi: Yes, sir.

Mr. Leisure: The other side of that coin, if I may mention it, the real damage is the attendant publicity of a suit that will be used by extremist elements from day to day if the suit proceeds. That is where the real damage comes in, as we see it.

Mr. Dorr: It is not the ultimate result of the suit. No matter how that ultimately were decided in the Supreme Court, four or five years from now, that is not the thing we are talking about now. What we are talking about is the effect on the Arab minds and of these others of the publicity attendant with what goes on meanwhile, and not things which reflect on the companies but things which reflect on the United States for its interfering or assuming to deal with the affairs of those countries, which they regard as within their sovereign rights. That is the nub of it in our minds.

Assistant [Deputy Under] Secretary Murphy: I wonder if I could ask an ignorant question, which is probably very hypothetical? Apart from the psychological impact on the Arab mind, supposing the suit is prosecuted and suppose it goes to a successful conclusion on the part of our Government, what would be the practical, we will say official effect as a practical matter in Saudi Arabia? What would you visualize as happening actually from a business point of view?

Mr. Withrow: It is very difficult for me to say, because I don't know as a lawyer precisely what are the results the U.S. Department of Justice wants from this lawsuit. I don't now know what relief it is asking for. The complaint, after reciting all of these companies, like Aramco, which are in existence by agreement, asks the Court to break up all of the agreements. I don't know whether that means to break up Aramco. I don't know. In other words, until you know that, it is difficult to forecast—I mean, forgetting that there might be a blow-up in the meantime—what the result would be.

Assistant Secretary Murphy: But your fear would be that there would be a general deterioration of the relationship with the Saudi Arabia Government as one feature?

Mr. Withrow: There is no question in my mind that if that case went on, that the Saudi Arabia Government would eventually get to the point of this sort of analysis: that if the U.S. Government can examine into contracts and say they are no good because they are against the public interest, let's look at the concession and examine it and decide there is no concession because it is against the Saudi Arab's public interest.

Mr. Foster: Isn't it also relevant, Jim, to mention that one of the people whom you saw—I don't remember who he was—commented that if the United States was attacking these companies, they were of course criminals, and the concession therefore was of course null and void. I think that was their reaction: that any concession, that any contract with a criminal was no good.

Assistant Secretary Murphy: You fear a cancellation of the concession?

Mr. Foster: Yes.

Mr. King: If I may speak to that for a moment also, I am sure all of you gentlemen realize only too well that the Middle East leaders, the educated leaders would have only too clear a realization of the tremendous strategic significance and importance of the Middle East area. That is one of the reasons why it would be completely incomprehensible to the Arab mind that the United States Government, in the interests of destroying what they think of as at the most cooperation between companies naturally interested in the area, would undermine their whole position. Here they are, calling these companies conspirators, price fixers, scoundrels. They have held these same companies forth, and Aramco notably, as shining examples of what American free enterprise can offer, so if this case goes on through the years, again you have a search for what the underlying motive may be: "Is it American imperialism? It can't be true that it is this minor aspect, which we don't understand. What else is it? And in what other direction is Arab animosity directed? There must be some other conspiracy than this."

Mr. Foster: I don't know whether you all met each other. That was Mr. King, who went with Mr. Withrow.

Mr. Dorr: I will just say two things about the position which the Government has taken, which never yet has been borne home out there. One is that the United States has a right to determine what companies Saudi Arabia uses as its instrumentality for developing its resources, and to say whether they shall be used. Now, after all, Saudi Arabia selected these companies for certain reasons, and it selected them as American companies because of certain reasons because of its interests. Now, is the United States going to say, "It is all very well, it is your oil, and it is there; but nevertheless it is for us in our courts to determine whom you use as instrumentalities for producing this oil"? That is just inherently offensive.

Another position which they have taken, which has been taken and which should be considered by the Government representatives, is that the effect of this alleged combination was to bring the Middle East oil into Europe and to force American exports out of Europe. Well, now, if the object of this situation is to cut down the Arabian oil and Middle East oil going into Europe for the benefit of Americans, why, that is not going to be a very pleasant prospect. It is just food for propaganda for this group. It is food for propaganda.

And the same way with the price. After all, these countries are dependent for their economy on what they get. They are dependent for their very life, some of them almost entirely, on what they get out of this oil which is produced. Now, if the indication is that the position of the United States appears to be that this Middle East oil is overpriced, and the result of this suit is going to be to force down the price of Arabian oil because it happens to be very rich and can be extracted cheaply, there again you have a direct apparent conflict, not between the companies but between the American interests, the United States Government interests and those countries.

Those things stick up like sore thumbs.

Assistant Secretary Byroade: There is only one bright light in the picture, Goldie: They are going to be so mad at us on so many things—

[Laughter]

Mr. Dorr: On that, since you said that, let me say this, Hank. We fully appreciate that there are other things which create tensions and disturbances out there besides our little part of the picture, but I will say this, that the oil companies perhaps have suffered somewhat by repercussions from other grounds that are of real offensive objection to the United States.

Assistant Secretary Murphy: Are there any other questions? Has Defense any questions?

Lt. Comdr. Goodspeed: I would like to ask a question. If this suit should go forward and result in a consent decree, which might result in some apparent change in the alignment of the companies or operation of the companies, would that, do you think, have the same effect? The detrimental effect?

Mr. Withrow: I am glad you asked that question, because I, as most speakers, have notes enough to keep them going all day, and I did have that and somehow or other I skipped that page. We investigated that with a number of people out there, and the reaction was that that would be just as detrimental as the trial, and they suggested that the only—they wanted to know why can't you make whatever adjustments you have to make, if you have to make any, without a formal court decree, which I personally think was a pretty sensible suggestion. They say that a decree, a finding against these companies would be used and exploited. I also want to point out that in my dealings with the Department on consent decrees, and I have negotiated quite a few, they have a lot of what they call boiler plate provisions, and those boiler plate provisions in effect forbid you to do a lot of heinous things, some of which you may have done and some of which you may not have done, and you are not in a very good position usually to argue against them, because it is perfectly clear they are against the law, and by eliminating them you aren't getting any rights. But the consent decree angle is not a real solution to this problem. I don't think that means there isn't one.

Mr. Kalijarvi: That brings up another question entirely aside from the legal aspect, the psychological one. Suppose the suit were dropped, what happens to the United States per se on that particular item? Does it mean that the United States in the eyes of the Arab world would be looked upon as having been wrong and therefore the suit has been dropped?

Mr. Withrow: I think most Arabs would say that it would result in heaping a little bit more opprobrium on the prior regime, I don't know—it wasn't very well liked—and I think that they would say, "Well, sure, the new Party, the new President, he sees things better from the Arab point of view than the old one." I don't foresee the difficulty that you do.

Mr. Kalijarvi: Just one technicality: the present suit was filed by Brownell.

Mr. Withrow: I know, but that is fairly well lost in the Arab mind. The publicity and everything about this case is there in the August-through-December period in this country which was reflected out there about the suit. The actual change from civil to criminal didn't actually cause a ripple out there. Why, I really don't know. Probably because they didn't understand it.

Lt. Gen. Cabell: Does Mr. Murphy plan to make available some of these witnesses referred to for any individual interrogation?

Mr. Withrow: Yes. We will advise whomever we should advise, if a channel is set up, as to when these men are here, when they are available. I was going to say that should anybody think of a question he wished he had asked me, after we adjourn today, I will be only too happy to come down with all the information I have and my notes and try to go over this. This meeting, I know, is kind of unsatisfactory for getting at the particular angles that some of you might be interested in, and I would be only too happy to do that. You set up the channel and we will tell you when these other people will be available.

Assistant Secretary Murphy: I should think the three agencies would provide a contact and then could communicate directly with Mr. Withrow. Would that be the thing, Hank?

Assistant Secretary Byroade: Yes.

Assistant Secretary Murphy: Is that agreeable to the others?

Mr. King: I would like to make one further point that may be of interest. It was suggested out there that if these charges are pressed, if this publicity does occur, isn't it bound to deprive us of any effective future diplomatic support? "How possibly can your Government go forward with these charges, as we understand them, and then afford the oil industry as it exists today or in anything like its present form any effective diplomatic support in the future?" That calls to mind, perhaps, King Ibn Saud's remark at the end of the Aramco negotiations, when he said to the chief negotiator for Aramco, "Perhaps you would not be interested to know why the Arabian-American Oil company received this concession?" The negotiator said, "Very much." And His Majesty said, "Well, I don't recall seeing many American warships around these waters!"

[Laughter.]

Assistant Secretary Murphy: Bill Eddy as a former Marine probably would have appreciated that.

[Laughter.]

Mr. Leisure: On your question, sir, that you asked a moment ago, about what would happen to the prestige of the United States if the suit is dropped, I think that is a very good question. Of course, we feel that the charges should never have been made. When we stop to think of what it will mean to the Navy's supply of oil and the supply of oil in the Middle East, we think it never should have been brought. We think consideration was not given to that point of view when the charges were made. We think the case was brought by lawyers looking at it from a legalistic point of view, who agreed among themselves to bring an anti-trust suit, without giving sufficient consideration to all the other factors involved. So the problem we have today is, the question now is, where will we be best off? Where will the prestige of the United States be best served? By continuing a lawsuit which should never have been brought in the first place? Or by dropping a suit that should not have been brought? Maybe there will be some loss of prestige. I don't think so. I think it can be handled in such a way that there will be no loss of prestige, but whether there is or not, there we are.

Mr. Kalijarvi: When you are prepared to discuss this aspect of the problem, I would like to discuss it further with you.

Mr. Leisure: We should like to.

Mr. Murphy: Any more questions? [None]

We certainly are very grateful to you. We will have a transcript made of this thing, and I should think we would want to keep it classified as "confidential," but copies will be available.

[Mr. Leisure and Mr. Foster expressed their appreciation to the Department officials.]

Mr. Dorr: I don't think it should be, because after all, these names have been mentioned, and these statements, so you have got to keep them off the limb.

Mr. Murphy: As far as we are concerned, it will be classified as "confidential." A transcript will be available to you and will be classified as "confidential." As far as we are concerned, it is confidential.

Thank you very much.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Chief of the Petroleum Policy Staff (Eakens)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 27, 1954. [1]

Subject: Effect of Oil Cartel Case on United States Interests and Objectives in the Middle East.

Participants: Mr. J. R. Withrow, Special Counsel for Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., in Oil Cartel Case.
Mr. Kalijarvi—E
Mr. Metzger—L/E
Mr. Eakens—PED

The first part of the discussion centered around questions which Mr. Kalijarvi had raised at the meeting on Saturday, January 23, [2] when Mr. Withrow presented to representatives of State, Defense, and CIA the findings of a study which he and two colleagues had recently made in the Middle East of the above-mentioned subject. Mr. Kalijarvi again mentioned his question as to whether Mr. Withrow did not have in mind what he expected to find before he went to the Middle East to make the study.

According to Mr. Withrow, he was frankly skeptical as to just what their study would show. In the study he represented three of the four parents of Aramco, one of which was Socony-Vacuum. He did not disclose the names of the other two. The fourth partner in Aramco did not think there was enough to the question to justify the study and did not join in it. Being skeptical when he started, Mr. Withrow said that he was surprised to learn of the serious repercussions which the people he talked with expected from a revival of the suit.

On the revival of the suit, he explained that what he meant was any action that led to news reports again appearing in the press as would be the case if the issues in the suit were aired in court proceedings. He said the impression which he received from people in the Middle East was that the suit already had been settled or dropped, and they were alarmed to learn that was not the case. They had apparently obtained this impression from the fact that nothing has been appearing in the Middle East press on the case now for many months.

[2] See the transcript of the meeting, supra.

Another question discussed was whether the dropping of the suit by the United States Government would not have a more unfavorable effect on United States interests in the Middle East than continuing it. Mr. Kalijarvi stated that he was frankly in a dilemma on that point at the present time. Mr. Withrow felt that this problem could be met in the press release which would be issued at the time of the dropping of the suit. He thought that Mr. Brownell could announce that after examining the documents, Justice had concluded that there was not a sufficient basis for the suit.

Mr. Metzger then took up the question of what the documents would show and particularly whether they would show any violations of the antitrust laws. Mr. Withrow's reply was that assuming the applicability of the antitrust laws to the operations in question, there had been violations. He made the point, however, that the violations which had occurred since World War II were of a fringe nature and did not concern the basic issues of the four companies operating through Aramco, the several companies in IPC and the Kuwait offtake agreement. He referred to a price agreement covering Cyprus or Crete. He also said that prior to World War II three companies did have a world cartel agreement under which prices were fixed, markets divided and exchanges made, but that two of the three companies who had participated in that agreement were not even parties to the oil cartel suit.

According to Mr. Withrow, there are two factions in Aramco, each of which holds different views on the effect of the oil cartel proceedings. One group in Saudi Arabia considers that the Aramco concession already is forfeit by the Saudi Arabian Government and that Aramco is now continuing its operations only upon sufferance of the Saudi Arabian Government. This group feels that if any new company came along and made a better offer to Saudi Arabia and Saudi Arabia was convinced that the new group could operate the properties, that would be the end of Aramco. The other group, consisting of the New York management of Aramco together with some officials in the field, are less pessimistic about Aramco's position.

In response to a question concerning the people with whom he talked in the various Embassies, Mr. Withrow covered the discussions which he had had with Embassy people. When he first talked with Ambassadors Hare and Moose he did not think they had given a great deal of thought to the question. The last time he saw Ambassador Hare it was his impression that Mr. Hare's conclusions were about the same as his concerning the potential damage to American interests. He thought Ambassador Moose and Mr. Clark at Damascus went along with the thinking of the oil company attorneys about two-thirds of the way at first, and after some discussion among themselves reached about the same conclusion as they did. He thought Ambassadors Henderson and Berry had thought about the problem and agreed with the conclusions of their study group. Mr. Withrow's only discussion with Ambassador Caffery was for about thirty minutes before the Ambassador was having an important meeting with the Egyptian Foreign Minister on the Suez Canal problem. Mr. Withrow did not consider that meeting very productive as he felt that Ambassador Caffery had other things on his mind and had not been able to concentrate on their problem.

Apparently the study by Mr. Withrow and his colleagues had to some extent been prompted by a suggestion of the Attorney General to the oil company attorneys that if they had any facts to lay before him on this question he would be glad to consider them. When they went back to lay the facts before Mr. Brownell and Mr. Barnes after their study, they were told that the agencies responsible for the questions to which their report was pertinent were State and CIA. Mr. Withrow said that their report had now been presented to State and CIA and, frankly, he did not know where the problem would go from there.

accept shipping arrangements provided Article 4 of agreement. Owen states Terry Duce is briefed re Shaikh Abdullah's letter and can inform Department fully why arrangements set forth in letter are impracticable.

3. At Owen's request, I touched on matter briefly at end my audience with King at Tabuk February 3 (Embtel 331, February 4)[2] and requested his permission obtain further information on agreement from Shaikh Abdullah; King agreed. I also requested him permit companies discuss implications agreement and its effect on Saudi Arabian interests with appropriate Saudi officials and with King himself if companies considered desirable. After some hesitation King said company should first discuss it with Finance Minister after which he willing receive Aramco officials if they believed agreement harmful country's interests.

4. According Owen, Ohliger Aramco Vice President in charge concession affairs has telegraphed King requesting audience but as of last night had not received reply. Owen flew Dhahran yesterday for company conference. I shall comply his request defer discussing matter with Shaikh Abdullah.

5. King outlined some benefits agreement would bring Saudi Arabia as follows: Free transport oil for SAG use, royalty payment to SAG of 1½ shilling per ton on all other oil transported by Onassis tankers; 50 Saudis would be trained yearly therein; most important tankers would be subject Saudi law and regulations and fly Saudi flag.

None of these provisions agreement were mentioned in letter to oil companies but Owen has obtained substantial confirmation thereof from unofficial sources. He is also told Onassis agreed to build drydock Jidda.

1. We believe publicity attending prosecution oil cartel suit may be expected have adverse effect on US national interests and objectives in this area to even greater degree than during Grand Jury investigation.

Operations of American oil companies in Near East in our opinion constitute national interest US, oil from Near East contributing vitally to both military and economic strength US and other non-Commie countries. Thus follows that action rendering operations oil companies more difficult would be harmful US interests.

[2] Not printed; it asked for a current evaluation of the effect of prosecution of the oil cartel suit on U.S. national interests and objectives. (800.2553/1-2854)

2. Attainment fundamental US objective Saudi Arabia maintenance friendly relations on basis mutual respect would also be affected by bringing suit to trial. Aramco almost synonymous US in minds numerous Saudis whose lives it touches. Hence decrease in prestige Aramco would inevitably mean decrease prestige US.

Can be little doubt prestige Aramco was lowered by publication FTC staff report and initiation Grand Jury investigation. SAG obtained copy report last year and in subsequent negotiations with Aramco quoted excerpts from it implying integrity company must be open to question if it made object prosecution by own government. Prosecution suit against Aramco parent companies in future with attendant publicity in sensational Arab press would further reduce standing Aramco and consequently that of US in Arab eyes.

3. Prosecution suit might well jeopardize another US policy objective: maintenance of internal stability which is of special significance in Saudi Arabia in view our desire develop DAF and strengthen Saudi defense and security forces.

Good relations based on mutual confidence between Aramco and SAG contribute maintenance internal security; lack of coordination between two will undermine it. This fact was important contributing cause for seriousness recent Aramco labor strike which almost got out of control.

4. Further important point is that notwithstanding dominant role of a US company in Saudi Arabian economy we have in general not been subjected charge of "economic imperialism". Prosecution of suit would open door such charges and lend color to recurring Soviet propaganda theme that under-developed countries Near East are "enmeshed Wall Street tentacles".

In political field US has been damaged in Arab eyes by US Government's Palestine policy; we are apprehensive lest attack in US courts on major US economic interest in area would have similar effect in economic field.

Editorial Note

Telegram 355, from Jidda, February 16, reported a Mecca newspaper had published a statement, attributed to an "official spokesman Saudi Foreign Office", to the effect that the Saudi Arabian Government had not concluded an agreement with A. S. Onassis for transporting Saudi Arabian oil. The paper quoted the Foreign Office as reporting that Onassis had submitted an application for consideration, but it was still under consideration. Furthermore, the spokesman said the Government would observe obligations in existing agreements with Aramco. The text of the newspaper article was transmitted in despatch 299 from Jidda, February 28.

Telegram 360 from Jidda, February 21, informed the Department of State the Ambassador had consulted with Aramco officials on the tanker matter and believed the vice president of Aramco had persuaded the King to withhold approval of the agreement. Documentation is in Department of State file 886A.2553.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON, February 19, 1954.]

PROBABLE EFFECT OF PROSECUTION OF OIL CARTEL SUIT ON UNITED STATES NATIONAL INTERESTS AND OBJECTIVES IN THE MIDDLE EAST

The effect which the prosecution of the oil cartel suit may be expected to have on United States interests abroad has constituted from the outset an important factor to be taken into account in policy decisions concerning this proceeding.

It was given special study in the last half of 1952, and the results of that study were set forth in Intelligence Report No. 6104 dated December 17, 1952. [2]

Subsequently, the grand jury investigation was dropped and the proceeding changed from criminal to civil as a means of minimizing the possibility of adverse effects upon United States interests abroad.

For many months now the proceeding has either been more or less dormant or of such a character as not to generate publicity. As long as no contrary action is taken, it may be expected that at any time the suit will again become active and that a trial may ensue in which the legality of operations of the defendant companies being challenged by Justice will be argued out in open court.

During the last few months three of the defendants have taken the opportunity to have this question studied by their lawyers. The results of this study were presented to State, Defense, and CIA representatives on January 23, 1954. It was strongly argued by those who made the study that the prosecution of the suit even in a civil proceeding would be extremely damaging to United States political, security, and economic objectives and programs in the Middle East, if not, in fact, catastrophic.

[1] This paper was attached to a memorandum by Eakens to Armstrong, Hadsel, Hart, Fritzlan, Metzger, and Dixon. According to Eakens' memorandum, the paper was based on reports which had been received from nine Missions in the Middle East. (800.054/2-1854)

[2] For text, see vol. I, Part 2, p. 1293.

In the light of this development, and considering the fact that the Department's last study of the question was more than a year old, it was decided that a new evaluation should be made.

PROCEDURE

Material for the previous study was obtained from reports which appeared in the press throughout the world and from a wide coverage of American missions. In order not to overlook any areas which might be important, fifty-one missions were requested to report the local reaction which had occurred in their respective areas to the oil cartel proceedings and certain other related matters.

The case which the oil companies are currently making as to the adverse effects on United States interests abroad of prosecution of the suit has been confined to the Middle East. This study has, therefore, been limited to that area, the boundaries roughly being Cairo on the West and New Delhi on the East. The evaluation of the missions in this general area was requested of both past and prospective effects of prosecution of the oil cartel suit on United States national objectives and interests.

As nothing of any significance is known to have appeared in the press in recent months on this subject, this revaluation is based entirely upon reports from the missions.

EVALUATIONS OF MISSIONS *

The evaluations of the missions generally fall into three categories:

> (1) The first group indicates that little attention has been given to the oil cartel suit, that it has had little if any significant effect on United States national interests in the area, and that probable future effects either cannot be evaluated or are not likely to be serious. The evaluations of the Embassies at Damascus and Karachi and the Consulate at Kuwait fall into this category.
> (2) The second group reports that local government officials have paid some attention to the charges in the Federal Trade Commission Report and the oil cartel suit, that such officials have become more suspicious of the oil companies and have made some use themselves of the charges, that the prosecution of the suit might give them some further ammunition which they could be expected to use. The picture drawn by this group, however, is far from alarming. It would seem to be more properly characterized as mild rather than serious. The reports from Baghdad, Cairo, and New Delhi are of this character.

(3) The third group—Beirut, Jidda, and Tehran—take a far more serious view.

Ambassador Henderson states that the "antitrust suit cannot fail to weaken position of American private enterprise and add fuel to propaganda fire against them" in that part of the world. He also states that "to extent that American interests in area should become weakened in their relationships with local governments and public, vital U.S. interests would be affected."

Ambassador Wadsworth believes that "publicity attending prosecution oil cartel suit may be expected to have adverse effect on U.S. national interests and objectives in this area [Saudi Arabia] [2] to even greater degree than during grand jury investigation." He considers that operations of American oil companies contribute "vitally to both military and economic strength U.S. and other non-Commie countries" and hence "constitute national interest U.S." It follows therefore that anything rendering operations of American oil companies more difficult would be harmful to United States interests. He believes that "attainment fundamental U.S. objective Saudi Arabia maintenance friendly relations on basis mutual respect would be affected . . . ," [3] that prosecution of the suit would reduce standing and prestige of Aramco and also of the United States, that it might well jeopardize "maintenance of internal stability" in Saudi Arabia, and that it would open door to charges of economic imperialism and lead to damage in economic field similar to that which has occurred in political field from the United States Government's Palestine policy.

Ambassador Hare thinks that prosecution of the suit would be damaging not so much from the standpoint of United States national interests but rather from that of the American oil companies. He believes that "prosecution of the suit would inevitably serve further to undermine already difficult position of American oil companies in Near East and give Near Eastern governments idea that they could apply screws to oil companies with impunity as far as prospective support by USG concerned." To his knowledge the F.T.C. report seriously prejudiced Aramco in Saudi Arabia where King's advisers used report as irrefutable evidence not only of culpability of oil companies but of all allegations made in the report. "In circumstances, prosecution of cartel suit could only be expected to intensify badgering of oil companies, including Tapline, and of placing us in greatly weakened position in protecting their interest, not to mention invidious effect which such publicity would have on general American reputation for integrity."

CONCLUSIONS

From the preceding analysis of the evaluations of the Missions it will be seen that there was no unanimity that prosecution of the oil cartel suit would be seriously damaging to United States national interests and objectives throughout the Middle East. Most of the missions left the impression that the potential effect could not be evaluated or was not likely to be serious. This evaluation was made by missions located in important oil producing or transit countries—e.g., Baghdad, Kuwait, Damascus, and Cairo—as well as by those where oil problems are not so important.

Only two of the missions seem completely convinced that prosecution of the suit would jeopardize vital United States national interests, while a third thought that the position of the oil companies and the ability of the United States Government to support them would be further undermined. It may be significant that the two missions which take the most serious view of the potential effect of prosecution of the suit are those in Iran and Saudi Arabia where currently the problems of oil are most critical.

Thus whether or not the potential damage to United States interests and objectives in the Middle East is to be considered a matter of grave concern as judged by these field reports depends upon the weight to be given the evaluation of the respective missions.

The Under Secretary of State (Smith) to the Attorney General of the United States (Brownell) [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, April 9, 1954.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: On January 5, 1954, the Department received a letter from attorneys representing Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., Standard Oil Company of California and The Texas Company in connection with the pending civil anti-trust suit against these companies. [2] In this letter the oil companies requested an opportunity to place before the Department of State and other interested agencies the results of their investigation concerning the probable effects on United States interests of pursuing the case against them. This request apparently resulted from a suggestion made in Judge Stanley H. Barnes' letter of December 24, 1953,[2] to a representative of one of the companies.

[1] This letter was drafted by Fritzlan and Armstrong between Apr. 2 and Apr. 7 and was cleared by Eakens, Kalijarvi, and Phleger.

On January 23, 1954, representatives of the companies concerned met representatives of this Department, the Department of Defense and the Central Intelligence Agency [3] and presented evidence of the effect upon United States interests which may be expected to follow prosecution of this suit. A transcript of this presentation was transmitted to Judge Barnes shortly thereafter. Since then the Department of State has sought and obtained the views of our Ambassadors in the Near East concerning this question and has made an intelligence estimate of it. [4] I enclose two copies of this estimate for your consideration.

In view of the conclusions reached in the estimate, it is my hope that arrangements can be made to settle the suit without protracted proceedings or publicity which would serve to damage United States interests in the Middle East. [5]

Sincerely,

WALTER B. SMITH

[5] Attached to the source text was a typed memorandum which reads: "J[ohn] D. J[ernegan]: Dave Fritzlan has a draft of the CIA letter (attached). Dave expects to have a proposal on the oil question by Friday or Monday. F[red] L. H[adsel]" The undated CIA letter, from Cabell to Brownell, not printed, had been drafted on Mar. 11. It advised the Attorney General that the CIA had evaluated the testimony of the oil company witnesses and the views of the Ambassadors, and agreed with their views. The last two sentences of the letter read: "It is not inconceivable that the next step proposed by the anti-foreign element [in the Middle East] will be expropriation as was the case in Iran three years ago. This anti-foreign element would be encouraged, at least in some degree, by public proceedings tending to depict the American oil companies as violators of the laws of the United States or as subject to the direct control of the government of the United States."

A handwritten note on the memorandum advised that the CIA would be kept informed of developments and would receive a copy of this letter. (880.2553/4-554)

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Dorsey)

LIMITED OFFICIAL USE [WASHINGTON,] March 16, 1954. [1]

Subject: Saudi Arabian Tanker Agreement with Onassis Interests.

Participants: Mr. Robert L. L. McCormick, Vice President Coates and [of] McCormick, Inc.
Mr. Reginald P. Mitchell
NEA—Mr. John D. Jernegan, Deputy Assistant Secretary
GTI—Mr. William O. Baxter, Deputy Director
NE—Mr. Stephen P. Dorsey, Acting Director

Mr. McCormick stated that he represented Mr. Stavros Niarchos, Greek shipowner now under Federal indictment with others for certain postwar purchases of surplus United States tankers, who had requested that he undertake the following discussion with officers of the Department. He explained that although Mr. Onassis, who recently negotiated an exclusive tanker agreement with the Saudi Government, and Mr. Niarchos were related, they were violent competitors. It seemed to Mr. Niarchos, whose firm Mr. McCormick represents, that the Saudi Arabian-Onassis agreement, if ratified, was most unfortunate not only for American oil companies but for the United States Government, from a strategic point of view. In view of these facts, Mr. Niarchos had been interested in discovering some form of solution to this difficult problem in the light of his own experience in the tanker business.

He went on to explain that Mr. Niarchos believed that Mr. Onassis had signed a loan agreement with the National City Bank and the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company to finance the necessary tankers for the shipment of Saudi oil under the agreement. He pointed out that independent tanker operators obtain a long-term contract to carry petroleum which they then use with banks or insurance companies as security for a loan with which to build the tankers. National City Bank and Metropolitan Life Insurance Company at first insisted upon United States registration for any ships which they financed. They have now somewhat liberalized their loan requirements to allow Liberian, Honduran or Panamanian registration. Since the Onassis agreement provides that tankers shall fly the Arabian flag, it was Mr. Niarchos' proposal that the Department approach the above loaning agencies and suggest to them that it would not displease the Department if they were to refuse to change their present registry requirements and that it would be preferable if they were to cancel their agreement with Onassis. Mr. Niarchos advanced this proposal on a confidential basis, but requested that the Department of Justice be informed.

Mr. Jernegan said that the Department recognized the dangers inherent in the agreement, but he believed it would be reluctant to use this method of influencing the outcome of these difficulties and that it would much prefer to have the Saudi Arabs themselves realize the unfortunate effects on Arabs as well as Americans, of such an infringement on the concession agreement. He thought it was up to the oil companies, in the final instance, to try to resolve the matter. He expressed his appreciation, however, for the information which had been tendered by Mr. McCormick.

United States Record of the First Session of the United States-United Kingdom Talks on Middle East Oil [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 5, 1954.

Subject: US-UK Middle East Oil Talks Meeting, 3:00 P. M., April 5, 1954

Participants: Messrs. Beeley, MacGinnis, Brook and Druitt—British Embassy
Mr. Armstrong—OMP
Mr. Dorsey—NE
Mr. Fritzlan—NE
Mr. Gay—NE
Mr. Metzger—L/E
Mr. Eakens—PED

At this meeting discussion was completed on the first three items of the agenda attached as Annex A.

I. Pipe Line Transit Agreements in the Middle East

The British representatives generally indicated the status of the views and plans of IPC in regard to pipe line transit negotiations. IPC does not expect to engage in negotiations with Syria until after the Syrian elections. Meanwhile neither Syria nor Lebanon is being informed of the IPC position. This position, which was previously communicated to the Department and in regard to which the Department did not raise any questions, is that IPC will offer to pay each transited country 7 per cent on its investment within the country. Seven per cent is the return which is permitted oil pipe line companies to disburse as dividends under the consent decree entered into by the United States Government and the oil pipe line companies several years ago. In discussing the 7 per cent formula it was noted that pipe line companies in the United States under the consent decree have an incentive to so establish their rates that their earnings remaining after payment of the 52 per cent corporation tax will be equal to 7 per cent of their approved rate base. They do not have an incentive to earn more because higher earnings cannot be paid as dividends and when left in the company do not become a part of the rate base.

[1] No drafter was listed for any of the three talks with the British. Circular airgram 6556, May 13, transmitted the record of the three talks to Department of State representatives in the Middle East for information and any comment they might wish to make on them. (880.2553/5-1354)

It was also noted on the U.S. side that the 7 per cent formula would probably work out to be much more favorable to IPC than to Tapline because of the higher pipe line differential which IPC currently enjoys. The 7 per cent is probably substantially less than one-half of the pipe line profits now being realized by IPC whereas it seems likely that it will closely approximate half of Tapline's profits.

Recognizing that Tapline is certain to be directly affected by IPC's proposal of the 7 per cent formula, the British suggested that there was need for IPC-Tapline consultation on this question. It was observed on the U.S. side that it was assumed that coordination was taking place through the common American interests in IPC and Tapline.

One question which IPC has not yet decided is whether the 7 per cent should be made as a single payment or whether it should be broken down as the payments now are among a number of different types of payments. The British representatives seemed generally to think that there was merit in combining into a single payment the entire amount due the transit countries in lieu of taxes and other payments. A lump sum for all purposes might assist in forestalling new reasons for new types of payments.

U.S. representatives indicated that it would be useful to know when IPC is going to make its proposal to the Syrians. They also suggested that if IPC would keep the American Embassy informed regarding developments, the U.S. would be in a position to be as helpful as possible in the event problems arose. The British agreed with this suggestion.

II. Saudi Arabia

A. Status of Aramco–SAG negotiations

The U.S. representatives briefly reported on this point. The negotiations have been postponed from month to month since last fall and currently are postponed until early in May. It seems doubtful, however, in view of the beginning of Ramadan, that the negotiations will begin before June.

The British inquired whether there had not been some letters exchanged between Aramco and Saudi Arabia. They were informed that the Department was not aware of any except the Aramco offer last fall to adjust the settlement price to the posted price less 2 per cent. It developed that this letter was written after the U.S.-U.K. oil discussions last fall and hence was not discussed at that time. In the discussion the British questioned whether the Aramco offer did not jeopardize the 50-50 principle. The Department representatives expressed the view that the 2 per cent was probably sufficient to cover marketing costs and hence did not jeopardize 50-50 as long as oil was sold at posted prices. If any significant amount were sold below posted prices, however, and settlement were made on the proposed Aramco basis, the Saudi Government might receive more than 50 per cent of the profit. It would seem likely in such circumstances, though, that there would be a strong tendency for posted prices to be readjusted to actual prices so that in fact the proposed Aramco basis of settlement should not be out of line with 50-50 either very significantly or over any long period of time.

B. Status of Onassis tanker deal

The British were informed that as late as three weeks ago the Onassis tanker contract with Saudi Arabia had not been confirmed by the King and the Council of Ministers. In fact, an Arab radio broadcast took the U.S. to task for references to such a contract because, according to the broadcast, there was no such agreement. The Department's latest information, however, is that the Onassis contract is under consideration by the Council of Ministers. The provisions of the Onassis contract were discussed in general terms.

The British had information on Onassis' activities to the effect that he is believed to be making efforts to negotiate a similar contract with Iraq, and possibly also with Iran, under which he would be given the exclusive right to ship all or part of the oil produced in those countries. It was agreed that both sides should endeavor to develop any further information which may be available in regard to such negotiations. The British were concerned over the Onassis contract with Saudi Arabia because they view it as a flag discrimination and they think it also violates the right of the companies to handle their oil as they see fit.

It was generally recognized that in view of the rebates which are provided for in the Onassis contract, the contract would violate the 50-50 principle.

C. Implications of boundary questions for international oil development

At the beginning of the discussion of this question the Department representatives made it clear that the Buraimi boundary problem was being handled in different channels and that they did not wish to discuss the Buraimi problem as such. [2] The British did say, however, that they wished to make their position clear in regard to the Buraimi dispute. Their proposal to Saudi Arabia for settlement of the dispute did contain stipulations to the effect that IPC was to continue to carry on its exploration work in the disputed area. The British recognized, however, that any territory which was awarded Saudi Arabia in the settlement of the dispute would come within Aramco's concession, and they did not wish to do anything which would in any way compromise Aramco's concession. If the territory in which IPC is exploring were awarded to Saudi Arabia, IPC would be interested in obtaining a concession on that territory if Aramco were willing to give it up. On the other hand, if Aramco did not wish to give up territory in which IPC had been working and which had been awarded to Saudi Arabia, the British would of course recognize Aramco's concession rights and IPC would withdraw.

The British expressed the view that Saudi Arabia was trying to round out its boundaries to the south and southwest and that the Buraimi question undoubtedly arose because the Buraimi route was one of the routes most used. The British suggested that in addition to Buraimi there were two other areas in which Saudi Arabia's southern boundaries were important. One of these was the boundary with Muscat, but the foreign relations of Muscat are not under British control although at the Sultan's request the British are acting for him on the Buraimi question. The other areas where the southern boundary of Saudi Arabia is important is with the Aden Protectorate, including the Hadhramaut. Recently there have been two incidents concerning this latter boundary. In the first case an Aramco party was asked by British officials to leave an area north of the Violet Line which had been agreed upon between the British and the old Ottoman Empire in 1914. In another case an Aramco party crossed the Violet Line and was asked to leave.

These two incidents pointed up the boundary question in that area. While the British were not anxious to take on any other boundary problems until the Buraimi question had been resolved, they did invite an expression of U.S. views regarding the Aden-Hadhramaut boundary with Saudi Arabia. The Department's representatives agreed to look into this question and subsequently to inform the British of their views.

III. Reexamination of Attitudes Toward 50-50 Oil Concession Agreements

There was some general discussion on this point from which it was evident that there had been no significant new developments since the last U.S.-U.K. oil talks. One suggestion to which no one took exception was that as soon as all of the principal concession agreements had been brought up to a 50-50 basis the time would have arrived when serious thought would have to be given to whether the U.S. and U.K. Governments were not going to have to take a more direct interest in the substantive provisions of concession contracts.

The British had one point in this connection that was giving them some concern. This was the question of oil companies being required to provide facilities for the general public which would normally be provided by governments. It came up in Kuwait recently when the Kuwait Oil Company was asked to build a 1 million pound school for Kuwaiti children. The British believe that such demands should be resisted and the Kuwait Oil Company is resisting this request. The British stated that IPC and the Consortium in Iran will take the same line in regard to similar demands.

It was generally recognized that the oil companies would have to provide schools, hospitals, and other facilities for their own workers and their workers' families, but it was agreed that it was not proper for them to provide normal governmental facilities and services for the general public. How to maintain such a position would always be a problem since there would probably always be minor exceptions which could not be resisted.

One point which the British made was that an oil company would tend to become less of an empire within a country if it confined such facilities to its own personnel.

Two questions were raised in this connection: One was whether the expenses of the education of the fifty Iraqis, which is provided for in the IPC agreement, are included in the cost of operating the concession or whether such costs are outside. The British were not sure of the answer to this question and undertook to provide the answer at a subsequent meeting.

The British raised the question as to whether the royal decree which terminated the recent strike in Saudi Arabia did not require Aramco to provide certain service to the general Saudi Arabian public. The Department representatives undertook to provide the answer to this question.

United States Record of the Second Session of the United States-United Kingdom Talks on Middle East Oil

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 7, 1954.

Subject: US-UK Middle East Oil Talks Meeting, 3:00 P. M., April 7, 1954

Participants: Messrs. Beeley, MacGinnis, Brook and Druitt—
British Embassy
Mr. Armstrong—OMP
Mr. Dorsey—NE

Mr. Metzger—L/E
Mr. Eakens—PED

The British opened the meeting by commenting further on the fifty students whose education is provided for in the IPC concession agreement. The British indicated that a preliminary check seemed to show that the expenses of the students were not considered a cost of the concession agreement but were paid for by IPC out of its own funds.

The Department representatives had not had an opportunity to check into the question regarding the royal decree affecting Aramco but indicated they would do so before the next meeting.

IV. Implications for Other Middle East Production of Reentry of Iranian Oil Into World Markets

Mr. Beeley opened the discussion on this subject. It was his view that production programs in other Middle East countries would have to be readjusted although it was not certain that cutbacks would be required. He mentioned the widely accepted assumption that any adjustments in production would be made in the Middle East and not elsewhere. He was not sure how Shell would be able to meet any obligations which it had on this point in view of the small amount of the company's production in the Middle East. He generally felt that it was desirable that the consortium companies be able to agree among themselves on the adjustments which would be required. He thought this was the only way that the impact of Iranian oil could be equitably spread among other Middle East countries with the minimum political difficulties in the other countries. At the same time he recognized that it was questionable whether American companies could participate in such discussions in view of the antitrust laws.

On the Department's side it was noted that the Department of Justice opinion on the consortium plan did not give the American companies any clearance on the question of agreed production cutbacks in other areas. The question was raised as to whether cutbacks would in fact be necessary and whether the problem was as serious as some people seemed to think. Eastern Hemisphere demand alone is increasing at the rate of almost 200,000 barrels daily. On the schedule of production contemplated in Iran—200,000 barrels daily the first year, 400,000 barrels daily the second year, and 600,000 barrels daily the third year—it would seem that expansion in Eastern Hemisphere demand would roughly take care of the problem. In addition, it seemed logical to assume that the consortium companies were already tightening up their programs in anticipation of the return of Iranian oil to world markets. Such foresight should cushion the immediate impact of Iranian oil. In addition, it was suggested that the Sheikh of Kuwait might not object too strongly to a reduction in Kuwait production since this would only mean that his assets were kept in oil in the ground rather than in other investments.

On the latter point the British felt that if production in Kuwait were reduced it might raise problems between the oil companies and the ruler. They generally recognized that Kuwait should bear about one-half of the impact from resumption of Iranian oil exports, but they did not generally believe that production could be reduced below the 1954 level without causing difficulties. They noted that the increase in production in Saudi Arabia, Iraq, and Qatar in the last year had been five million tons, two million each for the first two and one million for Qatar. They seemed generally to contemplate that a standstill in production would be shared by these three countries in about these proportions with Kuwait assuming the burden of the other five million tons which would go to make up the 200,000 barrels daily in the first year.

Mr. Armstrong suggested that a change in attitude might well develop as had been the case in regard to the independent oil producers in the United States. When the Simpson Bill was before the last session of Congress, the independents had strongly supported legislation limiting oil imports. Their present attitude seems to be that they would much prefer the exercise of prudence by oil importers.

Mr. Beeley in summing up noted that a number of natural developments were working in our favor and that the prospects did not seem to be alarming. He thought that the only danger was that the problem might become a political one, in which case it would be a real problem of public relations. He and Mr. Brook felt that this was an incipient problem which should be watched. Mr. Eakens made the point that the problem of cutbacks should be played down instead of played up, and that the ideal solution would seem to be for Iranian oil to become lost in the stream of world production so that its impact upon production programs elsewhere is never obvious. All agreed.

Mr. Beeley emphasized that his desire was to underline the potential importance of the problem and to suggest that it be discussed again if it proved to be more difficult than is now anticipated. Department representatives agreed to this.

The question of independents joining the consortium was touched on briefly, and it was noted by Department officials that the addition of independents to the group would seem to be a constructive factor especially since they would not be expected to join unless they were seriously interested in Iranian oil.

On the question of publicity on the Iranian problem, Mr. Beeley felt that the U.S. and U.K. line should be the same, or at least mutually consistent. It was his view that the line should be that the consortium had been generous in dealing with Iran but that nationalization had not paid. It was recognized that carrying out such a line would not be easy. The question was raised on the Department side as to the need for publicity and whether the Iranian example of having lost their production for three years was not well enough known to make publicity unnecessary. It was agreed that when the general form of the settlement in Iran became clear the problem should be looked at again.

V. Oil Company-Government Relations in the Middle East

The discussion under this heading was handled by Mr. Dorsey. He indicated that some complications had developed from the ascension of the new King of Saudi Arabia which could have an unfavorable influence upon Aramco's already difficult relations. It is not possible at this time to predict the outcome, but Aramco does have serious government relations problems.

Mr. Beeley recounted some of the discussion at the last U.S.-U.K. Middle East oil talks. He mentioned a number of things which it had been felt at that time that the companies might do in order to improve Arab understanding of the western oil companies. This still seemed to him to be a desirable goal in this field.

VI. Relation of Antitrust Questions to Middle East Oil Problems

Mr. Beeley had two questions on this point. He referred to the references in the President's message on the Randall Report to the problem of the operation of the antitrust laws in such a way as to deter foreign investment by American companies, and the consideration of this problem by the committee now studying the antitrust laws. Mr. Beeley wondered whether the President's reference to this problem suggested that something might be done about it by the committee. His second question was "What is likely to be the outcome of the oil cartel suit?"

Mr. Metzger undertook to answer these two questions. He mentioned that a committee of some fifty-five representatives had been appointed last year by the President to study the antitrust laws, including their effects on both foreign and domestic business activities. The Chairman is S. Chesterfield Oppenheim. The work of the committee has been broken down into subcommittees, one of which is actively considering the application of the antitrust laws to foreign activities of American firms. It is not certain when the report of the committee will be made although it is not likely to be made in the next month or two. Also it is not possible to predict whether the committee will make any recommendations regarding the operation of the antitrust laws in this field. Mr. Metzger did feel, however, that there was now a more lively appreciation than ever before that this is a real problem which needs to be faced and dealt with.

As to the cartel suit, its status differs now only in minor respects from what it was six months ago. The civil suit of course differs from the criminal suit, among other ways, in that no foreign companies were named as defendants. The venue was changed from Washington to New York and under voluntary stipulations the companies are supplying documents. Justice is examining the documents to determine whether they are adequate. It is therefore not clear at this time whether a motion will need to be made by the Government for compulsory supplying of additional documents. After the documents have been examined the case will eventually be set down for trial. Insofar as the antitrust suits go, it might be noted that the present case is still in a relatively early stage of development. Such cases normally require three or four years and many have required an even longer period of time. Just how long the suit will take is not predictable, however, because it is always possible for it to be settled by various means, including a consent decree at any time.

Mr. Beeley questioned whether the Oppenheim recommendations could have a bearing on the suit. Mr. Metzger thought it would be hard to tell, but his personal reaction was that it was probably unlikely. He thought new legislation would be needed to back up any recommendations of the Oppenheim Committee before such recommendations could be expected to influence pending suits, and new antitrust legislation has never been enacted in any very short period of time.

VII. Should There be Periodic US-UK-Dutch-French Oil Talks?

Both the U.S. and U.K. representatives saw no objections to bilateral talks and in fact considered that there were advantages to be gained from such talks from time to time. The U.S., however, did not favor talks on any other basis. The British, on the other hand, indicated that they would not initiate proposals for such quadripartite meetings but that they would not wish to take a negative attitude if they were pressed to hold them.

United States Record of the Third Session of the United States-United Kingdom Talks on Middle East Oil

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] April 8, 1954.

Subject: US-UK Middle East Oil Talks Meeting, 4:00 p.m., April 8, 1954

Participants: Messrs. Beeley, MacGinnis, Brook and Druitt—British Embassy
Mr. Armstrong—OMP
Mr. Dorsey—NE
Mr. Fritzlan—NE
Mr. Gay—NE
Mr. Metzger—L/E
Mr. Eakens—PED

Mr. Dorsey reported on the royal decree in Saudi Arabia about which the British had inquired at the first session. Under the decree Aramco is required to build six or seven new schools but only for the children of employees. Aramco also is required to expand hospital facilities, but these also are limited in principle to Aramco employees. In regard to hospital facilities, however, it is Aramco's policy not to turn anyone away, and hence treatment is provided to the general public to the extent that treatment is requested.

VIII. General Economic and Political Trends (e.g., Nationalism) in the Middle East and Their Significance for Petroleum Operations in the Area

Mr. Dorsey also opened the discussion on this question. He did not think there had been any significant new trends which had developed since the previous talks. The increase in activity on the Jordan-Israel border has been of considerable concern to Aramco and Tapline, particularly in regard to the effect which it might have on their employees and on the possibility of forcing a closing of the line. Mr. Dorsey felt that the situation generally has deteriorated markedly in the past six months in this area.

Mr. Gay, who had recently visited the Middle East, observed that the question of the status of the West in the Middle East currently is very much in the minds of the people of the area, perhaps influenced by a recent prediction of a visiting Arabist that Western interests would be expelled from the region within a decade. On the other hand he noted legislative developments which might be regarded as favorable to Western investors.

Mr. Beeley generally agreed with Mr. Dorsey's appraisal.

The British expressed the view that a pact between Turkey and Pakistan would improve the security of the area although perhaps raising other problems.

The new Turkish Petroleum Law was mentioned as a favorable economic development in the area, and also the recent Egyptian agreement with the oil companies.

IX. Soviet Oil

A. Soviet objectives in expanding sales

According to Mr. Beeley, the British generally expect Russian oil sales to reach an annual rate of about four million tons. They believe that the main purpose of the sales is to earn currency.

B. US-UK Government position on question of their nationals being forced by local governments to handle and/or market Soviet oil

In the Middle East, Egypt and Israel are the only two countries which have been affected by the Russian oil sales. In regard to Egypt, Mr. Beeley indicated that Shell had decided it would have to handle Russian oil but was going to resist the acceptance of any Rumanian oil. Shell felt this position was necessary because of the nationalization without compensation of Shell's properties in Rumania. Shell will agree to handle Russian oil but only under duress. It will not, however, as first proposed, invite a formal directive from the Egyptian Government requiring it to handle the oil because it was decided that that would be a bad precedent to establish. The British Government has decided to protest to the Egyptian Government not against the origin of the oil but against a British company being compelled against its wishes and contrary to its commercial interests to handle foreign oil that displaces its own production. (Subsequently, the Department was informed by a representative of the British Embassy that the U.K. had decided not to make a formal protest. See memorandum of conversation dated April 14, 1954 on the subject "British Position in Regard to Soviet-Egyptian Oil-Cotton Barter Deal.") There was some discussion of whether or not this protest had a legal foundation in international law, and the British indicated that insofar as they knew it was not founded on law. They mentioned that they were less inclined to tie such protests to international law than we were.

In Israel, Consolidated Refineries, Incorporated, a wholly owned British company, has been pressed by Israel to refine Russian crude oil, and it was decided under the terms of the company's original agreement with Israel on establishment of the refinery, which provided that the refinery would refine up to 200,000 tons annually for the Israeli Government, Consolidated had no basis upon which to refuse. At the present time Consolidated Refineries has an agreement with the Israel Fuel Corporation to refine 100,000 tons of Russian crude oil.

On the American side, Mr. Armstrong outlined a number of general views on this question. He indicated that we naturally do not like to see Russian oil forcing American oil out of markets. At the present time, however, the quantities are relatively small compared with the oil moving in international trade. It would seem reasonable to expect, however, that the U.S. would view a large expansion of Soviet oil sales with concern. When a barter deal has been concluded between a country in which American oil companies do business and Russia, it was our feeling that the oil companies had to decide for themselves whether or not to handle the Russian oil. Mr. Eakens mentioned that in the case of Egypt the American Embassy felt that the best course for the oil companies to follow was to handle the Russian oil. In that way the oil would be absorbed in a fashion which would least upset the market and it is always hoped that the deal would not be renewed. The Danish case was reverted to at some length, and it was pointed out that in that case where the country was not in balance-of-payments difficulties the U.S. had protested on grounds of general commercial policy. On the legal side, Mr. Metzger indicated that thus far there had not seemed to be any legal basis for protest against Russian oil sales. He expressed the view that in general the courts hold that under nationalization title passes and an international wrong has been done calling for compensation. He questioned, however, the strength of a legal case which might be made on the basis of confiscated oil.

C. Security aspects, if any, to West of expanding Soviet oil sales

Mr. Beeley indicated that the British thus far were not greatly worried on the security side. Mr. Brook added, however, that if the Russian sales continued to expand it would give the Russians reserve capacity which they could call upon in an emergency.

All agreed that Soviet oil sales could be a problem if the quantity reached large proportions, and that this is a question that the U.S. and U.K. should keep in touch on when and if new cases arise.

At the close of this session all representatives on both sides agreed that the discussions had been very useful and that similar meetings should again be held in about six months. October 1 was agreed as the date for the two sides to check with each other on the holding of the next talks.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I should like to call your attention to the prospective conclusion of an agreement between the Saudi Arabian Government and the A. S. Onassis Company with respect to transportation of Saudi Arabian produced oil, as reported in American Embassy Jidda cable number 333 of 6 February 54. [2] The Secretary of the Navy has analyzed the possible effects of this agreement on U.S. security interests and has reported to me the results of this analysis in a letter of 18 March 54, a copy of which I inclose. You will note that he considers the agreement, the full details of which are not available, could operate to limit the number of U.S. Government tankers which could lift oil from Saudi Arabian fields, could prevent the replacement of any of these tankers, prevent the use of additional tankers in an emergency and as a result place virtual control of this source of oil for the Armed Services in the hands of a foreign shipping enterprise. You will further note that he recommends that the Secretary of State obtain the assurance of the Saudi Arabian Government that any agreement it may make will not affect the transportation of oil by vessels operated by or under the control of the Military Sea Transportation Service (MSTS). The Joint Chiefs of Staff have expressed a similar concern and have likewise recommended that the Saudi Arabian Government be asked for suitable assurances.

I share fully the concern of the Secretary of the Navy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff as to the unacceptability of such limitations placed upon transportation of Saudi Arabian oil in U.S. Government vessels, and I therefore request that you approach the Saudi Arabian Government with a view to obtaining binding assurances that the agreements reported will not operate to place any restrictions upon present or future arrangements for lifting of oil for the U.S. Armed Forces in ships controlled or owned by the U.S. Government.

Your early attention to this matter is requested.

Sincerely yours,

C. E. WILSON

The memorandum stated that the letter from the Secretary of Defense was transmitted for the preparation of an appropriate reply for Murphy's signature and requested a copy of the reply by close of business on Apr. 23. [Enclosure]

[WASHINGTON,] March 18, 1954.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I refer to a recent State Department telegram (American Embassy Jidda No. 333) which reported the prospective conclusion of an agreement between the Saudi Arabian government and the A. S. Onassis Company concerning the transportation of Saudi Arabian produced oil. This agreement if consummated and put into effect might seriously interfere with the transportation of vitally needed Saudi Arabian produced oil for the U.S. Armed Services and thus is of serious concern to the Navy.

Although the full text of the new agreement is not presently available, the basic terms provide that transportation of Saudi Arabian oil (produced by the American Arabian Oil Company (Aramco) and the Pacific Western Oil Company) would be limited to (a) tankers now owned by the companies or by concession companies and employed in transport of oil prior to December 31, 1953, and (b) in tankers of the Saudi Arabian Maritime Company which is presumably a newly formed joint Onassis-Saudi Arabian government company controlling the Onassis owned tankers. That portion of the agreement available does not refer to U.S. government owned tankers.

At the present time the Military Sea Transportation Service (MSTS) each month lifts from 27 to 30 tanker loads of Saudi Arabian produced oil products from the Persian Gulf ports of Bahrein and Ras Tanura. The tankers employed in this lift are MSTS owned and contract operated. All but one are of the T-2 type (capacity 118,000 barrels), built in World War II. While the application of the agreement is not clearly defined, it could be interpreted to affect the current employment of MSTS tankers in any one of several possible ways: (a) To bar all MSTS tankers from lifting Saudi Arabian oil; (b) to place MSTS tankers on the same basis as oil company tankers and thereby prevent the replacement of obsolete vessels as they are withdrawn from service or to prevent the addition of other tankers for the lift in case of an emergency; or (c) as having no effect on MSTS operations, as the agreement could be construed to pertain only to vessels controlled by private oil companies or shipping companies. Interpretations (a) or (b) above would seriously affect the transportation of oil for the Armed Services both in peace or war and could result in the placing of virtual control of this source of Armed Services oil at the will of a foreign shipping enterprise.

I therefore recommend that you bring this matter to the attention of the Secretary of State, noting the concern with which the Department of Defense views any agreement which could interfere with the existing arrangements for transporting vitally needed Saudi Arabian oil products for the use of the U.S. Armed Services. It is my view that the Department of State should obtain the assurance of the Saudi Arabian government that any agreement it may make in the premises will not affect the transportation of oil by vessels operated by or under the control of the Military Sea Transportation Service.

Sincerely, R. B. ANDERSON

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Wilson)[1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, April 24, 1954.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I refer to your letter of April 16, 1954,[2] regarding the reported agreement between the Saudi Arabian Government and the A. S. Onassis Company and the possible effects of implementation of the agreement upon the Navy's interest in transportation of Saudi Arabian oil.

I fully appreciate and share your concern, and that of the Secretary of the Navy and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, over implications of the reported agreement as they affect United States interests. The Department has therefore authorized our Ambassador at Jidda to represent our interest in this matter to the King of Saudi Arabia and to endeavor to obtain an assurance that the transportation of Saudi Arabian oil by vessels operated by or under the control of the Military Sea Transportation Service will remain unaffected by any agreement which the Saudi Arabian Government may make.[3]

Sincerely yours, For the Acting Secretary of State:

ROBERT MURPHY

Deputy Under Secretary

SECRET NIACT DHAHRAN, May 1, 1954—6 p. m.

164. Re first sentence Department telegram 180, April 28 to Dhahran. [2]

1. On April 29 I discussed Deptel 179, April 23 [3] with Aramco executives Davies, Ohliger and Owen. We reviewed recent developments and past instructions and concurred desirability my handing King written communication as follows: "I am directed by my Government to inform Your Majesty that, on basis of what it has learned about the so-called Onassis tanker agreement, which was confirmed by Your Majesty's decree of sixth Shabat, my Government is concerned over its effects on American interests, both those of private American companies and those of American national defense.

I am to refer in particular to the apparent stopping of United States Government tankers (specifically those operated by or under the control of the Maritime Sea Transport Service of the American Navy) from lifting at Ras Tanura oil from Saudi-Arabian fields; and I am to request Your Majesty's assurance that the transportation of such oil by these tankers will not be affected by this agreement.

[2] Not printed; it informed the Embassy that since the Department of State did not have the text of the Onassis agreement, it was not able to elaborate on the instructions it had already transmitted to the Ambassador. (780.022/4-2754)

[3] This was the same as telegram 303 to Jidda, not printed, but see footnote 3, Document 340.

I am to state also that my Government shares the opinion of Aramco, as already communicated to Your Majesty's Government, and of other interested private American companies that this agreement is not in keeping with the Aramco concession agreement with Saudi Arabia".

2. King received me April 30 and, after greetings, permitted me, as is customary, enumerate subjects I wished discuss. He replied would first discuss Onassis matter, whereupon I suggested Prince Faisal read him Arabic translation my communication. This was done. (Note: King's weak eyesight does not permit him read ordinary type.)

3. King replied "the Ambassador is right in bringing this to me." He then stated emphatically (and later reiterated) "United States Navy tankers are unaffected by this agreement." [4] He seemed to be addressing Prince Faisal and royal Councilors Khalid Gargoni and Jamal Hussain, only other Saudi officials present, as well as me. (Note: Aramco has reports that in Council discussions Faisal, Finance Minister Sulaiman and Commerce Minister Ali Reza supported Onassis agreement, whereas Royal Councilors Gargoni, Hussain and Sorur opposed it.)

4. King continued, in substance: as to interests of private companies, SA would fulfill obligations it had assumed; where no obligations lay, it would, in exercise of sovereign rights, act as it deemed best in national interest. He spoke with some heat and, I thought, irritation—not with me but rather, I surmise, because whole matter was distasteful to him.

5. I replied by urging that Aramco have full hearing to present its views, those of other interested American companies and broader considerations which had occasioned concern in high circles world oil industry. In ensuing brief discussion King again made his position clear. While he would regret have to pursue subject, door was always open to Aramco; he would not violate national obligations but, where there were none, he would not hesitate do anything advantageous SA; "this any country would do"; action had been complex.

6. I thanked King both for his assurance that US tankers were unaffected by agreement and for full exposition his position but added that I hoped, if tanker export should fall off materially, Aramco would not be blamed. King replied in substance that, if by will of God this loss occurred, Aramco would not be blamed; but if it were found to be Aramco's fault, appropriate action would be taken promptly.

[4] Despatch 384 from Jidda, May 17, transmitted a translation of an undated aide-mémoire received by the Embassy on May 12, confirming the King's promise. The aide-mémoire also stated that Aramco tankers would not be affected but, according to the despatch, that statement had little significance since Aramco neither owned nor chartered tankers. (886A.2553/5–1754)

7. During later conversation with Gargoni and Hussain on other matters I suggested I could better report to Department re Onassis matter were I to have copy agreement. They promised "submit request to King and send his reply tomorrow".

8. I shall discuss foregoing with Aramco officials and report reactions.[5]

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Arabian Peninsula-Iraq Affairs (Fritzlan)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, May 12, 1954.

Subject: The Onassis Agreement

Participants:	British Embassy	State Department
	Mr. Brook	NE—Mr. Mart
	Mr. Bailey	NE—Mr. Dorsey
	Mr. Druitt	NE—Mr. Fritzlan
	Mr. Bullmore	L/E—Mr. Metzger
		PED—Mr. Eakens
		TRC—Mr. Falck

Mr. Brook opened the discussion by saying that the British Government was most unhappy over the [Onassis] agreement as it was understood from reports and rumors received. He mentioned in this connection that the British shipping interests had made strong representations to the Government. He said it was not entirely clear that any British interest was directly involved, but nevertheless, the British had strong objections to this type of agreement based on:

(1) The establishment of an undesirable precedent which could be used by other oil-producing countries;

(2) The agreement as reported was believed to be a breach of unwritten law to the extent that it denied a generally accepted fact that title to oil following production passes to the company concerned which should then be free to dispose of it; and

(3) The important maritime issue, i.e., flag discrimination is involved and this is of special interest to the U.K.

The Department's representatives expressed their general concern over this matter and reviewed Ambassador Wadsworth's recent representations to King Saud made on instruction by the Department and the King's reaction (Dhahran's telegram 164 of May 1, 1954).[1]

Mr. Hart expressed the view that Aramco's parent companies would refuse to comply with the terms of the agreement and wondered if the economic implications of the agreement could be carefully worked out and brought to the King's attention in order to show him how implementation of the agreement might well produce severe cuts in sales and hence a reduction in production and royalties.

There was some discussion of the ability of the company to carry out a policy of reducing production in the face of determined opposition of a sovereign government and the various sanctions at its disposal.

It was generally agreed that it would be desirable to have studies made of the legal and economic implications of the agreement and that a renewal of representations to the Saudi Arabian Government should be considered. There was also general agreement that such representations would be more forceful if made simultaneously by ourselves and the British, although perhaps along somewhat different lines.

It was agreed that efforts should be renewed to obtain a copy of the agreement in order to make the necessary studies and that the Department and the Embassy should keep in touch on this matter.

The Chargé in Saudi Arabia (Jones) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL JIDDA, May 15, 1954.

No. 372

Ref: Embassy Despatch 315, March 16, 1954, subject "Aramco Price Negotiations with Saudi Arabian Government".[1]

---

[1] Not printed; it reported speculation by an Aramco official that negotiations with Saudi Arabia might not be resumed until June. (886A.2553/3-1654)

Subject: Resumption of Saudi-Aramco Oil Pricing Negotiations.

Oil pricing negotiations between Aramco and the Saudi Arabian Government were resumed in Riyadh on April 24. Saudi Arabian Government officials participating in the discussions were as follows:

Crown Prince Feisal, Deputy President of the Council of Ministers.
Shaikh Yusuf Yassin, Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs.
Khalid Bey Gargoni, King's Counselor.
Abdullah Turaiqi, Director of Petroleum Supervisory Office, Ministry of Finance.
Ahmed Musa, (Egyptian) Legal Adviser of Foreign Ministry.

The Aramco participants were as follows:

Mr. Fred Davies, Chairman of Board of Directors.
Mr. F. W. Ohliger, Vice President for Concession Affairs.
Mr. R. I. Brougham, Vice President (Finance)
Mr. Garry Owen, Representative to the Saudi Arabian Government.
Mr. W. Spurlock, Associate Counsel for Aramco.
Sabha Habashai, Legal Adviser.

1. April 24 Meeting of the Full Committee.

Prince Feisal opened the meeting and gave a very friendly talk emphasizing the necessity of cooperation between the Saudi Arabian Government and Aramco for their mutual benefit. After the conclusion of Prince Feisal's speech, Shaikh Yusuf, who according to Mr. Owen "carried the ball" for the Saudi Arabian Government in the discussions, analyzed the Company's letter to the Government of October setting forth the Company's new proposals (see Embassy Despatch No. 142 of October 11, 1953 [2] on the subject "Aramco's 'New Proposals' "). The Department will recall that in this letter Aramco undertook to bill offtakers for all deliveries for export on the basis of posted prices at Ras Tanura. Shaikh Yusuf's comment on the new proposals was that they were "acceptable with some minor modifications".

Shaikh Yusuf then suggested that a discussion be initiated regarding the retroactive claims of the Saudi Arabian Government in connection with past sales to offtakers at the discount price. Shaikh Yusuf said that there was no need for either side to restate its arguments in support of its own position, since this ground had been thoroughly covered in past discussions. Prince Feisal thereupon proposed that a subcommittee be appointed, the terms of reference of which would be "to consider the question of the past and how to settle it". Again Prince Feisal's remarks were friendly and conciliatory and emphasized the necessity of a spirit of compromise on both sides in order to settle the issue.

It was agreed that the subcommittee would be established, the members of which would be as follows:

SAG officials:

Khalid Bey Gargoni
Mohammed Suroor
Abdullah Turaiqi
Ahmed Musa (observer)

Aramco representatives:

Garry Owen
R. I. Brougham
W. Spurlock
L. McClaskey (Chief Accountant, New York office)
D. J. Fullerton

2. April 25 Meeting of Subcommittee.

Khalid Bey Gargoni opened this meeting of the subcommittee with the statement that the Saudi Arabian Government did not wish to "cause harm to Aramco"; however, it considered its claims to be just and its rights to be clear. As an indication of its spirit of compromise the Saudi Arabian Government would be willing to permit Aramco to pay the retroactive claims of the Government in installments over a period of several years.

Mr. Owen commented that the Saudi proposal as advanced by Khalid Bey whereby the Company would pay the Saudi claim in installments was not a compromise. He added that the company had taken several steps forward in the past to meet the Saudi position and that it was now time for the Saudis to make the next move.

Khalid Bey agreed that the Saudi Government would make a new proposal and the meeting adjourned.

3. May 5 Meeting of Subcommittee.

Prince Feisal called a meeting of the subcommittee on May 5. After the meeting was open, Khalid Bey gave the Company representatives a memorandum stating that the primary question pending was the "termination of the Company's profits" from Jan 1, 1950, to June 30, 1953. It was also stated that the subcommittee was appointed to ascertain from the Government what its claims were. The Government's claim was for a sum computed on the following basis: The difference between the posted ($1.75) and discount ($1.43) prices multiplied by the total production during the period cited and then halved (to accord with the 50–50 profit sharing principle). This amounted to 148 million dollars. The memorandum went on to express the conviction that agreement could be reached on the terms for the payment of this amount.

Mr. Owen expressed his disappointment at the proposal. He again reiterated that the willingness of the Saudi Arabian Government to accept payment of its full claim in installments was not a "compromise". He then asked if he should tell Mr. Davies that the SAG refused to make any compromise proposal. Khalid Bey replied that he must ask his colleagues before making a reply to Mr. Owen's question and the meeting adjourned.

While Aramco has no definite information on the point, it anticipates that further meetings will not take place until after the end of Ramadan (June 4).

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] May 26, 1954.

Subject: Recent Tanker Agreement Between Mr. Onassis and the Saudi Arabian Government.

Participants: Mr. Aristotle Socrates Onassis, Shipping Magnate and Owner of the Saudi Arabian Tanker Co., Ltd.
Mr. Thomas Pappas, Asst. to Mr. Spyros Skouras, Head of 20th Century-Fox Films
Mr. Henry A. Byroade, Assistant Secretary, NEA
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

Note: The following conversation resulted from a suggestion made to Mr. Byroade by Mr. Spyros Skouras of 20th Century-Fox Films, who indicated that Onassis was concerned over the reaction to his agreement with the Saudi Arabian Government and desired to be heard by the State Department on this subject.

Mr. Onassis reviewed the background of shipping developments since World War II which had culminated in his agreement with the Saudi Arabian Government. The war years had brought home to many countries their vulnerability in the face of the monopoly of commercial shipping enjoyed by the few great maritime nations, especially as these nations suffered heavy shipping casualties. Numerous states which had hitherto relied upon such shipping for their necessary trade were driven to the conclusion that they must henceforth have fleets of their own. Other states which did not require merchant fleets but which were emerging as new members of the world community, felt the nationalistic urge to have vessels operating under their own flags. Such was the case of Saudi Arabia following the example of other states such as Egypt. Mr. Onassis had recognized immediately the threat which such a movement posed to his own and to the oil companies' shipping interests. He had warned the oil companies that they could not expect to enjoy indefinitely a monopoly of offtakings from the producer countries where they enjoyed concessions. As the big companies ignored these warnings, Onassis felt obliged to move to protect himself as the tanker market became depressed. He had been approached at Monte Carlo by Saudi Arab leaders to conclude an agreement with the Saudi Government which would provide Saudi Arabia with a tanker fleet. He had attempted for some time to argue that Government out of the idea but finally gave in and agreed to negotiate when he realized that should he not do so, Saudi Arabia would move to conclude an agreement with one of his competitors. While negotiating at Jidda, he recognized that the type of contract which the Saudi Government desired was one which would give rise to considerable resentment by the oil companies and by other shipping interests. He therefore attempted to have a provision inserted in the text that the Saudi Arabian Tanker Company Ltd. enjoy only a specified share of the total offtake of oil from Saudi Arabia. This was rejected by the Saudi negotiators, who insisted on the provisions of Article 4. In the end, Mr. Onassis lost his attempts to create a more flexible agreement and signed in order not to lose the contract entirely.

Mr. Byroade asked whether Mr. Onassis had given full consideration to the widespread resentment which would result from a monopolist move of this nature. Mr. Onassis responded that the agreement provided for no monopoly whatsoever. Despite the terms of Article 4, sub-paragraph a, offtaking oil companies or their buyers could replace obsolete ships in the oil movement from Saudi Arabia. (Note: This interpretation does not appear justified by the text of Article 4 of the agreement, nor by the official interpretation of the agreement, dated May 18, 1954, and published by the Saudi Government in the May 19th edition of Al Birad Al Saudiyah.)[1] Mr. Onassis asserted categorically that the terms of his agreement with the Saudi Arabian Government were not to be taken too literally and that he was prepared to use considerable latitide in their interpretation. Furthermore, he was prepared to re-negotiate the terms of this agreement to the extent necessary to satisfy the United States Government and the major oil companies, subject to the limitation that he would not "double cross" the Saudi Arabian Government. He personally owed his start in life to the oil companies and was not unmindful of his debt. He intimated that he would be prepared to again urge upon the Saudi Government the acceptance of a provision limiting offtaking by the Saudi Arabian Tanker Company Ltd. to a percentage of the total offtake from the country. Presumably this would be proportionate to the foreseen size of the Saudi tanker fleet, 500,000 tons, and would insure that this amount of shipping was kept fully occupied. With respect to tanker rates, he indicated a willingness to be flexible in the absence of any true U.S. Maritime Commission rate and the fact that market rates were well below the last published Commission rate.

[1] Not found in Department of State files. The earliest copy of the Onassis-Saudi Arabian agreement found was transmitted by despatch 319 from Kuwait, May 29, not printed. It contained the text of the original Jan. 20 agreement and the Apr. 7 amendments. (886A.2553/5–2954) Additional copies of the agreement, transmitted in despatches from Jidda and London, are in Department of State file 886A.2553.

Throughout the conversation Mr. Onassis gave the impression of being a man who is in a tight spot who wishes to make an accommodation to save himself further ill-will. He made brief reference to the indictment against him.

Mr. Byroade thanked Mr. Onassis for his explanation and indicated that he would have to discuss the points raised by Mr. Onassis with a number of other people in order to obtain clarification of their significance.

Note: On the following day, May 27, 1954, it was reported by Mr. James Terry Duce, Vice President of Aramco, that Onassis was that day consulting with Aramco at its offices in New York.

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 27, 1954.

Subject: (1) Buraimi Dispute; (2) Onassis Agreement

Participants: Mr. Duce, of Aramco
Mr. Chapman, of Aramco
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Hart
NE—Mr. Fritzlan

(1) Buraimi Dispute

Mr. Byroade expressed to the Aramco representatives our grave concern over developments in the Buraimi issue.[1] He said we were feeling increasingly at a disadvantage because we did not have a full understanding or appreciation of British objectives in the Persian Gulf area. He added that he planned shortly to go into this matter with the British Embassy and take a firm line. He was prepared to say that while we had backed them up to a great extent on the Buraimi issue in the past, we felt we must now know more precisely what their policies and objectives were in the area in order that our own long-term policy could be formulated accordingly.

Mr. Duce expressed appreciation and repeated the statement made often by Aramco representatives that the present critical stage of the dispute had been arrived at only because of British insistence to continue operations in the disputed area while Aramco has continued to maintain a policy since the Stobart incident in 1949 of not entering the disputed area.

(2) Onassis Agreement

Mr. Byroade stated that he had had recent talks with Mr. Skouras, movie producer, who is generally interested in the welfare of Greeks in the United States, concerning the Onassis agreement. It has been clear from these talks that Mr. Onassis is rather worried about implications of the agreement and would like to reach an understanding with the oil companies. Mr. Byroade mentioned that he had obtained a copy of the agreement[2] and had recently decided to take advantage of an opportunity to talk to Mr. Onassis. This he and Mr. Hart had done the previous day, and during the discussion Mr. Onassis indicated readiness to attempt to renegotiate the agreement if a formula could be worked out which would appease the oil companies without laying him open to the charge of breaking faith with the Saudi Government. In this connection he intimated he would be prepared to urge the Saudis to agree to a provision limiting his total offtake to a certain percentage. In any event, Mr. Onassis was prepared to give liberal interpretation to the agreement and in this regard he stated that it was his understanding that Article 4 of the agreement would not preclude replacement of tankers presently in use. He stated further that the provision in the agreement regarding rates was more or less fictitious and should not be considered necessarily binding.

[1] For documentation on U.S. interest in the British-Saudi Arabian dispute concerning Buraimi, see Documents 1466 ff.

[2] See footnote 1, supra.

Mr. Duce was happy to receive this information and stated that at this moment Mr. Onassis, on his own initiative, was discussing his agreement with Aramco representatives.[3]

Mr. Byroade suggested that Aramco consider the possibility of coming to some arrangement with Mr. Onassis, since it appeared that they were to some extent at his mercy. Mr. Byroade stated further that our legal people were doubtful that Aramco had a good case on the matter of the Onassis agreement conflicting with the terms of their concession agreement.

[3] An Aramco official reported to the Department of State that Onassis had been friendly and conciliatory at his meeting with Aramco representatives. He also reported information from Aramco representatives in Saudi Arabia that the Onassis agreement had been amended. (Memorandum of conversation, June 2; 886A.2553/6-254)

OFFICIAL USE ONLY [WASHINGTON,] June 24, 1954.[1]

Subject: Negotiation of New Group Agreements by Participants in the Iraq Petroleum Company.

Participants: Mr. Charles F. Darlington, President, and Mr. Charles L. Lockett, Vice President, Near East Development Corporation
NE—Mr. Dorsey
NE—Mr. Gay
NE—Mr. Fritzlan
PED—Mr. Eakens

Mr. Darlington stated that the purpose of their visit was to inform the Department about certain impending developments with respect to the negotiation of new group agreements by the participants in the Iraq Petroleum Company. These new agreements, which are five in number, are expected to be signed by Mr. Gulbenkian in Lisbon next week, thereby bringing them into operation. They have been under negotiation with varying degrees of intensity for two or three years. In addition to correcting certain technical and administrative provisions, which in practice gave rise to certain difficulties, the new agreements provide the machinery for implementing the 1952 IPC agreement with Iraq. In so doing, the new agreements provide for the purchase and sale of rights to oil within Iraq by subsidiaries of the participating companies. In the purchase and sale of these rights, the subsidiary companies realize a profit between the border price of 94 shillings per ton and cost of 13 shillings per ton, which is subject to the 50–50 agreement.

One new feature in the new group agreements is the provision which is made for the disposition of surplus oil. Up to the present time there has been no provision for surplus oil. Companies were required to nominate five years in advance the quantities of oil which they were prepared to take and it was that duty of the IPC management to make the necessary investments and other arrangements in order to produce the nominated quantities of oil. It has been found in practice, however, that the management, acting conservatively and not wishing to be caught short, has always expanded facilities to a level more than sufficient to produce the quantities of oil which the participating companies nominated five years previously. Under the new group agreements, if excess oil is available and one or more of the participating companies wishes to take it, the terms and conditions under which such oil may be taken are now set forth.

Mr. Gulbenkian's 5 per cent interest has represented a special problem from the standpoint of the other companies in regard to implementing the 1952 IPC–Iraq agreement. All of the participating companies plan to set up local subsidiaries in Iraq which will pay royalties of 12½ per cent on the oil which they take, and in addition, taxes sufficient to total 50 per cent of the subsidiary's profit. In turn, the parent companies expect to receive a tax credit for the amount so paid the Iraq Government as taxes against the taxes due the country of their incorporation. Since Mr. Gulbenkian neither takes Iraq oil nor pays income taxes to any jurisdiction, there is no advantage to him in having any payments made to Iraq on a tax basis. At the outset he took the position that the whole 50 per cent of the profit which would be paid to the Iraq Government should be paid as royalty and that if payments were to be made in any other way and the other participating interests should realize any benefits therefrom, he should share proportionately in those benefits. Recognizing that Mr. Gulbenkian was in a position to block the other participating interests from going the tax route, those interests agreed in principle to share proportionately with Mr. Gulbenkian any benefits which they derived from going the tax route. One of the five new group agreements takes care of this problem.

Another interesting point which came out in the discussion was the position of Compagnie Francaise des Petroles with respect to tax credits. Under French income tax laws, there is no provision for a tax credit being obtained by a French company for taxes paid in a foreign jurisdiction. The French representatives made this point in the U.S.-French oil talks in December 1953, and went on to leave the impression that this put CFP at a disadvantage compared with the other IPC participants in the sale of Iraq oil. The NED representatives pointed out that far from being at a disadvantage, CFP has been the beneficiary of an arrangement for some time (it is believed since 1952) that is roughly as favorable to CFP as a 100 per cent tax credit to the other IPC participants. Under the arrangement, the French Government agreed to allow CFP to organize a North African company domiciled in Casablanca through which its interests in Iraq would be handled. The North African subsidiary of CFP, while not receiving a tax credit, will in fact, however, pay only a very nominal income tax, believed to be 2 per cent, to the North African Government, thereby discharging in their entirety all of CFP's income tax obligation on its operations in Iraq.

A point involving IPC's operations which heretofore had not been completely clear concerns the price at which the participating companies acquire oil from the Iraq Petroleum Company. It has always been provided that such price of acquisition would be cost plus 1 shilling per ton. The extra shilling per ton is a payment made by the participating companies to the Iraq Petroleum Company outside of Iraq and hence is in no way involved in the transactions of the participating companies or IPC with the Iraq Government. Mr. Darlington thought this was a device for ensuring that IPC paid at least a nominal income tax to the U.K.

The NED representatives described at some length the mechanism now being used by the participating companies in making their payments to the Iraq Government. The payments for both royalties and taxes are now made quarterly, 30 days after the end of the quarter, by the Iraq Petroleum Company, which obtains a receipt for such payments. Hence, both tax and royalty payments to the Iraq Government are more or less up-to-date and current at all times. The receipts for such payments obtained by IPC are turned over to the participating companies who, when their tax payments fall due in April of the following year, utilize the tax receipts in the final discharge of the obligations.

The NED representatives undertook to supply the Department with two copies of each of the five new group agreements when they had been finalized and put into effect.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Nez Hallett of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 12, 1954.

Subject: Onassis Agreement and Pacific Western Oil Company

Participants: Mr. Hadfield, Representing PWOC
PED—Mr. Eakens
L/E—Mr. Metzger
NE—Mr. Gay
NE—Mr. Hallett

Mr. Hadfield called upon the Department at his request to ask the Department's position concerning Pacific Western reaching an agreement with Onassis to transport oil produced in the Saudi portion of the Saudi-Kuwait Neutral Zone. He said at the moment there was a preliminary oral agreement.

The oral agreement provides that beginning in October 1954 the recently launched King Saud (47,000 tons) will make three trips for Pacific Western, two to the West Coast of the United States and one to the East Coast. He said that the rate would be United States Maritime minus twenty percent for the first 30,000 tons and anything above that without charge. He believed that Pacific Western could load up to 40,000, which would bring the average discount to about 40 percent.

Mr. Hadfield stated that the agreement once signed was binding on Pacific Western unless Onassis reached an agreement with Aramco before the first shipment or at any time prior to the completion of the third shipment.

Mr. Hadfield was advised that since the United States Government has made representations to the Saudi Government to the effect that the Onassis agreement appeared to be contrary to the Aramco concession and that this agreement was at the present time being given serious study in the Department, the Department would prefer to defer temporarily its reaction respecting Pacific Western's course of action. Mr. Hadfield was urged to ask the company not to go ahead with the agreement until he had an answer from the Department. Mr. Hadfield agreed that he would do so but that the company was under great pressure from Onassis.

At this meeting the opportunity was taken to discuss with Mr. Hadfield a draft letter he had sent to the Department on February 11, 1954. This "draft letter" was to the Saudi Arabian Finance Minister in answer to the Finance Minister's letter of January 23, 1954, advising the company of the Onassis agreement. In this letter the Company specifically pointed out that this agreement was in violation of the concession but further said that the company was agreeable to abide by it if rates were competitive. Mr. Hadfield said that this letter was dispatched to the Finance Minister February 15, 1954.

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] July 15, 1954.[1]

Subject: Onassis Agreement

Participants: Mr. R. G. Follis, Chairman, Board of Directors, Standard Oil Co., Calif.
Mr. M. J. Rathbone, Director, Standard Oil Co., New Jersey
Mr. S. A. Swensrud, President, Gulf Oil Corporation, Pittsburgh
Mr. B. B. Jennings, President, Socony Vacuum Oil Co., New York
Mr. J. W. Foley, Vice Pres., The Texas Co., New York
Rear Adm. Thos. J. Kelly (Ret.), Washington representative, Socony
G—Mr. Murphy
NE—Mr. Dorsey

Mr. Murphy explained the Department's serious concern over the Onassis agreement. He welcomed this opportunity to meet with the heads of the Aramco parent companies in order to obtain their individual ideas on a possible solution to the problem. Messrs. Follis and Rathbone outlined the problem facing the parent or shipping companies and expressed concern that they would be faced with a virtual ultimatum to use an Onassis ship any time within the next six weeks. Mr. Jennings reiterated the Company's position as set forth to Mr. Jernegan several days before; viz. the parent companies would refuse to accede to the agreement and place cargo on any Onassis ship, although they realized the danger of subsequent shutdown and even possible nationalization.

[1] This memorandum of conversation was prepared on July 20.

Further statements by members of the group brought out the following points: They wished to state their position openly to a responsible official of the Department in order to discuss it and make certain the Department had no objection to the position they were taking from the point of view of national interest. In view of the danger of imminent action by the Saudi Government, they asked the Department further to support their position by immediate diplomatic representations . . . .

Mr. Murphy replied that the Department shared the feeling of the companies that the agreement was a violation of its concession, and after discussion at high levels within the Department, it had been agreed that the companies' position be supported by representations to the Saudi Government. The Department of Defense agreed with this course of action. We were now concerned with the best time and manner in which to advance our point of view to the King.

Mr. Jennings expressed gratification for the Department's support. He said that although it had earlier been suggested that the Vice President go to the field to present our protests to the King, it was now felt that there were disadvantages to such a method and that the Department was better able to choose its own method.

Mr. Murphy stated that the Department's inclination was to make use of the services of our Ambassador whom it considered highly qualified to carry out the mission. He then went on to say that the Department would attempt to get a cable into the Ambassador's hands not later than the first of the following week, in which it would present its view and request that he take such action as he deemed most effective in presenting our position.

It was agreed that in general the companies would have no objection to the Saudi Government's ownership of a tanker fleet, provided that its operations were conducted on a competitive basis in the regular free international market and that no rebates were involved. Mr. Jennings noted that although absolutely no cargoes could be guaranteed, he felt a reasonable amount of business would be supplied to such ships. In reply to a question by Mr. Dorsey, Mr. Follis stated that he knew of no other companies which would be affected by the Saudi decree, but after some consideration remembered that notice of the agreement had been presented to the Pacific Western. He expressed the opinion that the Saudi Government would not consider important any action by Pacific Western in view of its size. He said, however, that the next time he saw an official of the company he would inquire as to their position. Mr. Dorsey remarked that in view of the several parent companies involved it would be easiest to maintain one central point of contact and assume that Mr. James Terry Duce of the Arabian American Oil Company continued to be the principal avenue of communication. This was confirmed by the officers of the parent companies.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Economic Affairs, Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Gay)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 16, 1954.

Subject: Pacific Western Oil Company and the Onassis Agreement

Participants: Deputy Under Secretary Murphy
Mr. Hadfield, Pacific Western Oil Co.
NE—Mr. Gay

Mr. Hadfield, after referring to the letter of notification from the Saudi Arabian Government concerning the Onassis Agreement, [1] said Pacific Western's reply to the Saudi Arabian Government had pointed out that the Agreement contravened Pacific Western's concession and incorporated economically untenable terms, but that to the extent possible Pacific Western would cooperate with Mr. Onassis. Pacific Western received a response from the Saudi Arabian Government in April which expressed the hope that Pacific Western could come to agreement with Mr. Onassis.

Mr. Getty who owns 85% of the $20 million investment of Pacific Western met with Mr. Onassis in Paris and reached a "tentative" understanding. This understanding provides that Pacific Western will employ the Onassis vessel, Saud I, for three trips to the Western Hemisphere at rates substantially below those called for in the Onassis Agreement but still somewhat above the competitive level. If in the meantime Aramco comes to agreement with Onassis, Pacific Western is released from the commitment. After these first three loads on Saud I have been completed, Pacific Western would give Mr. Onassis forty-eight hours on all offers to meet other competition. Mr. Hadfield emphasized that his client, Mr. Getty, had much at stake and that this understanding offered him a chance to "buy our peace for $200,000", a price that is "not too high". Mr. Hadfield mentioned incidentally that he did not know if Onassis yet owns Saud I or how much money he might have paid on it.

[1] Despatch 220 from Kuwait, Feb 7, informed the Department of State that Pacific Western had received the letter. (886A.2553/2-754) It was the same as the letter received by Aramco, referred to in telegram 333 from Jidda, Document 329.

Mr. Murphy asserted that the U.S. Government is taking a hard look at the Onassis Agreement and may make firm representations to the Saudi Arabian Government. The policies contemplated in the Agreement have important ramifications and wide acceptance of them would seriously affect international commerce. Mr. Murphy indicated that we would have no objection to the Saudi Arabian Government developing a merchant marine even with the collaboration of Mr. Onassis if the bad features of the Agreement were eliminated. It is the monopolistic and restrictive elements that are not attractive to us. He hoped Pacific Western would find it possible to cooperate in achieving our objective.

Mr. Hadfield noted that time "is of the essence" to Pacific Western, that Onassis representatives have been pressing him all week, that Mr. Getty has been under the same pressures in Paris and that Pacific Western hopes to finalize its position in a week or so. He wondered if its going ahead would hamper U.S. Government plans.

Mr. Murphy replied that to some extent it would hamper our plans and, to Mr. Hadfield's inquiry if he should try to have the decision deferred, further replied that it would be of help to us if Pacific Western would do this. Mr. Hadfield agreed to attempt deferment and was told we in turn would keep him informed of developments.

confidentially informed Department a) they have replied to Saudis' letter of notification that although Agreement contravenes concession rights they will do business Onassis if competitive rates offered and b) they about make deal Onassis covering three trips by Saud I to Western hemisphere at rates lower than Agreement level but slightly above present competitive rates. Department has requested Pacific Western hold off finalizing deal pending reply this telegram.

2. Department has replied to queries re our position from British, French and Dutch that question under study following April 29th approach to King. Informed Eden expressed concern SAG Ambassador June 24.

3. Problem discussed highest levels in Department and in Joint Chiefs. Agreed USG should back companies with SAG in view:

(a) As stated Deptel 303 April 23[2] agreement not in keeping Aramco concession.

(b) Companies' surrender to agreement likely create serious repercussion throughout shipping and oil world from point of view private and public commercial interests and general international trade policy.

4. Aramco continues explore legal aspects. While Aramco and Department agree should be fullest legal exploration, both inclined view that, in spite strength of case supporting position Aramco agreement violated, resolution Onassis matter may not depend primarily on legalities involved especially in view of method for settling legal question, arbitration between Company and SAG under Article 31 of concession contracts and Company uncertain whether desires arbitrate.

5. Fully realize difficulty situation you face. Feel here deterioration King's friendship and his recent stand both regarding military aid and Point IV missions has been unreasonable in light three points enumerated Paragraph 2 urtel July 7[3] and in light our repeated efforts help in Buraimi settlement. . . . Nevertheless we deem it essential every effort be made eliminate from Agreement restrictive, monopolistic feature before situation further aggravated by open break between companies and SAG.

6. Department therefore wishes you express in manner you deem most effective very serious view we take of whole question and widespread ramifications which may result. Following are suggestions for your guidance:

terests has increased. Implementation would result in wide and serious public resentment. We believe this also true other countries having commercial interests Saudi Arabia.

b) In our opinon Onassis agreement not in keeping with agreement entered into between SAG and company. Hence regardless possible legal maneuvers would be wide belief that Aramco concession violated. Contemplated action under Onassis agreement would at minimum appear as act of bad faith and create bad impression on world opinion, already getting much public attention.

c) Onassis agreement inconsistent with established practice world commerce. If implemented in Saudi Arabia, similar arrangements almost certain be adopted by other nations. Spread this practice would seriously injure commerce all nations including Saudi Arabia. Quite apart from immediate American private interests involved, USG cannot passively acquiesce in establishment such pernicious precedent. SAG should understand this is question of principle which would not necessarily be affected by degree of monopoly to be enjoyed by Onassis. An essential element in our view is that oil buyer or seller as case may be retain right to designate ships transporting oil as is generally accepted practice international commerce. This along with related principle freedom of seas has been foundation expansion international trade and commerce.

d) From practical business viewpoint US believes Saudi Government would run grave danger substantial loss by implementation Onassis Agreement. Financial benefits to Saudi Government from Onassis deal bound to be infinitesimal compared potential loss oil royalties. Loss of markets for only one million barrels of oil would roughly cancel contemplated annual financial benefits. If contract implemented resentment and resistance on part many oil buyers likely impair Aramco production, income and hence Saudi royalties to much greater extent. There is increasing evidence that resistance will be tremendous. From dollars and cents viewpoint Saudi Government appears have been seriously misled.

e) Since any sovereign power free to establish own fleet naturally neither USG nor companies have objection to concept tanker fleet under Saudi flag and believe there would be no doubt that such fleet would obtain reasonable participation Saudi oil traffic provided Onassis agreement modified so as to eliminate rebates and special priorities and thereby providing for operation of Saudi Vessels in free competitive markets at going commercial rates. In view long friendship we are bringing these facts attention King in effort solve problem according to best interests of Saudi Arabia as well as US. We believe SAG will receive more revenue if this done than by present scheme which will only create antagonisms and tendency divert trade.

7. FYI: It looks to us from here as if this issue may produce critical point in our relations with Saudi Arabia . . . .

8. If King's attitude is based on belief company and USG will back down, we would hope your démarche along lines set forth this telegram would disabuse him of that notion and set him to find ways to avoid showdown with Aramco. . . . We also have reason believe Onassis aware of seriousness of scheme and mounting difficulties he will face in commercial world. He probably anxious squirm out. These factors encourage us to hope that clearcut statement USG attitude plus discussion with selected influential Saudis if undertaken soon enough will avoid issue and perhaps in end clarify whole atmosphere US-SAG relations. Issue can be avoided by modifying Onassis Agreement by elimination restrictive features. Onassis has indicated willingness interpret Agreement loosely or modify and already offered near competitive rates Pacific Western. Modifications could be made without fanfare or loss face and only Onassis who already seeking perpetrate similar pernicious deals other countries would be loser.

9. As background air pouching legal opinions firm White & Case NYC and memorandum prepared by Duce.

10. Your appraisal and recommendation re substance this telegram requested soonest. You authorized however proceed along lines suggested immediately.

886D.2553/7-1954: Despatch

The Ambassador in the United Kingdom (Aldrich) to the Department of State

LIMITED OFFICIAL USE LONDON, July 19, 1954.

Subject: Ruler of Kuwait's Desire to Modify the Terms of the Present Oil Concession Contract

Earlier this year Mr. H. A. Kemp the London representative of the ruler of Kuwait notified the Kuwait Oil Company that the ruler considered circumstances to have changed sufficiently to warrant a modification of terms of the present oil concession in respect to the method of calculating gross revenues. The letter alluded to the ruler's understanding that the Governments of Iraq and Saudi Arabia had recently agreed with oil companies holding the concessions in the two countries that the 50–50 division of profits would thereafter be on the basis of posted prices. In the case of Kuwait, on the other hand, income was unfavorably affected by the terms of the Gulf–Shell contract. Mr. Kemp asked that the company arrange to meet with him with a view to making changes which Kuwait thought necessary in the present concession agreement. The Department was notified of this letter from Mr. Kemp by Mr. S. A. Swensrud who wrote to the Deputy Under Secretary of State to inform him of the ruler's request.[1]

After considering the letter from Mr. Kemp for several weeks, the Kuwait Oil Company with the approval of the Gulf Oil Corporation and the Anglo-Iranian Oil Company sent an aide-mémoire to Mr. Kemp on June 15 which in effect acknowledged the willingness of the company to meet with the representatives of the ruler of Kuwait on any matter at any time but denying that circumstances had so changed as to warrant a meeting for the specific purpose of modifying the method of calculating gross revenues in accordance with the undertaking in the company's letter of December 30, 1951 dealing with this particular matter. As for the comment that similar changes had been made in concession agreements in the case of Iraq and Saudi Arabia the company said there had been no change in the percentage of profits divided which continued to be 50–50 and that as far as the company understood there had been no changes in the method of calculating the division of profits in the two countries. It was suggested, therefore, that it was premature to meet to discuss a different means of calculating gross revenue and that the proposed meeting should be postponed until the results of negotiations now going on in the area were known. The company indicated its readiness to consider the matter in its relation to Kuwait should such negotiations result in changes subject, of course, to the understanding that any changes which might later be negotiated would not result in any retroactive payments.

In a letter dated July 9 Mr. Kemp replied to the aide-mémoire.[2] In his reply he said that the aide-mémoire was not responsive. He disputed the company's interpretation of the situation in the other oil producing countries of the Middle East contending that the other countries were in fact deriving a greater income than Kuwait by virtue of the higher price at which their oil was sold. He said that the aide-mémoire was of such a character that he felt it would serve no purpose to send it on to the Ruler and he asked that the matter be reconsidered.

[1] A letter to Deputy Under Secretary of State Murphy from Chairman of the Board of the Gulf Oil Corporation Swensrud, dated May 17, not printed, enclosed a copy of Kemp's letter of May 4. (886D.2553/5–1754)

SECRET NIACT JIDDA, July 26, 1954—6 p. m.

38. 1. After discussion substance Deptels 16, July 16, [2] and 20, July 21 [3] with Davies, Brougham and Owen of Aramco I submit following draft of aide-mémoire in which, Department concurring, I would hand Prince Faisal as proposed Embtel 32, July 20: [4]

Ambassador Wadsworth recalled that on April 30 last he handed to His Majesty a communication expressing inter alia his government's concern over the effect the Onassis agreement would have on private American interests.

In this regard the communication stated that the US Government shared the opinion of Aramco and of other private American companies that the Onassis agreement was not in keeping with the Aramco concession agreement.

To this His Majesty replied in substance that Saudi Arabia would fulfill all relevant obligations and it would act as it deemed best in the national interest.

At that time the full text of the Onassis agreement was not known either to the US Government or to private American interests. Since its publication their concern has increased.

Consequently and because of its long friendship for Saudi Arabia the US Government feels it would be wanting in due frankness were it not to set forth the very serious view it takes of this question and of the widespread ramifications which would result if appropriate solution is not found.

Firstly, as to legalities involved it reiterates its view that the Onassis agreement is not in keeping with the Aramco concession agreement. It holds after study of the text that the Onassis agreement is violative of the relevant obligations assumed by Saudi Arabia when granting the exclusive rights set forth in the concession agreement.

Secondly, it is persuaded that implementation of the Onassis agreement would result in wide and serious public resentment not only in the US but also in other countries having commercial relations with Saudi Arabia. At minimum Saudi Arabia would be thought to have committed an act of bad faith. One result would be the discouragement of foreign capital investment.

Thirdly, it deems the Onassis agreement inconsistent with established world practice in the field of international commerce. Consequently it could not passively acquiesce in the establishment of any such pernicious precedent. This is a question of principle quite apart from the private American interests immediately involved.

Fourthly, it holds that an essential element of such generally accepted international commercial practice is that seller and in turn buyer enjoy the right to designate the carrier of his merchandise—in this case oil by tank-ship.

Fifthly, it is persuaded that from the practical business point of view both Aramco and Saudi Arabia would suffer substantial loss of revenue were the Saudi Government to attempt to implement the Onassis agreement. There is today and will be for some years to come a world surplus of oil particularly in the Persian Gulf; it is a buyer's market. And this situation is today aggravated by a world surplus of tankers available at rates substantially lower than those prescribed by the Onassis agreement. Buyers of oil will not put up with restrictions or compulsions; they would shift their purchases elsewhere.

Finally the US Government urges that for all these reasons the Saudi Government eliminate from the Onassis agreement its preferential provisions. None could object to the establishment of a tanker fleet under Saudi flag; and there appears no reason for doubting that such a fleet provided it to be operated on a freely competitive basis could participate in the carrying of Aramco produced oil.

Ambassador Wadsworth asked in conclusion on instructions from his government that this aide-mémoire be brought to the special attention of His Majesty and that at so early a moment as may be conveniently possible His Majesty receive him in audience to the end that he may hear and divulge such words of reply as His Majesty may see fit to communicate to him for transmission to his government.

2. We ask that Department consider carefully essential point made in paragraph beginning "Fourthly". Can it be assailed on the facts? Or do words "generally accepted" cover exceptions, e.g., reported French Government requirement that specified percentage oil imports be carried in French bottoms?

3. Davies is wiring New York re substance last sentence paragraph beginning "finally". I suggest Department obtain New York's views before giving me green light. [5]

[5] Telegram 40 from Jidda, July 27, advised the Department of State that the Ambassador believed it would be a good idea to redraft the aide-mémoire as a formal first person note addressed to Prince Faisal as the Foreign Minister and conclude it with a request for a personal meeting to discuss the matter. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of International Materials Policy (Armstrong)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 29, 1954.[1]

Subject: Foreign Petroleum Policy and the Anti-Trust Proceedings

Participants: Mr. James Terry Duce—Aramco
Mr. Waugh—E
Mr. Armstrong—OMP

Mr. Duce came to call on Mr. Waugh, to discuss general foreign petroleum problems. The net effect of his suggestions and comments was as follows.

1. The world petroleum industry needs continual expansion if the amount of consumption predicted for 1975 by the Paley Commission Report is to be possible.
2. The only place where such expansion can occur is in the Middle East.
3. The Middle Eastern area is characterized by weak and unstable governments and all questions of foreign petroleum operations in the area must be handled with delicacy and care.
4. The anti-trust suit has been injurious to the positions of the companies abroad and has been of potential danger to United States national security.
5. There should be a governmental commission, for which the oil companies would be prepared to do the necessary staff work, which should decide what reforms the companies would make. Acceptance by the companies of these reforms should make it possible to call off the anti-trust suit.
6. Such a commission was proposed by Mr. Duce last fall, and obtained some support within the Government, but has apparently been dropped by the present Administration.
7. The new Foreign Economic Policy Commission of seventeen members, which is the subject of current legislation, should be called upon to do this task, so that security of operation for the oil companies could be assured.

In the course of Mr. Duce's presentation, Mr. Waugh commented to the effect that he was certain that the Attorney General had every intention of conducting the anti-trust suit proceedings in such a way that foreign policy problems are fully recognized. Mr. Waugh said that he would be glad to pass on to the Administrative Assistant to the President Mr. Duce's suggestion that the Foreign Economic Policy Commission look into the oil issue, but in making this comment Mr. Waugh pointed out that the main problem the Commission would have to consider was that of general commercial policy, and that it would have very little time in which to do its work, since its report would be due in March 1954 and it does not yet exist as an entity. Mr. Armstrong commented that he had examined in some detail, during the fall of 1952, the amount of work which it would be necessary for any government petroleum policy commission to do if it were to get a clear picture of the issues and problems requiring resolution. It was his conclusion that it would be impossible for the proposed Foreign Economic Policy Commission or a subcommittee of it to get the work done properly within the allotted time.

Your Royal Highness

Under instructions from my Government I have the honor to address to The Royal Saudi Arabian Government the following communication anent the agreement signed on January 20, 1954 between The Royal Saudi Arabian Government and Mr. Aristotle Socrates Onassis hereinafter referred to as the Onassis Agreement:

In this regard my communication stated that the US Government shared the opinion of Aramco and of other private American companies that the Onassis Agreement was not in keeping with the Aramco concession agreement.

To this His Majesty, the King, replied in substance that Saudi Arabia would fulfill all relevant obligations it has assumed, but that where no obligations lay it would act as it deemed best in the national interest.

[1] Telegram 31 to Jidda, July 29, not printed, transmitted some changes the Department of State proposed to the Embassy's text in telegram 38 from Jidda, Document 355. (886A.2553/7-2654) Telegram 42 from Jidda, not printed, reported telegram 43 would contain the text of a note to be delivered to the Saudi Arabian Foreign Office on Aug. 2, unless the Department altered the text in the meantime. (886A.2553/7-3054)

At that time the full text of the Onassis Agreement was not known either to the US Government or to private American interests. Since its publication their concern has increased.

Consequently and because of its long friendship for Saudi Arabia the US Government feels it would be wanting in due frankness were it not to set forth the very serious view it takes of this question and of the widespread ramifications which will result if appropriate solution is not found.

Firstly, as to legalities involved the US Government reiterates its view that the Onassis Agreement is not in keeping with the Aramco concession agreement.

Secondly, the US Government is persuaded that implementation of the Onassis Agreement would result in wide and serious public resentment not only in the US but also in other countries having commercial relations with Saudi Arabia. There is already evidence of this. At minimum Saudi Arabia would be thought to have committed an act of bad faith. One important result would be the discouragement of foreign capital investment. Some investors currently displaying interest in Saudi Arabian possibilities may be deterred. Another likely result is the imposition of retaliatory measures by other countries.

Thirdly, it deems the Onassis Agreement inconsistent with established world practice in the field of international commerce. An essential element of international ocean commerce long standard international practice is that buyer and seller by mutual agreement have the right to designate the carrier of the cargo. In accordance with this practice it is traditional in much of the petroleum industry, including Aramco, for the buyer to make choice of the carrier. Consequently the US Government could not acquiesce in the establishment of any such unfortunate precedent. This is a question of principle quite apart from the private American interests immediately involved.

Fourthly, the US Government is persuaded that from the practical business point of view both Aramco and Saudi Arabia would suffer substantial loss of revenue were The Royal Saudi Arabian Government to attempt to implement the Onassis Agreement. There is today, and probably will be for some years to come, a world surplus of oil particularly in the Persian Gulf; it is a buyers market. This situation is today aggravated by a world surplus of tankers available at rates substantially lower than those described by the Onassis Agreement. Buyers of oil will not put up with restrictions or compulsions; they will shift their purchases elsewhere.

Finally, the US Government believes for the above reasons that the interests of The Royal Saudi Arabian Government, as well as Aramco, will be best served in petroleum matters by encouraging Aramco export of oil to the widest possible markets of the Free World. This can only be done by continuing to permit the buyers the greatest freedom to transport and handle this oil through means of their own choice. The market for oil from Saudi Arabia can thus be extended and the revenues of the Government of Saudi Arabia increased.

With the continuation of this principle by The Royal Saudi Arabian Government and the consequent elimination of the preferential and monopolistic provisions of the Onassis contract the US Government can of course raise no objection to the establishment of a fleet of tank ships flying the flag of Saudi Arabia and operating on a competitive basis. However, in fairness it should be recognized that a surplus of tankers usually exists in peace time with intensified competition to the advantage of shippers.

In adding that I am directed by my Government to request that Your Royal Highness fix an early date on which we may discuss this matter, I ask Your Royal Highness to accept the renewed assurance of my highest consideration."

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan) to the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 3, 1954.

Subject: Formation of New Kuwaiti Tanker Company

Mr. Proctor, Vice President of Gulf Oil Company, telephoned me this morning from Pittsburgh to report a new development in Kuwait. He said that the Acting District Manager of the Kuwait Oil Company, a Mr. Doyle, had received an official letter from Abdulla Mulla Saleh, who is a sort of "Secretary of State" to the Ruler of Kuwait, stating that a Kuwaiti tanker company had been formed, had purchased two old tankers of 11,000 tons capacity and intended to buy two other larger ships, and that it was desired to notify the Kuwait Oil Company of the availability of these vessels for charter. The letter added that for the time being the Director of the National Bank of Kuwait would act as General Manager of the tanker company.

According to Mr. Proctor, there was no intimation that this new company would be given any special privileges or monopoly rights for the carriage of Kuwait oil. There was likewise no indication that the new company had any outside interests or inspiration. Nevertheless, Mr. Proctor was concerned that this might be the forerunner of attempts to put pressure on Gulf and Anglo-Iranian to use the Kuwaiti tankers. He commented that 11,000-ton tankers were too small to be economic in this trade and that in any case Gulf had a number of its own tankers lying idle. It could not be expected therefore that Gulf would be interested in dealing with the new company.

Mr. Proctor anticipated that Gulf would simply advise the Kuwaitis that their tankers must take their chances in the competitive field. He hoped Anglo-Iranian would take the same attitude. He expressed the view that it was important for the British Government to get to the Sheikh of Kuwait promptly and discourage him from supporting this new enterprise and especially to warn against the purchase of additional tankers which would simply become a liability.

I told Mr. Proctor that I agreed with his views and that we would communicate with the British on the subject. I added that in the case of the Onassis agreement in Saudi Arabia, we were taking a strong line to the effect that there could be no objection to the formation of a Saudi Arabian tanker company but that it must operate on a freely competitive basis.

Please prepare an appropriate instruction to London [1] and, as soon as occasion offers, discuss this with the British Embassy here.

FYI. Swensrud said in great confidence and not to be communicated British he visualized possible solution through payment Kuwaiti taxes by Shell provided Shell received corresponding tax credit from UK. This might be accomplished by device of establishing Shell subsidiary in Kuwait which would resell at profit oil received from Gulf and so subject such profit Kuwait jurisdiction. Swensrud believed if Gulf and US Government insisted on principle that Gulf must not be required pay tax on profits it did not and could not receive under existing contract, and if British nevertheless felt Sheikh's demand should be met, would be logical suggest tax be paid by company really receiving profits and that Shell therefore be permitted pay taxes to Kuwait with corresponding discount UK. He emphasized Gulf could not properly advance this suggestion itself but thought Embassy might do so informally if occasion arose. (Embassy should of course refrain from action on this unless instructed.)

Swensrud also said Gulf would probably be willing agree payment tax on posted price basis in future provided exception made for existing contracts. End FYI.

CONFIDENTIAL
OFFICIAL–INFORMAL

WASHINGTON, August 11, 1954.

DEAR ED: This letter is in further reference to the Gulf-Kuwait payments problem. No doubt you have already discussed it fully with Mr. Proctor and Mr. Hamilton and perhaps it has been satisfactorily resolved. There is, however, one thought which has occurred to us which might be useful if you have not already done something along the same line.

As our cables indicate, the Department does not believe that it should officially intervene in this question and there is no change in this position. Gulf does seem to have an idea, though, that seems to have some merit and might be acceptable to all parties concerned or affected. This is that Shell might properly pay the Kuwait tax on the discount at which it receives Kuwait oil. Mr. Swensrud told me that he had discussed this question with Shell and that Shell would be willing to pay such a tax provided it received tax credit in the U.K. Nevertheless, Gulf is reluctant to make this suggestion to the British and wondered whether we might do so. This the Department has declined to do officially, but certainly this is an idea which might occur to anyone in examining all aspects of the problem and possible solutions.

The only loser in such a solution would be the British Government. But the British Government would be the loser also if Gulf charged Shell the posted price. It is possible that someone on the British side might argue that Gulf should go to the posted price for the purpose of settling with the Shaikh but should continue to sell to Shell on the present basis since Gulf is stuck with the contract until 1969. The imposition of such a solution as this on Gulf by the British, if they were able to impose it, would not seem to be a sound and harmonious solution of a problem of one of the parties arising under the Gulf-Shell contract.

While the Department is not prepared to do anything on this officially, it occurred to us that in some of your personal and exploratory discussions with Robert Belgrave or others you might mention that, as a thought that had occurred to you, one solution would be for Shell to pay income tax to Kuwait on its discount below the posted price. You do whatever you wish on this however, but in case you mention this possibility in any of your discussions with the British we would be very interested in any reaction.

You may find that Gulf has already made this suggestion itself. I told Mr. Swensrud I did not see why they could not advance it as one of the possible solutions, but then again you may find that the Gulf officials have not suggested it.

I enjoyed my recent visit with you and Virginia and the very wonderful meal very much. Both turned a very dull day into a very happy experience. I was also glad to have the opportunity to get up to date with you on all of our current problems.

With best regards.

Sincerely,

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Economic Affairs, Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Gay)

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 16, 1954.

Subject: Onassis case

Participants: Messrs. Case, Socony Vacuum and Coleman, Standard Oil of New Jersey
Messrs. Brougham and Duce, Aramco
Mr. Murphy—G
Mr. Jernegan—NEA
Mr. Bechner—PED
Mr. Gay—NE

The representatives of the corporation called primarily to discuss the legal aspects of the Onassis case, although some attention was also given to Pacific Western's proposed agreement with Onassis. Mr. Hadfield of Pacific Western had recently discussed it with Aramco officials. Reference was made to the wording of the Aide-Mémoire handed to the Saudi Foreign Office on August 2, specifically to the omission of the sentence in the original version of the Aide-Mémoire which stated the Onassis Agreement to be "violative of the relative obligations assumed by Saudi Arabia on granting the exclusive rights set forth in the Agreement". It was felt that merely stating the Onassis Agreement was "inconsistent" with the Aramco concession contract was not strong enough and that Mr. Wadsworth consequently felt restrained from stressing the legal aspects of the case. Mr. Case said all legal opinions they had obtained so far agreed to the violative nature of the Onassis Agreement including British and Islamic opinion. These legal opinions are to be provided to the Department.

Mr. Brougham who was present at the time of the first discussion of the Onassis Agreement with the King and Faisal alluded to the King's statement, and it has been repeated by Saudi officials, that they did not intend to violate the Aramco concession agreement. He felt, therefore, that our strongest position lay in stressing the legal violation implicit in the Onassis Agreement. In this connection reference was made to the arbitration clause in Aramco's concession contract, the corporation officials indicating that arbitration of the case would not be objectionable if the Saudi Government wished to apply this procedure.

Mr. Jernegan indicated that the Department's legal counsel has had some reservations about the strength of the legal position against the Onassis Agreement and that the Secretary, on the basis of preliminary consideration, had inclined to this view.[1] He also mentioned that we had understood Aramco was not anxious to invoke the arbitration clause.

Mr. Murphy expressed interest in the further legal opinions that were mentioned and told the corporation officials the Department would fully re-examine the legal aspects of the case on the basis of all information now brought to bear.[2]

[1] A memorandum by Jernegan to Murphy, Aug. 14, gave some background information on the subject matter to be discussed in this conversation. The memorandum suggested the oil company officials might want the Department of State "to take a stronger line regarding the asserted violation of the Aramco concession." The Department of State Legal Adviser's Office, however, had carefully chosen the language used by the Department, since it was considered somewhat debatable whether the Onassis agreement really infringed on the concession in the strict legal sense. The memorandum indicated the Secretary of State had not studied the matter carefully, but had indicated his "off-hand concurrence in the views of the Legal Adviser's office.' The memorandum suggested that if the legal point should prove to be of major importance the Legal Adviser, and perhaps the Secretary of State himself, should be asked to give the matter further consideration. (886A.2553/8-1454)

[2] Telegram 50 to Jidda, Aug. 20, advised the Embassy that if the Saudi Arabian Government raised the point of the legality of the Onassis agreement, the Embassy was authorized to state that the opinion of the United States Government was that the agreement "as written is violative of Concession Agreement," but that the Ambassador did not wish to argue legalities as he was not a lawyer. The Petroleum Attaché in the United Kingdom (Moline) to the Chief of the Petroleum Policy Staff (Eakens)

CONFIDENTIAL

LONDON, August 20, 1954.

DEAR BOB: To say that I am somewhat confused by the coming and going on the Gulf-Kuwait payments problem is to put the matter mildly. I had first heard from Gulf here about the support promised by the Department for the Gulf position. Not having received any indication of a desire to give that support, I queried the Department, as you may remember, and got back an answer saying not only that we were not giving official support but seeming to acknowledge that Mr. Proctor had been led to expect it. Subsequently, I received copies of Memoranda of Conversation involving only the political officers, which even in our statement of the case seemed to indicate a willingness to support Gulf in the position it is determined to take.

That brings me up to your letter of August 11 and a brief report on my recent soundings here, including discussions with Proctor. The nub of the question seems to me to be whether we should try to withstand the demands of the Sheikh of Kuwait for a division of profits on a posted price basis minus a nominal sales discount, and secondly, whether there is a chance of success if we do. These are two entirely distinct matters which seem to me to involve a question of principle in the first instance, which we should try very hard to protect, and a matter of money in the second place, in which I think we are wise to avoid becoming entangled if possible. If I had more time, I could express this more clearly than I shall probably succeed in doing, but let me try to express my serious misgiving regarding the Department's official position, which seems to me to be quite at variance with our action in support of commercial interests in many other instances which could be cited and quite contrary to our best interests in connection with oil in the Middle East.

We are faced, it is true, with a difficult situation when Aramco has apparently conceded a posted price less 2 per cent basis for dividing profits, and when the new Iranian agreement for all practical purposes has conceded the same thing at least for three years, and when Iraq may rightly demand that its agreement be brought in line with the Arabian agreement. None the less, if we do not stand up in support of the principle that 50–50 means a true partnership and that profits be divided on true realization, and furthermore, if we do not protect a system similar to that on which Gulf has been conducting its business, we will find ourselves confronted with a rigid price structure having little possibility of lower prices in the future and no room for competitive bidding for large-scale oil outlets. It will, in short, it seems to me, create a situation which will be similar to, but worse than, any cartel-like arrangements which have hitherto bothered some of our people. Moreover, it is not in Kuwait's best interests, I am sure, to seek a profit division on other than a realized price basis properly defined.

Kuwait has reached the place it has in world production because Gulf was able to market large quantities of oil through Shell. This was done with the full knowledge of the Kuwait authorities who had the price aspects of that agreement explained to them in infinite detail only three years ago. This has been achieved notwithstanding the poorer quality of Kuwait oil. It has led to a development of facilities in Kuwait which promise even greater output if Kuwait is content to settle for large-volume, low-profit (or at least lower than other countries profit per unit) operations. If Kuwait can be developed in this fashion, Gulf is prepared, I believe, to market more aggressively than others on the long-term, lower-price basis and eventually to seek to establish itself in the Eastern Hemisphere through similar aggressive market tactics. Moreover, if we can retain Kuwait as this kind of a freer entity in international oil, we will, I think, forestall Venezuela taking the same route as the other Middle East countries are trying to do, and we might be able to re-capture Iran at the end of the three-year period when the matter of price will be reconsidered.

There are some essentials, obviously, if we are to argue that 50-50 means sharing the good and the bad, and if we are to take the position, as I think we should, that the oil producing countries should trust to the business judgment of the business half of the combination, i.e., the oil company, in matters requiring market decision. These essentials are that the companies must be beyond reproach. I think that means they must sell to affiliates at posted prices, as Gulf in fact does. It means that the large-scale, long-term or special contract which deviates significantly from posted prices must be known to, and the reasons for it understood by, the concessionary government. This again is in line with Gulf practice. It means in the specific case of Kuwait that AIOC must be prepared to justify its realization on an actual basis rather than on the assumed basis that it is identical with the Gulf realization. I cannot believe that oil companies which are prepared, apparently, to price everything at posted prices can be adverse to doing so on that part of the business which they do with themselves or affiliates. I should think they should wish to protect the possibility of special prices in special circumstances even though it may mean some explanation to governments and do this on the crude oil part of their business on which profits are shared with the governments rather than through the medium of rebates and discounts which fall only on their own profits. This latter case is true today and seems to me to be entirely contrary to the concept of a true partnership in Middle East crude oil production.

Proctor is not making a great deal of headway here at the present time but is a long way from abandoning the fight. The Ministry of Fuel and Power supports him in principle, I believe, but doubts whether his proposition can be sold to Kuwait given the situation in neighboring countries. The Foreign Office has not declared itself particularly except to say that Gulf makes a persuasive case and that the British Government will not use its position to force the Sheikh to do something his neighbors will not do. Proctor will return home on the 26th. He is planning, I believe, to try to talk to the Economic side of the Department, making the case with facts and figures which I have tried to hint at here. I believe most sincerely that our official position is wrong, and I hope on reconsideration you can be influential, perhaps with Roger Dixon's help, in getting official support for the view that we should support profit division on an honest realization basis rather than on a fictitious basis, whether this results from underpricing or assumed realizations which are not attained.

Sincerely,

Ed

P.S. I have just heard that the British are inclined to support Gulf in not making retroactive payments. They are inclined to believe also that if Iraq gets an increase in payments as a result of renegotiation soon that Kuwait should do likewise, though not necessarily to the same extent. They also think the company might wish to consider whether there was value in making additional per unit payments now if they are going to have to cut back the volume to make way for Iranian oil. I believe they could be persuaded to support the view I am advocating in the above letter on true realizations honestly achieved and fully explained.

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, August 20, 1954—8:23 p. m.

1029. Following discussions with Swensrud (reported Deptel 809) [2] and Whiteford of Gulf who called at Dept August 18 we have been giving further thought Kuwait problem. Essential elements seem to be:

1. Gulf can use only small proportion Kuwait crude for its own markets and considers it must therefore be in position adjust its sale prices to competitive conditions in order obtain and keep crude outlets. At present it has long term contract with Shell providing outlet for 275,000 barrels per day (about two-thirds its total share Kuwait production) and other lesser contracts with American and foreign companies. If forced raise prices on these contracts company claims it would, in view over supply oil and high sulphur content Kuwait crude, lose them and be unable find other customers. On other hand it contends that to maintain contracts at present price levels while paying tax to Kuwait on posted price basis would not only cause serious financial loss but would be radical departure from 50–50 principle and expose it and all other companies to further similar demands. Precedent would also be set for other conces-sionary countries such as Venezuela where realization basis still exists.

2. Loss of Gulf's outlets for Kuwait crude would of course seriously reduce revenues to Shaikh. Company fears he would then be tempted terminate concession in hope finding another company which would promise greater production and greater revenues.

3. In light discussions here and in view adjustments being made other Persian Gulf concessions such as Iran and Saudi Arabia Gulf appears realize it cannot maintain rigid position that 1951 concession agreement cannot be changed in any respect. At same time it anxious have opportunity make best case possible with Shaikh and demonstrate to him his own financial interests would be harmed by forcing Gulf into position where it could not sell present large volume crude. Company considers friendly intervention by British Foreign Office essential to secure this opportunity. Points out Gulf not able contact Shaikh direct in view agreement with British.

4. AIOC appears to be in quite different commercial position. We understand almost all its Kuwait production goes to its own affiliates and is distributed in its own established markets. It does not have problem selling crude in competitive market and is not restricted by existing long term contracts. According Whiteford, Sir William Fraser has said AIOC is prepared pay Kuwait tax on posted price basis with idea reducing posted price somewhat after present crisis over. Because of tax adjustments it would lose relatively little money. AIOC is not therefore prepared urge Foreign Office take stand in present controversy. AIOC anticipates later difficulties with Shaikh when Iranian oil begins flow again in quantity and necessitates substantial cutback its production in Kuwait. (Whiteford estimates this cutback at 200,000 barrels per day (or more).) AIOC assertedly wants save its ammunition for that time and may be trying shift onus from itself to Gulf for any later unpleasantness.

5. Shell position this picture somewhat unclear but obviously important. It benefits along with Gulf from existing contract for Kuwait crude. In fact we think some aspects contract make it almost partnership arrangement. It seems reasonable suppose AIOC would not be unhappy to see both Gulf and Shell deprived this source cheap crude.

6. An arrangement such as suggested by Swensrud whereby Shell would pay Kuwait tax on profits earned through its purchase Kuwait crude might satisfy Shaikh's desire for increased revenue and cost Shell little if it could obtain tax credit in UK while at same time relieving Gulf of demand that it pay taxes on income not earned.

7. Gulf fears Shaikh will soon issue some form ultimatum which company will be forced reject and that this will freeze Shaikh's position because of prestige factors involved. Company believes Foreign Office intervention could prevent this but we understand Gulf representatives London unwilling approach Foreign Office without some assurance US Govt support. They report that in light AIOC position Foreign Office is undisposed act unless there is evidence US Govt considers it desirable. Company also asserts that even in absence ultimatum it unable have satisfactory discussions with Shaikh unless British pave way.

8. Department inclined think that in view unusual situation Kuwait where British in effect control access to Shaikh and because of complicated AIOC–Gulf–Shell relationships with Gulf caught in middle there may be grounds for informal US Govt intervention with British to make it possible for Gulf attempt work out solution. Embassy accordingly requested and authorized to:

a) Submit any comments or additional information it may have re foregoing;

b) Discuss whole picture with Gulf representatives informing them substance this wire;

c) Discuss as much of foregoing as it thinks desirable with appropriate British authorities;

d) Unless it sees objection, request British to advise Shaikh against precipitate action against companies and in due course take such steps as may be necessary to enable Gulf to enter into discussions with responsible Kuwait authorities for purpose of seeking equitable solution safeguarding interest of all parties. Embassy should make clear that for present we not entering into substance but only wishing ensure that Gulf has time and fair opportunity work out its problem.

Gulf and AIOC latter with Jackson senior representative had meeting with two agencies Monday and with Kemp Wednesday. Result is that situation calmer and problem likely dormant next 4 weeks and perhaps longer.

Companies explained case fully to Foreign Office but did not request specific assistance believing they should first complete talks with Kemp. Foreign Office said however, company case impressive both in facts and moderation with which presented. Following approach by Embassy Officer Foreign Office has informally advised political resident Persian Gulf of potential difficulties in situation if Kuwait takes premature decision against companies from which retreat may be impossible for prestige reasons. Believe he and others, without making a specific issue of it which British unwilling do, will as opportunities offer urge Kuwait authorities keep open mind on matter until companies have made full presentation their case and will also make point perhaps in connection with explanation of Iran Settlement that situations various countries differ and their interests not necessarily best served by insistence on identical per unit returns.

Companies encouraged by foregoing and Kemp's reaction to detailed presentation facts which Proctor says prove conclusively Kuwait has been more favorably treated both in terms total revenue and per unit rate compared Iraq and per unity basis compared Saudi Arabia. Kemp has asked for memorandum incorporating oral argument made yesterday which he has undertaken transmit to Sheikh. Proctor says this will be ready in 2 or 3 weeks after which depending on reaction of ruler companies may go to Kuwait for further discussion.

Appreciate that company argument however valid in relation past situation may no longer hold if Saudi Arabia and Iraq terms have been or may be changed materially. In this connection has Aramco concluded final agreement with SAG and if so is this as rumored on basis of 2 percent discount from uniform posted price regardless of shipping point? [3]

Following comments on reftel. Proctor says and Foreign Office confirms that while technically company should negotiate with Sheikh through British this had never been case in practice since agreement signed and will not be done this instance. Company has for all practical purposes free access to ruler. British would be informed of intention to negotiate and of progress negotiations.

AIOC realizations calculated as Gulf does with sales to self or affiliates at posted price are lower than Gulf realizations due to fact Socony Jersey off take of 175,000 barrels per day under long term contract is at lower price than Shell contract.

British say cutback in Kuwait more likely be in neighborhood 100,000 than 200,000 if Iran production is as planned.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan) [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 6, 1954.

Subject: Onassis-Saudi Agreement

Participants: Mr. Spyros P. Skouras
General Smith, Acting Secretary
NEA—John D. Jernegan

General Smith and Mr. Jernegan gave Mr. Skouras a general picture of the present state of affairs with regard to the Onassis Agreement, . . . General Smith said Onassis had approached Mr. John McCone recently and had said he would be willing to sell his entire tanker holdings at a loss. He had asked Mr. McCone to act as a sort of "honest broker" in arranging things with the oil companies. Mr. McCone, however, was not anxious to do this.

Mr. Skouras asked what solution we could suggest. Mr. Jernegan observed that . . ., the simplest thing might be for Onassis to tell the Saudis he thought a mistake had been made, that they had failed to take into account all aspects, and to propose cancelling the agreement. Mr. Skouras thought this was not feasible because of the amount of money Onassis had already invested. He fully agreed however that the agreement was a bad one and could not possibly be accepted by the oil companies. He had told Onassis himself that he had made a bad mistake.

Mr. Skouras thought the only solution would be for the oil companies to buy the Onassis tankers on a basis satisfactory to them. This would provide a solution to the whole problem without financial loss to the companies and without their having to give way on the important principle involved. It would also save the companies the expense of a long fight. If Mr. McCone had correctly understood Mr. Onassis' statement that he would be willing to sell out at a loss, Mr. Skouras thought the two parties should be gotten together. He asked whether he could quote Mr. McCone back to Mr. Onassis. General Smith said he thought this would be all right but he would telephone Mr. McCone on Tuesday morning (September 7) and then communicate with Mr. Skouras. Mr. Skouras then asked that the Department arrange for him to talk to Aramco. General Smith instructed Mr. Jernegan to communicate with Mr. Duce and suggest to him that he in turn call Mr. Skouras at his New York office tomorrow. Mr. Skouras said he would be available until about noon on Wednesday, the 8th, when he was leaving for Europe. If given clearance by Mr. McCone he would plan to see Onassis in Europe.

Subject: Utilization of Papers Showing Bribery in Connection with Onassis Contract

Participants: Mr. Paul Gerrity of Maheu Associates
SCA—Mr. McLeod
NEA—John Jernegan

Mr. Gerrity had with him a file composed of a lengthy statement purporting to be signed by Mr. Cotopadis and to detail the negotiations by which Onassis obtained his agreement with the Saudi Government.[1] It appeared to specify the exact terms agreed upon between Onassis and Ali Reza, including the payment Ali Reza was to receive. Photostats of various documents were attached. Mr. Gerrity said this statement by Cotopadis and the photostats of the documents had been purchased by Mr. Stavros Niarchos from Cotopadis. In addition to the copy which Mr. Gerrity had with him, a second copy was in the hands of CIA in Washington and a third in possession of Mr. Maheu who was in Beirut. Mr. Gerrity's set, however, was the most complete.

Mr. Gerrity said that his firm considered that these papers should be gotten into the hands of King Saud and that this should be done quickly before there was any publicity about bribery in connection with the Onassis agreement, since such publicity would embarrass the King amd make future relations more difficult. He thought the best channel would be Mr. Karl Twitchell, who was in Jidda and who could give the papers to the new Saudi Arabian Finance Minister and get him in turn to lay them before the King. This would avoid any involvement of the US Government or Aramco. He asked Mr. Jernegan's opinion, saying that CIA had already been consulted but had as yet given no answer.

Mr. Jernegan observed that he agreed it would be undesirable for either the US Government or Aramco to be in any way involved and he thought Mr. Twitchell might be the proper man to carry out the operation, however he could not give an opinion offhand. He thought it necessary to consult CIA and considered that organization should continue to be the channel for handling this matter. Mr. Gerrity agreed and observed that his firm had been working with CIA all along.

Mr. Gerrity also said his firm and Mr. Niarchos thought it essential that everything possible be done to save King Saud's face if he were brought to abrogate the Onassis Agreement. With this in mind, they thought it would be very helpful if public announcement of the abrogation were made in a joint factual statement by the Saudi, British and American Governments. This statement would merely include the fact of the abrogation and explain in general terms that it had been decided upon because the agreement had been found injurious to the interest of Saudi Arabia and of the other two countries concerned.

Mr. Gerrity said the British Government favored this procedure and he was sure the King would likewise endorse it. As another means of helping the King, Mr. Gerrity said both the Aramco parent companies and Niarchos would be willing to place some of their tankers under the Saudi flag, thus giving the King one of the advantages he had hoped to gain from the Onassis Agreement, namely a Saudi Arabian merchant marine. Niarchos would also be willing to assume the obligation of establishing a maritime academy in Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Jernegan said that he could see no objection to the suggested joint statement provided it was desired by the King.

Mr. Jernegan promised to get Mr. Gerrity a prompt answer on the question of using Mr. Twitchell as a channel for placing the Cotopadis papers before the King.

Mr. McLeod expressed the desire to be left out of future operations in connection with this question.

Mr. Jernegan later checked with CIA and it was agreed that Mr. Twitchell seemed the best available channel for getting the Cotopadis documents to the King. On telephoning Mr. Gerrity the following day, Mr. Jernegan found that he had already learned of this decision. Mr. Gerrity said that his copy had been turned over to CIA for transmission to Mr. Twitchell, who had an appointment to see the Saudi Finance Minister on Wednesday, September 29.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 24, 1954.

Subject: Onassis Tanker Problem

Participants: General Smith, Acting Secretary
Mr. Spyros P. Skouras
NEA—John D. Jernegan

Mr. Skouras reported that he had seen Onassis in Paris. Onassis had expressed himself as ready, willing and anxious to arrive at an understanding with the oil company. Specifically, he had offered to sell all of his tankers at their cost price less depreciation.

Subsequently, Onassis had sent Skouras a telegram which Mr. Skouras showed to General Smith and Mr. Jernegan. Boiled down, it said that Onassis was willing to negotiate but felt he had a very strong legal position (supported by legal opinions from several countries to the effect that his agreement did not infringe either the Aramco concession or international law) and that if Aramco remained intransigent arbitration under the concession terms would become inevitable. Onassis was sure the arbitration would go against the company, which would then not only have lost its fight in Saudi Arabia but would have established a precedent for similar shipping agreements in other oil producing countries which was just the thing Aramco most wanted to avoid.

General Smith commented that this telegram did not sound as if Onassis were in a chastened mood. Mr. Jernegan observed that Aramco also had a number of legal opinions in support of its position and seemed to feel very confident that it would win if the matter came to arbitration. He did not think the company would be receptive to a renewed suggestion that it negotiate with Onassis.

Mr. Skouras nevertheless expressed the hope that Aramco would at least allow him to discuss the matter with its representatives, so that he could determine for himself whether any basis for negotiation existed.

After leaving General Smith's office, Mr. Skouras admitted to Mr. Jernegan that Aramco was in a strong position because of the world surpluses of both crude oil and tankers. He said he had pointed this out to Onassis. However, he reiterated his desire to talk to Aramco and Mr. Jernegan promised to speak to an Aramco representative.

1. Onassis was received by King Saud late afternoon October 23. Embassy Arab consultant reports Commerce Minister Mohammed Alireza only other person present. It was apparently decided Onassis should meet following morning with Surur and Davies.

2. Before that meeting King received Davies and Ohliger. Audience was cordial throughout. King assured them he wished clear up all remaining questions at issue with Aramco, including Onassis agreement. He would approve any understanding they could reach with Onassis, in particular any modification of Article 4 of Onassis agreement, but agreement itself should not be cancelled—there his honor was at stake—and if no understanding could be reached he was not adverse to "letting matter go to higher court."

Davies commented he had always felt "arbitration" was matter of last resort, company and SAG having always hitherto been able settle problems through friendly negotiation. He hoped that, should arbitration have to be resorted to in present instance, Aramco-SAG relations would not be adversely affected. King gave ready assurance this score, repeating he wished clear up all issues between them in interest fullest future cooperation.

3. Davies succeeding meeting with Surur and Onassis was short. Surur was supported by Royal Councilors Walid and Husseini whose primary objective was obviously to arrange that Davies and Onassis seek solution through direct negotiation. Appointment was made for same afternoon at Aramco offices. At afternoon meeting Onassis, accompanied by Cokkinis and Alireza, repeated his version of events leading up to signature of agreement, engaging in histrionics which only tended confirm Aramco thinking that to make any concession to his position would be to subject company to continuing future pressures. Although seemingly willing charge only competitive tanker rates, he insisted on need for guarantee that given number his tankers would be used to carry Saudi oil or that carriage of given tonnage or given percentage total tonnage would be assured his Saudi tanker company.

Meeting broke up inconclusively as Onassis had appointment call on Prince Faisal; but Onassis obviously jumped at Davies invitation that he call again "for tea." They will pursue discussion today.

4. I am flying Dhahran to meet with Generals Glantzberg and Grover and will return with them to Jidda to present General Glantzberg to King morning October 28. At dinner last night King approved my going and said would send airplane to fetch me if he wished see me earlier. Davies will report his discussions to New York office which will keep Duce informed.

My feeling is we should let Davies carry ball for time being; but as I shall have excellent occasion speak with King on 28th, Department may wish instruct me re any special points I should make. I agree with Davies that main Aramco issue—whether Onassis agreement is violative of concession agreement—seems as things now stand headed for arbitration.

Mr. Niarchos, who is the brother-in-law and a trade competitor of Onassis, called to discuss the latest developments. He said he understood that recent events in Jidda indicated a likelihood that the question of whether the Saudi Arabian Government had violated the terms of Aramco concession in concluding the Onassis agreement would be submitted for arbitration as provided for in the concession agreement. He expressed the belief that it might be a wise move on the part of Aramco to let it be known that it had no intention of doing business with Onassis regardless of the outcome of any arbitration proceedings. . . .

Mr. Jernegan outlined the Department's position on the Onassis matter, stressing our objections to this type of business irrespective of whether such an arrangement was determined to be in violation of a concession agreement or not. He went on to say that he could see two possible objections to the suggested course of action: (1) Aramco could hardly defend a position to the effect that it would refuse to do business with any concessionary company appointed by the Saudi Government to engage in tanker operations providing such operations were determined to be in keeping with the Aramco concession agreement, and (2) such an approach would reflect judgment by Aramco of Saudis implicated in the Onassis deal before the Saudi Government had made any judgment. This could be interpreted as an affront to the dignity of the King and his Government. Mr. Jernegan said, however, Mr. Niarchos' suggestion was worth keeping in mind for consideration in the light of future developments.

Mr. Hart outlined a suggestion made by Mr. Niarchos on November 1 to the effect that Aramco consider making a statement that, whatever the outcome of arbitration proceedings, Aramco would not agree to do business with Onassis because of serious doubts cast upon his integrity. Mr. Duce expressed the view that such an approach at this time would perhaps do more harm than good. Mr. Duce stated, however, he was seriously considering sending a message to King Saud through the Saudi Ambassador in Washington explaining in some detail why Onassis is generally considered an unsavory character.

Mr. Duce showed a telegram which had just come in from Mr. Davies in Jidda. The telegram summarized talks with Saudi officials and Onassis which were inconclusive. Mr. Davies and Mr. Ray are expected to return in the near future to the United States for talks with company officials.

Mr. Duce stated that he understood that Ambassador Wadsworth had recently had a talk with the King concerning the Onassis matter. He was told the Department had not yet received a report of any such meeting.

Mr. Duce expressed some doubt as to the desirability of proceeding with arbitration proceedings, feeling apparently that Aramco's case in arbitration might not be as strong as company lawyers have described it. It was generally agreed that arbitration per se would not necessarily settle the basic issue involved.

SECRET JIDDA, November 4, 1954—noon.

202. For Dorsey. Reference: Aramco–Onassis–SAG discussions. With departures King Saud for Riyadh November 1, Davies for New York November 2 and Onassis for Monte Carlo today, current round of discussions instituted by SAG (my telegram 180, October 24 [2] and 187, October 25) [3] and designed seek mutually agreeable formula for modification of rate and priority provisions article 4 Onassis agreement has ended in failure.

This round began October 23. As I see it: SAG has held its own and opened way to face-saving solution through arbitration under article 31 Aramco concession agreement; Aramco has yielded nothing in substance or principle and has gained valuable Royal assurance that, whatever be result arbitration, SAG–Aramco relations will continue on basis full cooperation their joint venture; and Onassis, when finally pinned down on rate issue, has weaseled and outsmarted himself.

On October 26 letter approved by King was addressed Aramco by Minister Finance Surur expressing regret Davies-Onassis discussion should not result in agreement between them and stating curtly that, if none reached in thirty days, SAG would proceed to arbitration. Davies replied same day: He shared regret; fact was Onassis insisted on noncompetitive position and rates higher than those of current competitive tanker market; consequently, if no solution found, Aramco would cooperate with SAG in preparation terms of reference and submission of issues to board of arbitrators in accordance concession agreement; and he would proceed New York to consult his directors this regard. (Note: Duce has texts.)

Following day October 27 Davies met first with King and then Surur (both meetings helpful on clarifying complicated rates question) and had final (third) meeting with Onassis which only confirmed impossibility compromise without sacrifice Aramco principles which Davies would not consider. Upshot Davies-Surur meeting was that Surur addressed letter to Onassis October 29 citing Davies definition competitive market rates and asking his concurrence or comment. Onassis reply October 30 was essence of weasel mentioned paragraph two above; he offered four, partially contradictory answers none of which frankly answered Surur's question and all of which when analyzed meant rates higher than current competitive market rates for spot or term charters. This turned tide in Aramco favor and led to final cordial Davies-Surur meeting October 31.

Yesterday when calling with Dorsey on Surur, I made passing reference to satisfactory SAG–Aramco understanding that Onassis agreement issues would be arbitrated. Surur concurred as to satisfactory understanding with Aramco but, as to beginning arbitration in thirty days, added "unless prior settlement is reached". I did not pursue point.

My current estimate of SAG position is that, while it would still be willing accept any compromise agreement reached by Aramco and Onassis, it sees in arbitration: (1) Means to save . . . face if arbitral decision is that Onassis agreement is violative of Aramco concession agreement and (2) defense against any claim Onassis might make for nonperformance by SAG of terms Onassis-SAG agreement, for it would follow from such arbitral decision that latter was illegal and hence unenforceable, or otherwise put, null and void ab initio.

OFFICIAL USE ONLY [WASHINGTON,] November 19, 1954.

Subject: Progress Report re Kuwait Oil Problem

The problem was fully discussed with the British during the Petroleum talks of mid-October and two follow-up sessions, the last on November 12. [2] Prior to the meetings Messrs. Whitefield and Rhodes of Gulf explained Gulf's position fully, and on November 9, Messrs. Rhodes, Hamilton and Proctor gave representatives of the two Bureaus a two-hour briefing.

The British position as set forth by them is that: 1) no retroactive payments are called for; 2) Gulf and AIOC are obligated under the 1951 contract to discuss pricing and tax problems with the Sheikh; 3) the companies themselves should handle the problem with the Sheikh; and 4) Gulf should not be too "inflexible". The British have continued to emphasize the last point. They are anxious that the ruler's income in Kuwait where they have responsibility is no less favorable than that of other rulers in the area. We agreed to first three positions; the implications of the fourth were fully discussed and the British view passed on to Gulf.

Throughout the discussions the soundness of Gulf's arrangement with the Sheikh and the fact that it incorporates true fifty-fifty profit sharing were stressed; doubt was expressed that AIOC was sharing on the same basis. We emphasized also our concern that Gulf have full opportunity to defend its position which it is confident it can do.

One possibility discussed for increasing the income of the Sheikh was, since Shell under long term contract with Gulf enjoys a large purchase discount that Shell set up in Kuwait a trading company which could be taxed 50% of its discount. The UK Treasury would of course lose the tax base; the plan would however be similar in principle to that existing in Iran, which has been accepted by the UK Government. The British group later reported a highly negative reaction on the part of the British Treasury to this proposal.

[1] This memorandum was drafted by Gay and sent by Kalijarvi and Byroade to the Under Secretary of State. Another copy was attached to a memorandum by Dorsey to Murphy, dated Dec. 8, which reported that there was no further information at that date on any developments mentioned in the Nov. 19 memorandum. (886D.2553/11-1954)

[2] Memoranda of these follow-up conversations not found in Department of State files.

They had no argument to show any difference between our proposal and the Iranian case.

In the subsequent meeting with Rhodes, Hamilton and Proctor, we learned that Kemp (the Sheikh's representative in London) has requested AIOC for its net realization figures (Gulf's books are open to the Sheikh). It seems likely that AIOC may refuse. Since AIOC uses Gulf realization figures in calculating its division of profit with the Ruler, it is impossible to know the true respective shares. Also, since Gulf and AIOC are required to negotiate with the Sheikh jointly through the agency of KOC, an agreed position between them in advance is essential. Obviously, if AIOC is unwilling to disclose net realization figures an atmosphere of suspicion is created and Gulf put in an untenable negotiating position.

This information was candidly purveyed to the British group and our concern expressed. They appeared to have had no information or instructions on this matter and had no comment to make. We also stressed our hope that the Sheikh would not be encouraged to expect or demand more income and that Gulf would be permitted to defend its present arrangement without prejudice. They undertook to transmit our views to London, felt certain nothing would be done to prejudice the case and that Gulf would have full opportunity to present its case. They continued to hope Gulf would be "flexible". No response from London has been reported to us.

Gulf officials are informed of and appear satisfied with the action that has been taken. They suggest that it may be necessary for Ambassador Aldrich to carry through.

We believe no further action is needed pending a reasonable period for response by the British to our discussions of last Friday.

pany pledge to reinstate him in his status quo ante position in charter trade but he was informed he would have to take his chances. No promises made by either side but Onassis returning soon to Saudi Arabia (via London for talks with Shell) with possible intention of proposing to SAG elimination preferential provisions of agreement. Onassis stated he could not propose outright cancellation to SAG for face saving reasons. Onassis also insisted United States Government holding indictment over him to support oil companies and he asked intervention of companies to lift indictment which they refused.

Davies (who will be arriving Saudi Arabia approximately November 29) asked whether Department might instruct Embassy approach SAG in advance his arrival to emphasize again that whatever might be outcome of arbitration (if resorted to) neither offtakers nor United States Government could recognize preferential position for any carrier of oil. Aramco unable influence oil purchasers including parent companies, who prepared purchase oil elsewhere rather than recognize so disruptive a precedent in oil trade.

In order to reinforce points you may have already made pursuant to Department telegram 174 [2] as well as Department telegram 16 [3] you are requested again to approach SAG soonest at whatever level you consider best suited to achievement of good results. In your own words make clear United States Government feels it must emphasize to SAG in friendliest possible spirit that arbitration might not advance an answer to present impasse since neither oil purchasers nor most maritime nations (including United States) could accept or do business under such preferential clauses regardless of outcome of this particular case.

If question of United States indictment is raised by SAG you should remind them sealed indictment antidates their agreement with Onassis and is based on quite independent considerations.

Conversation: Between Deputy Foreign Minister Yusuf Yassin and Ambassador Wadsworth.

Subject: Representations re Onassis Dispute as Directed by Department's Telegram 223, November 27, 1954 [2]

1) Deputy Foreign Minister, Shaikh Yusuf Yassin, and his nephew, Tahir Bey Ridwan, Head of the Foreign Office, dined this evening with me and the Embassy's Arab Consultant, Mohammad Effendi. Before I found opportunity to raise the Onassis matter Shaikh Yusuf did so, substantially as follows:

He had, he said, been absent in Europe during the recent Onassis–Aramco–SAG discussions in Jidda. He recalled we had earlier shared the view that it would be unfortunate if, rather than finding, as partners, a mutually agreeable solution, SAG and Aramco should have to take their differences over the Onassis Agreement to arbitration. The basic question, as he had seen it, had been "Could not Aramco assure SAG that the Saudi Tanker Co. set up under the Agreement would carry a small percentage of total Aramco oil shipments at a reasonable rate?"

The recent discussions, as he understood it, had proceeded on this basis; and, with their failure, SAG had had no recourse but to insist on arbitration. To him the fault for their failure seemed to lie with the Aramco negotiators. He could not understand why, on so simple an issue, they had found no solution . . . .

He still felt solution without arbitration was possible. Could not a guarantee be given that a small amount, say 5,000,000 tons be carried by these Saudi tankers?

2) This gave me opening to say I could answer him on the basis of a very recent telegram from the Department giving me its latest information and current views on the subject. Consequently, I made the following points:

It had been over this very point of guaranteed preferential treatment, as well as on the question of rates, that the recent negotiations here had failed. It was a basic practice of the world-wide oil industry that tanker companies must compete in the oil carrying trade; it followed that oil companies would conclude charters only at competitive rates.

This basic position had been reiterated in subsequent discussions held with Onassis in the United States. He was told that the oil companies could not do business with him so long as the preferential provisions of his Agreement with SAG were maintained. Mr. Davies had already, following these last discussions, left New York for Dhahran. And our information was that Onassis planned to return to Saudi Arabia soon; it seemed possible he might intend himself to propose to SAG elimination of those provisions.

As for arbitration, this would at best settle only one of the three principle points made in my note of last August to Prince Faisal, i.e. whether the Onassis Agreement violated the Aramco Concession Agreement. Mr. Davies had left Jidda with the assurance that arbitration would be a friendly test as to which partner was right; he would return, I felt sure, still ready to cooperate fully with SAG in that same spirit.

The other two points stressed in my note were that the preferential provisions of the Onassis Agreement were inconsistent with the international trade practices of all leading maritime nations and were, as well, contrary to the established practice of the worldwide petroleum industry. In my note I had said that, as a friend, my Government felt it should put these considerations frankly before SAG.

It was, therefore, in friendliest possible spirit that my Government wished me to reiterate them at this time. Surely Shaikh Yusuf could see even more clearly now than last August how strongly all the leading maritime nations and the great oil companies felt; and this quite irrespective of how arbitration of the first point might go.

Finally, I would ask that he convey this exposition of my Government's views to Prince Faisal. If what I had written him last August was important then, surely subsequent developments showed it to be the more so today.

3) Shaikh Yusuf thanked me for my information and exposition and agreed that the two points I had made as to the practices of maritime nations and oil companies were more important and clearer today. Then, with customary acid touch, he added: "It was, of course, Aramco which, by its campaign against us, made these two points more important." He continued (according to running notes which I took as he spoke) substantially as follows:

> When arbitration is ended and Aramco loses, the whole monopolistic oil industry will find out it has no proof (sic), because there will be no international agreement against which SAG has acted.
> As for Aramco, I say with great regret it has never understood this country or this people. Had it done so, it could have settled this case in one day with His Majesty. Instead, it has built up this international front against Saudi Arabia. . . .
> . . . .
> To me it seems incredible the Company's managers can have its interests at heart and act as they do. In fact, they are acting against its interests. It is important that they know what I have said and that the Company's shareholders also know it. We had thought that, if others acted against Saudi Arabia, Aramco as our partner would support us.

4) I answered, that I must differ with his views on Aramco. In my view it was incorrect to say the Company had worked to build up an international front against Saudi Arabia. I would say, however, only what I had said before, that the King and Mr. Davies had agreed as friends that this difference between partners would be settled amicably by arbitration. I felt sure this was still true; and I was still more than ready to be of any possible help in seeking a mutually agreeable solution.

Shaikh Yusuf answered that he did not doubt I believed what I had said. It was not pleasant for him to have to talk as he had done. He had found the information I had given him helpful, and he would inform Prince Faisal of what I had said were my Government's views.

We then passed on to another subject.

(Note: I should add that, before opening this question of the Onassis Agreement, Shaikh Yusuf had said there were three matters he wished to discuss with me—Onassis, economic aid and army planning—not as Deputy Foreign Minister but as Yusuf Yassin. He had, he said, been with His Majesty the King in Riyadh most of the time since his recent return from Europe and would be rejoining His Majesty in Dammam tomorrow or the next day.)

2578. 1. Embassy has been informed by representatives of US interest in Iraq Petroleum Company that IPC price negotiations with Iraq which had seemed on verge conclusion [2] have been broken off by Iraqis following receipt of information from Saudi Government about latter's recent agreement with Aramco. SAG is reported to have told Iraqis it has made deal effective January 1, 1953 settling all past claims on the basis of 50-50 division of profits deriving from "international Persian Gulf prices according to well-known formula Mexican Gulf USA prices with freight differences".

Despatch 166 from Baghdad, Oct. 22, reported the Managing Director of IPC was expected back in the country at the end of October to finish the negotiations. Documentation is in Department of State file 887.2553.

2. Facts according to source here are that Aramco has made settlement with SAG effective October 6, 1953 for all prior claims. Two percent discount not a feature of October 6, 1953 settlement. Aramco partners are currently negotiating seeking agreement for subsequent period and are insisting on posted price basis for profit division with two percent off for selling expense.

3. Source says whether or not Saudi communication merely poor reporting particularly in description of pricing, or whether for ulterior motive it has caused Iraq Government decide send representative Jidda to get facts on Saudi-Aramco agreement. Considered important Iraq Government be correctly informed by other than IPC sources at least regarding the substance of paragraph 2 prior to departure its representative to Arabia. Assistance Embassy Baghdad in this regard would be appreciated.

OFFICIAL USE ONLY [WASHINGTON,] December 20, 1954.[1]

Subject: Kuwait Payments Problem

Participants: Mr. R. O. Rhoades, Vice President, Gulf Oil Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Mr. Eakens—PED

I telephoned Mr. Rhoades to inquire about the status of Gulf's talks with Mr. Basil Jackson, a director of The British Petroleum Company, Ltd., or BP (formerly Anglo-Iranian Oil Company, Ltd.), who is now in the United States discussing with Gulf the negotiations which the two companies are going to have with the Shaikh of Kuwait on the latter's request for an upward revision in payments. Gulf and BP are equal partners in the oil concession in Kuwait.

The main new development which Mr. Rhoades mentioned was the meeting held in London on this question by the Foreign Office on December 10. Apparently the Foreign Office called the meeting with officials of Kuwait Oil Company, Gulf, and BP to make two points. One was that the companies would be well advised to take the initiative in starting the negotiations with the Shaikh on the payments question, and on this point the Foreign Office left no doubt that it wished to see the Shaikh receive payments on a substantially comparable basis with other areas in the Middle East. The Foreign Office believes that if the companies delay their negotiations until after the Aramco settlement is finalized, they run greater risk that they will be forced to accept the Aramco formula, which would be a 50/50 settlement with the Shaikh on the basis of posted prices in the Persian Gulf less 2 per cent. The other point was a complaint about the local representative of the Kuwait Oil Company, a Mr. Dixon, not being in a position to keep the Shaikh informed about oil development in other Middle East countries.

On the latter, Mr. Rhoades said that Dixon was being maintained at the pleasure of the Shaikh as liaison officer with the Shaikh by the Kuwait Oil Company. Mr. Dixon functions on very local matters such labor and personnel relations and serves as interpreter for the General Manager of the Kuwait Oil Company when the latter calls on the Shaikh. He does not function on major policy questions such as those involved in the Kuwait payments problem. Mr. Rhoades simply did not consider that it was a function of the Kuwait Oil Company to keep the Shaikh informed about oil developments in other Middle East countries and elsewhere.

In the discussions with Mr. Jackson, Gulf and BP are talking as two partners in the operation in regard to the best way to approach the problem of dealing with the Shaikh in regard to a revision of payments. In the talk which Gulf had had with Mr. Jackson on December 13, Gulf and the BP were in disagreement on two very significant points. BP has always paid the Shaikh on the basis of Gulf's actual realization from sales of Kuwait oil. BP's stated reason for this was to prevent different payments from being made to the Shaikh by the two companies per barrel of oil sold, which BP considered of extreme importance. This has been and continues to be a cardinal point of principle with BP. Mr. Rhoades thinks this is because Sir William Fraser, the chairman of BP, never changes once he has taken a position on any question. Gulf does not agree with BP that the two companies have to settle with the Shaikh on exactly the same basis per barrel of oil sold. There are other cases in which different owners of the same company settle with a government on different bases even though the oil is produced by the same operating company. Gulf cited to Mr. Jackson as an example of this the Mene Grande Oil Company in Venezuela which has both British and American ownership. Mr. Jackson's only comment was that Venezuela is a developed country whereas Kuwait is not.

On the other question, that of price adjustments, BP seems to wish to go to full posted prices for purposes of settling with the Shaikh. Gulf, on the other hand, has strictly adhered to a true 50/50 division of profits with the Shaikh on its actual sales prices. It considers this fair and in the best interests of both itself and the Shaikh and does not see how it could go to full posted prices on all crude sales.

It was agreed in the meeting with Mr. Jackson on December 13 that the two companies would reexamine their positions and discuss the matter again on December 20. Gulf was therefore expecting to hear from Jackson again today.

I took the opportunity of inquiring of Mr. Rhoades whether Gulf was under any impression that the objective of the British was to squeeze Gulf out of Kuwait. His reply was, "None whatever." He went on to say that Gulf's relationships with the British Government have been very good and that he could not believe that that's the case. He thought that the real problem Gulf is up against is the stubbornness of Sir William Fraser.

He went on to comment, however, that Gulf is concerned about an attitude recently expressed by the British Foreign Office. This was that Gulf was taking too serious a view of the sanctity of contracts. The comments of the Foreign Office official suggested that the strong idea held by Gulf regarding the sanctity of contracts was more or less out of date.

In closing, I told Mr. Rhoades that the Department was very interested in being kept informed regarding developments in their discussions with BP and that it would be appreciated if he would let us know about further developments. This he agreed to do.

408. We fully endorse views expressed Emb Tel Aviv tel 57 [67], [3] December 27 and are encouraged to find Eban and other senior Israeli leaders are beginning to realize importance of taking Arab public opinion into account. We recognize that it two-way proposition and we believe that as time goes on and Eban's attitude proves catching we can persuade Syrian leaders adopt similar realistic attitudes.

Meanwhile, now that emergency meetings have been held on Baniyas and Tiberias report Iberias incidents we think much depends on persuading both parties to resume formal meetings MAC. However, we are concerned lest Israel should insist as previously on inclusion of broader subjects on MAC agenda. Should this intransigeant attitude re agenda be maintained it is unlikely that Syrians will see much point to holding formal meetings. In Syrian eyes there is always good rationalization for their negative attitude toward resumption formal MAC meetings in fact that Israel has not fully complied with May 18 Security Council res [4] and seems have no intentions further compliance.

We have never misled Shishikli about what can be done re Israel (para 5b Deptel 238 [5]) but we wonder if US silence re Israel's non-compliance with May 18 res which US cosponsored has not misled both parties. If that silence were compounded, for example, with US intercession to obtain release of Israeli prisoners held by Syrians (Tel Aviv tel 65 Dec 13, 1951) [6] our position re impartiality would be seriously jeopardized. We appreciate difficulties involved in persuading parties to negotiate on reasonable basis. Perhaps some clarification, for Arab consumption, of US attitude toward Israel's misdeeds in demil zone dispute and expression of our belief in need for mutually satisfactory solution of whole zone question (Legtel 319, Dec 3, 1951) [7] would help us to obtain Syrian cooperation. Such clarification our attitude, and that of other powers, if based on impartial consideration of issues involved, should not mislead either Syrians or Israelis.

Lack of progress in improvement these relations at present considered one of major stumbling-blocks to maintenance stability and security of area as well as obstacle to closer cooperation between the Arabs and West. Latter definitely in Israel's interest as lack thereof contributes to difficulties of implementing any plans for cooperative defense arrangements in NE area. Emb has referred frequently to mil influence which on occasion gets upperhand and becomes responsible for actions quite inconsistent with avowed policy Israel govt, e.g. while Eban declared central objective his govt's policy is to reach formal understanding with neighboring Arab states, elements in mil committed acts certain to outweigh any friendly words and set back hopes for peace for long time to come.

Dominant mil clique obviously takes cynical view of efforts to improve situation through pacific means and pursues its own policies. It feels state was saved and enlarged purely by force and that adequate mil power is vital to its continued existence. Itals convinced harsh treatment of Arabs is essential and has followed a consistent policy of clearing Arabs from frontier zones. This was important contributing factor to Huleh difficulty last year, has tended frustrate UNTSO in implementing May 18 res, and is still being followed.

Emb understands there is some difference of opinion in mil circles: (1) Center group headed by Gen Yadin holds views about as above described, (2) More moderate group favors permitting captured infiltrators return with warning and otherwise giving Arabs opportunity cooperate if they will, and (3) Extremists who advocate shooting infiltrators on spot and immed reprisals for acts committed against Israelis. Second group recently lost influence as result ambush and murder of Israeli mil personnel at Ain Husub, Dec 26 (see mil section Weeka January 4).[3]

Ability of mil influences to have their way and degree of tacit agreement civil auths should not be underestimated.

SECRET DAMASCUS, January 21, 1952—6 p. m.

433. Re Tel Aviv Embtel 75, Jan 16. [2] It is somewhat ironic that privately mil leaders here generally more realistic and understanding of difficulties involved in Arab relations with Israel than are civil leaders who are much more inclined to stick with "public opinion" on Israel question. Israel leaders may not know this, and might be helpful to advise them that if Israel shld wish work out something with Syrians on demil zone or other specific problems, now may be time to do so. However Eban attitude rather than Yadin attitude is one to be used with Selo regime. Situations more serious than in Huleh last spring might develop if Syrians were similarly provoked by Israel now.

Apart from our hope that Eban's attitude will prevail so that Israel and Arabs can move toward peace in area, we are also thinking of fact that new disturbances on Israel frontier will complicate domestic policy of Selo regime. New govt is moving toward achievement real stability and socio-econ reforms. Israel leaders must understand that socio-econ progress Syria important for long run development whole area. Even if Israel leaders are not prepared negotiate with Arabs on Arab terms, they shld not tolerate actions (such as border incident, unnecessarily harsh treatment of Arab civilians, and bombing outrages) which further embitter Arabs. Some public disavowal such by Israel Govt and well-publicized investigation and punishment by it of offenders wld be bound have salutary effect on Arabs and wld help us in persuading Arabs Israel not so bad as they insist.

He said Syria had agreed return to Israel Jan 22 five Israeli prisoners held here (Deptel 276, Jan 14) [2] in return Israel promise release Syrian ship held Haifa and transfer to Syrian territory of 120 Arabs at Shaab whose families had requested Syrian action reunite them. He said he had agreed release five Israeli prisoners at Col Taxis request since had great confidence in Taxis fairness.

Clark expressed strong approval Jaddid's cooperative attitude towards TSO and urged early MAC mtgs. Jaddid replied he also wanted MAC mtgs held and he had told Taxis if Israel wld discuss certain urgent zones problems Syria wld participate at once. He had hopes early mtg wld be held.

He said Syria did not intend raise question drainage project Security Council for time being. He agreed this was question which cld be most usefully pursued in MAC adding "if only Israel wld agree."

We hope no hitch will develop in exchange of prisoners and will report if exchange effected. We have no reason disbelieve Jaddid's appraisal Shishikli's attitude.

Resolution 512 (VI), Adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on January 26, 1952 [1]

The General Assembly,

Recalling all the resolutions adopted at previous sessions of the General Assembly on the Palestine problem,

Having examined the progress report [2] of the United Nations Conciliation Commission for Palestine,

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Conciliation Commission for Palestine for its efforts to assist the parties to reach agreement on their outstanding differences;

2. Notes with regret that, as stated in paragraph 87 of the report, the Commission has been unable to fulfill its mandate under the resolutions of the General Assembly;

3. Considers that the governments concerned have the primary responsibility for reaching a settlement of their outstanding differences in conformity with the resolutions of the General Assembly on Palestine;

4. Urges the governments concerned to seek agreement with a view to an early settlement of their outstanding differences in conformity with the resolutions of the General Assembly on Palestine, and for this purpose to make full use of United Nations facilities;

5. Considers that the Conciliation Commission for Palestine should continue its efforts to secure the implementation of the resolutions of the General Assembly on Palestine and accordingly should be available to the parties to assist them in reaching agreement on outstanding questions;

6. Requests the Conciliation Commission for Palestine to render progress reports periodically to the Secretary-General for transmission to the Members of the United Nations;

7. Requests the Secretary-General to provide the necessary staff and facilities for carrying out the terms of the present resolution.

5. Requests the United Nations Relief and Works Agency to explore with the governments concerned the desirability and practicability of transferring the administration of relief to those governments at the earliest possible date, and considers that the United Nations Relief and Works Agency should continue to carry the cost of the supply programme, subject to paragraphs 2 and 6, and to provide assistance for the health, welfare and education programme along with the duty of making such inspection and such verification of accounts as may be necessary;

6. Considers that relief expenditures should be reduced in suitable proportion to reintegration expenditures;

7. Decides that the amount of $20 million provided for direct relief in resolution 393 (V) of 2 December 1950 should be increased to $27 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1952;

8. Decides that, consequent upon paragraph 2 above, the amount of $30 million provided in resolution 393 (V) of 2 December 1950 for reintegration should be increased to not less that $50 million, and credited to the reintegration fund provided for in that resolution for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1952;

9. Approves the budget recommended by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for the fiscal year 1 July 1952 to 30 June 1953, of the equivalent of $118 million of which $100 million shall be available for reintegration and $18 million for relief;

10. Authorizes the United Nations Relief and Works Agency to transfer funds allocated for relief to reintegration;

11. Urges the governments of Member States to make voluntary contributions to the extent necessary to carry through to termination the programme set forth in paragraph 2 above;

12. Requests that negotiations regarding contributions for the proposed three-year programme be carried out with Member and non-Member States by the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds established by resolution 571 B (VI), adopted by the General Assembly on 7 December 1951;

13. Expresses its appreciation of the assistance afforded to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency by the specialized agencies and the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund and urges them to render all services possible to strengthen the programme of refugee relief and reintegration, and to co-operate with the Secretary-General and the United Nations Relief and

Works Agency in ensuring that the total assistance of the United Nations to Palestine refugees is rendered with the maximum of co-ordination and efficiency;

14. Expresses its appreciation to the numerous religious, charitable and humanitarian organizations whose programmes have afforded valuable supplementary assistance to Palestine refugees, and again requests them to continue and expand to the extent possible the work which they have undertaken on behalf of the refugees.

102. Jordan-Israel MAC delegations have informally agreed to two-week trial starting midnight Jan 30 of plan originally proposed by De Ridder some months ago for peaceful handling infiltration and minor border incidents. Each side promises (1) take extraordinary measures such as stronger border patrols and closer supervision village head men to prevent its people infiltrating, (2) arrest and return home for punishment all unarmed and peaceful infiltrators rather than shooting them, (3) return all goods stolen by infiltrators, (4) settle all minor disputes on local commander level rather than in MAC. If procedure proves workable will presumably continue indefinitely after trial period ends.

As evidence their desire cooperate in proposal, Ramati informs me Israelis are replacing notably "trigger-happy" units now on frontier and who, he inferred, were responsible Battir incident (Contel 100, Jan 22), [2] with less ferocious troops during trial period, but if trial is unsuccessful "because Jordanians fail to cooperate" trigger-happy units will probably return to border area with orders to shoot on sight anything that moves. He informed me Israel must take "whatever means necessary" to prevent infiltration into Israel and implied, as he did when questioned about Beit Jala incident, that end justifies means.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Secretary of Defense (Lovett)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, February 11, 1952.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The Department of State has received from the Chargé d'Affaires of the Israel Embassy a note[1] requesting on behalf of the Israel Government reimbursable military assistance from the United States in accordance with Section 408(e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

You will recall that the Department in its letter to you on December 3, 1951,[2] recommending that a limited amount of arms be made available to Syria on a reimbursable basis, pointed out that requests for comparable assistance might be expected from other states in the area and stated that Defense would be asked from time to time to consider possible additional programs.

In the judgment of the Department of State, Israel's ability to defend itself and to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part is important to the security of the United States. Moreover, now that both Syria and Saudi Arabia have been found eligible for reimbursable arms aid, the principle of impartiality set forth in NSC 47/2 and NSC 47/5,[3] in the Department's opinion, requires approval of the Israel request. The latter document, it will be recalled, stipulates that United States arms aid should be apportioned "without partiality but consistent with strategic considerations as between Israel and the several Arab states."

This Department therefore considers that Israel should be declared eligible for arms assistance on a reimbursable basis, under Section 408 (e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and requests Defense concurrence in a joint recommendation to this effect to the Director for Mutual Security.

Any arms deliveries to Israel undertaken pursuant to the proposed finding must, of course, be in keeping with the principle of impartiality as stated in NSC 47/5. The Department assumes, therefore, that such deliveries will be subject to the stipulations concerning quantities and types which the Joint Chiefs of Staff stated for Syria and which were set forth in Mr. Foster's letter of December 8, 1951[2]—i.e., "a limited amount of selected equipment," consisting of "non-competitive items under existing priority guidance formulated by the Joint Chiefs of Staff and which do not interfere with current United States or Mutual Defense Assistance programs".[4]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, February 13, 1952—7 p. m.

827. Took occasion this morning inform FonOff of views Dept expressed Deptel 540 January 31 [2] re bombing of settlements in Jordan territory. In absence of FonMin Sharett, I spoke with Walter Eytan, Dir Gen FonOff referring to my earlier conversation with FonMin (Embtel 750 Jan 23). Eytan assured me that everything possible was being done to ensure success of modus vivendi with Jordan; said he had spoken recently with police commander at Afula, who states nocturnal infiltration by armed groups ceased immed when agreement became effective. This was interpreted us evidencing that Jordanian auths cld prevent infiltration when they wished to do so.

I mentioned fact that Israel public is not fully and accurately informed events size Beit Jala bombings while they have access to complete info re depredations committed against Israelis. This tends to make public feel that reprisals are justified while at same time it leaves them ignorant of unfortunate effect such incidents have abroad and unprepared for adverse reactions in UN and elsewhere.

486. We agree with Deptel 315, Feb 8[2] re advisability approach problem of Jordan water rights and development projects on technical level at earliest opportunity.

As we have previously emphasized, Syrians see control of Jordan headwaters as bargaining weapon in their campaign obtain "natural boundaries" (Legdes 317 Dec 5,[3] Legtel 319 Dec 3).[4] Since they think they have excellent case they shld welcome visit by experts, but probably with caveat. Syria willing reach agreement with Israel over water rights only on basis settlement of demil zone dispute by dividing zone along water line. They may also raise question of timing, since Selo Govt is now faced with problem of reversing previous govt's negative attitude toward MSP, MEC, and refugee resettlement, and may therefore feel saturation point reached for time being.

In spite of polit difficulties UNRWA approach to Syrian Govt stressing international non-polit character of undertaking might be well recd if material gains for Syria cld be cited. Jordan's acceptance of proposals wld facilitate negots with Syria.

244. Re Tel Aviv tel 881, Feb 27. This morning had long conversation with Ahmad Tuqan, Jordan rep on MAC re conditions on Israel Jordan frontier. He informs me that in his opinion Israelis have legitimate grievance against large scale Arab infiltration, in some cases involving killing and marauding, which has taken place in recent months though he does not consider Israel reprisals warranted. In effort to rectify situation he and his Israeli counterpart agreed as of Feb 1 institute system whereby at nine points on frontier Jordan and Israeli police officers in control would confer daily re infiltration in effort take any necessary corrective measures. This system has worked surprisingly well and he hopes situation will be continued.

When queried as to whether he believed his improvement in conditions on frontier might lead to some larger degree of settlement he recounted statements attributed to him in reftel. He stated some three weeks ago Egypt papers Al Ahram and Rose Al Yusuf had written articles indicating Anglo-Egypt talks in prospect and these talks would probably contribute to settlement of outstanding issues between Israel and Arab states. He added these reports had been circulated in Jordan press together with Ali Maher's statement that though Egypt would not make unilateral settlement with Israel, his govt would follow wishes of Arab states in matter. No adverse editorial comment had resulted. Tuqan indicated some time ago he had attempted convince PriMin Abulhuda that Jordan's interest lay in broadening base of settlement with Israel if necessary without participation other Arab states. He stated Abulhuda had been receptive to consideration of idea and had stated he would have private talks with other Arab reps at Arab League Council meeting in Cairo.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 6, 1952.

Participants: The Secretary

Mr. Waldo—NE

Problem: Evaluate reported of more favorable attitude toward Israel on the part of the Arab states

[1] Drafted by Waldo.

The Ambassador referred to previous discussions in the Department concerning the Anglo-Egyptian difficulties and Israel's interest in a satisfactory solution of the Suez Canal question. He described the various favorable developments which had occurred recently bearing on Arab-Israel relations. These included meetings between high Israel and Arab officials on the Mixed Armistice Commission level, reports in Arab newspapers of a more favorable Arab attitude toward Israel, and statements of the Arabs themselves, particularly Egyptian representatives, and Sir Zafrullah Khan of Pakistan in Cairo which might indicate that the Arab states would soon consider placing their relations with Israel on a more normal basis. The Ambassador said that his Government was heartened by these developments, but they were maintaining a cautious attitude toward them. He stressed that the Egyptian representatives in Paris took a more conciliatory attitude toward the Israelis than any of the other Arab delegations, and said that if the Egyptians agreed to make peace his Government had no doubt that all of the other Arab governments would fall into line.

The Ambassador then requested that the Department ask the American representative in Cairo to inquire discreetly of the Egyptian Government whether the rumors of a more favorable Egyptian attitude had any significance. I said that, as the Ambassador was well aware, the US had always done its best to promote peace between the Arab states and Israel. We had frequently made known our views on this question to both sides and would continue to do so. We were likewise aware of these recent favorable reports to which the Ambassador had referred, and would look into them, bearing in mind what the Ambassador had requested.

The Ambassador then said that his Government was deeply concerned over the slowness with which projects were being approved and money was being spent under the Economic Assistance Program for Israel. The Ambassador said he did not intend to reflect on any individual concerned with the program, as relations between the Israel Government and TCA were excellent. He did hope, however, it would be possible to move forward more quickly in the near future. I said that I had been unaware of this situation and would take it up with my associates in the Department.

Foregoing developments must be considered as of procedural rather than substantive importance. Leg has been unable discover any evidence indicating departure from PriMin's stated policy (Legtel 51, July 31) [2] that his govt will not make peace settlement with Israel apart from other Arab League members. Undoubtedly in Jordan (the only Arab country suffering substantially from adhering to polit and econ boycott of Israel) there is some support, largely based on private interest, for opening up normal relations with Israel and it is possible that at AL mtg in Cairo Abulhuda will sound out Egypt on matter. Egypt is probably key to sit which might develop from this mtg.

Local paper Al-Diffa has in last few days carried series of editorials violently attacking policy of peace with Israel. Writer refers to recent statements on subject in Israel press and concludes Israel seeking peace because pressure econ blockade acutely felt. Recent peace "maneuvers" are attributed to US and Egypt pressure and are said to be based on ME defense requirements.

Legation believes discussions on Arab collective security pact, Zafrullah's recent tour and growing desire for resumption Arab-Israeli trade do open prospects for progress toward peace settlement but at same time we strongly believe these tendencies will not be translated into official action in Leb before such time as (1) Palestine refugee problem is settled; (2) some solution of Anglo-Egyptian problem is achieved; and (3) there is unmistakable evidence which Arab states can see of a truly unbiased US policy toward Arabs and Israel.

While Leb officialdom professes to be groping for some action in direction of peace, it recognizes strong popular feeling of kinship with Egyptian people. Therefore, Leb Govt cannot be expected to take lead among Arab states nor to take any concrete action toward peace settlement in face of local popular sentiment.

503. Depcirtel 758, Mar 4. Legation shares Dept's reservation re view that recent signs relaxation Arab Israel tension sign of real progress towards peace settlement. We find no recent easing Arab Israel tension in Syria where primary barrier to moderation is unresponsiveness of public opinion toward reasonable arguments which might impress special interest groups and responsible auths in Syrian Govt and present regime wants settlement of demilitarization zone dispute and is interested in projects which wld strengthen Syria, such as refugee immigration with large money grants, but peace for peace's sake wld find little official support, less tolerance from public whose price for settlement now wld be higher than Israel cld pay. Nor do we forget basis present mil regime is claim that previous civilian administrations were not safeguarding natl. interests. This regime has will and ultimate means to face up to Palestine's questions, but such unpopular policy changes require time for which primary hurdles of MSP, MEC and refugee resettlement seem to have priority.

Shld other Arab states individually or through Arab League modify their positions re Israel, Syria might be carried along to some degree. Reported moderate attitude of Egyptian reps at UNGA Paris is most encouraging sign to date, but we wonder to what extent Syrians believed Egyptian Govt cld take constructive initiative at present time.

We think specific unpublicized projects, such as Jordan water survey, shld be encouraged while concept of mutuality of interests between Arabs and west gains ground through MSP and MEC. Thus atmosphere will gradually be created for broader settlement.

359. Re Damascus tel 493 Mar 3 and Beirut tel 903 Mar 5 we hope this idea can be scotched promptly. Suggest missions take fol line in conversations as occasion arises and in answering notes re utilization indemnification from Ger for Arab refugees:

US as well as UK and Fr has on number occasions made clear to Israel Govt allied position on reparation demands against Ger. This position is based on agreements entered into among allies following termination hostilities, namely Potsdam Protocol and the Paris Reparation Agreement. It is pointed out that Israel was not a party to these agreements. Effect these agreements has been to preclude, pending definitive settlement with Ger in nature of peace treaty, the assertion by US Govt on its own behalf or on behalf of other states of further reparation demands on Ger.

On Sep 27, 1951, however, Chancellor Adenauer of the Ger FedRep introduced in the Bundestag a resolution, which was promptly and unanimously adopted, offering to negotiate a settlement with State of Israel and World Jewry of latter's claims for the indemnification of Jewish victims of Nazi persecution. [2] In reply to an Israel request for US intervention in support of Israel's claims, US informed Israel that US Govt had consistently been of opinion that a settlement of Israel claims against Germany should be effected through direct negotiations between Israel Govt and Ger FedRep. [3]

In urging Israel Govt to discharge its obligations to Arab refugees soon as possible, US has refused to accept Israel Govt assertion that Israel obligations to the Arab refugees should be balanced against property losses of Iraqi Jews who left Iraq for Israel. US has emphasized that in its view these two questions are in no way related. A similar situation obtains with regard to payments of indemnification to Israel by Ger FedRep and Israel's obligation to pay compensation to Palestine refugees, i.e. the two not related.

320.2 AA/4-352: Despatch

The Chargé in Jordan (Fritzlan) to the Department of State

SECRET
AMMAN, April 3, 1952.
No. 268

Subject: Arab Refugee Problem–UNRWA Operations

For some time I have been disturbed over the failure of UNRWA to accomplish anything substantial in Jordan in the form of refugee resettlement. The reason for this state of affairs seems to be twofold. There is a significant lack of cooperation and enterprise on the part of the Jordan Government in this field; furthermore it would appear that the terms of reference by which Mr. Blandford is bound, which preclude the undertaking of any development projects which do not lead directly and conclusively to refugee resettlement, serve to fetter the operations of UNRWA in Jordan with the result that month after month large sums of money are spent for direct relief to keep the refugees alive without anything substantial being undertaken to make refugees self-supporting and to take them off the ration lists.

It will be recalled that at the past General Assembly in Paris high hopes were entertained by not only Mr. Blandford, but by the United States, United Kingdom and other delegations primarily responsible for the operations of UNRWA, that the new program would have the active support of the Arab States and could be put into operation with little delay. As far as Jordan is concerned these hopes have not been justified. It is of course fully realized that the absorbtive capacity of this country is very limited and that at least 350,000 of the approximately half million refugees in the country must look to other countries for their ultimate resettlement. For some time our thinking has been concentrated upon Syria as an area which could absorb this manpower. A year ago it seemed that the Syrian Government had accepted in principle the resettlement of a portion of these refugees within Syria. However no action has been taken by the Syrian Government to implement this principle and it is doubted if the Government in power there today will make a firm undertaking in this respect. Nor is the Syrian Government the only one to be blamed for this situation. Undoubtedly a great deal more could be done in Jordan than has been done in the direction of resettlement. However, before this can happen there must be a considerable amount of education work carried out among the refugees to convince them that, despite past United Nations General Assembly decisions and past promises made by Arab leaders, they can never hope to return in large numbers to their previous homes. This the Jordan Government has shown no willingness to do.

The foregoing considerations lead one to believe that, despite certain actions of the Arab League which have appeared to be favorable to the principle of refugee resettlement, it is the basic policy of the Arab States to obstruct resettlement but to give some vague and meaningless encouragement to UNRWA in its efforts in order that the United Nations might continue to assume responsibility for the maintenance of these refugees; the purpose of this policy being simply to keep the Palestine problem alive in the hope of bringing about the downfall of Israel.

The British Minister in Amman, Mr. Furlonge, and I have had sporadic conversations on this subject and I find he shares the concern of this Legation regarding the whole problem. He tells me that during his visit to Damascus over the past weekend he, together with the British Minister there, discussed the problem at great length with Minister Cannon and Mr. Clark. It was apparent that all shared the feeling that time was running out fast and that the Arab States should be solemnly warned in the near future that unless concrete results were obtained from Mr. Blandford's new program, it was most unlikely that at the next session of the General Assembly the United Nations would continue to assume responsibility for the refugees as it had in the past. Mr. Furlonge repeated to me certain proposals he had made in Damascus which doubtless the Legation there will report to the Department. However, at the risk of being repetitious, I summarize them below. It will readily become apparent that there is very little essentially new in Mr. Furlonge's proposals.

It is Mr. Furlonge's idea that after a solemn warning has been issued to the Arab States principally concerned in the matter, we should wait, say, two months in order to satisfy ourselves concerning any change of attitude on the part of the Arab States. Should no change of attitude become apparent, we should then approach them along the following lines:

It should be made clear that the failure of Mr. Blandford's program will almost certainly cause the U.S. Congress as well as other legislative bodies to withhold funds for Arab refugees. Furthermore, we consider that the time has come when we must insist upon the Arab States assuming a greater measure of responsibility, if not full responsibility, for the refugees in their territories. We accordingly consider that at the next General Assembly we will oppose any plans for further contributions to UNRWA for the direct relief of Arab refugees. However, since we are not oblivious to the humanitarian problem involved, we will propose that a fund be established in order to assist those Arab States which have assumed responsibility for the administration of relief to refugees within their borders, and that the money available from this fund will be allotted over certain periods in diminishing quantities based on some reasonable formula. Those States which feel they are unable from their own resources to support these refugees may apply for assistance from this fund. In addition to the foregoing we would say to the Arabs that we would support their applications for economic assistance, leading directly to resettlement, made to the various agencies (Mutual Security Administration, the United Kingdom as regards loans to certain countries, the International Bank, Export-Import Bank, etc.), which are now providing capital for the development of these countries.

While there is much to commend Mr. Furlonge's plan, it will readily be realized that there are certain weak points in it. It seems to me that in making these proposals he is not fully alive to the political aspects of the problem. It would be difficult, though perhaps not entirely out of the question, to force through the General Assembly a resolution which absolved the United Nations from any responsibility for the Palestine refugees and which placed that responsibility entirely upon the Governments concerned. Unfortunately there are numerous resolutions on the books of the General Assembly which provide clearly that those refugees wishing to return to their former homes should be permitted to do so, the rest being adequately compensated. Were we to attempt to force through such a drastic resolution, we would undoubtedly incur the violent hostility of not only the whole Arab and Moslem world, but also a number of Asiatic and possibly South American countries. It is perhaps questionable whether we would wish to go so far on this issue and perhaps alienate these countries on what we may consider larger and more important issues.

My own feeling is that the Arab States would not respond as we might hope to a solemn warning of the nature mentioned above and it seems to me doubtful that, should there be little if any response, we would find ourselves in a position to issue a threat of the type mentioned by Mr. Furlonge. Nevertheless there would seem to be considerable merit in the idea of issuing a warning couched in general terms. Certainly the situation as seen from this Capital has not improved appreciably in the past year and there is little if any sign that it will be improved in the near future. In view of this it seems imperative that the whole problem of the Palestine refugees and the operations of UNRWA be reviewed in the hope that a new and more effective approach might be made.

2404. For McCloy to be delivered by 9 am. Re McCloy-Bruce telephone conversation today. Israel Amb addressed urgent personal ltr to Secy Apr 3 [2] stating that ans which Ger Delegation will bring to The Hague upon their return from consultation in Bonn as to amt Ger will pay on Israel claim and time of payment will determine success or failure of conference and requesting US urge Gers make settlement.

Amb called at Dept today in amplification of ltr. Highlights of his remarks were: (1) decision of Israel Govt to enter into negots with Ger occasioned great bitterness and tension in Israel: if negots succeed, Govt will be vindicated, but if they fail situation will be serious; (2) Israel Delegation on Hague conference reports Ger Delegation not aware that US had officially informed Israel (in note from Dept of Jan 24) [3] "US will await with sympathetic interest outcome of negotiations"; (3) chief concern of Israel is that Gers may return with small offer which for polit reasons Israel cld not possibly accept or ask for long recess: in latter connection, Amb stated that if Gers ask for recess corresponding to recess of London Debt Conference, Israel Govt wld regard this as confirmation of its suspicions that Gers are trying to dovetail Hague and London conferences.

Dept replied: (1) no reason believe Gers are not acting in good faith; (2) size of claims obviously makes it difficult for Gers quickly evolve settlement plan; (3) reasonable to expect Gers wld want time to examine claims in light other obligations, and US wld not want to press Gers into commitments which might increase Ger dependence on US aid; (4) US does not want conference to break up; US sincerely desires settlement satisfactory to both parties; (5) Dept hopes Israel can find way to give Gers adequate time fully explore this complicated problem; (6) Dept convinced there is no misapprehension in top circles of Ger Govt re US position.

In emergency meeting with Israel chairman April 12 we understand Taxis succeeded in obtaining his agreement open gates provided Taxis would seek consent Syrians allow closing gates few hours daily for short period permit completion repairs bridge. While Jaddid and owners Bouteiha farm probably would agree such arrangement, they are convinced Israeli using bridge repairs only as pretext pursue drainage project. The Secretary of Defense (Lovett) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, 19 April 1952.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Reference is made to Mr. James E. Webb's letter, dated 11 February 1952, regarding the desirability of declaring the Government of Israel eligible for arms assistance on a reimbursable basis under Section 408(e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended. This letter requested the concurrence of the Department of Defense in a joint recommendation to this effect to the Director for Mutual Security.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have concluded and I concur that Israel's ability to defend itself and to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part is important to the security of the United States. Accordingly, from the military point of view, concurrence is hereby given in a joint recommendation by the Departments of State and Defense, to the Director for Mutual Security, that Israel be declared eligible for reimbursable aid under Section 408(e)(1)(C) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

It is to be noted that the delivery of end-items to countries such as Israel is becoming increasingly difficult. The requirements of the conflict in Korea; the President's letter of 9 January 1952, which directed increased deliveries of end-items to NATO forces; the recent increased commitments to other high-priority countries (e.g., Indochina); all have had the cumulative effect of greatly reducing the immediate availability of most competitive end-items. Any military equipment furnished Israel should consist of non-competitive items under existing priorities and which do not interfere with current United States or Mutual Defense Assistance Programs.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff point out that, in the negotiations incident to granting reimbursable aid, the governments of the Near East countries should be made to understand clearly that, under existing availabilities and priorities, little or no modern equipment will be readily available and should such be desired the probable future delivery time from points in the United States would be from 18 to 24 months.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT A. LOVETT

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, April 19, 1952—1:40 p. m.

394. For Amb Palmer. Re PCC. While we believe you fully understand and are in accord with Dept's views re mtg Mon Apr 21, we believe fol wld be helpful guidance for you:

1. Future activity PCC: GA Res at last GA [1] indicates that primary responsibility for settling Pal problem rests with parties, and in view this and past unhappy record PCC shld engage in minimum formal activity for present year. It shld remain on stand-by basis. Such activities as are undertaken might best be directed toward settlement of question of blocked accts and possibly some further efforts toward estimating compensation and ascertaining means for payment compensation.

2. Blocked accts: PCC has thoroughly explored this problem in the past. Efforts this year shld be directed toward formulating joint diplomatic action which might be undertaken by members vis-à-vis Israel in effort persuade that Govt unfreeze accts as significant step contributing to better relations with Arab states.

3. Compensation: Such activity as PCC might undertake shld be directed toward elaboration of report prepared by refugee office last year. The rate of progress on any PCC considerations on compensation must be determined by (a) Arab refugees' indicating willingness to accept compensation or reparation, but not both, and (b) how and when Israel will be able to pay compensation. Administrative actions suggested by Berncastle paper shld be opposed at least for time being. We believe that distribution of questionnaires to Arab refugees wld have most unhappy political consequences particularly in face unlikelihood any early payment of compensation. If other Dels advance, re possible sources and means of Israel paying compensation, ideas associating settlement of Arab compensation claims with Israel-Ger reparation talks you shld indicate we are opposed, since we believe two negots are and shld remain separated. In any event they cannot properly be associated by UN. Can only be done by parties directly concerned.

4. PCC Rep in Jerusalem: We believe we are under no firm commitment to agree to appointment of PCC Rep for Jerusalem. We believe, however, that you may indicate that, in our opinion, important point is that, if appointed and sent to Jerusalem, Rep shld be in Jerusalem only under specific assignment and terms of ref and shld be there only so long as his terms of ref require he be in area. While we appreciate you have all arguments at your disposal on this point against appointment of a full time Rep, it shld be pointed out that if any negots of a detailed or intricate nature were to be suggested by the parties PCC cld determine at that time wisdom and necessity of its returning to Jerusalem. We believe if pressure is strong for Rep being in Jerusalem to manifest UN interest in area and maintain UN hold over Govt House, you shld indicate belief that logical and simpler alternative solution to problem is to urge Gen Riley to move to Govt House. If this suggestion does not meet with approval and you are placed under pressure by UN SYG, Fr and Turk colleagues to agree to appointment full-time Jerusalem Rep, you shld request opportunity further consultation with Dept.

5. We agree desirability some cognizance be taken of past valuable services of Azcarate.

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the President [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, April 22, 1952.

Subject: Israeli Claims Against Germany

[1] This memorandum was sent in response to a memorandum of Apr. 11 by President Truman to Secretary Acheson which reads as follows:

"One of my good friends, Jacob Blaustein, who was on a Committee which has to do with claims for Israel from Germany, asked me if I wouldn't issue a statement on the subject asking for expedition in handling these claims. I'll appreciate it if you will look into it and see if a statement would be in order.

"Mr. Blaustein told me that Chancellor Adenauer is anxious to cooperate but needs a little push." (262.84A41/4-1152)

The Committee referred to was the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany. On Apr. 15, the President sent the Secretary a copy of a letter of Apr. 11 he had received from Blaustein on the same subject. (262.84A41/4-1552)

With respect to the request of Mr. Jacob Blaustein that you issue a statement requesting expeditious handling of the Jewish material claims against Germany, I would suggest that a statement from you at this time would be inappropriate. I have every reason to believe that Chancellor Adenauer is conscientious in his efforts to reach a satisfactory settlement with the State of Israel and the non-Israeli Jewish claimants in the matter of affording compensation to the Jewish victims of Nazi persecution.

The German Government is fully aware that the United States considers the German people to have incurred an inescapable moral obligation to make material amends to the victims of Nazi persecution, and that this obligation, unless discharged, will stand as a major obstacle to the acceptance of the German nation by the free peoples of the world. The German Government has also been informed that the conclusion of a satisfactory agreement in the present negotiations would be a source of gratification to the United States. Mr. McCloy has reaffirmed these views personally to Chancellor Adenauer on recent occasions. The Department has likewise communicated these views to the Ambassador of Israel and to the representatives of the non-Israeli Jewish claimants.

The negotiations at the Hague have now reached a critical stage. The Federal Government has postulated that the settlement with Israel and the non-Israeli Jewish claimants must be brought within the limits of German capacity to meet its external obligations, and therefore must be related to other responsibilities assumed by the Federal Government, particularly those being considered by the International Conference on German Debts which has been meeting in London with Ambassador Warren Lee Pierson as the United States representative. The Debt Conference is now in recess and is scheduled to reconvene May 19th. The Germans have invited the Israeli negotiators to meet again at the Hague, a month later, on June 19th.

The Israeli negotiators, and the representatives of Jewish organizations associated with Israel at the Hague, are concerned with the political situation in Israel, which makes it urgent that the Hague talks rapidly reach a successful conclusion. They are also concerned that the Germans are attempting to maneuver the pre-war creditors into the position of opposing a satisfactory settlement of the Jewish claim. They feel that the deferral of the Hague talks may be a tactical move in this direction.

The Department supports the desire of the negotiators on the Israeli side to keep the Hague talks disentangled from the London discussions on the German pre-war commercial debt. On the other hand, the United States is not a party to the Hague discussions and it would not appear appropriate for the United States to intervene in the current negotiations. There is a danger that a public statement on our part might raise hopes on the part of the Federal Government and the Israeli Government that the United States would be willing indirectly to finance the settlement of the German obligations.

I, therefore, recommend that you do not make a public statement at this time. Instead, I believe that we should privately express to the Federal Government our hopes that the negotiations will reach a successful conclusion, and our recommendation that the talks at the Hague reconvene at the earliest practicable date, preferably at the same time as the London meeting, rather than a month later. I propose to send a message to Mr. McCloy asking him to take such action. I suggest that Mr. Blaustein be advised of this action as being the proper course to be followed at the present time.

2671. For McCloy. Reps of Jewish organizations which have been associated with Israel at Hague in negots with FedGov have asked Pres to issue a public statement calling upon FedGov to expedite successful conclusion Hague talks. We have felt it wld not be appropriate for US to intervene publicly in negots at this time. On other hand, we have advised Reps referred to that we wld ask you to reaffirm to Chancellor sympathetic concern which US feels for objectives of Hague talks and our strong hopes talks will lead to successful conclusion. We recognize that FedGov properly must relate any offer it can make to Israel Govt to other responsibilities which it has and to its overall capacity to discharge its obligations. On other hand, it wld appear to us that negots at Hague shld carry forward rapidly as possible. We understand Ger negotiators have proposed that Hague talk be deferred until month after Lon Debt Conference reconvenes. Although not fully familiar with status of Hague talks we wld be gratified if FedGov finds it possible reconvene Hague talks at early date, if practicable at approximately same time as Lon talks, so as to avoid giving public impression Lon mtg in any way holds precedence over Hague talks. We sug you propose this suggestion in tentative form on our part since we are not of course in position to know what preparations FedGov needs make in order carry discussions forward profitably after they have opened.

FYI we recognize that Ger Govt is in predicament in finding resources adequately to satis its obligations at Hague and at Lon. We are anxious, however, that this dilemma be resolved by Gers, at least in first instance. We wish to avoid pre-war commercial creditors and in particular US Del at Lon being maneuvered in position by Ger Gov which might lead to charges that the Lon Conference is interfering with solution which is satis to Gers and Israel side of negots.

The Deputy United States Representative at the United Nations (Gross) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL NEW YORK, April 24, 1952—11:31 a. m.

736. Re Suez: Present at mtg yesterday requested by Eban were Eban, Lourie and Rafael for Israel; Jebb and Laskey for UK; Hoppenot and Ordonneau for France and myself, Ross and Maffitt for USUN.

Eban opened discussion saying Israeli Govt was weighing advisability of calling SC attention to Egyptian failure to implement its Sept 1 SC res but wished Eban first to discuss question with cosponsors, more particularly the 3 most concerned with NE stability and Suez question. Eban stressed he did not consider such discussion premature in view of lack of result of res, length of time situation unfavorable to Israel has existed (3 years) and assurances from Austin and Shone (UK) in past that US and UK formally supported doctrine of maritime freedom. He pointed out no goods for Israel have passed Canal since res, situation in this respect ironically being worse than before res. This state of affairs primarily was due to silence of Egyptians on repeal of restrictive legislation, executive orders, etc, or Egyptian indication that free passage rights will be granted Israeli goods. Shipping companies reluctant accept Israeli orders under these circumstances.

This was first time any SC res "totally without effect". As time passed without show-down danger grew of Israel appearing to sanction Egyptian obstruction. Israel had refrained from attempting to cause show-down since it felt solution of Anglo-Eyptian problem would bring with it solution of Suez problem. However, these 2 matters were not necessarily linked and recalling that September 1 resolution was not conditioned on settlement of Anglo-Egyptian question, Eban examined possible courses of action open to Israel if Anglo-Egyptian deadlock remains:

(1) Leave matters as they are;
(2) Without seeking statement of position from Egypt, test out its present Suez policy by putting cargoes on foreign vessels for passage through Canal or sending Israeli ships through Canal;
(3) Make similar test by seeking Egyptian public statement, action in law, or even private intimation through diplomatic channels assuring free passage rights to Israel.

Of these alternatives, Eban felt first out of question for fear of appearing to sanction Egyptian obstruction and because of cost of burden to Israeli economy of costly makeshifts to obtain necessities such as fuel occasioned by Canal being closed to Israel.

Of 2 remaining possibilities, third seemed preferable to Eban as avoiding danger of incident.

Coming to his main point, Eban then inquired whether US, UK and France could make representations to Egypt with view to Cairo's giving assurances of free passage. These did not need to be public.

I said that while our advocacy of free passage is and has been firm, we wld have to seek US Govt's reaction to Eban's statement and inquiry and discuss further thereafter.

Jebb recognized lack of compliance by Egypt but pointed out that at time of res it was generally felt that SC wld support no stronger action than September 1 res; furthermore, Egypt is physically in control of Canal. If question of further SC debate should arise at this time, he was sure UK would see no useful purpose in such debate but since Eban's proposal was not to this effect he would consult London and be glad to discuss matter further when he had instructions. He emphasized that present moment is critical in Anglo-Egyptian negotiations and voiced doubt that UK would act on Suez matter until outcome of negotiations is known. He had no idea what London wld do if negotiations failed. In reply to Eban's query whether successful outcome of negotiations would, as matter of course, include solution of Suez restriction problem, Jebb said he would inquire of London.

Hoppenot felt sure SC debate on Suez at this stage wld be fruitless and wld only crystallize Egyptian intransigence; thought that main factor in Suez solution was Anglo-Egyptian negotiations; but supposed that if démarche were decided upon by British and US, France wld associate itself therewith. He suggested that possibly for reasons of face and in order to avoid prejudice to NE defense, Egypt might prefer simply to "overlook" passage of Israeli goods through Canal.

Eban commented that this possibility could be better assessed after Egyptian reply to suggested representations. Jebb thought such course would be easier for Egyptians if they felt sure Israel wld give no publicity to opening up Canal to its goods and ships.

Re this observation and time question I had brought up, Eban thought suggested representations should include mention that Israel intends to utilize its maritime rights to the full. This led me to observe that alternatives 2 and 3 were tactical steps leading to some further objective. I inquired what that objective was, if Egypt refused. Eban replied that if there is case of obstruction in course of test Israel would certainly bring matter to SC. Timing of such action would necessarily be influenced by Israel's fear that delay might be interpreted as sanction of obstruction, as well as by economic burden on Israel.

In reply to query from Ross whether Israel might obtain some clarification of its questions from Egyptians themselves, Eban said this matter cld not be dealt with by personnel of Israeli-Egypt MAC, only official mtg place of Israel and Egypt, nor through their informal contacts with non-governmental Egyptians.

Speaking for US, France and UK, I said it was clear we were agreed that we shld seek instructions from our govts and renew discussion with Eban after receipt thereof. I undertook to keep in touch with respective dels and arrange such mtg, when circumstances warrant.

UNTSO Chief of Staff advises dispute between Syria and Israel over Huleh question may assume serious character again unless early solution can be found for problem pertaining to Bouteiha farm mentioned Damascus Legtel 608, April 22.[1] States Syrian reps MAC claim closing of Huleh dam throughout daylight hours threatens extensive damage not only to crops but also to irrigation canals themselves (if empty many hours in sun, canals dry out and develop cracks). Hence, they believe opening of dam for part of daylight period necessary to obviate serious damage. Apparently believe plan wld permit continuation of some work on river bed. Source says Syrians desire enter direct conversations with Israelis to work out mutually satisfactory solution. Understand Syrians wld not renew their objections to continuation work on Huleh project if damage to Bouteiha farm obviated.

Chief of Staff states Israeli MAC reps have refused discuss MAC questions pertaining to Jordan water or other matters relating to demilitarized zone apparently for fear prejudicing Israel's claim to sovereignty. Adds, however, Israeli reps have agreed to meet with Syrians informally and hopes this may make it possible to arrive at some practical arrangement that will forestall a deterioration of sitn such as occurred last year. The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, May 8, 1952—4:45 p. m.

With reference to despatch No. 268 from Amman of April 3, 1952, the Department fully shares the Legation's concern at the slowness of the pace with which it has been possible to move forward with refugee resettlement, and it greatly appreciates the Legation's constructive thinking on this question. In view of the fact that refugee resettlement is necessarily a long-term problem, however, the Department does not feel that it would be justified in minimizing the progress which has been made to date, and it accordingly shares the Legation's doubts concerning the desirability of Mr. Furlonge's proposal as a means to force a greater acceptance of responsibility for the refugees by the individual Arab states.

In 1949, as the Legation knows, no less than 1,019,000 people were receiving rations from United Nations sources. When UNRWA took over from UNPR on May 1, 1950, 957,000 people were on relief, and this figure has since been cut to roughly 850,000. In view of the great difficulties involved, this reduction constitutes a genuine accomplishment. Perhaps even more important to the eventual solution of the problem has been UNRWA's activity in negotiating with the host governments for public works projects on which the refugees might be employed. These negotiations, although beset by annoying delays, the obstinacy of many local officials and the non-cooperation of a large part of the population, have helped to bring about changes in the climate of Arab opinion which are essential to a realistic approach to the refugee problem.

As recently as two years ago, the leaders of the Arab states were virtually unanimous in declaring that no solution to the refugee problem would be acceptable other than the return of the entire refugee population to its former homes. Through UNRWA's continuing negotiations on immediate, down-to-earth problems which have focused attention on the realities at hand, and through patient diplomatic efforts over a period of time by our missions and the missions of friendly governments, most responsible Arab leaders have now come to realize that, as a practical matter, arrangements must be made for the resettlement of substantial numbers of the refugees in the Arab countries. The recognition has slowly but clearly been growing that it is to the advantage of the progressive elements within each Arab country to participate in a solution of the problem, and that Israel is suffering far less than the Arab extremists are benefiting as a result of the present unhappy state of affairs.

A dramatic instance of the development of a greater sense of responsibility is afforded by the current Blandford-Selo negotiations which look to the eventual integration of 500,000 additional refugees in Syria. Although the Syrian Government wishes to maintain secrecy in reaching an understanding and has asked that any program adopted be placed under way without publicity, it has indicated a willingness to discuss an agreement which, if concluded, would eventually lead to the solution of one of the most difficult aspects of the refugee problem: the large numbers of refugees who cannot, because of economic limitations, be settled in the countries where they are now being cared for. Even if the current negotiations should not prove to be immediately successful, the Department sees evidence in the Syrian attitude of an additional and important improvement in the political climate which brings the solution of the problem one step nearer.

In view of these considerations, the Department is prepared at present to support only such modifications in UNRWA's method of operation and approach to the refugee problem as may be suggested by changes in the situation resulting from the progress of UNRWA's own negotiations. The Department hopes that the Legation will continue to report its thinking in light of developments as they occur and will maintain its free interchange of ideas with the British Legation.

"On subject of adjustment of demarcation line, the senior Syrian del to the MAC asked the senior Israel del to state the position of the former's govt on this subject. The latter replied in the presence of the MAC Chairman that the GOI was prepared to undertake secret discussions at high level on Syria-Israel relations, adding that in such discussions both parties submit any proposal and raise any question they wished. The senior Syrian del inquired whether the Israelis were proposing to discuss peace. Israel del replied in the negative. Syrian del said he wld submit Israel's proposal to his govt forthwith but expressed as his personal opinion the belief his govt wld not undertake discussions this nature without UN reps being present. MAC Chairman expects to see Syrian Chief of Staff May 14 or 15 and believes high-level Israel-Syria talks may serve to reduce tension. Senior Syrian delegate stated that mtg was not the intention of Syria to unnecessarily hinder the operation of the checking gates, and that before there cld be a special answer to the problem the senior Syrian delegate wld need additional time to discuss the matter with the farmowners and that in view of the risk to them, which wld occur with any closing of the gates, some plan of compensation wld have to be worked out. Senior Israel delegate stated that Israel was not prepared to discuss compensation at this time but might be willing to discuss the submission of some future claim for any damage which might occur. Discussion on this subject was closed for this date with both parties agreeing to the Chairman's suggestion that the senior Israel delegate take up the matter of compensation with his govt, that the senior Syrian delegate discuss the problem further with the farmowners, and that further discussion on the subject be opened in the immed future.

b. The problem of a complete exchange of all livestock and other materials (including Eingev boat) was discussed. 1196. Re Embtel 1164, May 7. FonOff made arrangements for me to visit Chuleh regions last Sunday May 11 to see development project and visit other points of interest in neighborhood. Shmiel Bendor, director US division FonOff and Major Arie Friedlander, senior Israel delegate Ismac were present. Latter knew of my conversations with FonMin and apparently had been instructed to discuss project and related matters freely.

Apropos of Syrian desire to prevent damage to canals and crops at Bouteiha farm as result closing checking gates, Friedlander expressed view that Israel Govt wld be willing adopt schedule that wld obviate such damage but said he was "not optimistic" that this wld satisfy Syrians. He mentioned possibility of gate closure 5 hours each afternoon which wld permit work on project to continue at retarded rate but wld effectively prevent drying out of canals. He explained that it takes 3 1/2 hours for closing of gates to affect flow of water into canals and a considerably longer period for them to run dry. Hence closure of gates in early afternoon wld not affect water supply at Bouteiha farm late afternoon and canals wld not be exposed in daylight hours. His doubt that such arrangement wld be satis to Syria was based on recent assertion of owner of farm that water is needed for irrigation full 24 hours each day and any stoppage whatsoever wld result in damage. Friedlander said this extreme position does not seem reasonable and gives rise to suspicion owner may be encouraged to take extreme position as means obstructing development project. He said he hopes the Syrians are sincere in their alleged desire arrive at practical agreement to prevent damage as he feels confident such arrangement cld readily be made to mutual advantage both parties.

He explained chief obstacle at present to completion deepening of channel to point necessary in order drain Huleh Lake and swamp is rocky ledge just north of Daughters of Jacob Bridge.

In order remove rock in channel, it is necessary stop flow of Jordan long enough to bore holes in river bed and place dynamite charges for blasting. He estimates aprox 120 hours working time will be required to accomplish this purpose, which at the rate of 5 hours per day wld take 24 working days. Once this ledge is removed it is understood the remainder of deepening process wld be comparatively simple.

As to cultivation of land southeast Huleh Lake mentioned Damascus tel 649, May 5, he indicated Israel Govt disposed to recognize right of certain Arabs cultivate this land under original provisions of project concessions, but at same time they believe Syrian Govt shld honor another provision permitting Palestine Land Development Corp to utilize certain lands upon payment compensation. He had ref of course to 28 dunams land whose owners are prevented allegedly through intimidation from agreeing accept compensation for use of land in project. Friedlander remarked that some of owners of the 28 dunams in question are among those entitled to farm land east of Jordan and he hopes therefore some mutually satis settlement both problems can be worked out. It was quite obvious he had no idea Israel's attitude this question was regarded as provocative by Syrian Govt. Emb comment fols in separate msg.

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, May 19, 1952.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I refer to a letter of May 8, 1952, signed by Ambassador Cowen,[1] with attachment, in which the Department of State forwarded a joint recommendation by the Departments of State and Defense that Israel be determined eligible for reimbursable military assistance under Section 408(e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

This recommendation is based on a joint conclusion by the Departments concerned that Israel's ability to defend itself and to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part, is important to the security of the United States. This conclusion, with which I concur, meets the statutory requirements for eligibility for reimbursable military assistance. Accordingly, I hereby find and determine, under the authority delegated to me by Executive Order No. 10300, dated November 1, 1951, that Israel is eligible to receive reimbursable military assistance under Section 408 (e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

I assume that the Department of State will obtain the necessary assurances from the Government of Israel, as provided for in Section 408 (e), and will consult with the Office of the Director for Mutual Security in the process of formulating any documents which are to be used for this purpose. I further request that this Office be advised sufficiently in advance of the actual shipment of any equipment to Israel so that appropriate letters can go forward to interested Congressional Committees.

I am sending an identical letter to the Secretary of Defense.

Sincerely yours,

1221. Comment on Embtels 1196 May 15, 1192 May 14, 1191 May 13. Despite obvious maneuvering for position on part delegates to ISMAC, Emb believes discussions reveal some progress. Two lines of approach discernible May 12 mtg ISMAC. On one hand, both parties sparring cautiously with eye to maintaining strong legal position, as in case of attitude toward right to use checking gates with or without regard to repair of bridge. On other hand, both sides showing disposition consider concrete problem of effect of closing gates on Bouteiha farmland. Hope lies in discouraging abstract controversy of first kind, which leads inevitably into fruitless legalisms concerning sovereignty demil zone and meaning gen armistice agreement, and in focusing attn on practical means of minimizing and, if necessary, compensating for damage to Arab lands.

Despite numerous obstacles to satis settlement Huleh controversy, outlook considered more favorable than last year. On negative side is (1) continuation Israel determination impose its auth in most demil zone, (2) insistence by Bouteiha farm owners that any closure of gates wld have adverse effect on farmland, and (3) refusal senior Syrian delegate accept Israel representation in group to determine if claim Bouteiha farm owners valid. Re latter, Chief of Staff UNTSO inquired informally whether TCA mission Israel might be able supply neutral agric experts to pass on point and director of mission advises qualified member of mission expected arrive shortly and cld be made available temporarily for above purpose. At same time Amer engineer familiar with project informs me in confidence that estimate by senior Israel delegate of 120 working hours required to deepen Jordan through rocky ledge is much too low.

On positive side, however, is (1) comparative frank manner in which both sides have discussed points at issue and disposition evidenced by them to attempt reach agreement by negotiation, (2) assertion senior Syrian delegate that it is not intention Syria to hinder unnecessarily operation of checking gates and implication that his chief interest is to prevent damage and work out plan of compensation for such damage as might occur, and (3) apparent desire Israelis avoid any renewal hostilities and willingness adopt plan of work which will obviate or minimize damage to agric lands in Syria. If both sides can be induced concentrate first on settlement latter problem without ref to fundamental legal differences between them, some progress may be possible.

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, May 22, 1952—5:58 p. m.

443. Re Suez. Urtel 736, Apr 24.

1. We believe element which shld govern any actions at this stage re Suez blockade is course of Anglo-Egyptian negots. Accordingly, we do not believe Suez restriction problem shld be raised while Anglo-Egyptian conversations continue and there is some hope for settlement. We understand UK Del has been instructed by London this sense.

2. In view of above it is clear that of the alternatives suggested by Eban only the first can be considered at this time, namely that we leave matters as they are. We have repeatedly emphasized to Eban and other Israelis that we have Suez restriction problem much in mind and that we share Israel's desire to have restrictions removed. We have no intention of ignoring or forgetting Sept 1, 1951 SC Res. However we believe raising matter at this time undoubtedly wld have a most prejudicial effect on Anglo-Egyptian talks.

3. Shld occasion require that you discuss second and third alternatives we suggest that fol may be helpful:

[1] Repeated by air pouch to London, Paris, Cairo, Ankara, and Tel Aviv.

We believe second alternative i.e., testing blockade, wld be most unfortunate, since whether or not Israel took full responsibility for such action, incident wld probably occur which might not only make the problem more difficult to handle but also have serious effect on Anglo-Egyptian talks. Third alternative, i.e. obtaining public statement or private intimation from Egypt assuring free passage rights to Israel assuming it an acceptable course of action wld be matter of timing. Since Israel has no means of direct approach to Egypt, except possibly through MAC, approach wld presumably have to be made by one or more members of SC on the basis inquiring from Egypt re its intentions compliance with Sept 1 SC Res. Since compliance with SC Res's wld be basis this approach rather than question of free passage rights for Israel, it is possible that Israel's record of compliance with SC Res's on Pal wld be raised by Egypt. We assume Israel has had this possibility in mind in considering desirability third alternative.

4. You may inform Israeli Del that it continues to be our firm belief that all UN Res's shld be complied with and Egypt's case is in no way exception to this belief. However we are of opinion that present time is not appropriate to raise this question with Egypts. We shall keep in touch with the Israelis and other interested Dels and shall be glad to review matter from time to time with them.

The United States High Commissioner for Germany (McCloy) to the Department of State

Bonn, May 25, 1952—2:46 p. m.

3060. Fol is text Paris 894, to Bonn:

"For the Secretary.
I have just received the following letter from the Israeli Minister in Paris.

> 'Mr. Ambassador
> I have been instructed by my government to transmit to Mr. Dean Acheson an urgent message from the Israeli Foreign Minister Mr. Moshe Sharett. I am enclosing this message and I shall be most grateful if you will be able to arrange for a transmission to Mr. Acheson at the earliest opportunity and at any rate before the forthcoming meeting of the 3 Allied Foreign Ministers with the German Bundeskanzler in Bonn. Please accept (Mr. Ambassador) with the expression of my apology for the trouble I am causing you the assurance of my highest consideration.
> Maurice Fischer
> E. E. and Minister Plenipotentiary.'

The 3 great Western democracies are about to take a momentous step in removing the last vestiges of formal allied control over the German Federal Republic and welcoming her as a full-fledged member of the community of nations. On the eve of this grave event Israel and the Jewish people pose the question whether from the Allied Government's own viewpoint such emancipation can be justly accorded and Germany's good name restored at a time when the criminal liability for the wholesale plunder and destruction of Jewish wealth throughout Europe by the Nazi regime has not been even partially redeemed by its successors. On behalf of the Government of Israel and in full concert with the World Committee of Jewish organizations I beg respectfully to urge that at this crucial juncture in Western Germany's fortunes her responsibility for making good the material damage cause to the Jewish People should be impressed upon her in the strongest possible terms by representatives of the Allied Powers assembled in Paris.

It will be recalled that Chancellor Adenauer in a public statement to the Bundestag on 27 September 1951 solemnly admitted this liability as resting upon the Bonn Government and in a subsequent letter accepted the claim of Israel for the payment of $1 billion as a basis for negotiations. It was on the strength of this acceptance that Israel and the Committee of Jewish Organizations entered into negotiations with Western Germany, and The Hague. The 3 Western governments had specifically advised Israel and the Jewish Organizations to seek a settlement by direct negotiations. The discussions resulted in the acknowledgement by the Bonn Government of a debt to Israel in the amount of $715 million, the liability to be assumed towards the committee remaining still to be determined. More recently tactics of equivocation have become manifest and an attempt is now being made to whittle down the amount of Western Germany's payment to relatively insignificant proportions. If these counsels of evasion prevail, the negotiations already suspended are bound to end in final failure. The threatened breach of faith has aroused strong protests within the Bonn Government itself, and has caused the resignation of the GW leaders of its Hague delegation. Those who advocate this violation of Germany's minimal obligation may be under the illusion that the Western Allies are indifferent to the manner in which Western Germany will treat its admitted liability towards Israel and the Jewish people. In the interests of international justice it is essential that the mind of the Bonn Government be disabused without delay of any such false notions and that its leaders be prevailed upon to keep faith with their pledged word. Israel is confident that the 3 Allied governments which have had decisive responsibility for the development of the Western German Republic at every stage will surely not desire to appear to be disinterested in so grave a moral and political issue.

Accordingly I submit that the present historic moment in the evolution of relations between the Western powers and Germany affords a compelling opportunity to require the Government of the German Federal Republic to fulfill the obligations which it has incurred and acknowledged. I am addressing this communication also to Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary for Foreign Affairs and to the Foreign Minister of the French Republic.

I have discussed this matter with Chancellor Adenauer and have reiterated the hope of the United States Government that a satisfactory settlement can be reached in the near future.

Chancellor Adenauer has informed me that the discussions have now been resumed in Paris and that according to his reports they are going well. It is also my understanding that the head of the German delegation has withdrawn his resignation.

Now that the negotiations have been resumed, it is my belief that with the good will which exists on both sides, it should prove possible to arrive at a reasonable and early settlement.[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 17, 1952.

Subject: Visit of Ambassador Eban Regarding Middle East Problems and Israel's Financial Situation.

Participants: Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel Embassy
Miss Esther Herlitz, First Secretary, Israel Embassy
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Waller

After expressions of welcome to Mr. Byroade on his return from his recent trip to the Near East, including Israel, the Ambassador asked Mr. Byroade what his impressions were. Mr. Byroade said that he had not been in Israel long enough to formulate opinions regarding Israel's difficulties but he had noted several things that caused him concern, one of which was the economic situation. He thought it a most formidable obstacle to Israel's future. He wondered whether mechanizations of agriculture had not been overdone and whether changes in some other aspects of Israel's economic life might be beneficial. Without replying to Mr. Byroade's speculation, Mr. Eban said that the specific matter which he wished to discuss was Israel's financial condition, particularly in view of the appointment of Israel's Foreign Minister, Mr. Sharett, with Secretary Acheson the following day.

Mr. Eban recalled his first visit to Mr. Byroade, shortly after the latter assumed office, when Mr. Byroade found means to assist Israel in solving the most recent of Israel's financial problems. He said the use of MSA funds in that connection was an expedient but not a healthy one. The money obtained was used for the repayment of debt purchases of such commodities as wheat and fuel and a power project south of Israel. The Ambassador also recalled that Congress has now passed a new Mutual Security Act authorizing some $73 million for Israel during the fiscal year beginning July 1 and that Israel hopes to benefit from these funds as soon as possible.

In connection with the financial assistance given in late April and early May, Mr. Mikesell is proceeding to Israel to work with Israeli officials on Israel's balance of payments. Israel has accepted the position of Mr. Mikesell and will cooperate with him.

The present problem concerns Israel's short-term debt which, he stated, was approximately $100 million and which becomes due within one year from June 15. Israel's estimated import purchase needs, based on current import restrictions, totals about $300 million per year. On the credit side are exports totaling about $70 million, income from bonds and UJA about $120 million and grant-in-aid for the fiscal year amounts to $73 million. The difference between this total of $263 million and the $300 million in expenditures is made up by invisible exports, including tourism. Therefore, there is an approximate balance between Israel's income and expenditures when the short-term debt is not taken into consideration. Israel is not in a position to pay the short-term debts. The use of MSA funds for this purpose is not in the spirit of the grant-in-aid program and Israel does not desire to resort to those funds to pay the short-term debts.

The most helpful solution would be to find a way to refund short-term debts over a longer period and to schedule the refunded debt for payment along with Israel's further obligations. Refinancing through private banks and sources is apparently out of the question, since investigation has shown that long-term financing hardly exists in the US. The solution therefore requires governmental assistance. This appears to be the only way by which the MSA program can be preserved. One method would be for the Export-Import Bank to consolidate Israel's existing debts and arrange repayment by Israel over a long period. Another possibility would be the use of the Stabilization Fund of the US Treasury. The Ambassador said that he understood the Secretary of the Treasury has the power to purchase foreign currencies under certain circumstances, which has the effect of a foreign currency loan. He cited Mexico as a country which has benefited by the use of the Stabilization Fund.

To indicate that Israel's ability to repay is not completely black, the Ambassador stated that the compensation negotiations with Germany had taken a favorable turn during the past few days. The Germans have informally offered as a basis of negotiation the payment of 3 1/2 billion DM in goods over a 12-year period. One-half billion DM of this sum is for payment of Jewish material claims but the entire sum will apparently be paid to Israel and Israel will then assume responsibility for paying the Jewish claimants. The prospect of receiving German goods having a value of $50 million or more each year will make Israel a better risk and make possible repayment of the refunded debt over a longer period. Increased production in Israel will also add to Israel's resources.

In reply to a question whether the figure of $100 million includes short-term debts owed by Israel to other countries, the Ambassador replied that it did not include sterling but he did not know whether it included other currencies. A paper containing this information is on its way from Israel at the present time.

Mr. Byroade replied that "We must do something" but, having just returned, he did not know how or what. In his recent visit to the Arab states he was continually "beaten over the head" with alleged US favoritism to Israel and the American Government's ready willingness to rescue Israel from every financial difficulty. Mr. Byroade said that he told Prime Minister Ben-Gurion that the Arabs complain most about the disproportion between US aid to them and to Israel. They insist that every time Israel has financial trouble, the US bails Israel out. This belief by the Arabs may become a security problem for us. We therefore hope for cooperation from Israel officials to find a more permanent solution to Israel's financial difficulties.

Mr. Eban replied that there is certainly an Arab position regarding Israel but he believed it was exaggerated. If Israel should be wiped out tomorrow, he said, there would still be the Tunisian question, an Eygptian problem, and the situation in Iran.

Mr. Byroade replied that while there was much to what the Ambassador had said, it is nevertheless a fact that there exists a situation where Arab states are not strong enough to make peace. Besides they are convinced Israel does not want peace.

Mr. Byroade then mentioned the subject of blocked Arab accounts and said "Don't forget the moral side of this question—for three years you have held the Germans to their moral position and now you do not apply it to the Arabs."

When the Ambassador asked, in reply, why the Arabs refused to accept a non-aggression pact offered them at Paris, Mr. Byroade replied that those signing for the Arab states would probably have been shot. To this, Mr. Eban said he realized Israel's economic stability must be proved before the Arabs will acknowledge Israel's existence.

Mr. Byroade brought the interview to an end by expressing the hope that his frank comments would not be misunderstood and that every effort would be made to find a solution to Israel's financial problem.

Secretary's Memoranda, lot 53 D 444

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 18, 1952.

Subject: Request of Israel Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett for Assistance in Overcoming Israel's Financial Difficulties.

Participants: The Secretary
Mr. Moshe Sharett, Israel Foreign Minister
Abba Eban, Israel Ambassador
Mr. Waller—NE

The Israel Foreign Minister, Mr. Sharett, accompanied by the Israel Ambassador, Mr. Eban, called at their request on the Secretary at 12:15 today. After greeting the Secretary and a short exchange of pleasantries the Foreign Minister expressed, on behalf of his government, appreciation for the assistance given by the Secretary and the US Government toward a solution of Israel's compensation claim against Germany and in connection with Israel's financial emergency of late April and early May. He continued by stating that the purpose of his present visit was to inform the Secretary of Israel's present financial difficulties and to request assistance in solving them.

The Foreign Minister recited at some length the efforts of his government to build Israel into a democratic country patterned after the US and efforts to rehabilitate a population rescued from persecution in many parts of the world. He also mentioned Israel's desire to build up its industry, its agriculture, to develop its resources, to search for water, to explore areas heretofore considered waste land, and similar ventures which require time and money. It is Israel's intention, the Foreign Minister stated, to make the country self-supporting, and it is hoped to bring this about by a substantial increase in exports of finished products as a result of industrial expansion and to export raw materials either in a natural or processed state.

Mr. Sharett said that Israel must find a way to bridge the gap between her imports and exports or, in other words, between income and expenditures. He believed that a solution to the problem could now be foreseen, although it was a question of years rather than weeks or months. One aspect of the problem, however, appeared to be incapable of solution by Israel alone and it was in connection with this problem that he wished the assistance of the US Government. The problem is to find a way to refund Israel's short-term debts, which, he stated, amount to about $124 million and which are payable at various times and in various amounts during the next twelve months. His advisers offered two possible solutions; namely, for the Export-Import Bank to consolidate the short-term debts and to arrange for the total sum to be repaid over a longer period of time; or by a stabilization of Israel's currency which, the Foreign Minister said, was notoriously weak. This would require the use of the Stabilization Fund of the US Treasury. Mr. Sharett said that he understood there have been precedents for each possible solution and that both were constitutionally permissible. So far as he was personally concerned, the Foreign Minister continued, he would prefer the Stabilization Fund procedure because, he understood, it was a secret operation and hence would not give rise to any publicity.

Mr. Sharett said that he was of the opinion that it was in the long-range political interest of the US to assist Israel in finding a solution of the financial difficulties but he recognized that on a short-term basis public knowledge of such an operation might result in some criticism, particularly from other Near East countries. While he felt that this was an important consideration, it should not be considered decisive because, although the Arab states would undoubtedly like to see Israel in difficulties, they are losing as much economically as Israel by refusing to come to terms for peace. He also recognized that the Arab states are in a better position than Israel to afford losses.

The Secretary replied by stating that he has known of Israel's difficult financial situation; he has recognized the importance of finding a solution; and that he would look into the matter. The Secretary said that Mr. Mikesell is being sent to Israel to try to find an answer. What must be determined is whether Israel's financial policy will be effective or whether Israel will continue policies which would recreate the present situation. The Secretary continued by saying that he would have the matter gone into urgently, but that he understood it would not be permissible to use Mutual Security funds. He said he had not heard of the Stabilization Fund possibility and had assumed the only possibility was an Export-Import Bank transaction.

The Foreign Minister said that Israel had followed very carefully the hearings on the Mutual Security Bill and was well aware of the sentiment against using MSA funds for other than program purposes. Israel had always recognized the wisdom of this and had used MSA funds in the past to pay for current imports only after other possibilities had been exhausted. Israel also realized that it was in its own interest for the program to develop according to plan. It was therefore to find a solution outside MSA that he had presented the matter to the Secretary and was exploring possibilities with other officials of the Government. He expects to see Secretary of the Treasury Snyder tomorrow to obtain his advice about the possibilities of using the Stabilization Fund procedure.

In conclusion, Foreign Minister Sharett said that he fully realized the Secretary had not committed himself in any way but that he nevertheless felt encouraged by the Secretary's remarks.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 20, 1952.

Subject: Visit of Israel Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett

Participants: Mr. Moshe Sharett, Israel Foreign Minister
Ambassador of Israel, Abba Eban
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Hart
NE—Mr. Dorsey
NE—Mr. Waller

The Israel Foreign Minister, Mr. Sharett, and the Israel Ambassador, Mr. Eban, called at their request on Mr. Byroade this afternoon at 4 o'clock. After exchanging greetings and touching on several minor matters, the Foreign Minister related to Mr. Byroade the story of Israel's financial difficulties. The story was almost identical with the information provided by Ambassador Eban to Mr. Byroade June 17 (see memorandum of conversation dated June 17).

Mr. Byroade replied that he was very much interested and concerned about the problem, which was one of greatest concern to him when he was recently in Israel. His study of the matter so far has led him to the conclusion we do not really know the facts. Mr. Sharett said the Israel Government is prepared to open its books. Mr. Byroade replied that Mr. Mikesell's work must be expedited in order to get an early answer on which to base a decision. Ambassador Eban said Mr. Mikesell and the Israel Embassy's treasury representative were together yesterday and that perhaps Mr. Mikesell could make an interim recommendation before going to Israel. Mr. Byroade doubted that Mr. Mikesell would be in a position to express an opinion before leaving for Israel. Mr. Sharett then said that treasury experts from Israel could be brought over to help. Mr. Byroade again expressed doubt that any report could be made until after Mr. Mikesell's arrival in Israel. Mr. Sharett then emphasized the urgency of the matter—which Mr. Byroade said he understood.

Mr. Byroade continued by saying that, speaking frankly, the US seems always to find itself in the position of being called on to help Israel out of financial difficulties without having the full facts of the situation. He reminded Mr. Sharett that in the two months he (Mr. Byroade) has been in office as Assistant Secretary, the Department has been asked twice to assist Israel financially on an urgent basis. He personally would like to get Israel's financial affairs on a basis which would provide a breathing space. He then asked the Foreign Minister if he had any suggestions. Mr. Sharett turned to Ambassador Eban and reminded the Ambassador that the Embassy has now received from Jerusalem a detailed account of the situation, and the Ambassador then said that the information could be made available. Mr. Sharett, addressing Mr. Byroade, said that he hoped the Department would recommend the instrumentality to be used and if it should be decided that the operation should be put through the Export-Import Bank he hoped the Department would make an appropriate recommendation to the Bank. Mr. Byroade said that the matter must be arranged in such a way that it does not appear to the world that the US is always bailing Israel out.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 20, 1952.

Subject: Visit of Israel Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett.

Participants: Mr. Moshe Sharett, Israel Foreign Minister
Ambassador of Israel, Abba Eban
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Hart
NE—Mr. Dorsey
NE—Mr. Waller

During a conversation with Foreign Minister Sharett regarding Israel's financial difficulties, Mr. Byroade asked Mr. Sharett whether a meeting could not be arranged between Colonel Shishikli of Syria and General Yadin of Israel to discuss problems of interest to the two countries. Mr. Sharett asked whether any purpose would be served and whether Col. Shishikli wants a meeting. Mr. Byroade said he could not answer for Col. Shishikli but that he felt it would be worth while trying to arrange such a meeting. He continued by saying that there is a feeling in the Arab states that Israel does not want peace. Mr. Sharett replied that the Arabs have never put it to a test. Instead, they spread rumors which tend to create suspicion about Israel's desires. Mr. Byroade said that it must be remembered that some of the Arab states are not strong enough to make peace by themselves. Mr. Sharett answered that if the Arab states cannot make peace all at once, then Israel would be glad to take it a little at a time. The fact is, he continued, the Arabs will not take one step outside the Arab League. Egypt, for example, said Mr. Sharett, knows Israel wants peace. Israel had had means to get the information to the Egytian Government. The Egyptian reply has always been that the time is not right. Mr. Sharett said that Israel has offered full discussion, partial discussion, or any kind of discussion desired, with no results.

Mr. Byroade suggested that Syria might be more important now than heretofore in the Arab world, and inferred that Israel might profitably start peace feelers with Syria. Mr. Sharett replied that he attached importance to what Mr. Byroade said and that Israel would investigate and perhaps have an answer in the near future.

With regard to incidents along Israel's borders, Mr. Byroade said that he believed Israel's policy of retaliation was self-defeating, since it causes the Army to acquire an attitude of taking several lives for one. Mr. Sharett said that that was a situation common to all countries but that he personally had always counseled restraint. Mr. Byroade said he saw no evidence that any Arab state was doing anything to renew the war with Israel. Mr. Sharett asked whether Mr. Byroade had spoken to Prime Minister Ben-Gurion along these lines. Mr. Byroade said that he had and had also spoken of the future, particularly the effect on youth of the Iron Curtain atmosphere which prevails along Israel's borders. Mr. Sharett said he had spent two years of his life in an Arab village and he not only likes them but he knows them well. He regretted the present lack of normal relations with the Arab states.

Mr. Byroade said he enjoyed talking with Mr. Sharett and hoped that before Mr. Sharett returned to Israel he would have another opportunity to see him at a time when he was somewhat less occupied than at the moment.

Comment: Emb considers fears expressed by Col Taxis entirely justified and feels any overt act by Syrian controvention armistice agreement and May 18 res wld play into hands of those elements here who are defeatist about effecting any settlement other than thru use of force (see Embtel 910).[3] The failure of attempts to effect mutually advantageous local settlements within framework of armistice agreements has given rise to general feeling of frustration and if continued will increase danger of resort to arms.

While proposed mtg is considered wholly desirable as means of forestalling deterioration of sitn as result of apparent decision Syria to force showdown over work on east bank, fact must be faced that danger of deadlock in mtg is distinct possibility as result wide divergence in respective viewpoints. If Syria shld make "adjustment of demarcation line" to Jordon her basic and minimum demand, chances of success wld be prejudiced to say the least. On other hand it is believed chances of success will be enhanced if Israel carried out what is understood to be present intention to name General Moshe Dayan as principal Israel rep for purposes high level talks. FonOff advises he will probably be assisted by Tekoah, asst legal advisor of FonOff and expert on Huleh question, and that mtg is expected to take place June 30.

He and FonOff advisers Eytan and Comay asked whether ownership land was in question. Without citing source I based reply on info from Col Taxis that issue not ownership but broader matters of policy. Stressed that altho Israel might have technical legal right work land, question cld not be isolated from gen situation and from viewpoint Israels broad interests it might be highly impolitic proceed exercise right in present circumstances.

PriMin said he appreciated having Emb views, which he found disturbing since his govt has no desire provoke incident. Since interest was expressed in why matter regarded as so important, I replied it was Emb's impression Syrians felt strongly Israel has extended police control over most of demil zone in disregard intent armistice agreement, May 18, 1951 SC res, and MAC chairmans requests re police and free movement to and from demil zone. Now consider project to plow up land east bank as attempt face Syria with further "fait accompli".

It was concensus all present that too much cld not be expected from first mtg because viewpoints so divergent, but I stressed desirability avoid deadlock and continue conferences.

Stated Emb does not undertake suggest what concessions might be made, confining itself to helping bring about direct negots; expressed hope however mtgs wld eventually result in liquidation Huleh controversy, which shld be possible since Syria does not seem opposed development project per se, but interested in political questions re demil zone and particularly adjustment demarcation line.

PriMin replied Israel is of course determined continue Huleh development project. As to frontier his govt's position well known, viz. border with Syria shld be that of Palestine under mandate. He added in summary however much depends on whether mtgs can lead to real step toward peace, in which case concessions might be made, but if Syria continues to say, and mean, it will take no step toward peace then Israel will have no choice but to maintain status quo under armistice agreement.

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to the President

Washington, June 30, 1952.

Subject: Appointment with Israel Foreign Minister, Mr. Moshe Sharett.

The Israel Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Moshe Sharett, and Ambassador Eban have an appointment with you Tuesday, July 1, at 12:15. While the ostensible purpose of the call is one of courtesy prior to his return to Israel, it is possible that the Foreign Minister may take the opportunity to mention Israel's present financial difficulties.

In this connection, Mr. Sharett has already requested United States Government assistance in refunding Israel's short term debt, stated to amount to $124 million. Possibilities suggested by the Foreign Minister included an Export Import Bank loan or use of the United States Treasury Stabilization fund. The need for such aid has not yet been proven, nor has it yet been possible to evaluate its effect upon our policy of impartiality in the Near East.

The difficulties are such that Dr. Raymond F. Mikesell, Professor of Economics at the University of Virginia and consultant to various government agencies, is being sent to Israel, with the cooperation of the Israel Government, in an endeavor to obtain sufficient information about Israel's financial and economic problems to recommend methods and policies for solving them.

The important points made by the Secretary in his conversation with Foreign Minister Sharett and Ambassador Eban were: (1) He would have the matter gone into urgently; (2) Mr. Mikesell is being sent to Israel to try to find an answer to Israel's financial troubles; and (3) we must determine whether Israel's financial policy will be effective or whether Israel will continue policies "which would recreate the present situation."

The Foreign Minister and the Ambassador were informed along the same lines in interviews with Assistant Secretaries Byroade and Thorp and, it is understood, with Secretary Snyder of the Treasury, as well as with Mutual Security and Technical Cooperation Administration officials.

There are attached in the event you wish to review them:

1) A memorandum on the background of Israel's financial problem, including the factors which have precipitated the present crisis. (Tab A) [1]

2) A summary of United States Government aid to Israel. (Tab B)

3) A summary of basic Israel financial statistics. (Tab C)

4) A memorandum of the conversation of June 18 between the Secretary, Foreign Minister Sharett, and Ambassador Eban. (Tab D)[2]

Recommendation

In the event that Mr. Sharett raises the question of further financial assistance for a refunding operation, it is recommended you advise Mr. Sharett

1) that the subject is now under study by Dr. Mikesell, who is on his way to Israel;
2) that any action will depend in part on the nature of his findings; and
3) that Israel should by no means assume that a favorable reply is a foregone conclusion.

David Bruce

[Tab A]

Background:

(a) Israel's leadership has been concentrating all its efforts on "ingathering of exiles" since 1947, regardless of the exiles' capabilities, as individuals or as groups, to contribute to the productivity of the nation.

(b) This immigration policy has been carried on in as yet unfounded hopes that natural resources might eventually be developed to support an expanding population on higher income levels than have been obtainable by the previous population, largely made up of Moslem and Christian Arabs.

(c) This "ingathering" has now substantially ceased, in the face of stubborn facts, but Israel's leadership is committed to the principle of unrestricted immigration.

(d) Israel's finances are complex, involved as they are not only in the government's accounts, but also in Zionist groups largely centered in the United States, whose contributions are often "tied" to objects not necessarily controlled by the government or necessarily of first priority in the light of the country's pressing needs. Israel has been supported, during the last four years, by contributions from abroad which approach $750,000,000.

(e) Israel's actual current international commercial debts are still not clearly identified; efforts are now being made by the Israelis to prepare an accounting which will indicate the nature of the current accounts which Israel proposes to fund with assistance from the United States.

(f) Until more financial information is available, we cannot tell whether the present crisis arises from (1) a fundamental mismanagement of the nation's resources, e.g., an overly expanded investment program, or (2) a disorderly-debt repayment schedule, imposing undue burdens on the state in the immediate future. If (1) is the case, a funding operation would help but more fundamental remedies are needed. If (2) is the situation, fuller information as to the type and amount of required funding is needed. It is conceivable that the total volume of short-term obligations is not excessive, and the immediate problem can be solved by a renewal of some of the more pressing obligations.

(g) We have already arranged for Mr. Raymond Mikesell to examine Israel's entire financial position. This was done in connection with the last request of Israel in April 1952 for use of its MSA grant fund to pay overdue short-term obligations. Mr. Mikesell, who will soon be leaving for Israel pursuant to notes exchanged with the Government of Israel, should be able to report fully before September. In the meantime, it is believed that the Israel Government can renew, pay, or otherwise satisfy its obligations.

(h) The program of grant assistance for 1953, now authorized at about $70,000,000, is estimated to be adequate to finance current Israel imports, when supplemented by commercial exchange resources and the proceeds of contributions from abroad—soon expected to be increased by payments from Germany amounting to $50,000,000 per year, largely in kind.

The Congress, in authorizing this grant, urged "the Administration to end relief operations as soon as possible and concentrate on development with the purpose of helping Israel to become self-supporting." Section 205 of the Mutual Security Act authorizes the $70,000,000 to be utilized "for specific refugee and resettlement projects in Israel."

SUMMARY OF U.S. GOVERNMENT AID TO ISRAEL

I. Loans

Israel has received two 3½% twelve-year loans from the Export-Import Bank as follows:

January 1949	$100,000,000
December 1950	35,000,000
Total	$135,000,000

Approximately half of the proceeds were devoted to agriculture, with the remainder largely for industry, transport and communications. The first semiannual repayment of $2,953,000 principal and interest was made, as required, in March 1952.

II. Grants

The Israel Government requested grants in aid of $150,000,000 for the fiscal year 1952 and $126,000,000 for the fiscal year 1953.

Congress approved the following figures:

	Technical and Economic Aid	Refugee Relief and Resettlement
FY 1951	$96,300	-0-
FY 1952	$14,950,000	$50,000,000
FY 1953 (Pending approval by Appropriations Committee	$2,772,000	$70,228,000

Of the $64,950,000 authorized for fiscal year 1952, $800,000 has been obligated for technical assistance and the balance has been allocated for economic aid and refugee relief with the exception of $650,000 which has been set aside pending a final determination as to over-all program direction costs.

III. Other Aid

Under the exchange of persons program authorized by the Smith-Mundt Act, $155,776 has been allocated through fiscal year 1952 for the exchange with Israel of leader specialists, professors, students and other trainees.

During the period 1950–51, Israel received $23,255,318 in free assistance in the form of surplus agricultural commodities.

Editorial Note

In a note of July 1, the Embassy in Israel informed the Israeli Government that the latter had been declared eligible to receive reimbursable military assistance under section 408(e) of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, provided the necessary assurances required by the Act were forthcoming. In a note of July 23, the Israeli Government gave the necessary assurances, and the agreement entered into force on July 23. For text of the notes exchanged, see 3 UST (pt. 4) 4985.

It has been agreed four govts shld make joint démarche to Israel although exact nature each approach will not necessarily be identical. Text of aide-mémoire you shld use fols statement US position. Brit, Fr and Turk Reps Tel Aviv being instructed as is Austral Rep with whose Govt Brit have consulted.

"1. The US, in concert with Brit, Fr and possibly other govts, shld request the Israel Govt orally and confidentially not to move its FonMin to Jerusalem until the UN has had an opportunity to reconsider the question of Jerusalem with a view to devising a status for Jerusalem that will satisfactorily preserve the interests of the states directly concerned as well as the interests of the internatl community;

"2. The Govt of Israel shld be informed at the same time that the US has no present intention of moving its Emb from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem;

"3. After a suitable delay to determine Israeli reaction Chiefs of Missions in interested capitals might be authorized in their discretion to inform the govts to which they are accredited, orally and confidentially, of the action taken;

"4. No public statement re this action shld be made by the US Govt;

"5. Shld the Israel Govt move its MinFonAff to Jerusalem, the position of the US re any change in the present location of its Emb in Israel will be reexamined after the UN has had an opportunity to reconsider the question of Jerusalem with a view to devising a status that will satisfactorily preserve the interests of the states directly concerned as well as the interests of the internatl community;

"6. In reexamining its position the US will again consult the Brit, Fr, and possibly other govts in an effort to agree on a common policy."

In concert with UK, French and Turk colleagues you shld speak to Acting FonMin at earliest opportunity re Jerusalem along lines fol aide-mémoire which shld be left with him:

> "The Govt of the US has noted with concern the decision and announcement of the Israel Govt on May 4, 1952 to move the FonOff to Jerusalem. The Govt of the US has adhered and continues to adhere to the policy that there shld be a special internatl regime for Jerusalem which will not only provide protection for the holy places but which will be acceptable to Israel and Jordan as well as the world community. Since the question of Jerusalem is still of internatl import, the US Govt believes that the UN shld have an opportunity to reconsider the matter with a view to devising a status for Jerusalem which will satisfactorily preserve the interests of the world community and the states directly concerned. Consequently, the US Govt wld not view favorably the transfer of the FonOff of Israel to Jerusalem.
> "The Govt of the US also wishes to convey that in view of its attitude on the Jerusalem question, it has no present intention of transferring the Ambassador of the US and his staff to Jerusalem."

In addition to above you shld inform the Israel Govt that in view of various negots, i.e. refugee question, Syria–Israel difficulties, etc., this is no time for Israel to be "rocking the boat" by such public announcements as move of FonOff. We cannot believe that conduct foreign relations between Israel and other states wld be in any way enhanced by transferring FonOff to Jerusalem if majority fon missions remain in Tel Aviv. You may also tell FonOff that this approach is being made on confidential basis and that we have no present plan for public statement.

Advise Dept date and hour ur appointment with FonOff for above purpose.

Addressees Arab states shld not discuss above with govt to which accredited until further instructed by Dept.

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY TEL AVIV, July 6, 1952—4 p. m.

25. Deptel 7, July 3. First para recd in garbled form. Pending receipt corrected text Emb submits fol observations:

[1] Repeated for information to Cairo, Jidda, Baghdad, Amman, Beirut, Damascus, Jerusalem, London, Paris, Ankara, and Rome.

Acting FonMin who is PriMin Ben Gurion will not return from Jerusalem until Friday evening, July 11 at earliest. Since it is considered undesirable go Jerusalem purpose deliver note this subj, I propose leave aide-mémoire, after consultation colleagues concerned, with DirGen FonOff Eytan with whom have tentative appointment 11 a. m. Wednesday, July 9.

Emb comment on reftel: Emb notes with gratification Dept decision make démarche on confidential basis and await Israel reaction before authorizing missions inform certain govts. Emb feels however it wld be preferable to authorize all missions to inform govts to which accredited content aide-mémoire orally and confidentially rather than confine such action to any specific group of countries. It is believed important, moreover, that nature of instrs to other missions be made known by Emb to Israel govt. It is our experience that in any case Israelis learn of such action promptly with damage to our reputation of frank dealing. Dept will recall how quickly and with undesirable consequences Israelis learned last year that we had confided expected content May 18 res to Arab League reps.

It is hoped the Dept will agree to slight modification wording of para immediately fol aide-mémoire, beginning "in addition to above" and ending "no present plan for public statement" so that import para retained but certain phraseology believed unnecessarily offensive to Israelis may be avoided. Wld propose modification along fol lines: It is view US Govt that public announcement proposed move of FonOff to Jerusalem cannot have constructive effect on Israel fon relations and on policy interests friendly powers. If, as appears likely, a substantial number of govts represented in Israel regard it as undesirable to move their missions to Jerusalem, considerable difficulty and inconvenience in conduct normal business will result. Present approach being made on confidential basis in hope Israel Govt will find it possible to coop in this matter. [2]

Ambassador Davis reported on July 9 that the aide-mémoire was presented at 11 that morning, and that comment was made with the modification authorized in the Department's telegram 17 of July 8 (telegram 45 from Tel Aviv, July 9, 5 p. m.; 784A.02/7-952).

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY TEL AVIV, July 20, 1952—10 p. m.

105. Comment on Embtels 95 [2] and 100.[3] Emb considers recent events such as fol represent definite setback to attempts improve conditions NE and add up to serious deterioration Israel-Arab rels:

(1) Failure Jordan cabinet approve Touqan–Ramati agreement re Latrun even though agreement within framework armistice and held unquestioned benefits for both parties, including opportunity Arab peasants regain farms. Reason for failure apparently Arab policy that no settlement shld be made with Israel.

(2) Reported public statements Jordan PriMin that he had never negotiated and wld never negotiate such agreements with Israel (apparently advantages to Jordan population and to region not considered relevant).

(3) Meeting Damascus of reps armistice commissions four Arab states, with attendant publicity just prior scheduled Israel-Syrian "high level" meeting and reported announcement that chiefs of staff these Arab states to meet Alexandria in Aug, all of which had provocative effect both sides.

(4) Repeated postponements "high level" meeting between Israel and Syria with publicity reported Syrian demands on Israel contemplated make it more difficult for both sides reach agreement (Embtel 71). [4]

(5) Increase in border incidents after Touqan's resignation, influenced it is understood by inability obtain Jordan Govt support for Latrun and other decisions. Most serious thus far is recent murder five Israel watchmen Negev Copper Mine (reftels and Jerusalem Contel 9 to Dept).[4]

(6) Climax to unfavorable polit trend, statements attributed to Arab League spokesman just published to effect that Israel may try to take over all Jerusalem, that Arabs advised seek solution Palestine problem without further ref to UN, that Arab refugees shld concentrate within Jordan controlled Palestine or in other areas close to Israel border, and that "not single Arab country thinks of concluding peace treaty with Israel."

Despite obvious advantages of liquidating Arab-Israel conflict, we in other west countries have been singularly unsuccessful in persuading any NE country to move toward settlement. Even Israel is giving prior attention to other interests it considers more pressing; and those Arabs who oppose any settlements or even negots with Israel seem to be having it all their own way. In the meantime this conflict stands as the chief obstacle to our major policy interests, to say nothing of the welfare of whole population of NE.

Since sitn cannot be expected remain static Emb fears that unless west powers take more positive line throughout NE area, negative attitudes plus continued frustration any constructive efforts may well lead to developments which will confront powers with necessity and under tripartite declaration.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] July 23, 1952.

Subject: Israel Government's Views Regarding (1) Israel-Arab relations; (2) Suez Canal; (3) Representation of the Middle East in the Security Council; and (4) Jerusalem.

Participants: Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel Embassy
Miss Esther Herlitz, First Secretary, Israel Embassy
Mr. Byroade—NEA
Mr. Dorsey—NE
Mr. Waller—NE

Ambassador Eban called on Mr. Byroade today to discuss a number of questions before proceeding on vacation. Among the questions discussed were the following:

1. Israel-Arab Relations: The Ambassador recalled that informal suggestions had been made by Mr. Byroade regarding direct talks between Israel and Syrian representatives and by Mr. Kopper regarding the use of the Department as a "post office" in exchanging views with Egyptian representatives. The Ambassador said that Israel was ready at any and all times to discuss with any Arab state the possibility of an advance in Israel-Arab relations; that Israel does not insist that discussions with any one Arab state take precedence over discussions with any other; and that Israel would appreciate any action whereby the US would encourage any Arab state to engage in negotiations or discussions with Israel.

Mr. Byroade replied that he appreciated having this information and that no one could ask for anything more. He continued by saying that we consider Col. Shishikli of Syria a good prospect and that he may even be a better prospect than Egypt for pursuing direct talks. He said he had had a frank discussion with Prime Minister Ben-Gurion on the possibilities of talks with Egypt and the Prime Minister felt that he himself might be able to do something with the Egyptians. Mr. Byroade said he hoped that the Prime Minister would find it possible to initiate action with the Egyptians as soon as a stable government is established there.

Ambassador Eban said that the Israel government, although it does not expect an attack on Israel, nevertheless feels disquiet at recent actions and statements on behalf of Arab governments which cannot fail to increase tension. He pointed out that Col. Shishikli, Azzam Pasha, and Mr. Ahmed Shukeiry have made statements threatening Israel's integrity and security. Also meetings of Arab chiefs of staff are publicized in direct relation to action against Israel.

With regard to Israel and Jordan relations, the Ambassador stated that during the period of May 30 to July 10 the Israel–Jordan Mixed Armistice Commission adopted nine resolutions condemning Jordan of twelve breaches of the Armistice Agreement, most of them involving loss of life. In addition, Israel has ten outstanding complaints awaiting consideration by the MAC, including the recent killing of five Israeli watchmen near Elath. The Ambassador felt that the cumulative effect of these statements and actions is very serious and he hoped the US could find it possible to request greater moderation in Arab attitudes toward Israel.

Mr. Byroade replied that he would have this matter gone into and that he wished something could be done to help families along the border who are separated from their lands. The Ambassador said that agreements had been worked out which involved the drawing of new boundary lines and exchanges of lands which would permit families to be reunited and which would in general benefit both Jordan and Israel. However, the Jordan Parliament had declined to ratify the agreement, and so the matter remained. It might be possible, he continued, for the agreements to be returned to the MAC level for minor changes which might possibly be more acceptable to Jordan, but there seemed to be an inability on the part of the Jordanians to complete agreements with Israel even when the agreements are in Jordan's best interests.

2. Suez Canal: Ambassador Eban said that the Israel government will present a note in Washington, London, and Paris on July 28 suggesting concerted action to secure the implementation of the Security Council resolution of September 1, 1951. The Ambassador stated that this is the first instance of a breach of the Israel-Egyptian Armistice being confirmed by the United Nations and remaining uncorrected, with the result that the Egyptian-Israel Armistice Agreement is not operating fully. He pointed out that failure to implement the resolution is costing Israel great sums of money since Israel now must bring oil from Venezuela at approximately twice the cost of oil located nearer and Israel is unable to take advantage of cheap imports from Africa and Asia, including Japan, with which Israel has just established diplomatic relations. Israel feels that the maritime powers have been maneuvered into unwilling submission to the Egyptian regulations.

Mr. Byroade replied that he understood fully the Ambassador's feelings on this subject and he felt sure that the Ambassador was aware of ours. However, he pointed out that there appears to be no present possibility of diverting Egyptian attention from the Anglo-Egyptian problem which, when he was recently in Cairo, occupied so much of the time of the Egyptians that he was hardly able to get beyond it.

3. Representation of the Middle East in the Security Council: Ambassador Eban said that the Middle East traditionally has a member on the Security Council and that Israel believes Iran should be the next Middle East member rather than Lebanon. Israel has promised Iran full support and he hoped that the US would be able to support Iran's candidacy. He believed that Iran is better qualified for regional defense and that Iran, having good relations with all parts of the region, is better qualified to represent the area than Lebanon, which has good relations with only limited parts of the region.

Mr. Byroade replied that the question of our support is under consideration but our policy is not to decide finally until just prior to the meeting which will vote on the matter. He said he would bear in mind the views of the Israel government as expressed by the Ambassador.

4. Jerusalem: The Ambassador inquired whether in view of the aide-mémoire left at the Israel Foreign Office July 9 [1] the United States considers that the General Assembly should attempt to solve the problem of religious interests in Jerusalem at its next session and whether the US believes there is a prospect of a satisfactory solution of this problem acceptable to Israel and Jordan. He also inquired whether the position of the US remains the same as embodied in the resolution sponsored by the US at the GA in 1950. The Ambassador gave as his opinion that there does not appear to be much virtue in throwing the Jerusalem question into the UN unless Jordan, Israel and enough others can agree on a workable solution and enough support can be obtained to assure its passage.

Otherwise, in raising the question the result would be "lots of sound and fury" and nothing more.

Mr. Byroade told the Ambassador that he had not been informed of the latest thinking in the Department on the subject but that he was certain the Department does not have a resolution to introduce. He said that there are UN resolutions on the books and he believed it advisable to devise a workable solution, if possible.

Ambassador Eban said that he understood that US support for the resolution two years ago (not passed) was fully compatible with Israel's having its Foreign Office in Jerusalem. Mr. Byroade said that the announcement of plans to move the Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem was most unfortunate since it gave the Arabs an issue which they picked up with great glee and are making the most of it. The Arabs apparently feel that if the new city of Jerusalem should become Israel's capital it would be only a question of time before the whole city would be included in Jerusalem's orbit. He realized that this approach was largely emotional but it was nevertheless real and had to be taken into consideration. The over-all result is that it is not in our interests for Israel to move its Foreign Office at the present time. Ambassador Eban quickly replied that Israel has no interest in Arab Jerusalem even though some Jewish Holy Places are located there. Israel believes that if a UN supervisor of the Holy Places should be set up it would be in the interest of both Israel and Jordan, since Israel has Holy Places on the Arab side and the Arabs would no doubt find interest in certain Holy Places on the Jewish side.

Ambassador Eban said that if the US should decide to raise the Jerusalem question in the next GA or if the US decides to support some other country that might desire to raise the question, Israel would be glad to cooperate in order to work out a solution. Mr. Byroade thanked the Ambassador for this offer and said it would be kept in mind.

143. For Byroade. Fol agreed position result joint consultations among Amb, Fryer, Mikesell and McDaniel:

It is apparent from data thus far obtained Israel facing serious financial crisis which cld have most severe econ and polit repercussions. Present conditions are result complete disregard elemental financial principles and failure to establish system accounting controls.

We are convinced it wld be no kindness to Israel to accede to pressures to grant Israel request for emergency assistance. It is apparent from findings here that any assistance to Israel must be given only as part of coordinated program. Details of program to prevent recurring financial crises and further deterioration of financial position embodied in Mikesell interim report, including commitments in writing believed necessary from Israel Govt as condition for emergency financial assistance. Without such conditions financial assistance wld merely delay and increase severity inevitable insolvency, and wld defeat within Israel Govt and Amer Jewry working for financial reform. Owing to background of recurrent crises, we believe the financial burden of any solution in which US participates shld be shared by leaders of Amer Jewry and the creditors themselves.

In order assure effective implementation of agreements, it is imperative that TCA mission be supplied with one top-level financial expert, one general economist and a junior economist. Pending arrival these permanent staff additions, urge immediate temporary assignment of top-flight economist experienced in balance payments problems for arrival within ten days.

Fryer proposes return Washington earliest transportation, and Mikesell plans depart with interim report middle next week. Mikesell is having extreme difficulty obtaining essential data from Israelis on short-term debt position and foreign exchange budget. He has been promised basic info necessary for interim report by Saturday [1] and he expects to have interim report completed early next week.

147. For Byroade. In response points Embtel 142, [1] PriMin stated he is convinced necessity avoid increase short-term borrowing and balance budget. He recognizes this means sharp curtailment imports; says they will be limited "if possible" to essential food and other items (such as POL and certain raw materials) needed to increase production. He agreed means avoid periodic crises shld be sought, saying IG progress toward econ independence wld necessarily be slow but he determined work toward that goal. As to immigration question, he indicated that while doors wld remain open to Jewish people in trouble, present low rate immigration affords opportunity to consolidate econ position.

PriMin expressed gratification over presence Mikesell in Israel, saying that quite aside from usefulness his report he had been instrumental in expediting assembly of data urgently needed by IG. He was extremely interested in how soon interim report cld be completed, and was assured Dr. Mikesell wld complete very soon after all essential data had become available.

148. For Byroade. Mytel 147,[1] re interview BG. Altho PriMin cordial in his reception our comment, it is too soon judge whether he and colleagues really fully appreciate gravity econ situation, or whether BG yet realizes full implications his assurances in terms domestic polit disadvantage. Most optimistic assumption is that we shld be prepared for intensified pressure release funds unconditionally to meet emergency. This seemingly borne out by fact that shortly after our mtg Emb was informed Eban had telephoned PriMin US Govt ready make available 20 million next week from grant aid funds provided Mikesell report so recommends.

Because of importance attached to Mikesell visit and report, believe must be joined on question present emergency aid. If pressures result in unconditional release funds, chances of effective coop and reforms will be prejudiced for long time to come.

Recalling our conversation while you were here, I believe time has come to enlist coop Amer, Jewish leaders to forestall harmful effect of pressure tactics on high level which may achieve immed short-run objective to detriment our fon policies as well as best interests Israel itself. Certainly it wld be unfortunate have present crisis assume old familiar pattern of State Dept versus lobby. Emb has knowledge that many thoughtful leaders both here and in US are deeply concerned over deterioration situation and wld be ready cooperate in constructive plan sound reforms. Several have expressed conviction however no such reform feasible or likely without friendly but firm US leadership.

Subject: Israel Views on Egyptian Situation

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Eliashiv Ben-Horin, First Secretary of the Embassy
NE—Mr. Hart
NE—Mr. Stabler

Mr. Eban called on Mr. Hart on July 31 at the former's request. Mr. Eban said that he and his government had been giving considerable thought to recent developments in Egypt and desired to exchange views with the Department. He mentioned that Mr. Sharrett and Ambassador Davis had had a conversation in Tel Aviv on this subject which is of great interest to the Israeli Government.

Mr. Eban said that it was his government's view that it was too early yet to tell in what direction Egypt was headed, but that it seemed useful to exchange views with the Department at this stage in the hope of evolving some ideas. The loss of King Farouk was not necessarily a disturbing factor from Israel's point of view since Israel believed that Farouk had adopted an intransigent attitude toward Israel and that he had in fact instructed his diplomatic representatives not to think in terms of Egyptian-Israel peace. On the other hand, the constant reference to General Naguib as a "hero in the Palestine war" and continued discussion regarding Palestine War arms scandal as the reason for Egypt's defeat were disturbing. According to Israel officers they had no recollection of Naguib and he had not in any way stood out during the Palestine affair. The Israel Government was concerned that continued references to the Palestine "War" might revive aggressive ideology among Egyptian officers.

The Israel Government was also concerned by the growth of military dictatorships in the countries which surround Israel, since with the decline of civilian thinking, military thinking would prevail and in the case of Syria, there was little evidence that the Syrian regime wished to come to terms with Israel. Mr. Eban alluded to the fact that the United States had urged Israel to be more forthcoming in connection with Shishikli and said that while Israel was endeavoring to respond to these suggestions, there was no evidence of a similar attitude on the part of the Syrians. Mr. Eban emphasized that Israel's obsession with its security was being magnified by the accession to power in neighboring countries of military leaders.

Mr. Eban continued that Israel representatives, notably Messrs. Sassoon and Divon, had sent a number of reports from Europe where they had been in touch with certain leading members of the Wafd. These contacts had taken place both before and just after the coup although Israel was now uninformed since the principal figures had returned to Egypt. Israel representatives in Europe had reported their impression that the Wafd leaders were not adverse to settlement between Egypt and Israel on the basis of there being no real disagreement between Egypt and Israel and the desirability of liquidating unnecessary Egyptian commitments. Mr. Eban pointed to the fact that the bulk of Egypt's Army is based on the Gaza strip and serves no useful purpose. Mr. Eban admitted that it was difficult to tell whether the contacts between the Israel representatives and the Wafd leaders were sincere or whether they were simply light oriental platitudes of individuals who had no governmental responsibility. Nevertheless, he thought that these straws in the wind were sufficiently significant not to be disregarded.

Mr. Eban then brought himself to the main point of the discussion. He said that Israel hoped that the new regime in Egypt might offer a way for Egyptian-Israel peace. He hoped that the United States would find it possible to make clear to General Naguib that the United States favored such a peace and that it would be in Egypt's interest as well as in the interest of stability in the Middle East for peace to be concluded. Mr. Eban remarked that Ambassador Caffery enjoys a position of highest respect and confidence in Egypt and that he has an extraordinary influence on Egyptians of all political parties. Mr. Eban believed that with this position Ambassador Caffery is in an excellent position to counsel the new regime with respect to peace with Israel. He recognized that there were certain difficulties involved in this. At the same time he made it very clear that his government did not accept as valid any contention that the Anglo-Egyptian problem should necessarily have priority over this other important issue of achieving peace between Egypt and Israel. Mr. Eban also made clear that the note of July 28 on the Suez Canal restrictions was not related to recent developments and that the decision to present the note to the US, UK and France had been made several weeks ago. He said that should the Suez Canal restrictions question be settled, this in itself would only mean that the armistice agreement between Israel and Egypt would function as it should. It did not necessarily mean that peace had been achieved and it was the broader aspect of this question that Israel was interested in at this time.

The Department's representatives agreed that it was too early yet to tell what the ultimate aims of the new movement in Egypt would be. There were certain encouraging signs but at the same time there was a sufficient number of question marks to leave one in doubt. The Department's representatives noted that to date neither Naguib nor Ali Maher had made any public references to the Israel question and as a matter of fact their attitude on external questions was restrained. It was pointed out that Israel's concern regarding reference to Naguib as a hero in the Palestine War should not color their attitude since irrespective of how the Israelis felt about the Palestine conflict, the Egyptians viewed it in a somewhat different light. With regard to a military dictatorship, the Department's representatives pointed out the US did not approve of the violent overthrow of legally constituted governments and that we would give no indication that we approved this type of activity as a national policy. At the same time it must be admitted that leadership is required in some of these Near Eastern states and that if stability could be restored to the Egyptian Government and graft and corruption eliminated this would be all for the good. The Department did not know how far the military would go with respect to reinstituting regular processes of government but it had been encouraged by the orderly way in which this whole coup had developed.

The Department's representatives emphasized that the US Government continued to hope that a way could be found to settle the Arab-Israel question and that as an issue affecting the stability in the Middle East, the Israel question was high on the list. We desired to see a settlement reached between Egypt and Israel and would use any appropriate opening to further this end; but we could not tell at this moment whether an opportunity would be forthcoming at Cairo. While the Anglo-Egyptian problem might not have priority over the Israel question, it must be said that the Egyptians appeared to be more anxious to see a solution to the former than to the latter. The Department's representatives said that it might be difficult for the US alone to approach the new Egyptian regime regarding a settlement with Israel when and if the time seemed appropriate to do so. The fact that the US was so closely associated in the Arab eyes on the side of Israel made us suspect in dealing with questions affecting Israel. As a purely informal proposition which had not been discussed with anyone else in the Department, Mr. Stabler said that there might be some utility, if and when the time were appropriate, in an informal démarche to the Egyptian Government by the signatories of the tripartite declaration. This démarche could be made within the framework of the concern of these three powers for the security and stability of the Near East. It was emphasized that this was purely a personal suggestion and had no status. Mr. Eban said he thought the idea might have merit but he wondered whether the UK would be willing to involve itself in this question when it was already a party to another dispute. The Department's representatives emphasized that the situation would have to become a great deal more clear before thought could be given to the matter raised by Mr. Eban but that he could be assured that the US Government still had as its policy peace between the Arab States and Israel. It was agreed that we would keep in touch with the Israel Government concerning this question.

During the course of the conversation the Department's representatives mentioned that some concern had been felt by Egyptian military authorities in Gaza over Israel military maneuvers in that area. Mr. Eban said that his government had issued a public statement to the effect that Israel fully respected the Egypt–Israel Armistice agreement which still governed relationship between those two countries. It was the hope of the Government that Egypt would issue a similar statement.

191. Embtel 105. [2] In past Israel's apathy toward vital matter of exerting itself to utmost to improve relations with Arab neighbors has frequently been subject comment as in Embtel 627, Dec 27. [3] There is now however some evidence improvement in this respect at high level, as for example Israel's willingness participate mtg with Syrian rep (last para Embtel 1221 May 20). Within past few days FonMin reaffirmed Israel's readiness meet Syrians on any level. In view time lag, unfortunate publicity and developments reported Damascus desp 16, July 7, [4] Emb feels chances now slight for any real progress from such mtg, but nevertheless continues encourage Israel attendance.

Most recent example Sharett's heightened interest in possibilities improving Arab-Israel relations is his reaction recent happenings Egypt. Altho immed response Israel press was usual invidious comparison instability Arab govts with stability Israel, FonMin's chief interest was to take advantage any opportunity for rapprochement with new Egypt regime. He speculated that with abdication one important obstacle to peace, viz. wounded pride of Farouk, has been removed, and that influence some "non-Egyptian" elements in palace antagonistic to peace, as well as Arab League may have been weakened.

FonMin referred to press statement issued by FonMin which was brief and to effect that GOI considered recent events in Egypt as internal matter, and altho wld remain watchful, GOI determined maintain stability armistice lines, adhere Israel–Egypt armistice terms and avoid any action which might be interpreted as interference Egypt affairs. Sharett explained above release was intended to have conciliatory tone and counteract any statements by "hot heads" in Israel. (Had ref to former extremists now members Herut party.) He took as possible hopeful sign what he termed the very restrained tone of Naguib's refs to Israel thus far.

Sharett indicated Israel Govt has indirect means contact certain Egypt politicians including some in Wafd, who he felt may be thinking of possible advantages liquidate quarrel with Israel, and hence might be disposed regard matter as bilateral polit question rather than Arab League affair. Shiloah, who was present at mtg, added that any settlement with Egypt cld mean material econ advantage both countries since an important part of Israel's hard currency procurement cld be transferred to Egypt.

229. Dept fully approves emphatic position you took with Tamer and Tweini re US support projected coup as well as position given last para Legtel 192 July 30. Obviously US cannot in any way abet such plans, despite repugnant practices Khouri regime and need for breath of fresh polit air in Leb. Moreover, highly doubtful that US objectives and Leb welfare cld profit by change govt thru violence, particularly in view deep ideological and personal cleavages among Leb conspirators. Ref Depagm A–5 July 8.[1]

Dept however believes these serious events present opportunity impress Pres again with urgent need for reform. In your discretion therefore you may wish approach Pres Khouri again, possibly in coordination with Brit and Fr Mins, and have candid, forceful talk with him along fol lines:

1. Example events in Egypt is not lost to discontented elements Leb populace. Whereas Pres may now have firm control of Leb security forces and opposition is divided, further procrastination on reform can only alienate moderates, bring opposition together and convince people that desperate measures are sole course available for change. Leb Commies await this development.
2. Pres is well aware that periodic, short-lived concessions to responsible opposition no longer delude anyone. What is needed now is implementation of genuine, broad-based reform within polit and soc fields, not simply a few expedients which leave substance unchanged and then vanish when voices have quieted.
3. While making these reps US is in no sense trying to intervene in Leb internal affairs. This is counsel from friend whose only interest is to see Leb attain natl heritage in orderly progressive manner which cld set ideal for region.

230. Embtel 45.[1] FonMin told me late Friday he would reply orally to Emb aide-mémoire re proposed FonOff move to Jerusalem since IG is not planning make reply in writing. He alluded to fact USG only one to make written representation and commented on note as follows: He made point intention move Ministry FonAff did not represent new decision, and covered in some detail steps that had been taken to concentrate Knesset and various Ministries in Jerusalem. He doubted whether there would be any serious advantage in bringing up question again before UN, and did not see how our opposition to move followed logically our proposition that UN be afforded further opportunity act on question. As to Arabs, he expressed opinion their opposition foregone conclusion whenever Israel should act in matter.

It was apparent from his discourse that IG has no intention of receding from position taken; he stated in fact Ministry had been under pressure to move for practical reasons, and if it came to choosing between having to be separated indefinitely from remainder of IG or from missions of fon govts, he feels latter would have to be choice. He concluded by saying he expected Ministry to move when quarters for offices and staff are ready, which should be about May, 1953.

Emb comments: The above reaction is not surprising since it is typical of highly subjective attitude encountered whenever leaders feel they have been crossed in matters affecting their polit position at home or abroad. FonMin had already been informed of contests Depcirtel 67[1] and I made no attempt discuss publicity further or review details of question. I saw no reason nevertheless to leave any impression of tacit agreement on my part, and therefore expressed view that Israel Govt's announcement had affected all govts represented here, many of which including US were on record as supporting UN res in principle, and that important change in policy on part of such countries wld be necessary before there cld be any consideration of moving missions. I concluded by saying it was my personal opinion that unilateral action taken by Israel in this case had been unfortunate.

AE/315 WASHINGTON, August 12, 1952.

The Ambassador of Israel presents his compliments to the Honorable the Secretary of State and has the honor to refer to the Notes exchanged between the two governments on April 30 [2] and May 1, 1952 [3] concerning the utilisation by Israel of funds available under the United States Mutual Security Act of 1951.

2. In paragraph 4 of his Note of April 30, 1952 the Secretary of State announced his decision to despatch a representative to Israel for the purpose of surveying the current financial and economic problems of the country. In reply, the Ambassador of Israel conveyed his Government's willingness to receive such a representative and to provide the fullest available information on its foreign exchange income and expenditures, its internal budgets and fiscal procedures. The Government of Israel further agreed to make such information available for the duration of United States economic assistance to Israel.

3. During the month of July 1952, Dr. Mikesell, the representative of the United States appointed pursuant to the Secretary of State's Note of April 30, 1952, carried out a rapid survey in Israel of the country's short-term debt position on the basis of information made available by the Government of Israel. The Government of Israel drew attention to urgent obligations which would arise for payment from the first week of August 1952 onward. It also conveyed its view that even after fulfillment of these immediate obligations, periodic emergencies would inevitably occur unless Israel was assisted to refinance the major portion of its short-term dollar indebtedness, amounting to approximately $115,000,000 for the twelve months' period beginning July 1, 1952.

4. In the course of examining its financial problems in recent months, both before and during Dr. Mikesell's mission, the Government of Israel became aware of the need to institute substantial revisions in its economic and fiscal policies, as well as in some of its administrative procedures. Early in 1952, the Prime Minister announced a series of economic reforms, calculated to combat inflation and to restore financial equilibrium. This policy, which involved an intensification of austerity programs and a stricter control of all foreign currency expenditures, has borne marked results; yet it cannot, in the nature of things, have yielded its full effect within so brief a time. At this stage, the Government of Israel has decided to adopt further detailed measures to promote financial recovery and to avoid recurring threats to its financial structure. In accordance with paragraph 8 of his Note of May 1, 1952, the Ambassador of Israel, on instruction from his Government, herewith conveys to the Government of the United States the following information on the new steps which will be taken with this aim in view.

5. The Government of Israel is now in the course of preparing a foreign exchange budget for the twelve months' period beginning July 1, 1952. Every effort will be made to have this budget ready by September 15, 1952. The foreign exchange budget will constitute a working basis for Israel's foreign currency operations throughout the year, and will accordingly be drawn up along the following lines:

(a) No part of Israel's revenues either for current or development purposes during the twelve months beginning July 1952 shall be derived from a net increase in short- and intermediate indebtedness. On the contrary, it will be Government policy to attain the maximum net reduction of outstanding short-term debts by repaying such amount of short-term debts as may be feasible and refunding as much as possible into long-term obligations.

(b) Non-transferable or tied income items will be matched against appropriate specific items of expenditure. Cash expenditures and debt service will be off-set only against cash income.

(c) Due consideration will be given to all outstanding obligations.

Within the twelve months' period, the principles described in (a) and (b) will be modified only when there are seasonal fluctuations in income and expenditure. It will be the policy of the Government of Israel to regulate its expenditures within the limits of this foreign exchange budget.

6. Since the assistance extended by the United States under the Mutual Security Act of 1951 and 1952 constitutes an important element in Israel's foreign exchange income, the Government of Israel intends to make its detailed foreign exchange budget available to the representatives of the United States Mission in Israel. In order to facilitate effective co-operation in the use of such assistance between the Government of Israel and the representatives of the United States Mission in Israel, the Government of Israel intends to follow the procedure of regular consultations with that mission which would enable stock to be taken periodically of Israel's financial position.

7. The Ministry of Finance will keep records showing all incomes, expenditures, commitments, new credits or borrowings, imports and services carried out or authorized, external and internal cash positions and cash balances in all currencies. Figures for each month will be analysed in relation to all sections of the Israel budget, with special reference to the foreign exchange components thereof.

8. The Government of Israel intends to establish concurrently with the preparation of the foreign exchange budget, a special Governmental Organ endowed with full authority to make all allocations of foreign currency, including the granting of permission to make foreign exchange commitments against foreign exchange income. The Government is resolved to take all measures to ensure that all foreign exchange committments will be kept strictly within the limits of its foreign exchange income. As soon as possible, a system of accounting will be instituted under this Organ which will reveal the current and prospective foreign exchange position of the country weekly or monthly according to the nature of the item.

9. It is the intention of the Government of Israel to centralize all import programming including the screening as to order of priority of requirements submitted by various ministries.

10. The Government of Israel adheres to the view presented by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and the Ambassador of Israel to the Secretary of State on June 19, 1952, that any fundamental stabilization of its financial position will be impossible, unless longer periods of maturity can be obtained for its indebtedness, the impact of which is especially heavy for the twelve months' period beginning July 1952. The Government of Israel, for its part, will make every effort to negotiate arrangements with its creditors whereby short-term debts might be extended and spread over a longer period of years, provided that Israel's credit standing with pertinent creditors would not thereby be impaired to the extent of making it impossible for the State to supply the population with the most basic necessities. Meanwhile, the Government of Israel will not divert current income to net debt retirement at a rate which will make it impossible for Israel to cover her essential import needs.

11. The Government of Israel fully recognizes that the reforms necessary to achieve a balanced foreign exchange budget will require increased sacrifices on the part of its people and it is prepared to make such sacrifices. The Government is confident that the new measures which it has decided to adopt, and especially those enumerated above, will help the country to advance, through arduous efforts and heavy sacrifices, toward a balanced economy in a manner worthy of the democratic principles and social ideals which Israel strives to exemplify, and conducive to the continuation of internal stability which it has so far been able to maintain, in a troubled and unstable area. While the difficulties which these measures are designed to overcome are admittedly acute, they do not constitute the sole or main element of Israel's economic situation. These difficulties, in part, arise from a process of dynamic growth, at a rate scarcely precedented in the history of nations. In sharing a frank discussion of these difficulties with the Government of the United States, Israel is moved by a sense of profound appreciation of the assistance which the Government and people of the United States are rendering to it in the critical and formative period of its early development.[4]

SECRET BEIRUT, August 19, 1952—5 p. m.

320. In long conversation today with Pres El Khoury, I gave him verbally rather close translation in French of ideas expressed Deptel 229, August 6. I began by saying this conversation was continuation of previous friendly and personal exchanges, and stressed we have no intention interfere in Leb affairs. Pres accepted this wholeheartedly and listened intently. When I finished, he thanked me and said he has not been idle in matter of reform. He then took out dossier and said he wld reveal to me broad outlines his program. He prefaced his statement by saying he refused to be pushed into unconstitutional measures and that his program is therefore strictly within legal limits. He proposes ask Chamber delegate to govt for six months' power to issue decree laws along lines fol broad program:

(a) Polit and admin:

(1) Revision of municipal election law;
(2) Revision general election laws, including changes of circumscriptions;
(3) Dismissal of unnecessary and inefficient govt employees;
(4) Certain reforms in judiciary;
(5) Reforms in security forces;
(6) Decentralization of govt;
(7) Other general admin reforms.

(b) Economic and social:

(1) Naming of Supreme Econ Council with own budget and wide autonomy, composed of capable persons inside and outside govt to develop econ program;
(2) A system of free medical attention;
(3) Study of program of development of electricity and water supply;
(4) Control of imports to avoid scandals;
(5) Govt to prepare and announce budget at once.

Pres read rapidly in French and I am sorry I cld not take notes and cld not possibly remember all points involved. When he had finished I said I thought in broad lines he had many good ideas, but I noticed no mention was made of taxation or land reform. To this he replied that these are not proper subjects for decree laws. I said that unfortunately many people believe that Leb is badly in need of better tax distribution and of land reform so that there might be a letdown when these things are not mentioned. To get around this point he made written notes to insert in instr to the Superior Econ Council a directive to study and come up with recommendations on these points.

Pres then said I had come precisely at moment when he was trying to decide on one of two courses of action:

(1) To submit this program to Solh govt tomorrow and take chances on its becoming confused with polit situation and bogged down, or
(2) To wait formation new govt and take chances involved in delay. He asked my advice and I said there was danger on both sides, but that I felt essential thing is immed action, especially since program will be continuing one and can be carried on by new govt.

As to govt, he said, Solh govt cannot last long and will have to face an extraordinary session to Chamber about Sept 1. He envisages govt headed by Saleam and including capable figures inside and outside govt. He is inclined not to include opposition since he is much hurt by their vicious and personal attacks on him at last Sunday's mtg. He is sending his bad boy son, Khalil, out of the country for an extended trip about Sept 1 which shld have a good effect. Pres was touched by our encouragement at a time when he much needs it. I don't know whether he will carry through, but I am convinced this is the way to tackle the problem, i.e. to encourage legally constituted govts to carry out broad social and econ reforms, thus mtg legitimate desires of the masses of the people for better govt and for recognition of their basic rights. I sometimes worry for fear we are repeating the mistakes of history in supporting corrupt regimes and the status quo. This is always a risk but it can be overcome by letting it be known constantly and positively where we stand and for what we stand. It requires a capable tightrope walker these days to maintain the proper balance, on the one hand of supporting legally-constituted govts, and on the other of not discouraging progressive forces.

Before speaking to Pres, I consulted my Brit colleague who showed me long despatch to FonOff which agrees very much with our own ideas. Brit Min has spoken to Pres and PriMin of need for early reform. I did not consult French colleague since, frankly I don't know quite where we stand with French. It is common rumor that they undercut us. It seems evident, too, that their objectives and ours are not the same. Also, there is evidence that the govt is annoyed with French actions here under the new Minister. Lest it be thought there is friction, I hasten to say that French-Amer surface relations here are excellent.

If the response is affirmative, the Govt of Israel would suggest that the mtg take place somewhere in Europe, leaving choice of place to the Egypt Govt. The Govt of Israel is convinced that this initiative is in the common interest of both countries, of the region as a whole and of the peace of the world."

Emb comment: Sharett was informed that above info was of definite interest and its confidential character would be duly safeguarded; that statements of PriMin and himself as well as public reaction thereto had been followed with great interest; that IG pronouncements on desirability improve Arab-Israel relations are constructive and that advocacy peace and stability in ME is worthwhile, whatever might be outcome of present initiative.

He readily agreed that any ill-advised official statements or even press speculation might have unfortunate effect and should be avoided.

He added he wished to consult us re one aspect of matter which was embarrassing IG domestically and abroad, via statements made successively by Ali Maher and Naguib to effect no approach had been made by Israel following PriMin's statement before Knesset (Embtel 286). [3] He understands their reasons no doubt dictated by local and Arab polit considerations, but says statements give rise to local questioning and tendency abroad to believe Israel not sincerely seeking peace with neighbors.

As to first point, he was inclined to agree that key newspaper publishers here could be made to see point that matter of such delicacy could not be negotiated in public press and no good would come from putting govt on spot by asking it to state publicly whether steps taken. As to international aspect of question, he thought no action need to be taken immed and if Arabs should accuse Israel of insincerity, defense of IG position should not take form of taking issue with statements of Egypt's officials. He thought some other means of confirming Israel's genuine willingness to reach settlements with neighbors would have to be found, but in meantime he hoped something would come of approach to Egypt's reported Embtel 304. [4]

Apparently FonMin's intervention with press has had some effect since comment and speculation have lessened. If Egypt expresses interest in reaching accord with Israel, this may prompt other Arabs later to follow her lead; but if stand is taken against settlement, other states will no doubt propose intensified campaign to harm Israel in her present financial crisis.

1019. Chancellor sent word urgently this morning to tell us that Arab pressure against Israeli settlement is greatly increasing and is causing him serious difficulties here. Arab League States, headed apparently by Syria, are threatening to boycott FedRep, charging that Israel is still at war with them and deliveries and payments to Israel will increase latter's milit potential and thus constitute an unneutral act. Chief of Syrian polit Dept, who has been campaigning actively in Bonn against settlement, had addressed very sharp protest to Chancellor, adding that Arab League States are meeting in Cairo Sept 10 when decision to boycott FedRep will undoubtedly be taken.

This pressure is having its effect on some circles here, particularly those headed by Schaeffer who has long been opposed to settlement. Chancellor is nevertheless resolved to go ahead with it and the matter comes before Cabinet for decision Monday. Chancellor believes he can secure approval despite opposition but says his hand will be greatly strengthened if he could inform opposition that US is willing to use its good offices to try to abate Arab pressure and to endeavor to persuade at least some of Arab States to abandon their threats. He points out that settlement does not constitute direct subsidy to Israel but involves only reparation for Jewish property seized by Nazis and further that deliveries contain only 17-20 percent of hard goods. Chancellor recognizes difficulties which his request may create for US but has appealed urgently for assistance.

Any msg which may be sent us for him to use on Mon morning wld be most helpful. Pls instruct urgently.

Paragraph 3 of the telegram concerned the German reparation question, to which the Chargé referred, requesting U.S. assistance in urging the Israelis to turn the funds over to the Arab refugees. > "The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the Ambassador of Israel and has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of His Excellency's note AE/184 of July 28, 1952 setting forth the views of the Government of Israel with respect to the implementation of the Security Council Resolution of September 1, 1951 calling upon Egypt 'to terminate restrictions on the passage of international commercial shipping and goods through the Suez Canal wherever bound, and to cease all interferences with such shipping'.
> "The United States Government has given careful consideration to the views of the Government of Israel and fully appreciates the difficult situation in which Israel finds itself as a result of the Egyptian restrictions. The United States Government desires to reiterate its firm belief in the principle that it is incumbent upon all members of the United Nations to respect and to comply with resolutions adopted by the United Nations.

> "At the same time, the United States Government, which fully supports the principle of the free and unimpeded use of the Suez Canal as an international waterway, believes that the present moment is not opportune to raise with the Egyptian Government its failure to comply with the September 1, 1951 Security Council Resolution. The Israeli Government will no doubt share the view of the United States Government that since the objective to be sought is the lifting of the restrictions, it would be desirable to approach Egypt on this question at such time as the prospects are more favorable to the achievement of the objective.

Subject: Israeli Efforts To Establish Peace Conversations With Egypt.

Apparently as one of his last acts as Prime Minister of Egypt or, as the final paragraph of his letter would appear to intimate, as an ex post facto clearing of his Foreign Office affairs, the recent Prime Minister, Aly Maher, has today sent me a note reporting the secret contacts established in Paris by the Israeli Legation seeking to ascertain the Egyptian position on possible peace negotiations with Israel.

Aly Maher enclosed the French text of telegrams from the Egyptian Embassy in Paris dated August 23 and September 3. Translations of these telegrams form enclosures 2 and 3 of this despatch, the first enclosure being a copy of Aly Maher's letter to me. [2]

Two salient points emerge from this correspondence: One, the statement of the former Prime Minister that,

> "Egypt feels it necessary, before starting any pourparlers, to know the present attitude of Israel towards the implementation of the resolutions of the United Nations."

[1] In telegram 571 from Cairo, Sept. 5, Ambassador Caffery stated (in reiteration of his telegram 561, also Sept. 5, not printed) that the energies and attention of the leaders of Egypt's military coup were concentrated on domestic reform to the exclusion of international issues. Furthermore, although Prime Minister Ali Maher had indicated to him that peace with Israel was third on his list of priority items, Caffery was not sanguine as to the prospect of an affirmative Egyptian response to Israel. (774.00/9-552) and two, the rather sinister comment of the Israeli First Secretary in Paris that,

> "His Government would be obliged in the case of no reply to announce that it had already taken this initiative in view of the interest to which the question of peace with Israel gives rise in international public opinion, especially American and English."

This latter warning of publicity will serve to reaffirm the deep-seated Egyptian suspicion of the bona fides of Israeli motives in seeking peace with this country. Certainly nothing could be more calculated to defeat the purpose of the Israeli Prime Minister, if indeed Mr. Ben Gurion desires peace with Egypt, than once more to give publicity to an abortive démarche. Furthermore, as my reference telegram indicates, the energies and attention of the Egyptian Government and people are now centered wholly upon questions of domestic reform and for this reason alone the time is inopportune to press for settlement of Egypt's outstanding difficulties with Israel.

CONFIDENTIAL BEIRUT, September 12, 1952—3 p. m.

511. Totec. From Tannous. In view of mounting polit tension in Leb, current cabinet crisis and increasing difficulties we have been encountering in our Point IV program operations I deem it necessary to supply Dept with fol summary of situation:

(1) Indications of purposeful negative stand by GOL toward our program include: (a) delaying tactics by Council of Mins in signing present agreements, (b) refusal by Council of Mins consider distribution of 1953 program funds despite repeated attempts and requests by US, (c) occasional intimation by responsible officials that Point IV program has been imposed by US rather than sought by Leb, (d) GOL requiring US assume responsibility for any possible damage resulting from olive spraying operations, (e) lack of courtesy accorded our staff in clearing recent livestock shipment through customs, (f) persistent obstructionism by customs and other responsible officials in clearing official and personal shipments, culminating in present demand all TCS imports pay municipal and excise taxes, 86 shipments dating back to Feb still in customs, seriously delaying some programs.

(2) We see two major reasons for this attitude and these difficulties. First, disappointment of GOL in small magnitude of aid program. Their hopes of large-scale econ aid were not realized and their disappointment was increased by smaller technical aid program for 1953. Second, and possibly more basic is realization by certain elements within present ruling regime and vested interests that they cannot twist Point IV operations and exploit them for their polit and economic benefit. Furthermore, some pro-French elements have been active in obstructing program.

(3) Our conclusion is that the program will continue to be obstructed and frustrated as long as present situation persists. There is hope now that new and strong cabinet will be set up with intention of clearing up situation and getting things done. In that event we expect our program to move ahead fast. Min Minor had lengthy and frank interview with Leb Pres on Point IV difficulties with GOL with encouraging results (Embtel 512 Sept 12).[1] Meantime, we plan no policy discussions with present "caretaker" govt. When new govt takes over, we plan discuss whole situation along lines this tel with PriMin making clear we expect initiative for development of program from them or to come from his govt. We can and will not be put in position of "imposing" aid.

CONFIDENTIAL BEIRUT, September 12, 1952—3 p. m.

512. I am in full agreement with Totec tel 511 Sept 12. While our program meets with considerable response on part of people who understand it and officials at technical level, I feel Leb Govt has failed to give us support necessary for success. Administratively, they continue to punish our personnel who have been waiting months for their effects to be cleared from customs. None of us feels that we have the atmosphere necessary for successful operation. Paradoxically, problem is not that Lebs dislike Point Four. It is rather that they are trying to browbeat us into large Point Four aid and especially econ assistance.

Because of my concern with this matter, I took it up yesterday with Pres El-Khoury in a long and cordial conversation. I outlined our concern at this turn of events and said that it is hardly in the interest of Leb Govt to discourage us in our efforts to assist this country. I declared that it was only fair to let him know my views and further that I intended to express these opinions in Washington. I spoke of the disillusionment of TCA personnel with the unfair treatment they are getting from the hundreds of customs authorities.

Pres El-Khoury grasped matter quickly and assured me in warmest terms that this will receive improvement. He added that frankly there has been no govt in Leb for considerable time. He stated that his personal philosophy is that Leb shld help herself and then receive gratefully any aid US is able and willing to give. He said that new govt, possibly headed by Saeb Salaam, wld shortly be sworn in and that one of its primary directives will be to have the closest kind of cooperation with Point Four. He urged me to hold off any definite recommendation until he has chance to prove this cooperation. As to our customs difficulties, he promised to fill in Moubarak today and direct him that these matters be put straight. I asked him, when talking to Moubarak, to say that we strongly admire his courage and honesty and to convince him that a change of attitude is in the interest of his own country. In any event, I said that the situation wld have to be corrected.

Our conversation was unusually cordial. He is most friendly and I know he plans to try to carry out what he promised. However, matter is serious one and we shld carefully consider our position. I do not believe Point Four can possibly succeed working under present handicap. I recommend that we give new Leb Govt every encouragement and opportunity to work closely with us. We shld play down any idea that we can be bribed or browbeaten into large-scale econ aid. On this basis I am hopeful that we can soon go forward confidently.

The Chargé in Lebanon (Lobenstine) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY BEIRUT, September 19, 1952—12 a. m.

580. Various Leb polit reps are asking our view as to successor for Pres Khouri. They note that Brit are more or less openly backing Camille Chamoun and that French are believed to be supporting Hamid Frangie. Whether we will it or not, all Lebs assume we, like they, must have a candidate and must be working for his election.

We believe that all candidates thus far seriously considered—Chamoun, Frangie, Gen Cyehab, Alfred Naccache, Dr. Yousef Hitti, Jawad Boulos, Dr. Charles Malik, etc—are men of high calibre and without exception friendly to America. Since none of those is an outstanding favorite for election and since our only personal preference Dr. Malik is receiving scarcely any attention we believe we shld officially and unofficially show no favoritism lest by doing so we alienate affections of Pres eventually elected.

Subject Depts and Min Minor's approval, therefore we are keeping out of picture as much as possible. All Amer members of staff have been instructed not to comment on situation in public. When asked for official or unofficial statement our views, we stick to principles not to personalities, indicating views: (1) day of imperialism is over; we respect Lebanon's independence and her right select Pres in accordance her own constitutional processes; (2) we hope for a Pres who has universal respect entire citizenry, who will decidedly steer Lebanon on course of progress its people so obviously desire; and (3) we have not and will not support any individual and do not believe any foreign power is or shld be giving active support to any candidate. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs (Waller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 22, 1952.

Subject: Visit by Ambassador Eban regarding: (1) The Israel-German Reparations Agreement; (2) Israel-Arab Relations.

Participants: The Secretary
Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel Embassy
Minister David Goitein, Israel Embassy
Mr. Waller—NE

The Israel Ambassador at his own request called on the Secretary at 11:30 this morning. He was accompanied by Minister David Goitein. The subjects discussed fall within the following general headings:

1. The Israel-German Reparations Agreement
2. Israel-Arab Relations

With regard to the Israel-German Reparations Agreement, the Ambassador said he was under instructions from his government to express to the Secretary appreciation for the sympathetic assistance given by the Secretary and his staff in bringing about the agreement which was recently signed at Luxembourg. He said that his government is aware that without this assistance the agreement would not have been possible. The Secretary replied that he felt he had been able to be helpful and he was glad the negotiations were successful. He praised Chancellor Adenauer for his receptiveness and for his tenacity in pursuing the matter to its conclusion.

The Ambassador said that the next step would be to obtain ratification of the agreement by the German Bundestag which he understood would be meeting October. So far as Israel is concerned the agreement will become effective as soon as ratified by the Bundestag because the Israel government does not require further legislative authorization. He hoped that the Secretary might find an opportunity to encourage Chancellor Adenauer to obtain a quick ratification of agreement. The Secretary replied that he felt that the sooner the agreement was submitted to the Bundestag the better it would be and he felt there was no reason to doubt that it would be ratified. The pressure from the Arab States under the threat of an economic boycott of German goods would not in his opinion deter the German government from proceeding with the ratification arrangements. The Secretary said that now that the Israel-German Agreement had been reached he hoped Israel would take up the matter of compensation to the Arabs for their property in Israel. Ambassador Eban then related the view of the government of Israel that this question has three phases; namely, (1) to assess the basis for compensation; (2) to determine the size of the debt; and (3) to pay the debt. The latter, in the opinion of the Ambassador, would be the most difficult. Israel is quite willing to move forward on this problem even though the means of payment cannot now be foreseen.

With regard to Arab-Israel relations, Ambassador Eban informed the Secretary of Israel's analysis of the present regime in Egypt, describing it as a great improvement over the former government. The Ambassador said that Israel had made an approach to the Egyptian government but that a reply had not been received. (Note: Ambassador Eban was apparently uninformed regarding the Egyptian reply—see Tel Aviv's telegram no. 451, dated September 17.) [1] Nevertheless, the absence of a negative reply and the absence of statements by responsible Egyptian officials denouncing Israel is a good sign. The Secretary replied that he was mildly optimistic at the turn of events in Egypt and he felt that the atmosphere towards Israel was much better than it has been heretofore.

The Ambassador then turned to Syria and a discussion of Arab items on the agenda of the UN General Assembly. He expressed regret that the Arab States have taken no step toward direct negotiations for the settlement of outstanding problems with Israel, and pointed out the inconsistency of this lack of effort and the placement of items on the agenda of the UN General Assembly which call for a discussion of the problem by the General Assembly. The Secretary replied that there really was nothing to say on this subject as the Ambassador's logic was evident. One could only wait to see what use might be made of it. He hoped that the discussions would take place without rancor and that moderation would be shown by both sides.

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 22, 1952.

Subject: Visit of Ambassador Eban regarding: (1) Arab Israel Relations; (2) Defense Problems and Military Aid.

Participants: Mr. Byroade—NEA
Ambassador Eban, Israel Embassy
Minister David Goitein, Israel Embassy
Mr. Waller—NE

Ambassador Eban called at his own request on Assistant Secretary Byroade at 10:30 this morning. He was accompanied by Minister Goitein. The subjects discussed were:

1. Arab Israel Relations
2. Defense Problems and Military Aid

With regard to the first subject, Ambassador Eban started with Egypt. He said that General Naguib apparently does not wish to do anything regarding Israel that would prevent him from taking a more favorable course later on and that his failure to reply to the Israeli peace offer created a "zone of silence" which must be penetrated before any evidence of progress, or the lack of it, can be seen. (Note: The Ambassador was apparently not aware that Egypt had replied to the Israel offer, as reported in telegram no. 451, September 17, from Tel Aviv.) [1] He continued by saying that his government has the impression that US influence in Egypt is growing and will continue to grow; whereas the UK position will probably not get any better, and may worsen. He said that the U.S. may therefore have an opportunity to use its influence in bringing about a settlement between Egypt and Israel.

Mr. Byroade replied that we have not pressed Egypt in this regard because the Egyptians have a lot of housecleaning to do before they can think much of foreign policies; that Egypt might, however, move fast in cleaning house and in reaching an understanding with Israel. He expressed the belief that we are in a good position with the Egyptians to be helpful, and he assured the Ambassador that we would do what we could when the time was opportune.

Turning to Syria, the Ambassador said that Israel's relationship with Syria is the most disappointing element on the horizon for Israel. There has been no improvement in relations with Syria since Israel was founded and Israel feels there is no disposition on the part of the Syrians to ease the situation.

The Ambassador continued by saying that the paramount problem in the Middle East was the interstate relationships between Israel and the Arab States. The UN has advised the parties to endeavor to settle their differences by direct negotiations. The Arabs have made no effort to settle problems by this means and yet they assume an attitude of surprise at the end of the year when no progress has been made and the UN is ready for another session.

Mr. Byroade asked whether the intensification of Arab feeling was not precipitated by the Israeli plan to move its Foreign Office to Jerusalem. The Ambassador felt that this was not the basic cause of any Arab reaction as the latter would in any case have found some excuse to put Palestine on the UN agenda. Mr. Byroade replied that, although Jerusalem is not specifically mentioned in the items placed on the agenda by the Arabs, nevertheless he felt certain the subject would be brought up.

Ambassador Eban went on to refer to the Arab policy as one of ostracism; the Arabs do not wish to discuss any question of mutual interest although Israel is ready. He pointed out that the Jews had the deepest antipathy toward talking with the Germans and yet they brought themselves to do so because the US advised them that the only way a solution could be found would be by talking to the Germans about it. This led to the signing on September 10 of a reparations agreement between Israel and the German Federal Republic.

Mr. Byroade expressed the wish that we might have more influence with the Arabs. Each time we have tried to accomplish a regional objective we have become even more closely identified in the Arab mind with Israel. Further, the UN record regarding Palestine is not good. It is on the question of Palestine that the UN has shown the greatest weakness.

The Ambassador said that even the UN has had no success in getting the parties together. The Arabs and Israelis have never negotiated directly to try to solve their problems. In his opinion many UN members regret that the Palestine issue has been raised again by the Arabs in view of the fact that the Arabs have made no effort at direct negotiations.

Mr. Byroade said he hoped the Arab attitude would not interfere with arrangements being made for the payment by Israel of Arab blocked accounts. The Ambassador said that progress is being made. The most recent question was the rate of exchange and Israel has now agreed to the rate of exchange which prevailed at the time Israel agreed to pay the blocked accounts, rather than the present rate of exchange. This means that Israel will pay at the rate of one Israel pound equals $2.80, or a total the equivalent of $2,800,000, instead of the equivalent of $1,000,000 as recently appeared would be the case. The Ambassador continued by saying that the political phase of the blocked accounts negotiations is about finished and the matter can soon be turned over to experts to handle the actual payments.

Mr. Byroade expressed himself as pleased with the Israel decision and said that this action would make Israel look much better.

On the subject of defense problems and military aid, the Ambassador said he understood that because of the increase in American influence in Egypt that country would likely request military assistance from the US. In mentioning this matter, he wished to remind Mr. Byroade that Israel was first in the queue for military aid, having applied for grant assistance some eight months ago. Application was made under the Mutual Security Program in the belief that the granting of military assistance should not wait for any regional arrangement. He suggested that the US proceed on a bilateral basis and then "build the roof over the region" as was done in Europe in connection with NATO.

Mr. Byroade informed the Ambassador that it would be very difficult for us to get away from a regional approach. His view was that, while we cannot wait indefinitely for MEDO to evolve, the approach must nevertheless be a regional one. What he would really like he said, would be for Congress to authorize enough military production so that equipment could be furnished other states. He would like to see the present ratio kept between the Near Eastern states, but on a higher level. He felt that it would be necessary to enter into formal agreements on the use of equipment but that it should not be necessary to wait for MEDO to develop.

On the area as a whole, Mr. Byroade said he felt that we are moving along the right way and that he is not as pessimistic as he was a few months ago. He continued by saying that the more he considers the relationship of Israel with the Arab states the more it seems to him that compensation to the Arabs for their property in Israel may be the key to the whole solution. For example, the Arab continues to say that he will one day return to his former home in Palestine, but that in his heart the Arab knows he cannot do so. Compensation, on the other hand, is entirely different. This is largely a financial matter, and one for which he hopes Israel will be able to find a solution. Ambassador Eban, regarding compensation, said that his government considers there are three aspects of this problem: (1) assessment, (2) determination of the size of the debt, and (3) the payment. The latter is the only one of the three points that presents any particular problem. In response to a question, the Ambassador said that Israel is now willing to consider the concept of compensation as a problem in itself and separate from an overall peace settlement. Mr. Byroade said he was glad to learn this.

TOP SECRET CAIRO, September 23, 1952—noon.

763. We have queried Aly Maher's Chief of Cabinet in FonOff who in fact drafted note which formed first encl Emb despatch 405 Sept 8. He says that Aly Maher had in mind "all" UN resolutions on Pal to which Israelis had not given compliance. Obviously Egypt Govt is most interested in resolutions re internationalization of Jerusalem and Arab refugees with particular emphasis on return to homes of latter. When Chief of Cabinet went on to say that by "all" Aly Maher also meant original UNGA res on partition of Pal, we pointed out that this seemed odd since Egypt and other Arab Govts were on record as fundamentally opposing that res.

Our estimate is that Aly Maher's ltr was not drafted with any great precision of thought. As our recent tels have indicated Egypt official interest has been so concentrated on domestic reform that peace with Israel has not occupied a primary place. However, we discerning trends both in official and in potentially official opinion to face up to fact that Egypt's interest will best be served by coming to peace settlement with Israel. Army offs in very tentative way have talked with us, and even with Brit, on mil advantages of calling off Israeli "war" and FonOff off cited above yestd said that eventually peace might be reached on line of present boundaries. Perhaps more significant was indication to me Sept 19 by former PriMin Sirry that "if he were made PriMin again" he wld be able to arrange peace with Israel. We also note as reported Embtel 760 Sept 22, rptd Tel Aviv 12, [2] that Aly Maher led opposition in Arab league to Jamali's proposal that Jews in Arab countries be treated like Arabs in Israel. However, for immed future we feel that emphasis on internal affairs and on arrangement of differences with Brit still relegates Israel peace issue to background. FonOff source above states no further overtures from Israeli side similar to those described in encls one and two ref despatch have been recd.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY BEIRUT, September 23, 1952—3 p. m.

605. Herewith Emb's evaluation of Pres Chamoun's prospects: [2]

1. Whether true or not almost every one in Leb believes Chamoun has Brit sponsorship. As result Brit interests may prosper. On other hand, Chamoun may be forced to react by leaning over backward to avoid stigma of connection with Brit whose interests cld actually be harmed. In any case, many observers believe he will pull Leb from pro-French cultural orbit.

2. In long run, Amer influence will probably be stronger not only with Chamoun but all Lebanese politicians by reason of our much talked about neutrality during election campaign. Chamoun is definitely our friend and when elected was preparing for Point IV leader-grant visit to US. As member of opposition bloc in deputies, he voted against Point IV but chiefly because he felt it wld aid in keeping Khouri regime in power. Jumblatt, leader of bloc to which Chamoun belonged, last night told an Emb employee, "this means no MEDO and danger to Point IV program". Remark was make jokingly but cld suggest future difficulties.

3. As Min to England and Lebanese UN delegate, Chamoun established many friendly ties with politicos in other Arab states. His relations with them shld be most friendly, particularly with Brit-influenced Jordan and Iraq. He will probably give strong support to strengthening of Arab League.

4. As Nationalist Socialist bloc member, heavily influenced by Kamal Jumblatt, Chamoun is of liberal thought. It remains to be seen whether Jumblatt influence along socialistic lines will be altogether for good.

5. Chamoun will undoubtedly undertake significant reforms. Emphasis on non-sectarianism may well cause strong emotionalism particularly amongst Christian communities.

6. Chamoun who is not wealthy is extremely affable and enjoys great personal popularity. He does not have a a powerful personality, however, and there is some danger that in trying to please everybody he may be imposed upon by stronger polit personalities.

7. Honeymoon obviously now exists. Show-down will come when polit barons, who still hold Parl seats and who voted Chamoun to presidency, seek to retain their vested interests in face of reform programs he and his opposition friend will introduce.

The Minister in Syria (Cannon) to the Department of State

SECRET DAMASCUS, September 25, 1952.

No. 185

Reference: Legtel 222, September 23, 1952 [1]

Subject: Transmittal Memorandum Minister's Conversation with Shishikli [2]

Summary

In my first substantive conversation with Colonel Shishikli, the latter set forth in some detail his ideas on recent events in Lebanon, his views on Near Eastern history since the departure of the Turks, and his opinions on specific current topics such as his interest in establishing a modus vivendi with Israel and belief that the Arab States should be included in MEDO plans from their inception. He indicated that further general and specific discussions would be required before the conclusion of any bilateral aid agreements with the United States.

In the course of my first lengthy substantive conversation with Colonel Shishikli, a two and one-half hour near-monologue at my Residence on the evening of September 22, he talked cordially and long about many past and present aspects of Near Eastern politics.

[2] The memorandum of conversation sent as enclosure 1 to this despatch is not printed.

A summary of his remarks is forwarded in the enclosed memorandum. Beyond asking several questions, my contribution to the conversation was small. The following observations and comments are intended to be read in conjunction with the attached memorandum of conversation.

Lebanon: The Legation accepts at face value Col. Shishikli's disclaimer of aggressive designs on Lebanon. In approving a "strong hand" to guide that country, he appears to recommend for Lebanon the kind of guidance he himself is giving Syria. Though he exercises authority in Syria without full assumption of responsibility, he is critical of that identical situation in Lebanon.

Recent Near Eastern History: Col. Shishikli's interpretation of events in this area since the end of the Turkish regime implies that Arab progress and Syrian independence have resulted solely from Arab efforts, while delays and difficulties have been caused by foreign powers. There has been much discussion of the nature and extent of Allied commitments to the late King Hussein and his associates during World War I, and it hardly seems worthwhile to question Col. Shishikli's interpretation. The Colonel's evaluation of the Arab States' assistance to the Allied Powers during World War II seems to be exaggerated. He gave no credit either to the British or ourselves for any share in the "fortuitous circumstances arising out of the War" which resulted in statehood for Syria. Willingness to arrogate to one self all credit and to attribute all blame to the foreigner is not, of course, confined solely to Syrians, or even to Orientals.

Arab Unity: Citing the fragmentation of the area by the mandatory powers and the heavy total cost of the bureaucracies of the several Arab States, Col. Shishikli advanced an implicit argument for some form of Arab union. His statement concerning the alleged failure of either Lebanon or Jordan to achieve economic viability is additional evidence of the trend of his thinking. Members of his cabinet are well known for their support of the idea of Arab union, and reference to this concept is made in the constitution of the new "Government" party, of which Shishikli is the "responsible director".

Israel: Col. Shishikli showed considerable forebearance in dividing the responsibility for the creation of the State of Israel between the United States and Great Britain, an event for which the United States is given full credit by many Arabs. In the face of his public statements to the contrary, his private recognition that Israel will be a factor in the area for a long time is gratifyingly realistic. It should be noted, of course, that throughout his discussion of problems connected with Israel, Col. Shishikli is concerned with the establishment of a modus vivendi rather than with a permanent settlement. He appears to envisage frontier delimitation and refugee resettlement as "temporary" measures which will last a decade, a generation or a century but only until such time as Arab rights can be effectively reasserted. Just as placement of refugees here is being attempted without reference to "resettlement," so any improvement of Syrian relations with Israel may be feasible only if explicit references to "peace" are omitted.

MEDO: The view expressed by Col. Shishikli that Near Eastern States should be included in MEDO plans from their inception coincides with the Department's policy. Although the subject of arms was not specifically mentioned, it has been made clear that Col. Shishikli would like military assistance as well as equitable recognition of Arab importance in any regional defense arrangements.

U.S. Aid Agreements: Pending 511 (b) and 408 (e) agreements were not directly mentioned by Col. Shishikli. His remark that consideration of specific agreements should be deferred until the completion of general informal discussions would appear to presage further delay in conclusion of those agreements. Despite his awareness of the Department's November cutoff date on ten million dollars of economic assistance, he appears to be holding to his own timetable which is dominated by Syrian and Arab considerations.

Summary: Throughout Colonel Shishikli's conversation, it was obvious that he views all proposed arrangements with the West in the light of Syrian and Arab interests, and that he is determined to maintain and support Arab claims against Israel. Programs and policies conceived without recognition of these factors will find no ready acceptance in Syria.

views bona fides Israel motives in seeking peace and (3) Israel's dependability re publicity following is submitted:

Point One. FinMin stated in conversation this a.m. Israel had not been and is not now resistant to main UN objectives in ME, namely establishment Jewish and Arab States, (2) cessation of hostilities and (3) re-establishment of peaceful relations in ME. He passed over partition plan resolution as having been superseded by armistice agreements. As to refugees, he asserted repatriation manifestly impracticable but said his govt "will not shirk obligations re settlement and compensation despite difficulties". Mentioned IG rep had informed PCC latter's plan for handling payment of blocked accounts through Barclay's Bank in London acceptable and that 1 million Israel pounds wld be made available as first installment.

Point Two. Emb is convinced Israel sincere in desire establish peace with neighbors and become integrated in ME on basis normal polit, econ and cultural relations. There has been increase in interest taken by PriMin and other high officials of IG seeking to improve relations with neighbors, motivated it is believed by realization that without regional peace Israel's position precarious.

Point Three. As to Israel's propensity seek to influence course of events through press, I agree entirely with view expressed in last para of Emb Cairo desp 405 of Sept 8 that threat of publicity attributed to Israel First Secy in Paris is most unfortunate and contemplated to defeat purpose of IG to make progress toward peace with Egypt. I took occasion this morning, therefore, to remind Sharett of our repeated expressions of opinion that untimely publicity on Israel's part might well wreck any chance of success in important matter of initiating peace talks with Egypt, adding I had reason to believe Egyptian officials extremely sensitive now to danger of any announcements to press that might be so timed as to embarrass them seriously and put end to any possibility of effecting improvement in Israel-Egypt relations that they might otherwise favor.

656. From Beirut viewpoint (Embtel 642, Sept 29), [2] it appears US Govt has cause for being equally concerned as Federal Republic about Arab reactions to German-Israeli agreement (Bonn 1185, Sept 16 [3] and London 1805, Sept 27). [4] In Lebanon, US is receiving brunt of adverse criticism.

Our efforts to convince GOL officials of virtue of German-Israeli agreement as well as our promises to support separate Israeli reparations to Arab refugees are falling on deaf ears. Too much talking on our part, moreover, will only tend to confirm their incorrigible belief that US coerced Germans into making agreement.

Lebs cite press accounts of frigidity at Adenauer-Sharett signing ceremony and numerous private indications from German Cabinet members and people, as proof that Germans themselves dislike agreement. GOL is especially concerned at Germany's contributing to up-building of Israel's heavy industries which may in time be converted for construction of war vehicles for use against Arabs. Iraqi-Syrian-Egyptian mission to Bonn was irrevocably agreed upon at AL meeting in Cairo. Consisting of pro-German Arabs, its purpose will be to propagandize German Parl members against ratification.

While threat of boycott may be carried out even if only on a token or temporary basis, Embassy's opinion is that there is so much latent pro-German sympathy in Arab world (on basis enemy of their enemy is their friend) that German interests will not in long run suffer irreparably because of agreement particularly while US is such a convenient whipping boy.

673. In hour's conversation with Pres Chamoun at Beit Ed-Ed-Dine, we reviewed pending problems between two govts in atmosphere utmost cordiality. I was prepared to restate our position along lines taken with ex-Pres Khoury (Embtels 32 [320] August 19 and 512 September 12). Pres disarmed me immed by stating there are no problems between us that cannot be settled, not sometime in future but right now.

1. On local political situation Pres admitted new cabinet was "his cabinet" after he had put up with bickering politicians in Chamber Deputies long enough. Our meeting was cut short as he said the four Ministers were waiting outside for a meeting to outline details Pres program presented in his acceptance-inaugural address. As soon as this completed, they wld present it to Chamber with request Chambers grant them decree-law powers to execute it. Pres had no faith in working with present Parliament—on the electoral law revision alone, he said, they wld and cld filibuster for months. However, he had no intention of dissolving Parliament now. Dissolution remains a possibility if Chamber does not grant Cabinet decree-law powers, ...

2. Pres asked me where we stood on Point Four, but gave me time to cover only problems of unsigned projects agreement and customs problems. On latter after hearing explanation he said he wld instruct Min Finance Hakim to call me today and promised a solution this week. He agreed it wld take another decision of Council Mins to reverse decision of August 21 subjecting TCA shipments to muncipal taxes, but viewed favorable action as foregone conclusion. (I did not mention that Moubarak is now in key position of FonMin, one of only four Cab Mins, and that it was he not then a member of Cabinet who swung entire Cabinet to his point of view on August 21.)

3. On project agreements he saw no problem on grounds if the individual projects were good of course the new Mins wld sign them.

4. I mentioned that one gap in Pres reform program we had noted was omission of tax reform. In reply to his questions I mentioned over-dependence on regressive indirect taxes and small use made of direct income tax. Pres replied, correctly that this was question of enforcement of existing law. After present income tax rates had been effectively enforced for some time, they cld better assess need for further revisions in tax structure.

5. President then said if pending problems settled, next question was economic aid from US to finance projects after Point IV surveys completed. I tried to disabuse him of idea Point IV consisted of nothing but surveys, pointing out some other aspects of program. Even where limited to survey, e.g. Litani, object was to prepare document which IBRD wld accept without further technical study. For local currency costs and for other types of projects, I stressed importance of creating climate which wld attract private financing, mentioning water resource development Regie (Embdes 163, Sept 12)[2] as example of what might be done. He obviously got the point, but immed inquired when US wld give Leb kind of economic aid we have freely given to even less friendly European countries and

[2] Despatch 163 from Beirut, Sept. 12, described proposals to establish a corporation for water resource development in Lebanon. (883A.2614/9-1252) The Government of Lebanon on Aug. 19 had adopted by decree the "Gemayel-Naccache" plan for the unified development of Lebanon's water resources, and had appointed a committee to draw up statutes under which the new corporation, to be called a Régie, should operate. The plan was based on studies made by the Lebanese engineer Albert Naccache, subsequently publicized by Maurice Gemayel in his book La planification des eaux (Beirut, 1951).

Turkey (he did not mention Israel). I replied I cld not answer that one, but said Leb's chances wld be much greater if it made effective use of large amount of aid already offered.

6. Pres then rapidly shifted to arms. "We need arms, we need them badly, we need them now." US knows well, he said, Leb with its small army wld never be an aggressor. But Leb must have one tough and heavily armed division to protect itself. US has given large quantities of arms to Europe and Turkey, to say nothing of others. Leb is willing to pay cash. But even limited quantities of arms Leb requested were inexplicably delayed in Wash and London. Why ? I said I knew of no instance when we had forwarded a request from Leb Army Wash had not acted reasonably promptly. Pres replied Gen Chehab told him we were delaying a request for 155 and 105 mm guns. I said I wld check with MilAtt and report details to Dept.

7. During discussion on arms, Pres said: "Of course, we have had our differences—over Israel, refugees, etc. But you know that if it ever came to war with Soviet Leb is 100 percent on side of West, . . . , whether or not we have any kind of treaty or agreement in writing." I replied that we had always known the sympathies most Lebs lay with West, but was glad to hear this from him, the Pres. He repeated his words, said we need never fear where Leb's ultimate loyalties lay. But the hope of planes and ships from the West was no substitute for a small but tough Leb Army to defend Leb soil. All he asked was a little bit of initiative and imagination in Wash in considering Leb's minor requests for arms. He added he wld insist on the same attitude from the Brit.

At reception for Diplomatic Corps Saturday, Pres had looked worn and tired. With the Cabinet crisis off his shoulders he seemed a new man yesterday. He had regained his old spark and vitality, and was almost itching for the battles awaiting him in the Chamber.

To the extent Pres Chamoun's views are imbued in the members of his Cabinet, we can now expect to move ahead rapidly on several fronts. At the top level there is now a will which was formerly lacking. However, we shld not raise our hopes prematurely. The reaction of Parl to the forthcoming demand for decree-law powers is no foregone conclusion. While reform is the order of the day, most of the forces which frustrated our efforts before still remain entrenched.

ASSISTANCE TO PALESTINE REFUGEES

THE PROBLEM

To determine the United States position with regard to the program of UNRWA and the financing thereof in the light of the recommendations of the Director and Advisory Commission. [2]

RECOMMENDATIONS

It recommended that the United States Delegation should:

1. Following informal discussion with representative Arab Delegations, co-sponsor, along with the U.K., France, and Turkey, and as many other delegations as possible, a resolution along the lines of the attached draft;
2. Attempt to concentrate General Assembly consideration on the economic and humanitarian aspects of UNRWA and to avoid possible entanglement with the political aspects of the Palestine problem.

DRAFT RESOLUTION

Recalling its resolution 513 (VI) of 26 January, 1952;

Having Examined the Report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the Special Joint Report of the Director and Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency and the recommendations contained therein;

[1] For the instruction of the U.S. Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the U.N. General Assembly.

[2] The Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA) submitted an annual report covering the period July 1, 1951–June 30, 1952 (U.N. doc. A/2171) and a special report containing recommendations of the Director and the Agency's Advisory Commission (U.N. doc. A/2171/Add. 1), with respect to future assistance to Palestine refugees. These reports were referred to the Ad Hoc Political Committee, which discussed them at its 3d to 7th meetings between Oct. 23 and 30.

1. Notes negotiations which have taken place between UNRWA and Near Eastern governments under the program approved in its resolution 513 (VI);

2. Urges UNRWA and the Near Eastern governments concerned to proceed as rapidly as possible with the completion of agreements and projects which will enable refugees to become wholly self-supporting and remove them from relief rolls;

3. Recognizes that the goals for the reduction of relief expenditure cannot be realized to the extent envisaged in the three-year $250 million relief and reintegration program approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 513 (VI) and accordingly authorizes relief expenditures for FY 1953 not to exceed $23,000,000, subject to such minor adjustments as may be determined by the Advisory Commission in consultation with the Director; and further authorizes the Advisory Commission to approve for expenditure during the first half of FY 1954 such amount for relief as will facilitate the objectives of the agency and requests that in the Joint Report to the 8th Session of the General Assembly recommendations be made concerning the remainder of the year;

4. Urges the governments of member and non-member states to make contributions for the balance of the $250 million three-year reintegration and relief program to enable the Agency to make commitments in that amount;

5. Requests that negotiations regarding contributions for the program be carried out with member and non-member states by the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds;

6. Expresses its appreciation to United Nations bodies and specialized agencies for their invaluable assistance and calls upon all United Nations bodies and specialized agencies concerned to continue to render all possible services to insure that the assistance programs of the United Nations in the Near East be administered with maximum coordination and efficiency;

7. Expresses its appreciation to the numerous religious, charitable and humanitarian organizations whose programs have afforded invaluable supplementary assistance to Palestine refugees and again requests them to continue and expand to the extent possible the work which they have undertaken on behalf of the refugees.[3]

[3] For the text of a draft resolution submitted jointly to the Ad Hoc Political Committee by France, Turkey, the United Kingdom, and the United States, see U.N. doc. A/AC.61/L.1. That draft resolution was adopted by the Ad Hoc Political Committee on Oct. 30 by 50 votes to none, with 7 abstentions, and was adopted by the General Assembly at its 391st plenary meeting on Nov. 6 as Resolution 614 (VII); for text, see Document 508.

Comment

General

While it is presently contemplated that the UNRWA Report will be considered in Committee 2, we are not prepared to oppose the Arab States if they should move that this report be considered in the Ad Hoc Committee. Accordingly, recommendation 2, while indicating our desire to concentrate General Assembly debate on the economic and humanitarian aspects of UNRWA, is based on the prospect that the United States Delegation must be prepared to accept the possibility that the UNRWA report will, in fact, become entangled with the political aspects of the Palestine problem.

The action to be taken by the General Assembly on the Palestine refugee program is of secondary importance by contrast with the action taken a year ago when approval was given to the three-year $250 million relief and reintegration program (Resolution 513 (VI) of January 26, 1952). The lines of action for the Agency and the approximate sums involved were set forth in that resolution which was approved without a dissenting vote.

Our aim this year is to take the action necessary in the General Assembly to continue the program for another year and to improve the setting for the work of UNRWA. The attached draft resolution is predicated on information currently available but without benefit of the final recommendations of the Director and Advisory Commission.

Draft Resolution

Paragraphs 1 & 2: Progress has been made in negotiations with Syria, but the most recent information available indicates that negotiations, which it was hoped would be finalized to include the reintegration of 20,000 refugee families in Syria at a cost of $30 million, have been suspended following an unsatisfactory interview on October 2 in Damascus between the Director and the Foreign Minister of Syria. In Syria, the Agency and the Government appear to be victims of a vicious circle. The Agency cannot move forward with specific projects until the Syrian government has acquiesced in its general approach and indicated where agricultural and engineering experts might conduct necessary technical investigations. On the other hand, the Syrian Government has alleged on more than one occasion that while it is interested in the Agency's proposals, specific plans advanced by the Director are non-existent and vague generalities relating to numbers of refugees and sums of money form an insufficient base for the conclusion of negotiations. In the meantime, the refugees are kept alive, but with their future undetermined. They remain the outstanding political and social problem in the Near East.

In Jordan, however, the background is more favorable, although the Jordanians remain reluctant to accept in detail the necessary prerequisite to the use of UN funds for capital projects, to wit, agreement that such capital expenditures will be directly related to specific numbers of refugees.

Agreement covering the construction of a very large reservoir and dam on the Yarmuk River, a tributary of the Jordan, is under consideration. Preliminary engineering studies indicate that construction of the dam and irrigation ditches for land reclamation both on the east and on the west banks of the Jordan could result in the establishment of as many as 20,000 new farms which could furnish the livelihood for 100,000 refugees settled directly on the farms plus an indeterminate number of other refugees who could derive their support indirectly from such an undertaking.

Paragraph 3: The Director and Advisory Commission have carefully examined the relief requirements for the fiscal period ending June 30, 1953, in the light of prospects for reducing relief rolls to the extent that reintegration projects are undertaken. They have requested $23 million for relief for this period in lieu of the $18 million estimate provided in paragraph 9 of resolution 513 (VI). The Director and Advisory Commission have not yet made a recommendation with regard to a revision of relief estimates for the fiscal year 1954. It is clear, however, that the total of $50 million for relief for the three-year period ($27 million for Fiscal 1952; $18 million for 1953; and $5 million for 1954) cannot be realized and that consequently a larger proportion of the $250 million estimate will need to be devoted to relief. The United States Delegation in commenting on this matter should insist on holding relief expenditures to a minimum in order that available funds may be devoted to the reintegration program. Relief expenditures for Fiscal 1954 are more likely to cost in the neighborhood of $15 million than the $5 million initially estimated.

Paragraphs 5 and 6: The three-year $250 million goal approved by the General Assembly was broken down by fiscal years as follows:

	1951/2	1952/3	1953/4	Total
Relief expenditures	27	18	5	50
Reintegration commitments	50	100	50	200
Total	77	118	55	250

Pledges thus far recorded for the fiscal years 1952 and 1953 total approximately $145 million, leaving approximately $105 million yet to be pledged. Funds so far pledged are ample for the Agency's current needs and appear adequate to cover prospective commitments in Jordan and Syria. These funds will be inadequate however to extend the program beyond the projects in Jordan and those for the 100,000 refugees now contemplated for resettlement in Syria and further pledges will therefore be necessary in order to strengthen the hand of the Agency in negotiating such projects. It has been U.S. Government policy to pledge up to 70% of the total fund, and appropriations are in hand for 1952 and 1953 enabling us to advance up to $110 million. It is presently the intention of the Executive Branch to budget $65 million for fiscal 1954, rounding our three-years' pledges at $175 million.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Under these circumstances the present task of the United Nations is to obtain firm pledges even though the funds for expenditures on projects may not be required within the year for which they are pledged. The task of the Negotiating Committee should therefore be to negotiate contributions for the balance of the $250 million not already pledged and leave to the Agency the question of negotiating with the contributing governments on the time of payment of their pledges, it being understood that payments might be made after July 1, 1954, since at least one or two years more will be required to execute projects after commitments have been made.

Composition of the Advisory Commission

It is possible that a question may arise in the General Assembly concerning the composition of the Advisory Commission. Under paragraph 8 of resolution 302 (IV) of December 8, 1949, the four designated members of the Commission (US, UK, France and Turkey) were authorized to add three members to the Commission from among contributing governments. Several months ago Pakistan, and currently, Syria, have indicated their interest in membership. The Advisory Commission did not accord membership to Pakistan on the grounds that it was inadvisable to increase the membership of the Commission at that time (June 1952). A recent request from Syria for membership on the Commission is now receiving consideration by the Advisory Commission. The governments represented on the Commission have indicated that they favor the admission of Syria and welcome its interest in wishing to be a direct participant with the ensuing responsibilities which it implies. What effect the admission of Syria may have upon other Arab Governments is not yet known. Nevertheless the Department's present thinking is that governments which are directly involved in the reintegration program—such as Syria and Jordan—should be represented. The 3 vacant seats are believed to be ample to meet present requests for membership, and if changes are to be made in the number we must consider a revision of the terms of reference of the Advisory Commission. For the time being therefore we should make no proposals for changes in the number of available seats on the Advisory Commission nor in its terms of reference. In the event that contributing governments, within or without the Near East, manifest a serious interest in full participation in the Advisory Commission with the attendant cost of maintaining full-time representatives and the other heavy responsibilities entailed, the composition, and possibly the terms of reference will need to be re-examined.

Political Aspects—Arab attitudes

It is clearly necessary for proposals relating to the UNRWA to fit a pattern established by other actions of the Assembly in connection with the Palestine problem. The underlying resolution concerning the rights of the refugees was passed by the Assembly on December 11, 1948, and subsequent resolutions dealing with the UNRWA have unfailingly, at Arab insistence, made reference to the fact that their terms are without prejudice to refugee rights to repatriation or compensation established by that resolution. Further reference to this resolution is sterile, but may be insisted upon by the Arabs. Actual progress of the UNRWA is blocked on the political level by fear of prejudicing refugee rights of repatriation and on the operating level in the area by refugees' fears that they may be waiving rights to compensation and to repatriation by participating in the UNRWA reintegration programs. Over and beyond this is the fact that the UN ration represents security to the refugee which he fears to lose. The delegation may not have to debate these issues with the Arab Delegation but it is important to note that the Prime Minister of Jordan made a forthright statement on August 23 in the local press on the following lines:

> ". . . Certain newspapers have mentioned the problem of refugee resettlement in detail. It is my duty to state that in Jordan we do not have what are termed 'refugees' since constitutionally all refugees have become Jordanian citizens and none of them can be coerced to leave his country. As regards resettlement and housing, I do not perceive any contradiction between it and the principle of repatriation. Repatriation does not depend upon the lack of desire of the refugee to improve his present condition nor does it depend on whether he lives in a house or a tent. It depends upon conditions which we hope will become alleviated with the passage of time. Nothing will prevent the return of the refugee to the homeland of his fathers. The principle of resettlement in no way contradicts the right of the refugee to repatriation or his right to his properties. The duty of the press, therefore, is to enlighten refugees concerning these facts and to remove from their minds the troubled thoughts which certain irresponsible individuals are trying to plant by handling the case of the refugees wrongly in a way that leads to a greater degree of displacement and greater dependence upon international charity. Several days ago I read an opinion expressed by an Arab statesman to the effect that all refugees should be resettled in Jordan. We welcome this opinion heartily, although it is well known that our possibilities are limited and that we already have a large number of refugees . . ." (Amman Desp. No. 64, Aug 26, 1952).

Similarly, on August 25, the Syrian Foreign Minister, Zafir Rifai, arranged for the publication of a press interview which is recorded in part as follows:

"Question: Is is possible for you to define the present Government's policy with respect to the settlement projects?

"Answer: Although the Syrian Government sticks to the right of the refugees to return to their homes, which would safeguard the dignity of the UN resolutions and the security of that part of the Arab homeland, it cannot, from a humanitarian point of view, uphold the principle of depriving any group of the natural right to choose shelter in any part of the Arab homeland to alleviate its miserable condition in the expectation of a settlement of the problem. The presence of the Palestinian refugees in Syria or in other parts of Arabia does not arise from the will of the existing governments or from their direct approval. On the contrary, it is a situation imposed on the previous government following the great catastrophe in Palestine. The present Government, despite its endeavors to liberate itself from the policy of extemporization and emotions which failed in all the Arab fields, cannot at present order the refugees to be repatriated from Syria or accept a similar measure which contradicts the principles of Arab brotherhood and equality.

"Question: What are Syria's reservations vis-à-vis the projects of settling the refugees?

"Answer: The present Government sticks to Syria's right as a host state to determine the centers of sheltering the refugees in Syria and the type of their activity and work in accordance with international traditions. No private local or international organization is entitled to detract the sovereign right of the Syrian state in the Syrian territory or to ignore the Government's decisions on the places designated for sheltering the refugees in temporary camps and houses nor with respect to their absorption into the domestic economy and to the designation of the types and means which are most fit to alleviate their condition within the frame of safeguarding the standard of living of Syrian citizens."

It may be possible for the delegation to use the thinking among such Arab leaders to great advantage in furthering the UNRWA program.

SECRET [WASHINGTON?, undated.]

Memorandum on Palestine Refugee Program and Related Items.

This memorandum is intended to supplement the position paper on the Palestine refugee program, and has been prepared pursuant to the request of Ambassador Jessup.

1. The General Assembly session offers an opportunity, during the course of formal or informal sessions, to forward our end of refugee resettlement as well as other matters related to the Palestine problem.

2. Insofar as the refugees are concerned, we can point to a year of slow progress, but the fact that we have had substantial funds available to offer for the quid of resettlement has improved the bargaining position of UN representatives. Evidence of progress is found in recent public statements of the Jordanian Prime Minister and of the Syrian Foreign Minister which are quoted in the position paper. Further progress is indicated in a formal request of the Syrian Government to join the Advisory Commission of UNRWA. We believe that we should press home at every opportunity the rights of the refugee who chooses not to be repatriated, to shelter, citizenship, and the chance to become a productive member of society in other Arab communities. The fact that UNRWA is now able to finance refugees who choose not to be repatriated represents an opportunity not only for the refugee himself but also for other Arab countries who can be strengthened by the infusion of a new and self-sustaining group.

3. The year that has elapsed since UNRWA was supplied with ample funds is but a brief interval in the long history of the Near East. We should therefore not be unduly discouraged at the fact that little tangible progress has yet been made. We should be encouraged to persist in the financing and in the execution of the three-year program. Especially in consultations with the British and French delegations, it would be well to emphasize the need for continuing support of the three-year program while recognizing that it will doubtless be necessary to extend the term of this program probably at the next session of the Assembly. This means that we shall look to the British and the French for very substantial assistance on the financial side so that the program can be a genuine UN program.

4. We should not criticize without due reflection Arab leaders who frequently appear to be making the refugee issue a purely political matter and capitalizing on the refugee plight for immediate selfish political ends. We should inquire whether their fears of further expansion by Israel are wholly without foundation before reaching such a judgment. It may be that an Arab politician who chooses to keep the refugee issue alive and not agree to resettlement is moved by conscientious considerations of the security of his own country and his own people which might possibly take priority in his mind over settlement of the refugee question. To allay Arab fears, whether they be legitimate or not, we should take every reasonable opportunity to keep alive the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950. Constant repetition of the terms of this document can serve a useful purpose whether or not it is possible for us eventually to strengthen its terms by making it an outright guarantee of territorial integrity. Again, the issue of the internationalization of Jerusalem has a direct bearing on the problem of Arab security and consequently of eventual Arab acceptance of resettlement. The presence of UN authority in the region, even if it involves reportorial functions only in relation to the holy places in Jerusalem and elsewhere, would serve as a steadying influence in the area. The UN authorities would be a manifestation of continuing interest and their presence would furnish the world with a listening post supplementary to the MAC's.

5. Evidence at hand indicates that the Israeli Government is reacting against plans now under foot to impound the waters of the Yarmuk River at a point on the border of Jordan and Syria some 40 miles from the mouth of the Yarmuk which joins the Jordan about 4 miles south of Lake Tiberias. These plans for the Yarmuk hold great promise. Officially, we are not yet prepared to take a position on the feasibility or legality of this project. It is under careful study and the UNRWA is presently contracting to obtain the best legal and engineering advice obtainable on the proposal. Until more information is at hand, it is not desirable to pursue the subject, except with our colleagues on the Advisory Commission in confidence.

6. Insofar as plans for the US financing are concerned, budget hearings relating to the area will take place early in November. In the meantime, the Department and DMS appear in agreement that we should seek an appropriation for 1954 for the UNRWA program in the amount of $65 million which will round out total contributions at 70% of the $250 million fund proposed for the three years ending June 30, 1954. The attitude of the Executive Branch appears to be united on meeting any reasonable request of the Arabs which will make it easier for them to accept the principle of using these funds for the rehabilitation of the Palestinians in countries prepared to cooperate to this end, and to sell this idea, so unattractive in the past, to their public.

7. Compensation is a thorny subject. While we are pressing the Israelis for payment to Arabs for property left behind in Israel, we must temper our moves with these considerations in the background:

(1) Israel cannot, for lack of funds, make any really substantial payments in the reasonably near future.

(2) The U.S. can hardly be expected to pay compensation for Israel over and above resettlement costs through UNRWA, and even if the US does so, the political effect of compensation would be neutralized if it were clear that the burden did not fall on Israel.

(3) Estimates of PCC experts indicate that on any reasonable estimates of total compensation, over half the refugees would receive little benefit, certainly not enough to reestablish their livelihood elsewhere. Contrarywise, a small group would probably be entitled to very substantial sums per capita.

He believes disagreement may lie in his interpretation of July 7, 1948 agreement to effect UN observer is in command of demil zone Mt. Scopus, and in his view, validity maps dated June 16, July 7, and July 21, 1948 in delimiting demil zone.

He states sitn becoming increasingly embarrassing and fears continued failure IG comply with his requests may oblige him to inform Jordan of exact nature of his correspondence with IG (see Embdes 265, Sept 17),[5] which he feels wld have serious consequences. It wld give Jordan pretext for refusal continue abide by July 7 agreement, which Gen Riley has been at some pains to keep in effect pending implementation Art VIII armistice agreement or conclusion of peace. Without that agreement, Jordan may refuse to permit further convoys to proceed thru HKJ terr, which wld almost certainly be regarded as hostile act by IG.

Riley requested the withdrawal of a check post, the elimination of an observation post, the filling in of semi-foxholes and slit trenches, and the destruction of a suspected mine field. [3] In telegram 542 from Tel Aviv, Oct. 6, Ambassador Davis reported in part that the British Foreign Office, concerned with a potentially explosive situation, had asked the British Ambassador to assess jointly with the French Chargé and Davis (1) Israel's case for her present attitude, and (2) the arguments for and against tripartite representation before the situation got out of hand. (357.AC/10-652)

Gen Riley believes accordingly that tripartite representation on Scopus might be timely and useful, especially if made under instrs from representative govts and not at his instance. He mentioned mtg expected to take place today between reps IG and Syria but remarked that relations with Jordan were causing concern.

This afforded me opportunity to express hope that now rise wld be precipitated in dealings on eve convening GA. He expressed interest in Mt Scopus question and Gen Riley who was present gave him brief summary of sitn. Amb Eban remarked that he cld not afford have dispute over matter of this kind precipitated at present and stated that he proposed to speak to PriMin Ben Gurion about it before he leaves. SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, October 17, 1952—6 p. m.

635. Comment on Embtel 629: [2] Representations auth Deptel 374 [3] were made yesterday to DirGen FonMin Walter Eytan, who is handling Scopus matter. Brit and Fr saw Eytan separately same day.

In discussion parallel was drawn between present controversy and that re Huleh last year when Israel based policy on legalistic position which did not prove convincing in SC and which resulted in sequence of events which were not to Israel's advantage. In present case there seems danger of repeating error to disadvantage all concerned, and plea was made for wholehearted immed compliance with request of UNTSO Chief of Staff as matter of policy and act of deference toward UN auth and responsibility.

Eytan readily admitted that blind adherence to legalistic position without proper regard for polit consequences might be unwise. He summed up argument in support Israel's position re Scopus as fols: (1) That present situation of observation post is within limits of Israel demil zone according to July 7, 1948 agreement, and compliance with Riley's request might later prejudice Israel's position this respect; (2) that request apparently based on interpretation that agreement to effect Israel limited to activities on Mount Scopus specifically authorized thereby, an interpretation which Israel does not accept; and (3) that Jordan had failed to act in accordance with agreements in more serious respects without UN taking any action. He illustrated by mentioning HKJ failure carry out Article 8 armistice agreement and violation Mount Scopus agreement by increasing number Arabs in Israel demil zone from less than 150 to about 1,000.

[2] Telegram 629 from Tel Aviv, Oct. 16, reported that the representations authorized in telegram 374 to Tel Aviv, Oct. 10 (see footnote 6, Document 500) had been made that afternoon and were accorded a good reception. (357.AC/10-1652)

[3] See footnote 6, Document 500.

Throughout interview Eytan was careful to indicate that door had not been closed to possibility of compliance with Riley's request and that a policy mtg was yet to be held, before which he wld faithfully present our representations. He seemed to find persuasive the point that Israel shld avoid, if possible, any action which might detract from good effect of steps on sequence now being taken by IG to lessen Arab-Israel conflict.

The Palestine Question *

THE PROBLEM

To determine the position of the United States on the items under "The Palestine Question" which will be considered at the 7th General Assembly i.e., the report of the Palestine Conciliation Commission, [2] and the Arab and Israeli sponsored items alleging non-compliance of the opposing party with Charter obligations and United Nations resolution. [3]

---

[1] For the instruction of the U.S. Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the U.N. General Assembly. An earlier version of this paper, SD/A/C.1/398, was dated Oct. 7. (IO files, lot 71 D 440)

* (A separate position paper on the Arab Refugee Relief and Rehabilitation item has been prepared.) [Footnote in the source text; this paper, dated Oct. 4, is Document 499.]

[2] Pursuant to General Assembly Resolution 512 (VI) of Jan. 26, the Palestine Conciliation Commission submitted its 11th and 12th progress reports (U.N. docs. A/2121 and A/2216) covering the period from Nov. 19, 1951 to Oct. 7, 1952. A supplement to the 12th progress report was issued on Nov. 24 to cover the period from Oct. 8 to Nov. 24. (U.N. doc. A/2216/Add.1)

[3] See the letter of Sept. 12 from the Permanent Representatives of Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia, Syria, and Yemen (U.N. doc. A/2184), subsequently referred to the Ad Hoc Political Committee, which considered it at its 25th–39th meetings from Nov. 25–Dec. 11; and the Israeli complaint against the Arab States in letters to the Secretary-General of Sept. 14 and Oct. 9. (U.N. docs. A/2185 and A/2185/Add.1)

RECOMMENDATIONS

A. With respect to all the Palestine items:

1. The United States should urge that the items be considered together in the Political Committee when debate on the Palestine question is brought up.
2. The United States should coordinate its activities and views with the delegations of the United Kingdom, France, and Turkey, and other states as appropriate.

B. With respect to the Arab and Israeli sponsored items on noncompliance:

1. The United States should seek privately to discourage any prolonged debate on the allegations of the two parties on the grounds that prolonged acrimonious and futile debate has accomplished nothing in the past and will not now accomplish anything toward inducing a settlement of the outstanding differences in the Palestine question.
2. At an appropriate time the United States should publicly indicate in careful detail, as is suggested in the "Comment", its views on the matter of compliance by the parties with their Charter obligations and with United Nations resolutions.
3. In so far as Israel's allegations may relate to the matter of enforcement of the general armistice agreements, we should indicate that such complaints can presently be handled through the armistice machinery or the Security Council, which is still seized with the enforcement of the armistice agreements, and which has not requested recommendations from the General Assembly under Article 12.
4. Debate should be directed to the passage of a resolution calling upon the parties to settle their outstanding differences using the services of the Palestine Conciliation Commission if they so desire. (Part "A" of attached draft resolution.)

C. With regard to the report of the Palestine Conciliation Commission:

1. The United States in conjunction with other co-sponsors should be prepared to table, at the commencement of debate on the Palestine Conciliation Commission's report, a resolution looking to the continuation of the present limited activities of the Palestine Conciliation Commission on the Arab blocked accounts and on compensation of Arab refugees. (Part "B" of attached draft resolution.) Depending on the circumstances arising from the debate, this resolution might be separated from or combined with the General Assembly action suggested in recommendation B4 above.
2. In so far as it is deemed wise the Arab delegations and the Israeli delegation should be kept advised of our ideas on a resolution, or resolutions.
3. The United States Delegation, in discussing resolutions with other delegations should discourage and oppose any proposed resolutions, or paragraphs of resolutions which appear inconsistent with our stated position by calling for reaffirmation of or strict compliance with earlier General Assembly resolutions e.g. partition plan of 1947.

4. The United States should give sympathetic consideration to well-considered proposals for changing the terms of reference or composition of the Palestine Conciliation Commission. (See part 2 of "Comment".)

COMMENT

1. Arab and Israeli Allegations of Non-Implementation of United Nations Obligations.

These allegations will be the main topic and focal point of debate. Accordingly we should urge that they be considered together. The Arab delegations have submitted the following item for inclusion in the provisional agenda "The Conciliation Commission for Palestine and its work in the light of the resolutions of the United Nations." Their accompanying explanatory memorandum indicated that emphasis would be laid by the Arabs on non-implementation of previous United Nations resolutions. The Israeli delegation has submitted the following item: "Violation by Arab States of their obligation under the Charter, United Nations resolutions, and specific provisions of the general armistice agreements concluded with Israel requiring them to desist from policies and practices of hostility and to seek agreement by negotiation for the establishment of peaceful relations with Israel."

The United States should seek privately to discourage any prolonged debate on the allegations of the two parties on the grounds that prolonged acrimonious and futile debate has accomplished nothing in the past and will not now accomplish anything toward inducing a settlement of the outstanding differences in the Palestine question.

We must bear in mind that the Arab League States in presenting their proposed agenda items, undoubtedly have as an objective forcing the United States and the other large powers into an open declaration that United Nations resolutions must be strictly complied with by the members directly involved. Alternatively, they desire to see us hold that United Nations resolutions can not be universally enforced. If we take the former position, we would be placing ourselves in the position of apparently endorsing the United Nations partition plan and the internationalization of Jerusalem envisaged in the November 29, 1947 resolution. We would also appear to be endorsing the repatriation provisions in the December 11, 1948 resolution. If, on the other hand, we hold that United Nations resolutions can not be universally enforced and complied with we will have placed ourselves in the position of discrediting the power and position of United Nations bodies (including the Palestine Conciliation Commission, the Mixed Armistice machinery, and the UNRWA) and will have provided the Arab States with a legitimate basis for holding that they need not comply with the resolutions calling upon them to negotiate a final settlement of their problems with Israel. In order to avoid being forced into one of these two positions it is proposed that the United States in consultations with other major delegations, particularly the United Kingdom, France, and Turkey (who normally have sponsored General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on the Palestine question) reach agreement that the following should be our common position.

1. The overriding obligation of every member in the United Nations is the settlement of disputes by peaceful means. This obligation exists under Article 2 of the Charter and exists whether or not resolutions of any body of the United Nations exist or come into existence for the purpose of achieving a peaceful settlement of a dispute. Resolutions of United Nations bodies are means to this end and are not ends in themselves.

2. Every member of the United Nations is obligated under the Charter to give the most earnest and respectful consideration to recommendations of the General Assembly. Compliance, in fact, is dependent upon the good faith and determination of the members directly involved to carry out the resolutions of the United Nations as a means of performing their obligations under the Charter. Where the parties affected by a resolution will not carry out, the United Nations must of necessity attempt to work out ways and means of achieving the final peaceful settlement of a dispute.

3. In the Palestine case, where the parties to the dispute have not fulfilled their overriding obligation to reach a peaceful settlement of their differences and United Nations resolutions have been passed and have not been complied with, the responsible bodies of the United Nations have had to try again through subsequent resolutions, to bring the parties in the dispute closer to a final settlement of their outstanding differences.

A brief history of the case in the General Assembly and the Security Council (and in the instance of Jerusalem, the Trusteeship Council) is to be prepared and should be used in discussions with other delegations to refresh their recollections as to the actual extent of compliance by both Israel and the Arab States. This history will show in brief: that the record of compliance by both Israel and the Arab States with the resolutions referred to has been poor; that to date, the only efforts at negotiation of a lasting peace in Palestine have been those undertaken by United Nations agencies; and that, while these efforts of the United Nations must continue, because the United Nations organs have indicated responsibilities in this matter, until the parties themselves are willing to face their primary obligation of peaceful settlement, the record of non-compliance with resolutions will continue to grow. It is believed that this exposition in talks with other delegations may be enlightening to these delegations and, in turn, have a sobering effect on the debate. In any event, it will tend to demonstrate our true impartiality toward the parties.

Unless the debate is unduly acrimonious, the sponsoring powers should indicate their belief that the presentation of the opposing views of Arab and Israeli delegations has cleared the air as to their impressions of the obligations of the other side. Debate should be directed to the passage of a constructive resolution calling upon the parties to settle their outstanding differences—utilizing the Palestine Conciliation Commission for assistance, if they so desire in the settlement of the Palestine dispute.

In so far as Israel's allegations may relate to the matter of enforcement of the general armistice agreements, we should indicate that such complaints can presently be handled through the armistice machinery or the Security Council, which is still seized with the enforcement of the armistice agreements, and has not requested recommendations from the General Assembly under Article 12.

It is probable that the Arabs in discussing their item will allude to the United Nations' failure to internationalize Jerusalem. While the point cannot be stressed too hard in reply that Jerusalem as such is not an item on the agenda, our answer to the Arab charges on Jerusalem should be that, while the United States continues to adhere to its position that there should be a special international regime to protect the holy places, until a satisfactory plan governing Jerusalem can be worked out in such a way as to obtain majority support in the United Nations and meet with the approval of the two occupying powers, the passage of any resolutions on the internationalization of Jerusalem will be futile.

2. The Palestine Conciliation Commission Report:

This report deals with the progress which, although slow, has been real during the past year in effecting the release the Arab blocked accounts and in taking further steps for the assessment and payment of compensation to the Arab refugees. (The Palestine Conciliation Commission has been attempting since 1949 to effect the "unfreezing" of the Arab blocked accounts which total about 25,000 in number and total approximately 14,500,000 dollars. As a result of the Commission's efforts during the past year Israel has agreed unconditionally to the release of these accounts and is prepared to make an initial payment of 2,800,000 dollars.) It indicates that the scope of the Commission's activities has been admittedly limited. In debate in the Political Committee the United States should commend the progress made and support by resolution the continued activities of the Palestine Conciliation Commission along the lines it is presently pursuing. While admitting this is a modest activity on the part of the Commission, a fact which warrants consideration, in connection with stepping up of the Commission's activities or expanding its terms of reference, is that the Commission, in the four years of its life, has had a most unhappy record of failure in attempting to make any progress toward a general political settlement on the Palestine problem. We should indicate that the likeliest progress toward settlement of the Palestine problem will be made in the smaller areas of endeavor, first, and the activities of the Palestine Conciliation Commission during the past year justify this belief.

Since it is suggested that [in] the Political Committee's debate the Arab and Israeli sponsored items and the Palestine Conciliation Commission's report should be considered simultaneously, we should be prepared with the suggested co-sponsors and other like-minded delegations to table a resolution at the commencement of debate which would continue the activities of the Palestine Conciliation Commission on its present modest basis. Consultation prior to the commencement of the debate may indicate that it would be undesirable to table a resolution immediately on the commencement of debate but the interested delegations should be prepared against a repetition of the situation which occurred in the Ad Hoc Political Committee in 1950 when the Egyptian delegation tabled a resolution concerning a new United Nations agency which would have had responsibilities with regard to the Arab refugees which it could not have carried out. This same resolution also sought to have the General Assembly declare that the refusal by any government to comply with the provisions of the resolution would prove the existence of the breach of the peace within Article 39 of the Charter. Therefore it would be wisest for the United States and the co-sponsors to have a restrained and sensible resolution ready for tabling so that it might be the first order of business. To the extent that such preparation should be made the United States Delegation should be ready to exercise initiative.

In so far as it is deemed wise the Arab delegations and the Israeli delegations should be kept advised of our ideas on a resolution, or resolutions.

The United States Delegation, in discussing resolutions with other delegations should discourage and oppose any proposed resolutions, or paragraphs of resolutions which appear inconsistent with our stated position, e.g. in calling for reaffirmation of or strict compliance with earlier General Assembly resolutions such as the partition plan of 1947.

The United States should be prepared to indicate that it would give sympathetic consideration to such well-considered proposals as may be forthcoming from various delegations for enlarging or speeding up the activities of the Palestine Conciliation Commission or for instituting some other United Nations method for reaching an early political settlement of the Palestine question. This indication of this Government's sympathy should come, however, only after it has become apparent that there is a genuine demand in the Political Committee for more extensive United Nations action in settling the Palestine question, or if it is apparent that our proposed resolution can not obtain sufficient support for adoption. While it seems unlikely that there will be much desire on the part of delegations to increase the functions of the Palestine Conciliation Commission, if such desire becomes manifest, the United States should urge that it be directed toward constructive and realistic means and methods of political negotiation between the parties. It is quite likely that there will be some move made by a number of delegations to increase the membership of the Commission. Our acceptance of such a suggestion should be contingent on two points: (1) That the addition of new members represents a large-scale manifestation of a genuine desire by the Political Committee to take measures which will in fact speed up an over-all settlement of the Palestine question; (2) That the Members to be added can establish their impartiality toward the parties in the Palestine question.

Alternative to considering an increase in the membership of the Commission the United States Delegation might raise with the French and the Turkish delegations the possibility that the three present members of the Commission withdraw and let an entirely new membership be named. Any such consideration as this would have to keep in mind the importance which we and the other members of the Commission might place in retaining the controlling position in the Palestine question.

DRAFT RESOLUTION

The General Assembly

Recalling its resolutions on the Palestine problem:

A

1. Notes that the basic differences existing between the Arab States and Israel still stand in the way of settling the Palestine problem;

2. Considers, in accordance with the requirements of the United Nations Charter, that the Arab States and Israel have the obligation to settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security and justice are not endangered and that they have the obligation to refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of each other or in any other manner consistent with the purposes of the United Nations;

3. Urges the governments concerned to seek agreement with a view to an early settlement of their outstanding differences in conformity with the resolutions of the General Assembly on Palestine, and for this purpose to make full use of United Nations facilities.

B

Having examined the progress report of the Conciliation Commission for Palestine (A/2216):

1. Expresses its appreciation to the Conciliation Commission for Palestine for the progress which it has made in assisting the parties to reach agreement on their outstanding differences;

2. Notes with satisfaction that the Commission is continuing these efforts pursuant to the General Assembly's direction;

3. Considers that the Conciliation Commission for Palestine should be available to the parties to assist them in reaching agreement on outstanding questions;

4. Requests the Conciliation Commission for Palestine to continue to render progress reports periodically to the Secretary General for transmission to the Members of the United Nations;

5. Requests the Secretary General to provide the necessary staff and facilities for carrying out the terms of the present resolution.

SECRET TEL AVIV, October 23, 1952—1 p. m.

665. During recent months there has been marked improvement in attitude of Israel leadership and [garble] interest in making peace with neighbors and becoming integrated in region. Israelis have commenced develop plans for all-out effort this direction, and have taken some important steps such as announcement of their readiness make available one million pounds sterling toward unblocking Arab accounts, confirmation of their acceptance in principle of obligation to pay compensation outside general peace settlement, PriMin's public peace bid to Egypt, change of policy to one of readiness to meet Arab reps at any time to discuss any subject, removal of Sgan Aluf Shaul Ramati who in past represented "treat em rough" school (Embtel 638 [2] and Jerusalem ConGentel 43 to Dept) [3] and compliance last Sunday to UNTSO Chief of Staffs request re Mt. Scopus (Embtels 635 [4] and 648). [5] In addition foregoing, highest officials of IG have taken occasion to make public govts interest in regional peace, e.g. acting Pres's New Years Msg (Embtel 486). [6]

This change in policy and interest confirmed by Eban and Kollek, who in past have cooperated to bring about such change and who discussed with me last year desirability seeing IG become more sensitive to Arab opinion and avoid conduct that needlessly worsens relations (Embtel 627 Dec 27, 1951 [7] and 725. [8] Both have told me recently formerly negative attitude towards seeking improved Arab-Israel relations has given way to different atmosphere stemming directly from PriMin who dominates polit thinking of govt. Eytan tells me Shiloah is to be utilized in carrying out plans for implementation new policy, and latter said yesterday Arab broadcasting facilities are being increased and improved.

Several Israelis including Kollek estimate lifting blockade wld enable IG pay substantial compensation. They believe they cld save in transportation and services alone 20 to 30 million dollars per annum, half of which wld result from POL shipments if permitted come through canal. Real savings of course wld result from lessened mil expenditures and benefits of two way trade.

Foregoing is good as far as it goes, but as long as no Arab leader dares conclude any agreement with Israel even if clearly to advantage of Arabs (Embtel 105), [9] advantage of Israel change may be lost. It has been suggested to Israelis that they may have underestimated importance to them of Pal Arabs, who have been active in influencing Arab Govts and Arab League to assume uncompromising position and yet who stand to benefit most if Israel is enabled to negot directly with them and settle local national and regional problems. This aspect of matter was discussed recently with Fritzlan during his visit to Tel Aviv. It becomes important therefore to endeavor convince Arabs of desirability reach agreements before another period of discouragement and defeatism sets in in Israel.

Dept desires you make oral reply IG within few days after receipt instrs now being drafted. Understand Brit reply to be made London. Fr plans not known. Suggest you advise your Brit and Fr colleagues proposed action. IG note fols:

"The Ambassador of Israel presents his compliments to the Honorable the Secy of State and has the honor to inform him that his Govt is deeply perturbed over recent reports indicating the resumption of mil aid by the Western Powers to certain Arab States, contemplated in apparent disregard of the part these States play in maintaining a state of ominous instability in the Middle East.

Since the hostilities between the Arab States and Israel were terminated by the Armistice Agreements of 1949 no further progress has been made toward the conclusion of peace or to the settlement of all outstanding questions between them and Israel as requested by the UNGA on Dec 11, 1948 and by the Security Council on Aug 11, 1949.

On the contrary, the Arab States in violation of the Armistice Agreements, the res of the SC, and of the UN Charter, have continued to maintain an econ boycott against Israel, have sought to undermine the territorial integrity of Israel by permitting armed infiltration across the borders, and have repeatedly and publicly threatened a resumption of hostilities against Israel.

Moreover, Egypt has consistently interfered with the normal transit of ships and goods bound for Israel through the Suez Canal in defiance of the res of the SC sponsored by the Powers from which mil aid is now being sought.

The chronic instability of the Arab countries, rooted in their backward social and econ conditions and in their antiquated regimes, has recently found expression in polit upheavals, abrupt changes of govt, disintegration of parliamentary life, and in the emergence of mil or semi-mil dictatorships, some of which have tried to divert attention from their internal difficulties by inflaming public sentiment against Israel.

The coming into force of the Arab League's Collective Security Pact, after its ratification by four signatory countries, Egypt, Syria, Jordan, and Iraq, serves further to emphasize the danger to the security of Israel from Arab hostile policies. The origin of this Pact and the explanatory statements of its nature and purpose made by Arab leaders from time to time, leave no room to doubt that its sole aim is to create a mil alliance directed against Israel.

These facts form the background of Israel's security problem which is twofold in character. Like other States, large and small, Israel must take into account the existing internatl tensions and be prepared and equipped to defend its independence, terr and way of life, in cooperation with other countries. The situation around its borders imposes an additional burden of vigilance and preparation.

Under such circumstances any increase of the mil strength of the Arab States has a direct impact on Israel's security, and inevitably causes heightened tensions in the area, and provides a stimulus for aggressive designs. It further promotes an arms race at the expense of the social progress of the countries involved.

The Govt of Israel submits that mil aid to the Arab States shld be made contingent on a genuine and declared willingness of the receiving govts to negot a peace settlement with Israel.

The Govt of Israel takes this opportunity to repeat once again its readiness to enter into such negots immed with any or all Arab States."

Resolution 614 (VII), Adopted by the United Nations General Assembly on November 6, 1952 [1]

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949, 393 (V) of 2 December 1950 and 513 (VI) of 26 January 1952,

Having examined the report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East [2] and the special joint report of the Director and the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, [3]

Noting that negotiations have taken place between the Agency and governments of Near Eastern countries under the programme approved in resolution 513 (VI),

Having in mind the goals for the reduction of relief expenditure envisaged in the three-year $US 250 million relief and reintegration programme, approved by the General Assembly in its resolution 513 (VI) without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of resolution 194 (III) or to the provisions of paragraph 4 of resolution 393 (V) relative to reintegration either by repatriation or resettlement,

Recognizing that immediate realization of these goals has not proved possible and that increased relief expenditures are therefore required, with a resultant reduction in the reintegration funds,

1. Authorizes the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East to increase the budget for relief to $23 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1953 and to make such further adjustments as it may deem necessary to maintain adequate standards; and to adopt a budget for relief of $18 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1954 which shall be subject to review at the eighth session of the General Assembly;

2. Authorizes the United Nations Relief and Works Agency to allocate funds remaining for reintegration according to time schedules deemed appropriate up to 30 June 1954;

3. Requests that negotiations regarding contributions for the programme be carried out with Member and non-member States by the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds.

The Ambassador in Syria (Moose) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY DAMASCUS, November 6, 1952—6 p. m.

345. Pass Defense. Deptel 265, Oct 24. During five hour session evening Nov 3, Shishikli furnished further details his views on division demil zone (Legdes 185, Sept 25). His aim is establishment of durable frontier line and elimination demil zone with its concomitant incidents and irritations not settlement of all issues with Israel. He envisions frontier line from Tel al-Qadi in southerly direction to "east branch Jordan" (presumably Banias River), thence via most easterly regular water course to Lake Huleh thence down middle Huleh and Jordan through middle Lake Tiberias. Any reclaimed areas east this line shld become Syrian. Shishikli indicated willingness frontier north Huleh be delimited by three-party commission including neutral whose vote wld be decisive but said he thought geography wld dictate line. Frontier thus formed wld be "closed" to normal intercourse. Population wld be exchanged between central demil zone and southern zone, Arabs emigrating to Syria, Jews to Israel. The two govts wld exercise undisputed control each on its own side of frontier. Subordinate questions such as water rights need be no obstacle. Whether foregoing represents Shishikli's minimum demands or merely his starting point for negot can be determined only by engaging in discussion.

Re initiation bilateral talks on foregoing, Shishikli stated he had communicated some time ago to Gen Riley Syrian desire replace demil zone with definite frontier and move was taken by Syrians in MAC to seek solution (Legtel 649, May 5 and Tel Aviv Embtel 1191, May 13). This Syrian initiative was frustrated at Oct 9 mtg by Israeli insistence on discussion of wider issues. Shishikli is still ready to discuss frontier settlement beginning with MAC mtg. If warranted by MAC contacts "formal mtgs" including reps FonOffs cld be held after an endeavor reach agreement. He suggested I discuss foregoing with Gen Riley or with Col Taxis who more easily available here.

I said it was opinion our Amb Tel Aviv that Israel better disposed than formerly to endeavor such agreement with Arabs, to which he replied all wld be well if Israelis motivated by good will.

Foregoing supplements info Legdes 185 re GOS position division demil zone which not entirely unknown Israeli auths (cf. Jaddid's statement reported in Jerusalem tel 40, Oct 11, para 4, [2] Ramati's remarks in Jerusalem tel 43, Oct 19 [3] and other previous correspondence). Since Shishikli showed preference for continued direct negot with Israelis through MAC, I did not ask specifically whether his statements cld be made known Israel by Dept. [4]

[1] Repeated to Tel Aviv, Amman, Ankara, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jidda, Rome (for Unger), London, Moscow, and Tripoli.

The unsatisfactory outcome of the Syro-Israeli mtg of Oct. 9 (pattern accurately forecast by Legdes 317, Dec 5, 1951, para C) [5] is liable to be repeated in further mtgs unless both parties agree in advance what subjects are to be discussed. There is every reason to believe (despite Tel Aviv Embtel 68, Oct. 23 [6] containing reference inconsistent with text Tel Aviv Embtel 105, July 20) that Syria is ready to reach an agreement for the elimination of friction along the Syro-Israeli frontier. Israelis aware of this fact and have shown disposition to criticize rather than to negot. Israel on the other hand, has indicated an interest in peace treaty and trade relations. The Syrian Govt is not prepared to go so far. It is doubtful that the Syrian people would accept peace treaty, though they wld like more peaceful relationship along the frontier. Only boycott of Israel is important feature of Syrian policy.

There is thus no present prospect of agreement between Israel and Syria on peace and commercial relations, and the interval between the current "cold war" and peace is too great to be traversed in one leap (or closed by one agreement). It might, however, be traversed in several successive steps over period of years, if both Syria and Israel wld concentrate on reaching agreement where agreement is possible, leaving ultimate and final solutions to day when more favorable. Dif points of friction and irritation are eliminated progressively and mutual confidence established, peaceful relations, including trade, will inevitably follow.

[2] In telegram 40 from Jerusalem, Oct. 11, Consul Tyler related General Dayan's account of the Syria-Israel "high-level talks" of Oct 9. Dayan reportedly asked Jaddid, the Syrian Delegate, if he would divulge the basis of Syria's proposals; Dayan was reportedly greatly pleased by Jaddid's frank reply indicating that Syria desired division of the demilitarized zones, the establishment of a single boundary, and fishing rights on Lake Tiberias. (784A.00/10-1152)

[4] A memorandum detailing that portion of the conversation of Nov. 3 between Moose and Shishikli relating to a possible division of the Syria-Israel demilitarized zone between the two countries was sent to the Department as enclosure 1 to despatch 279 from Damascus, Nov. 6. (683.84A/11-652)

[5] Paragraph C of despatch 317 from Damascus, Dec. 5 (357.AC/12-551) referred to the proposed Armistice Conference mentioned in telegram 137 to Damascus, Oct. 4 (printed in Foreign Relations, 1951, vol. v, p. 1243), stating that the Syrians certainly hope and intend that the aim of such a conference would be "the definitive settlement of the status of the Demilitarized Zone. They are prepared to give Israel carte blanche in its share of the Zone and would claim the same rights in their share. The boundary of Israel would be just as final as the others, all of which are of course established by Armistice Agreements, not by peace treaties. However, Syria is unwilling to call a formal conference at which the Israelis would first raise questions like economic relations and would then, following the inevitable Syrian response, break off negotiations with the familiar charge that the Syrians are blocking progress toward peace. This was the only outcome of the informal Syrian proposal last summer when the Israelis replied that they would have to discuss 'all outstanding problems', not merely the Zone. The Legation concurs that such a sequence of events could serve no useful purpose."

The Syrian auths appear to be ready to embark on such course, though references to "peace" and "final settlement" should at this stage be employed with caution. In the hope of reaching eventual peace by successive steps, the Emb urges Department and Emb Tel Aviv to encourage Israel to give practical demonstration of its desire to become integrated in NE by discussing and, if possible reaching an agreement with Syria to divide the demil zone. Shishikli has indicated his willingness to begin discussion through MAC mtgs. Shld the Dept or Israel have reason for suggesting another channel of communication Shishikli wld probably agree.

1. The standard agrmt shld be modified fit special conditions in Syria. I replied that if wording of standard agrmt sole obstacle, feel sure changes cld be made standard text as long as it conformed applicable provisions of law.
2. Col. Shishikli stated Syria, as poor country, cld not make substantial contributions to project surveys. I replied wld inquire whether arrangements cld be made so that surveys not unduly burden Syrian treasury.
3. Col. Shishikli said Syria has no funds for construction capital works after surveys completed. IBRD loans had disadvantage high rate of interest. I replied TCA was basically program technical assistance, but some contributions supplied by US was feature most TCA programs. I warned that TCA cld not be Syria's principal source of investment capital and that Syria shld look to such sources as IBRD and UNRWA.

4. Shishikli asserted Syria urgently needs arms in addition to capital works. I replied that 408 E agrmt wld make Syria eligible buy certain arms from US. He countered that if Syria had funds he cld buy all arms he wants. All his remarks subj aid indicated he wished aid program Syria be patterned after that of Turkey rather than after those in Lebanon, Jordan. I explained Turkish programs carried out under different provisions of MS legislation than TCA program.

Shishikli then referred means raising funds for Syria and suggested first tax on TCA equipment and supplies and, second special contribution by petroleum companies whose pipelines cross Syria. When I expressed undesirability and unlikelihood of both proposals he commented wryly his suggestions seemed unacceptable but expressed confidence in the end way wld be found to execute bilateral assistance program to mutual benefit.

Since it is clear Shishikli desires grant aid, answers fol questions needed for further discussion.

1. How much of $10 million originally programmed FY 1953 still available?
2. Shld Syrians be encouraged to hope for grant aid either by provision local currency financing or any other device?

Memorandum of Conversation, by Robert L. Burns of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] November 7, 1952.

Subject: Visit of Ambassador Eban regarding (1) Israel-Arab relations; (2) NE security and military assistance; (3) PCC; and (4) territorial adjustments.

Participants: Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel Embassy
Mr. David Goitein, Minister of Israel Embassy
Mr. Byroade—NEA
Mr. Burns—NE

Ambassador Eban, at his request, called on Mr. Byroade at 3:00 p. m. today to discuss Arab-Israel peace prospects and the Near East security situation.

The Ambassador began by stating that the Israel Government had noted only a "change of atmosphere" in Israel-Arab relations, but nothing more substantial. There were increasing contacts abroad between Israel and Arab officials, but the Egyptians had become disinterested; their emphasis was now being placed on the North African issues. There had been a "retreat" in the Egyptian press, which was resuming its previous hostile attitude toward Israel. General Naguib's overtures to the Egyptian Jewish community were being explained as domestic moves without international implications, and it was being said that Egypt would follow the Arab League's policies vis-à-vis Israel. In short, if a change in the Egyptian attitude was developing, it was extremely slow in coming about.

Mr. Byroade agreed that there had been no really important developments but that a change of atmosphere must precede other more tangible evidences of a change in the Arab position regarding Israel. He was pleased with the changed atmosphere which had taken place within the Israel Government regarding Israel's policies toward the Arab states. A lengthy cable had just been received from the Embassy at Damascus [1] setting forth Shishikli's views on how the Israel-Syrian border problem could be resolved. These views would be studied. If possible they should be moved on; a settlement of this problem should not be postponed until an overall settlement can be reached between Israel and Syria.

With regard to the security situation in the NE, the Ambassador stated that military aid to the Arab states should be linked with an indication of a change in their attitude toward Israel. The UK's dispatch of arms to Egypt causes Israel concern, as does the UK's offer of jets to Israel and various Arab states. Israel intends to reject the British offer and argue what Israel considers to be a wrong interpretation of the tripartite agreement on the furnishing of arms to NE states. Israel would much rather see these jets withheld from the Arabs even if it means they would be denied Israel as well.

Mr. Byroade stated that the question of Egypt required frank discussion. Egypt has received nothing from the West in return for the cooperative attitude which it has shown. There is no chance of General Naguib and his government remaining in power if there continues to be an imbalance between Egypt's more helpful attitude and the lack of concrete assistance from the West. There are four major matters concerning which Egypt's cooperation is needed: settlement of the Anglo-Egyptian dispute; the organization of a NE defense arrangement; Israel-Arab peace; and a helpful attitude in the Arab League. Naguib has turned to the West for assistance and the West has been haggling too much over how this should be accomplished, with the result that very little aid has been forthcoming. The UK grudgingly had released the jets which

Egypt already partially owned. The West must be more forthright in helping Egypt, through such means as buying its cotton and providing military and financial assistance. Peace between Egypt and Israel can be one of the objectives toward which we can work in connection with Western assistance to Egypt.

The Ambassador agreed that the West must give something to Egypt if it is to gain influence in that country. Israel has only one quarrel: the West is placing economic aid and military aid on the same footing. Israel would be glad to see Egypt furnished economic assistance; this would be a real contribution toward stability in the NE. But military aid is not what Egypt needs and is not a contribution toward stability. Mr. Byroade pointed out that the Egyptian Army, having led the change in government in Egypt, is not an effective military force and the West must give something to those who came to power on a platform of ridding the army and government of corruption. Egypt is not being considered as a potential bastion of defense in the ME; we are looking more to Turkey and Pakistan to play that role. However, for a small amount of transportation, signal and other equipment we stand to gain a lot in Egypt.

The Ambassador commented that this was a peculiar situation: The US supplying arms to a country which is at war with a country with which the US maintains friendly relations. Mr. Byroade questioned whether in the event that Israel should present the US with a request for military assistance, Israel would want the US to require that the furnishing of such aid be preceded by full peace with the Arabs. The Ambassador replied that in such a case it would be logical for the US to require a country to indicate its readiness to conclude peace.

As regards the UK's offer of jets to Israel and various Arab states, Mr. Byroade said that this had come as a complete surprise to us, that it was a move taken at the instance of Churchill and that we had informed the UK of our concern over such action. It appeared that the UK offer was made solely on economic grounds.

Mr. Byroade pointed out that the US Government is criticized daily because of the large amount of economic aid which it has provided Israel compared to that which has been made available to the Arab states. The Ambassador emphasized that this is economic, not military, aid. Mr. Byroade explained that the Arab states know that if it were not for the economic assistance which Israel has received, Israel would be unable to maintain its military establishment. Mr. Byroade said that it was his personal opinion that Israel has a larger military establishment than it needs. In any event he could not see Egypt attacking Israel after receiving military aid from the West. He had been thinking of ways of putting teeth in the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950, and with the West supplying arms to the area it would seem that the West would be in a more authoritative position when it comes to forestalling aggression within the area.

The real need however is to redirect Arab fears from Israel to the threat from the north.

The Ambassador stated that Israel is willing to enter into a defense organization in connection with its application for arms aid and is anxious to obtain a response to its formal démarche regarding military aid, particularly since the trend in American foreign aid seems to be toward military aid on strategic grounds rather than aid on basically economic grounds. Israel aspires to achieve the same relationship with the US as that enjoyed by the "Greco-Turkish family", and therefore Israel's request for aid is also an offer of a stronger more binding relationship with the US and the Western security system. It appears that Israel constitutes the first instance of a country "knocking on the door" for admission into the defense system of the West, and not being admitted.

Mr. Byroade described the primary US objective as a NE with some prospect of area defense. At this stage many states in the area are not friendly toward the US. On the other hand, Israel is not threatened, and is far ahead in its military potential. If the US were to accede to Israel's request that military aid not be provided these states, the US would be much less likely to realize its primary objective in the area. He did not agree that the US should not entertain Egypt's request for nominal assistance. The US is not contemplating anything which would be harmful to Israel.

The Ambassador concluded the discussion of this subject by saying that Israel's first objective had been that there be no increase in the overall military strength of the Arab states. However, if that was not possible because of overriding political considerations, Israel's alternative would be also to receive military aid.

The Ambassador then turned to the subject of the PCC. Israel's position is that if the PCC is to continue it should do so as presently composed, treating with such subjects as blocked accounts and compensation. Also, its present terms of reference should be maintained. It has been rumored that the Arabs are interested in enlarging the Commission to a seven-member body, including Pakistan and a Latin American state. Israel wishes to see the Commission's mediation role played down and responsibility placed upon the parties to enter into direct discussions. The Ambassador observed that the UN was not devised as a substitute for direct diplomacy. A group of states (Canada, Mexico, Australia, New Zealand, Netherlands, Ecuador and others) appear ready to propose at the General Assembly that Israel and the Arab states settle their problems directly, while in no way inferring an abolition of the PCC. Israel requests US support for such a move, and would hope for UK, French and Turkish support as well. It would not be Israel's intention to have these four powers take the initiative unless they so wished. Mr. Byroade said that he could think of no objection to such a proposal.

The Ambassador stated that Prime Minister Ben Gurion's position on arriving at border settlements with its Arab neighbors is that an offer of territory in the course thereof is the biggest card that a country can play, and therefore one that should be kept as a trump. As a consequence the Prime Minister's idea on a border arrangement per se, and a border arrangement as a part of an overall peace settlement, are quite different.

Mr. Byroade concluded the conversation by saying that he wished to talk again with the Ambassador, especially with a view to avoiding misunderstandings of what the US is attempting to accomplish in Egypt.

Hence they view Arab armament as threat to their existence in present circumstances.

Altho they understand statements by Arab leaders are made largely for local polit effect and discount them accordingly, such statements are nevertheless given publicity here and tend to increase uneasiness. There have been many examples, of which latest is item in Sunday's press based apparently on monitored radio broadcast of speech Shishikli made to graduates of Syrian staff college. He is reported to have said Syria has "enormous reserves" of trained manpower and modern arms to be used "as soon as the hour strikes. Our eyes are turned toward the great Arab fatherland and we shall no longer stand idle regarding that part which has been stolen by fon thieves". At same time the foregoing appeared there was a further item in press reporting that two of 12 Brit meteor jet fighters sold to Syria had passed through Cyprus enroute to Damascus and that Syrian pilots had been trained in Great Brit to fly the planes in question while more were to receive training in air force bases in ME.

Emb comment: As indicated Embtel 420 and other reports, believe jet deal to be inconsistent with policy laid down in tripartite declaration of May 1950 to avoid inducing an arms race in ME. The selling of jet planes and other arms to Arab countries apparently without any undertaking on their part to liquidate the regional dispute cannot but induce an arms race which Israel and possibly other countries concerned cannot afford. Whether others think so or not, this country convinced its existence is in jeopardy, and despite its extremely difficult econ situation it will strain to utmost to keep itself prepared to meet any combination of its neighbors in present circumstances. While US is earnestly advising Israel to effect economies, adopt realistic fon currency budget and live within its means, it seems quite inconsistent for USG to approve arms sales which we know will have seriously adverse and possibly disastrous effect on Israel economy. Assurances that arms will be utilized exclusively for self-defense have little value without prior area settlement. It is believed that Western nations have endangering [endangered?] regional plans for polit stability, econ improvement and arms defense by actions of kind in question.

Positions of both parties remained essentially unchanged through Oct 9 meeting where Taxis says Israeli reps were forbidden by their instructions to discuss division zone (para 1 Jerusalem Contel 40, Oct 11).[2]

Taxis believes that Dayan, Sharrett and Kollek favor discussing division with Syrians but that decision will be made by Ben Gurion who has hitherto demanded peace negotiations. Israel on other hand wants econ and polit as well as mil peace which will permit it to become integrated in the life of the ME. Unless Israel can convince the Arabs that they have much to gain from peace, there wld seem little immediate chance for real progress toward area stability and defense.

Israel is interested in a durable frontier and might be ready to eliminate the demilitarized zone as the price for peace and friendship, but for a closed frontier, no peace and a continuation of the blockade the proposal outlined in reftel will have little appeal to the Israelis. Thus Emb believes that however slight the chances of success may be we shld continue to encourage both parties to negotiate directly with each other in the hope that a basis for some progress toward settlement will be found. IG has now expressed willingness discuss problem with Syria, which was not the case a year ago when the FonMin thought no good purpose wld be served. He said the proposed action will worsen Israel's position. He pointed out that giving each Arab state opportunity to acquire an amount of arms equal to that made available to Israel would create "overwhelming superiority" on the part of the Arab nations who themselves declare they are at war with Israel and who in his opinion should get no arms so long as they refuse to make regional peace. He made points that the Arab states are as yet uncommitted to support democracy; that altho purchases of jets would be ostensible for regional defense, he is convinced they would in fact be for use or pressure against Israel; that the increase in Arab strength will decrease chances for peace as he believes it will lessen Arab willingness to negotiate.

The FonMin stated further that word had been received from the Brit that 14 was no longer the limit, which will multiply the disproportion of the original proposal and will impose an even greater burden on Israel's overstrained economy. In present circumstances IG would feel obliged at whatever sacrifice to meet combined Arab strength. Sharett concluded remarks by saying he understood tripartite powers made such offers on basis of prior consultation and agreement and inquired whether US Govt has given its agreement to the policy of supplying arms on the basis of the Brit offer. He said acceptance by Arab countries of Brit offer to supply jet fighters wld result in need by Israel to acquire jet planes. He made it quite clear that Israel does not wish to purchase the Brit planes offered but wld much prefer Amer F-84 made jets. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Lebanon–Syria–Iraq Affairs (Funkhouser)

CONFIDENTIAL [Washington,] November 15, 1952.

Subject: U.S.-Syrian Relations

Participants: H.E. Dr. Zafir Rifai, Syrian Foreign Minister

H.E. Dr. Farid Zayn al-Din, Syrian UN Delegate and Ambassador Designate to the United States
Mr. Rafik Asha, UN Delegate and Syrian Minister Chargé, Washington
Assistant Secretary Byroade—NEA
Mr. Gardiner—NEA
Mr. Funkhouser—NE

Following Foreign Minister Rifai's thirty minute discussion with the Secretary and Assistant Secretary Byroade, during which time the Foreign Minister inconclusively discussed only the Bonn Agreement, it was suggested that further discussion between Assistant Secretary Byroade and the Foreign Minister should be held to cover other outstanding U.S.-Syrian problems.

The Foreign Minister began by stating that although he wished to develop in greater detail his solution to the Bonn reparations problem, there were other important problems facing Syria which he would like to discuss with Assistant Secretary Byroade. Mr. Rifai said that it was extremely difficult to develop Syrian stability in the midst of a basically unstable Middle East. The most important element in the instability was Israel itself. The refugees also created a serious factor of instability and it was necessary to provide compensation for them at the earliest moment.

Mr. Byroade answered that he had spent the whole morning working on the refugee compensation problem and felt that a very good start had been made with respect to the refugees by both the UNRWA and PCC. He expressed the belief that an essential factor in the solution of the refugee problem was that the Syrian Government and the United States Government fully understand each other. He stated that he appreciated the fact that there were emotions in the refugee problem which were probably difficult for Westerners to appreciate fully and which neither dollars nor projects could settle. Nevertheless, improved living conditions in the Arab world seemed to present the only approach to the problem. Assistant Secretary Byroade expressed his belief that dealing with the refugee problem required above all leadership such as the Syrian Government was now providing. He stated that he personally felt that it was "cruel" not to encourage the refugees to establish new homes since the chances of repatriation were exceedingly slight and the existence of false hope could only end in increased bitterness.

The Foreign Minister stated that he agreed with all these points, but added that only "under suitable conditions" and "when compensated" could the refugee problem be removed.

Assistant Secretary Byroade stated that with regard to compensation nothing could take away the legal and moral claim of the refugees. He added that the PCC was actively seeking solution to the compensation problem. He stressed that Arab compensation required important economic resources which Israel at the present time would not appear to have.

Regarding resettlement the Assistant Secretary reiterated that while it was probably true that no American could fully appreciate the full problems involved in the resettlement of an Arab refugee from Palestine, nevertheless the U.S. of course could clearly understand the geographical limitations in refugee resettlement. There was no room for one million Arab refugees in Israel, Lebanon, Jordan. The greatest opportunity for resettlement physically lay in Northern Syria. He expressed the view that the resettlement of the refugees would in the long run work to the benefit of the Syrian economy and added that there was money in the UN which would support an important effort in this direction.

Foreign Minister Rifai stated that the presence of any refugee in Syria created a financial and moral responsibility on the Syrian Government. He added that Ambassador Blandford and Chief of State Selo had developed a misunderstanding on this point.

The Foreign Minister stated that it had been Ambassador Blandford's theory that refugee resettlement would in itself be a benefit to Syria and that this position had resulted in the impasse which continued in the Shishikli-Blandford discussions. He stated that the Syrian Bedouins were not productive and Syria already had a labor force available to settle on undeveloped Syrian land. He stated that the Syrian agriculture projects would have been handled by the Bedouin if the refugees were not there. The refugees would replace the indigenous Bedouin, resulting in the continuation of a serious problem for the Syrian Government. Despite the existence of this situation, Mr. Rifai stated that the Syrian Government had accepted resettlement of the refugees in Syria for two reasons. One was that the condition of the refugees was deplorable and secondly the total Syrian community would, if steps were not taken, be adversely affected by this large group of refugees living in unsanitary and indigent conditions.

Secretary Byroade stated that Ambassador Blandford had undoubtedly felt that the refugees could in the future be a net asset to Syria—that these refugees, properly housed, clothed, fed, together with the skills which they brought with them and the investment in roads, water, housing undertaken by the UNRWA would over the long run work to the advantage of Syria.

Mr. Rifai stated that this might be possible, but at the present time the refugees were not only a serious burden on the Syrian treasury but also provided a negative value to the Syrian community. For example, the Foreign Minister stated that by providing educational facilities for ten thousand refugees in Syrian schools, ten thousand Syrian students had been displaced. The Foreign Minister stated that to handle the refugee problem required funds greatly in excess of what had already been offered.

Secretary Byroade then stated that whereas it might be true that funds presently allocated might conceivably prove insufficient for the total refugee resettlement problem, he nevertheless felt it was unfortunate that money presently available for resettlement was left unused. The Assistant Secretary referred to the problem of obtaining money for these refugees and referred to a future period in which contributions by the UN members might fall off. He stated that whatever the amount of money required might be, it was essential to make a start with the funds that existed and to improve immediately the condition of as many refugees as possible.

Foreign Minister Rifai stated that Syria also required funds to bolster the Syrian economy itself. These funds would serve to complement UNRWA refugee disbursements. He stated, however, that Syria was moving ahead on resettlement and would in time know how far the funds presently allocated would go to meet the problem. The acceptance of more refugees at this time had been prevented by the conclusion that more refugees would be a greater sacrifice for the Syrian people, and because Ambassador Blandford did not attribute sufficient importance to aid for the Syrian economy.

Secretary Byroade asked the translator to impress upon Foreign Minister Rifai that he was not pressing the Minister to accept more refugees but that he was trying to clarify his understanding of the problems involved in refugee resettlement.

With respect to the overall refugee problem, Secretary Byroade stated that he personally was doing what he could to see that refugee compensation could be arranged. He added that by this statement he was not closing the door even on repatriation, although admittedly it would be extremely difficult to bring about a situation under which any refugees could return to Israel.

The Assistant Secretary further stated that as a practical matter most refugees would not want to go back and live in Israel, even if they could return. He stated that Israel was considerably changed from Mandate days and that most of the refugees would undoubtedly be extremely dissatisfied in Israel.

Foreign Minister Rifai admitted that he and most of his Government shared this opinion. He stated that certain refugees would like to return—not all of them. He suggested that the PCC should be given the positive responsibility of determining which refugees should return as well as wider responsibility in settlement of the compensation problem.

Ambassador-designate Zayn al-Din attempted to summarize the Syrian point of view by stating that the Syrian Government realized that a good part of the refugees should be resettled. This resettlement required sacrifice by the Syrian Government, that for this sacrifice foreign economic assistance was required for the general development of Syria in such a way that the Syrian people would be able to receive a net increase in their standard of living. Mr. Byroade was asked if he conceived of the possibility of substantial economic assistance as a prelude to further development.

Mr. Byroade replied affirmatively that he could conceive of the possibility of economic assistance although he could not at this point concede that the adjective "substantial" was appropriate. He stated that there were now three sources of funds, and subsequently added a fourth source. These were (1) UNRWA funds, (2) Point IV funds, (3) future possibility of grant aid, and (4) funds available through banking institutions such as IBRD, EXIMBANK, etc.

With respect to (1), the Assistant Secretary referred to the 70% U.S. share of UNRWA funds, the difficulties he faced when asking Congress for this money in view of lack of achievements, the question of how long UN members would continue to contribute to refugee resettlement. Mr. Byroade stated that additional funds would be hard to find in the absence of fullest utilization being made of funds already allocated which were already substantial.

Foreign Minister Rifai expressed his doubt regarding the technical ability of UNRWA authorities to handle refugee resettlement. He mentioned three projects which the Syrian authorities had discussed without results with UNRWA officials. These were the "Autaba Marshes" land drainage scheme, the Baruda River irrigation and land development scheme and the large lake development project near Damascus. The Syrian Government had been disappointed that those projects had not received more attention from UNRWA technicians.

Mr. Byroade commented briefly that he was not worried about the technical problem and that he was confident that he could find the technicians required if this proved to be any handicap to resettlement.

Mr. Byroade then described the basic Point IV philosophy and the immediate and long term benefits which could be realized from this approach. He added that there would appear to be every possibility that Point IV legislation could materially assist in the improvement of the Syrian economy and in the refugee resettlement problem. He stated that there was considerable latitude in the specific form that Point IV assistance might take and that what was required from the Syrian authorities was specific request for assistance and indication by the Syrian Government of what steps they were prepared to take in return for such assistance. Mr. Byroade stated that he did not have the authority at this time to state how far the U.S. Government was prepared to go in making Point IV aid available to Syria and that this determination largely rested with the approach to the U.S. made by the Syrian authorities.

Mr. Byroade then asked the Foreign Minister for any specific comments regarding Syrian views towards the Point IV concept and its application to Syria. The Foreign Minister stated that Point IV, as he understood it, only engaged in "studies" and technicians, that Point IV placed heavy financial obligations on the Syrian treasury, and that public opinion demanded immediate results from foreign assistance. Departmental representatives thereupon proceeded to disabuse the Foreign Minister of the above concepts. Mention was specifically made of the Kasmie project in the Lebanon as an example of sound economic development.

It was also pointed out that no technicians which were unwanted by the Syrian Government would become a part of any Point IV program. It was stated that there was every reason to believe that the short and long term interests of both the United States and Syria might well be served by the Point IV legislation if a full explanation of what the U.S. was prepared to do and particularly what the Syrian Government desired could be developed in detail. The Foreign Minister stated that his ignorance of the U.S.G. economic assistance was perhaps due to his single conversation with Ambassador Locke on this subject and expressed a genuine interest in further exploration of the subject.

Regarding the third source of funds, grant aid, Mr. Byroade stated that although grant aid was not available at this time, it would be a subject for future discussion with Congress. Mr. Byroade then described the difficulties in making a case before Congress for grant assistance to the Middle East. He stated that in general the Department was required to make its own calculations on the basis of incomplete technical facts regarding projects needed in the Middle East; that even if a case could be made, Congress would undoubtedly ask whether Near Eastern states would accept aid if authorized; to this the Assistant Secretary stated his answer would have to be, under existing conditions, "I don't know".

Foreign Minister Rifai smilingly admitted that he could understand Mr. Byroade's problem but stated that Syrian hesitation was due to the fact that assistance offered was so inferior to what Syria was doing for itself. He referred to the 100,000 hectares of land which the Syrian Government had reclaimed by improvision with inferior machinery, inadequate resources, etc. The Foreign Minister added that the Syrian authorities feared being tied too tight by agreements with the United States when they were doing so much more on their own. He then added his view that the "Arab East" should appear more important to the U.S. than Europe for purposes of defense since their weaknesses were so much greater.

Mr. Byroade stated that the Foreign Minister would not have to convince him of that point, but should only assist him in making his work easier. He added that the interpreter should make clear that the United States did not wish to appear too impatient in its desire to do all things in the Middle East and did not wish to overstress the importance of Point IV aid. He added, however, that Point IV was doing and could do an excellent job; Iran, where more Point IV assistance was being requested by the Iranian Government, was given as an example.

The other topics were briefly mentioned and discussed: (a) Renegotiation of the IPC pipeline terms, and (b) the Arab League. Regarding (a) the Foreign Minister stated that the pipeline agreements did not provide Syria with an equitable source of income, that these arrangements had been negotiated by either the French or Husni Zaim to the disadvantage of the Syrian people and that some form of taxation which would earn more money for Syria was being considered. Comparison was made with the oil producing countries in the Middle East which earned high income from the oil wells.

Department officials briefly mentioned (1) that clauses waiving customs duties and taxes were the general rule rather than an exception made by the French Mandate or previous Syrian authorities; (2) that payments in excess of the original contracts had already been made and were the proper subject for commercial negotiation; (3) that pipeline companies were unfairly handicapped by their inability to change site with increasing demands of foreign governments as were other business enterprises. Reference was made to the IPC exploration company in Syria which was forced to terminate its concession when Syrian objections to the original contract became too severe; (4) that it was difficult to determine what a fair transit price should be. The oil companies could only make their decision to construct pipelines on a basis of comparing tanker construction and operating costs with transit agreement and pipeline construction and operating costs. On a basis of these calculations and agreements Syria had not only profited by the IPC pipeline construction in 1935, but by the newest IPC Big Inch construction and the Trans-Arabian Pipeline construction. If the Syrian Government had negotiated too high terms in 1935 the later two pipeline developments might not have been built. It was mentioned that certain oil company experts contested the economic desirability of building the Trans-Arabian Pipeline, supporting instead the use of the same amount of steel in moveable tankers; (5) that failure to respect valid contracts adversely affected other private investment in Syria.

Regarding (b) Mr. Byroade was asked for his views regarding the Arab League and its future. He stated briefly that he had not been able to agree at all times with decisions of the Arab League. He mentioned, however, that he was basically in sympathy with regional cooperation; that he had personally been closely associated with efforts to strengthen European regional associations; he felt that history would show that this had been the era of the development of European Federation, even though some days it appeared that the daily motion was more backward than forward. The Assistant Secretary stated that all countries were now giving up a part of their sovereignty and indeed that the United States had also given up an important measure of its sovereignty. He believed that the Arab League could provide more positive influence than it had to date.

Mr. Byroade asked the Foreign Minister if he could visit Washington for further exploration of these subjects. The Foreign Minister was most receptive to the suggestion and stated that following his return from Mexico in several weeks he hoped to visit Washington. It was stated that this visit might correspond with Zayn al-Din's presentation of his credentials as Syrian Ambassador to the United States. Warm expressions concerning the profitability of the meeting were exchanged.

1. Dept agrees with first sentence Tel Aviv reftel as to "crux of difficulty". Semantics hamstring any Syrian-Israel negots, not only in re procedure but also in relation very substance. Israel wants conversations lead towards peace, Syr wants conversations lead towards reduction tension.

2. US understands and supports Israeli viewpoint, for peace between Israel and Arab States is one of cardinal points in US Near East policy. Moreover, as reported by Tel Aviv tel 665 Oct 23 genuine desire for better relations with Arab neighbors has taken hold in Israeli minds, with consequent diminution of "lebensraum" school.

3. However, Syr approach seems more realistic in light present Arab-Israeli overall relations. To expect relatively temperate Arab leaders to add Israel peace issue to touchy subjects of nationalism, xenophobia and internal reform is asking them court downfall before already saturated public emotion. On other hand, Syr-Israel modus vivendi might not have peace in mind when made, but if reasonably well designed and executed it shld by nature encourage future peace simply thru removal frictions which made it necessary.

4. Both parties shld be urged by US continue direct and earnest negots (inside or outside Armistice Agreement framework). Israel shld be counseled give serious consideration any Syr proposals which might eliminate frictions, whether or not those proposals mean only first hesitant steps towards far distant peace. Shishikli shld be advised take more positive and courageous approach towards meeting Israeli proposals and signing Israeli agreements per se, to soft-pedal bellicose statements about "revenge", and in general behave publicly in manner less likely put Israelis on defensive.[3]

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 18, 1952—7:14 p. m.

517. For purpose reviewing problems relating Palestine polit items to be considered by Ad Hoc Polit Comite, reps NEA and UNA met with USUN at NY Nov 15. Agenda items listed hereunder in numbered paras followed by main points discussed and conclusions reached. Emb Tel Aviv and USUN shld fol instrs included paras numbered one and two.

1. How can US most effectively estab gen recognition that repatriation refugees to Israel no longer feasible?

If other dels bring up for discussion fact refugees cannot return to former homes, either by introduction of a res or otherwise, we shld do our part make known we consider any large scale return impossible. If matter not raised by others, we shld not raise it. Rather in this event we shld leave question as principle which UN has already estab.

We consider only possible solution resettlement in Arab states for most, if not all, refugees. Progress cannot be made so long as certain Arab leaders use refugees as polit weapon and continue keep issue inflamed. It wld perhaps be too much at this time for us tell refugees they cannot go back—that there is no home for them—but might be possible slow down Arab leaders who keep issue in foreground.

It was agreed Israel might find some econ benefit by permitting certain number refugees return particularly farmers.

Israel Govt shld be asked by Emb Tel Aviv and by USUN for info re Israel's intentions for repatriation Arab refugees to Israel. We believe action by Israel for limited repatriation wld advance prospect for other peace measures and Israel shld be asked indicate whether it wld work out constructive plan to admit given nr.

2. Compensation:

(a) How far shld USUN go in supporting principle of compensation and practical measures for giving it effect?

We shld support the principle. "Practical measures for giving it effect" shld be worked out by experts after problem has been defined. Berncastle PCC land specialist is supervising examination of records which shld show extent of problems i.e., by ascertaining how much property in Israel owned by refugees and by determining its value.

[1] Sent also to New York as telegram Gadel 61; repeated to London, Paris, Ankara, Amman, Beirut, Baghdad, Cairo, Damascus, and Jidda.

(b) Is it feasible for Israel pay compensation without large Amer assistance? Is such assistance likely be forthcoming? If not is it politically desirable encourage idea of compensation and initiate steps such as undertaking of PCC, looking toward payment compensation?

Seems likely US assistance to Israel will be required for several years. There are however factors which are encouraging. These include:

> (1) Possibility Israel might be able set aside certain amt (possibly 5 or 10 percent) from present $300 mil fon exchange budget for payment compensation. This cld liquidate obligation over period years either to individual Arabs or by servicing internatl loan for that purpose.
> (2) Israel's econ understood to have reached bottom last winter but now shows signs recovering—even though very slowly. There is probability Isreal's industry and agri are capable of reaching position of increasing returns during next year or so—given neces raw materials and equipment. In many instances existing capital equipment cannot be used fullest possible extent because of lack raw materials. Reparations payments by Ger cld create situation that cld provide raw materials and permit further industrial expansion. Increased citrus exports during years ahead, and recovery potash and other Dead Sea resources, shld contribute materially to Israel's capacity to pay, including decrease in need for fon governmental assistance.
> (3) Compliance by Egypt with UN Res re Suez Canal wld benefit Israel to important but unknown extent. Estimates vary from several mil dols to $100 mil or more each year. Savings to Israel wld result from cheaper freight rates on petroleum and by giving Israel access cheap markets for purchases and sales. Since reopening Suez Canal to all traffic is concern maritime powers, Egypt cld act without ref Israel or Palestine question.
> (4) Any lessening Arab econ boycott against Israel wld increase Israel's capacity to pay.
> (5) Any confirmation existence important natural resources such as petroleum wld have beneficial effect on Israel's fon exchange position.

It was agreed compensation directly connected with resettlement refugees. Also refugees shld not have both compensation and repatriation. Israel must provide alternative: either permit refugees return or pay them compensation for their losses (or combination of two alternatives). The more refugees having property in Israel permitted to return, the less wld be amt compensation to be paid by Israel.

It was recognized that if Israel shld set aside portion its fon exchange budget for compensation while US is providing assistance this may produce difficulties in obtaining appropriations as there might appear to be duplication sums paid as compensation and requests for Arab resettlement funds. It was agreed however that advantages of encouraging Israel Govt set aside portion its fon exchange income for compensation outweigh disadvantages.

Israel Govt shld be approached by Emb Tel Aviv and USUN for purpose ascertaining what plan Israel has if any to pay compensation, and stress upon them to produce such plan at earliest possible date as if gen position against repatriation appears in GA compensation question can become acute.

3. If question of Jerusalem raised and subj of internationalization debated, is any scheme (territorial) internationalization feasible at this time? If so shld US take any initiative this direction?

Agreed no purpose wld be served by discussion internationalization Jerusalem at this time. US shld take no initiative in matter. However shld any aspect of question be raised we shld support status quo. For instance shld res be introduced to effect Israel not transfer its FonMin to Jerusalem, we shld support res. (Amb Jessup requested instrs this point.)

Note: An immed problem is to determine whether US shld be represented at inauguration new Pres of Israel shld inauguration take place Jerusalem as seems probable.

4. Direct negots

(a) What shld be extent US initiative in calling for direct negots between Israel and Arab states?

Agreed we shld encourage other dels to table res calling on parties settle differences by direct negots. We shld not introduce such res but shld support it if introduced by others.

(b) Is expression of widespread GA sentiment for direct negots likely encourage or discourage Arab countries from settling their differences with Israel?

Agreed a res calling on parties to settle their differences by direct negots might encourage some Arab states settle their differences with Israel. It was felt it wld do no harm and cld be very useful, to provide Arabs with basis on which justify negots with Israel.

5. Future of PCC

Agreed our contd membership PCC contingent on Comm's indicated responsibilities. If Comm were to continue with basically present terms ref we shld remain on Comm. However if as anticipated Arabs propose new or same Comm with greatly expanded membership or terms ref we might well wish indicate we cld not serve on such body, particularly if it were composed members some of whose partiality is well established, or its term ref were related to enforcement or implementation existing GA Res. Also new members wld undoubtedly wish reactivate Comm with resultant confusion. No conclusion was reached.

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, November 21, 1952—6 p. m.

836. Deptel 517.[2] Called on FonMin this morning and asked for info requested in paras 1 and 2 ref tel. Said believed repatriation may be raised in GA and Dept considering realistic approach. Said we consider any large scale return refugees out of question and solution must be based on resettlement of most refugees in Arab states. However their continued plight can be used as means keeping feelings inflamed and preventing real progress toward peace. IG therefore may consider permitting return certain number particularly farmers to terraced agricultural areas. Consider action by Israel toward limited repatriation wld advance prospects of other peace measures and show Israel's desire carry out spirit UN res 1948. As closely related problem wish inquire whether IG has plan paying compensation to refugees who do not return. Compensation affected by boycott and continuation of boycott affected by refugee situation. Particular refugees shld not have both compensation and repatriation but IG shld provide alternative and larger number of refugees less the amt of compensation. If repatriation issue raised, need for definite plan of compensation acute.

On possible repatriation of small number refugees FonMin said taken aback by suggestion, had not heard it for a long time, had thought it common ground that solution lay in resettlement and compensation; if not common ground then regretted but position Israel firmly fixed; no useful purposes served by increasing number Arabs in Israel; wld intensify problem that lead to fighting; Arab population stabilized at 170,000 more wld increase fifth column and explosive neighborhood relations all cases in history of movement of population was result of war or upheaval and no instance of any return such populations to original area; even if Arab farmers brought in cultivate terraced areas it wld require new villages in midst existing Jewish villages.

On compensation FonMin referred to previous agreement in principle. Said working toward assessment of amts due individuals but big problem is payment. Israel treas does not yet know where will get funds payment unblocked Arab accounts. No plans for making payment of compensation. Doubts possibility formulating one in existing state Israel finances.

Byroade stated Dept noted trend on part responsible Arab leaders towards more realistic practical approach to Palestine problem. Pointed out refugee resettlement progress in Syria and Jordan and private admission Arab leaders that large scale repatriation impossible. Though US cld not take initiative proclaiming latter doctrine, it wld be helpful if other countries sharing this belief were to take lead in expressing their views. Emphasized inter-relationship refugee problem—repatriation—compensation. Stated wld be helpful if IG wld consider possibility limited repatriation, e.g. admitting 50,000 to 100,000 Arab farmers who cld contribute Israel economy. More especially, it was his opinion time had come for Israel, having accepted principle compensation, elaborate ways means achieving this and announce its plans. Perhaps IG cld place small percentage annual fon exchange budget in special fund pay compensation or service loan used such purpose. Move this nature very likely produce favorable Arab response and might begin movement toward peaceful settlement. Hopeful that such step by IG wld lead relaxation economic blockade, such as Israel's use Suez Canal for oil shipments with consequent reduced transportation expenses. Such advantages wld probably go far offset cost compensation. Indicated awareness Israel's econ financial difficulties but felt time had come when Israel must indicate desire and intention take steps resolve impasse with Arabs.

Eban referred Sharett's 1951 Knesset statement that while Israel considered Arab states responsible plight refugees and required cooperate their absorption, Israel recognized obligation compensate Arabs. Eban described lack Arab response this and other conciliatory gestures and said he had grave misgivings whether any good wld accrue Israel from sort action suggested by Byroade. Arab reiteration fact they and Israel still in technical state war, their refusal talk to Israelis at international mtgs, and increasingly effective blockade and boycott made it hard for Eban believe conciliatory gestures by Israel wld be considered by Arabs as anything more than sign weakness and provoke further hostile measures by Arabs in hope achieving collapse Israel. Eban described strange situation which wld result from Israel release blocked Arab accts, since Israel wld thus be paying money into countries blockading it and interfering with German restitution payments Israel. Eban stated Israel has counterclaims arising from damage and losses from the war, boycott and blockade and inability Jews Near Eastern countries such as Iraq obtain compensation property left behind. While he aware support some quarters theory ltd nr Arabs cld contribute Israel economy, under present conditions they might constitute serious security problem and he did not feel IG at present cld actively consider matter.

Referring IG's record past cooperation with PCC re compensation, specifically in problem assessing value land relinquished by refugees, which wld continue, Eban said it wld now be appropriate for IG negot with PCC compensation settlement to be implemented through UN.

Byroade pointed out action by IG such as he had suggested might well lead to conciliatory steps by Arabs; if IG were to wait until it was certain of this matter, movement toward settlement wld never occur. Particularly, he did not believe approach through PCC suggested by Eban adequate. He believed Naguib has earnest desire settle Palestine problem as far as Egypt concerned but wld take no step this direction until IG had done something effective about compensation.

Was pointed out IG's earmarking of money for compensation fund and announcement that fact wld not necessarily commit Israel continue with plan and carry out program if Arab attitude remained hostile. In short, US view is that steps along lines suggested to Eban wld produce easement tension and relaxation boycott and blockade. Only in such conditions cld Israel reasonably be expected pay large sum money involved in compensation. If Arab response turned out different than what US supposed, IG cld reexamine matter and modify policy accordingly.

Eban concluded mtg saying he considerably attracted by proposal set forth by Byroade. He wld communicate immed with IG in endeavor ascertain how far Israel cld commit itself at present time. He hoped he cld make statement at this GA along lines suggested.

SECRET DAMASCUS, November 25, 1952—6 p. m.

384. Deptel 319, Nov. 18. [2] Concur conclusion Dept reps re utility acceptance by Israel limited repatriation (para 1 reftel). US efforts "establish general recognition that repatriation refugees to Israel no longer feasible" wld only prejudice execution Syro-UNRWA agrmt and worsen US relations with Syria (cf. While Syria progressively more willing accept fact of resettlement, attempt to disavow principle of repatriation likely drive them to extreme position in supporting it.

Para 2(b) points to conclusion US assistance Israel will be required permit that govt pay compensation. If this occurs in context diminution US aid available Arab states (as seems possible under new Congress) good effect on Syrians of compensation payments likely be lost in renewed condemnation US "partiality". Minutes of the Fifteenth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the Seventh Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly, New York, November 28, 1952

US/A/M(Chr)/252

The Secretary opened the meeting and called upon Mr. Barco.

I. Palestine

Mr. Barco began his presentation with a short history of the Palestine case in the General Assembly. At the end of the 1948 Session, the Palestine Conciliation Commission (PCC) had been established to assist the parties to resolve their differences. The resolution called for an extension of the scope of the armistice negotiations to be undertaken either by the parties themselves, or with the help of the PCC. It urged that the refugees who wished to return to Palestine should be allowed to do so. Those not desiring to return were to be compensated. Responsibility for repatriating or compensating was given to the PCC. The third responsibility of the Commission was to draft a statute for the international regime in Jerusalem.

The theme of the activities of the PCC had been one of frustration. Many attempts had been made, and almost all were total failures. During the first year, the Commission tried to bring the parties together on the various issues referred to above. Its failure in this attempt was reported to the Assembly. Efforts were continued along these lines in 1950, with an emphasis on seeking to get the parties to negotiate directly.

In 1951, the Commission had sought to make proposals itself on matters of substance. In July of that year a conference of the parties with the PCC was called, in Paris, in accordance with the request by the Arab Delegations for the PCC to mediate. Proposals concerning repatriation, compensation, the discharge of war claims, and territorial readjustments were made by the Commission and rejected virtually out of hand by both parties. At the Sixth Session of the Assembly, in Paris, the United States had proposed that the Commission impress upon the parties the fact that primary responsibility rested upon them. A resolution was passed which kept the Commission available to the parties, but they had made no real attempt to use it. On a few limited questions the Commission had used its own initiative. The PCC had obtained the agreement of the Government of Israel to release the blocked accounts of the Arab refugees held in foreign banks in Israel. A first installment of one million pounds sterling had been released, and the Commission was trying to work out, with the Arabs, a scheme for disbursing this sum.

At the Seventh Session of the Assembly a new situation had arisen wherein two items on the political questions of Palestine had been proposed by the parties. There had been no PCC report to the Assembly in 1952, but only progress reports made to the membership of the UN. The first item was that proposed by the Arabs, and some Asian delegations, which would have the PCC carry out its work in the light of past resolutions of the Assembly. The second item, introduced by Israel, involved the "refusal" of the Arab States to assume the obligations of the Charter and of the resolutions of the Assembly to come to terms with Israel and settle their differences.

Regarding the first item, Mr. Barco said that the Arabs planned to introduce a resolution (US/A/AC.61/7)[1] which would state that the PCC had not been able to fulfill its mandate and so would change the membership from 3 to 7 members. It would contain very strict terms of reference in accordance with the 1948 resolution of the Assembly, and would have the Commission sit in Jerusalem. It was not, at that time, certain whether this resolution would be introduced. The Arabs had been told that we could not accept this draft, that it was not helpful to increase the membership, and that the terms of reference should relate to the possible, building on what little had been done in the past. We had asked them to give us something in writing, but up to that time they had not done so.

Six "neutral" delegations had introduced the resolution contained in document A/AC.61/L.23[2] concerning the second item.

[2] This joint draft resolution, originally submitted to the Ad Hoc Political Committee by Canada, Denmark, Ecuador, the Netherlands, Norway, and Uruguay, was also later sponsored by Cuba (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.1) and by Panama (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.2). Under this eight-power draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.23/Rev.2), the General Assembly would (1) call upon all parties to desist from any further acts of hostility; (2) reaffirm the principle that the governments concerned had the primary responsibility for reaching a settlement; (3) urge these governments to begin early direct negotiations for a settlement; and (4) request the Palestine Conciliation Commission to be available for that purpose, if so desired.

Continued

This resolution had been inspired by the Israeli Delegation and contained a clear call to the parties for direct negotiations and asked the PCC, as presently constituted, to remain available. In answer to questions as to the US attitude on this draft resolution, we had indicated that we were sympathetic to its objectives, but pointed out that we had no responsibility for drafting it, and were offering no amendments. We felt that the best way to obtain progress, in view of the frustrating history of this case, was to do whatever was possible on certain technical questions while hoping that one day the parties would agree to negotiate directly. At that point the only thing to do was to wait upon the Arab delegations to see how far they would go, and how near they might come to our views.

Mrs. Roosevelt asked whether the United States had ever told the Arabs that repatriation of the refugees to Israel was impossible. Mr. Barco answered that this had never been done officially or publicly, but that certain statements had implied this. He added that if this idea could be accepted, it would remove one very thorny obstacle to a final settlement. The fear was, however, that if it were publicly stated, it would most likely provoke the Arabs and prevent negotiations.

Mrs. Roosevelt noted that Baroodi (Saudi Arabia) had talked in very sentimental and nostalgic tones of the houses and the trees, and the land that awaited the return of the Arab refugees. However, during her trip through Israel the previous Spring, she had not found any of these unoccupied houses, to which Baroodi referred, in Haifa or elsewhere. In fact, the great influx of population had eliminated whatever excess land there had been. She recalled that she had been greeted by groups of both Arab children and adults, who spoke no English, but who arose spontaneously upon seeing her, and spoke in perfect English saying, we want to go home. It had been obvious to her that this was all a manufactured spontaneity. While, no doubt, originally these refugees had desired to return, that feeling would long since have died, but for the fact that it was being nurtured and kept alive by the Arabs for their own purposes. She thought that perhaps we could encourage the few realists and urge their acceptance of a "temporary resettlement", which would have to be for a very long time.

Mrs. Roosevelt had been quite depressed at the things she had seen in the Arab refugee camps. There was a total lack of the necessary preservation of skills and crafts which should be handed down from the older to the younger generation, a lack which was due to an attempt to avoid anything which might become permanent. Conditions in these camps were "dreadful". Arab officials and, perhaps, a few Communists, bore the responsibility for keeping these conditions alive. Mrs. Roosevelt realized that she could not say all this to them as plainly as she spoke to the Delegation, but if the Arabs "were going to wail for two thousand years", like the Jews in waiting for a return to their homeland, it should be at a new place and something would have to be done for the intervening generations.

In the course of the debate on the Palestine item in the Ad Hoc Political Committee between Nov. 25 and Dec. 11, two other draft resolutions were submitted: a joint draft resolution by Afghanistan, Indonesia, Iran, and Pakistan (A/AC.61/L.25); and a Syrian draft resolution (A/AC.61/L.33).

Mr. Plitt noted that he and Mr. Byroade and other members of the NEA Bureau, in their private talks with the Arabs, had always urged against the keeping alive of the idea of repatriation. A most recent example had been in a talk with Prince Faisal, of Saudi Arabia, but his reaction had been typical. This was simply not an issue on which the Arabs could back down. Ambassador Jessup agreed that the situation of the Arab refugees was deplorable, and acknowledged that the Arab States were responsible for keeping this matter stirred up. He noted, however, that the Arabs felt themselves in a bad bargaining position, and realized that the emotional appeal of the plight of the refugees was a valuable bargaining element. We must take this attitude of the Arabs into account. Furthermore, in the Assembly, with Arab leaders such as Jamali, of Iraq, making wild and extreme statements, no other Arab Delegate could publicly disagree although many did so in private.

It seemed to the Secretary, in his talk with the Syrian Foreign Minister, that there had been an indication that there might be a slight movement from dead-center. The Syrian had told him of their plans for "improvement in the conditions of living" of the Arab refugees. While they refused to call this resettlement, it seemed to amount to the same thing.

Mr. Ward Allen asked what the general climate was with regard to the two resolutions referred to above. Mr. Barco saw a widespread feeling for a more realistic approach to the overall problem. A certain amount of bargaining would have to be done, but at least the Assembly was trying to move this matter along. Mr. Stein pointed to a hopeful sign, in that some delegations had flatly stated, in their speeches, that large-scale repatriation to Israel was impossible.

Ambassador Jessup said that the complex history of this case in the Assembly indicated a certain pattern which would apply to these two resolutions. The six-power draft was generally known to have been inspired by the Israelis. The Arabs were, so far, feeling their way. The general tendency in the past had been to reach a common ground so that neither side violently opposed what the Assembly finally adopted. We could expect, therefore, an extreme Arab draft resolution from which they could move toward a compromise. Alternatively, the Arabs might introduce their extreme ideas as amendments to the six-power draft. It was generally felt, in the Assembly, that there was little use in passing something which one side or the other vehemently opposed.

[Here follows a short discussion of the situation in Korea.]

The Delegation meeting then adjourned.

In view above and Damascus' 400 to Dept,[4] believe approach IG Embassy Washington unnecessary at present.

Comment: On the whole Embassy believes prospects for success somewhat more favorable as result IG reaction to jet deals and general discouragement due to possible implications Prague trial. After saying he strongly favored IG's continuation talks with Syria, Shiloah stated candidly that he doubted whether Syrian Govt would find it politically feasible enter into agreement with Israel even if basis for division demilitarization zone could be agreed upon. He thought moreover that jet deal and any other steps toward supplying armaments to Syria would definitely lessen feeling that settlement with Israel is either necessary or advantageous. He continued, however, that defeatism should not be permitted prevent real effort find some basis for agreement.

He expects Syria's opening proposal to be more than Israel can accept, but hopes some middle ground can be found that will make agreement possible. He feels that "merely to break ice" would be worth some sacrifice, but question is whether price will be too high and whether leadership can carry matter through even if agreement reached. He was not sanguine on either score. Needless to say I encouraged recognition value of any settlement and desirability make real effort achieve results.

Only major Syr agrmts on sensitive issues since Pal war have been concluded by strong Govts: Tapline concession and Syro-Israel armistice by Zaim, and UNRWA agrmt by Shishikli. That supply of arms enhances Western influence in Syr demonstrated by French and more recently by UK (Embdes 314 November 20). [2]

Against advantages to West of promotion stable and friendly regime in Arab states, Israeli arguments against delivery UK jets would seem carry little weight. Israel reliance should surely not be placed on keeping surrounding states impotent and unsatisfied but rather on increasing coop among mutually self-respecting states in context tripartite declaration and eventual area defense arrangements.

The Ambassador in Lebanon (Minor) to the Department of State[1]

SECRET BEIRUT, December 19, 1952.

1206. I have refrained from expressing my opinions re our UN attitude on Palestine because I have not wished compromise my reporting usefulness by overemphasis, for fear of being marked down as unreasonably pro-Arab (which I am not) and to avoid reputation of being a crank (which I hope I am not). But dream world aura of Dept's 671, Dec 15, 1952,[2] causes prudence to give way to candor. Please, therefore, bear with me while I play this last (tragic) movement of Near Eastern sonata.

I have long plugged for an area-wide, unbiased, truly Amer Near Eastern policy, free from Zionist pressures or Arab emotional intransigencies. We simply must reassure Arabs, set at rest their overweening fears, and give evidence of objectivity. If this is not done, it is quite possible Arab world will drift into chaos and ultimately go way of China. It is even possible that Russian game of anti-Semitic footsie will give Russians high position in Arab world which is already full of neutralism. Perhaps we have deceived ourselves into thinking Arab world in last four years was out of the battle. Arabs have indeed been punch drunk, but they are very much back in the ring for another go and have plenty of new-found energy and friends to see them through.

I have long also stressed the view that mechanisms of power in NE are inadequate to remedy situation until human, psychological, political atmosphere is improved. I have consistently advised against pushing MEDO until the general political framework in NE is right. I have pointed out hopelessness improving our position through Point 4 under these negative circumstances. I now suggest that economic aid to NE is unrealistic until we have psychological setting in which such efforts could be made effective. Gailani in Iraq told Sen Gillette that 15 billion dollars of Amer money under these circumstances wld not win Arab world and had just as well be poured into Mediterranean. This is bravado and exaggeration, but it contains generous germ of truth.

Specifically, if our action on Palestine at UN was designed to put Arabs on defensive or show Arab world exactly where we stand, it was successful. If, however, our eye was on ultimate objective of re-establishing an Amer leadership position in NE, it was misguided. Coming at time when Arab world is inflamed against us, when logic has given way to emotionalism, and when Arabs are beginning to turn screws on us in retaliation, such actions set us back violently and needlessly. True, the Arabs are acting in a childish fashion, the difficulty of dealing with them is more than apparent to us who face them daily. But if we are to make progress, we must endeavor see things through their eyes and understand the complexes which govern them.

I wish I were capable of painting a word picture to instill in the Dept the sense of urgency to our own national interest which we Americans of all kinds in the NE feel. Loss of this great land mass, coming on top of the loss of China, could truly be a national catastrophe. It can be avoided, in my opinion, if hard decisions are taken. The Arabs will and must be required to settle for less than the destruction of Israel. Once they are convinced that we are not solidly with Israel and against them, and once our leadership position is restored, we can follow a middle of the road course with courage and conviction.

It is a time of hard decision. Could we not seek out some reasonable action which would convince the Arab world of our objectivity. I suggest the internationalization of Jerusalem (although I know reaction in Wash will be that it is impossible and can be done only by force). Nevertheless, it is a just issue on which to stand, one already approved by the UN, and one which wld give dramatic evidence to the Arab world that we can say "no" to Zionism. In any event, I hope we will stop trying to force Arab world into peace with Israel for this can only frustrate its own objective and contribute to our further decline in the area.

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Austin) to the Department of State

SECRET NEW YORK, December 20, 1952—2:24 p. m.

Delga 389. Re Palestine. For Dept's consideration and further planning our conclusions on outcome of Pal debate may be summarized as fols:

1. Defeat of 8-power draft res, after our intensive efforts obtain wide support (Gadel 104)[1] and our consistent efforts from beginning debate to encourage widespread expression opinion favoring direct negotiations, should not be regarded as substantive setback. Net result of consideration Pal question this Assembly has been to make clear that majority opinion in UN favors settlement undertaken directly by parties and that Assembly can no longer be expected entertain discussion on Pal question on basis past Arab policy and practices. Net result may also indicate, however, Assembly cannot be expected to give affirmative sanction to total disregard by Israel of past UN resolutions on Pal.

Arab reps here, we feel, recognize that their reliance on past resolutions to avoid practical solution and settlement with Israel of outstanding Pal questions has lost much of its effectiveness. Thus Jamali (Iraq), following yesterday's plenary mtg, said to USDel he recognized Arab policy in bringing question to this session of Assembly had been mistake, but that there were still constructive actions that could be taken which he sincerely hoped we would not lose sight of. (He also expressed regret that situation had led to Sov support.)

Mostafa (Egypt) expressed his belief that outcome Pal debate provided opportunity for constructive action by continuing PCC efforts on practical problems and said he planned so inform PCC by letter. Mostafa expressed his disgust and regret at Arabs' bad handling Pal question and his disagreement with statement attributed to Shukairi (Syria) following plenary that PCC was not removed from Pal question. These and other substantial indications of split in Arab bloc will need careful appraisal in terms of our future policy toward the Arab States individually and as a group.

Israel reaction on outcome, as expressed to USDel immediately after plenary and later in evening, was one of satisfaction bordering on enthusiasm. Although disappointed GA was incapable taking desirable affirmative action, their net appraisal is that Assembly has in effect told parties it is up to them to settle their differences and that Arabs have actually suffered major defeat. (Arabs, on other hand, will certainly portray rejection of comite res as major defeat for Israel.) On questions of repatriation and internationalization of Jerusalem, Israel reps expressed view UN interest in these principles had been effectively diminished. Rafael stated that yesterday's vote showed UN can no longer muster a majority vote for internationalization of Jerusalem and that to put question thus to test had been from Catholic standpoint great error. Thus if local reps views can be taken as indicative general

Israel attitude, Israel may well feel that as result of this year's Pal debate they are freed from some of the troublesome restraints UN has previously imposed.

There was suggestion in Eban's and Rafael's attitude of feeling that PCC no longer had any function to serve. This attitude with respect to PCC seemed however to be more one of conjecture than a firm position.

2. Foregoing leads us to conclusion that outcome Pal debate this year can be turned to constructive advantage if urgent efforts are now made on realistic basis to deal with practical problems. Debate has cleared away some of atmosphere of unreality and, if prompt consideration is given problems of compensation and territorial adjustments of armistice lines, important and necessary progress can be made looking toward ultimate settlement between parties.

Arab Govts on reflection may well feel that they must salvage from their Pal policy some practical gains and therefore be more ready now to accept compensation and resettlement of refugees.

It seems to us most important, however, that time not be lost in pursuing these practical questions while some at least of Arab States are in receptive mood. If impression should be created that nothing along lines of compensation and territorial adjustment will be attempted the strength of extremists like Shukairi will be confirmed at expense of moderate Arab sentiment disposed to early settlement. Likewise, unless Israel is promptly advised to pursue program of blocked accounts to conclusion, and to undertake compensation and territorial adjustments without delay, tentative Israeli view that little of substance may now be expected of them will be confirmed and opportunity to move ahead in any of these fields may be lost.

3. We recommend that Dept consider immediate instructions to our missions in Tel Aviv and Arab capitals in light of above conclusions and encourage prompt action by Israel Govt and where appropriate by PCC on compensation, and conclusion total release of blocked accounts. If this done and Israeli reaction promising, Arab Govts should be encouraged anticipate results. Similarly disturbances on Israel borders should be made occasion strong representations that Israel make progress in enlarging armistice agreements and settling territorial problems involving demilitarized zones. These points are all matters on which Eban indicated in statements to committee progress could be made. In discussions prior to Assembly debate, Eban indicated Israel view that work along these lines could continue with assistance present UN machinery without Assembly action.

Missions in Arab countries and Tel Aviv should be informed of role played by Sov bloc in ensuring defeat of res unacceptable to Arabs as portending probable role Sov will play if prompt and realistic efforts by both sides to deal with these problems not made.

In addition to representations in Tel Aviv and Arab capitals, we urge early discussion with Israel Amb in Wash if Dept shares our appraisal and need for action.

He expressed "grave disquiet" over arms policy of western powers and ME, which he feels affects adversely prospects for peace, Israel's security, and plans for area defense. He said immediate source of concern was report from Israel Embassy Washington re conversation with Deputy Assistant Secretary Jernegan who had stated it impossible comply with Israel request obtain US jets at nominal price or receive free military aid, and indicated at same time USG might find it necessary extend military aid to Egypt.

FonMin stated that inference to be drawn from above is that tripartite declaration is no longer "sheet anchor of peace in area", since implication of declaration that there shall be no change in balance of power in area will be invalidated by British jet deals and proposed US military aid. He remarked that concerted action by powers apparently abandoned since British action re jets taken without prior US knowledge; and complained that nations which opposed direct negotiations in UN are not being subjected to pressure to make peace, but on contrary are actually rewarded by having arms put into their hands. He mentioned further absence of action re Suez blockade encourages Naguib to continue on his present course.

FonMin concluded with statement that seriousness of position make it impossible for Israel Government to keep silent, and that in circumstances matter would be discussed in cabinet meeting and public statement on subject would be made. 1064. Embtel 881. [2] Helpful attitude toward Yarmuk project indicated by Israeli Government in August (when Foreign Minister Sharett suggested to Fryer and me that US Point IV and Israel engineers discuss matter so that Israeli Government would be sufficiently informed to avoid actions that might hamper project—Embtel 281) [3] has been replaced by one of suspicion and resentment.

In line with apprehension revealed by Foreign Minister, (reftel), chief US division Foreign Ministry again raised Yarmuk question with Embassy officer, stating that "rumor strongly persists that mutually beneficial agreement for the construction of a dam as well as for a power and irrigation scheme has been signed between Syria and Jordan". Israel, he stated, "is not being kept informed" and "fears it will be faced with fait-accompli". In reply to Embassy officers reminder that Department had reaffirmed its assurances that it viewed favorably discussions between Israel experts and the engineers concerned, informant took position that meeting of engineers was now of "secondary importance" and that basic principle was involved. He stressed fact that Jordan's complaint last summer to changing salinity of Jordan River was taken up with Israel Government, while Israel not being kept informed of Yarmuk project vital to her interests. Expressed opinion that "If Israel finds self faced with fait accompli it will have to draw obvious conclusion that unilateral action by one side justifies unilateral action by other". During same conversation Tekoah of Foreign Ministry legal division reinforced above view with specific reference to interests of Kibbutzim on right bank of Yarmuk and Palestine electric concessions, and stressed "Israel's right to be consulted before plans for project worked out". Water problems in area, he emphasized, could only be handled on inter-state basis and Israel ready to discuss water problems directly with Arab countries on any level.

[2] In telegram 881 from Tel Aviv, Nov. 28, Davis reported that Sharett had mentioned to him that morning having seen press reports that Jordan and Syria had signed an agreement on the Yarmuk project. Sharett referred to prior expressions of the Israeli Government's interest in the matter and its desire to be kept informed, and suggested that a project involving Yarmuk water rights should be the subject of international conversation. Davis recommended to the Department early action to bring Israel into discussions. (884A.2614/11-2852)

[3] Telegram 281 from Tel Aviv, Aug. 18, reported that Ambassador Davis and Fryer had expressed the hope to Sharett that the Israeli Government would not put obstacles in the way of Jordan's Yarmuk project. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Palestine–Israel–Jordan Affairs (Waller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 5, 1953.

Subject: Arms Supplies for States of the Near East.

Participants: The Secretary
Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel Embassy
Mr. David Goitein, Minister, Israel Embassy
Col. Chaim Herzog, Defense Attaché, Israel Embassy
NE—Mr. Hart
NE—Mr. Waller

Ambassador Eban, accompanied by Mr. Goitein and Colonel Herzog, called on the Secretary at 4:30 today to express the concern of the Israel Government at the prospect of arms being supplied to the Arab States, particularly Egypt.

The Ambassador's statements were, in effect, a résumé of information furnished the Department during the past several weeks by members of the Israel Embassy and by the Israel Minister for Foreign Affairs to Ambassador Davis in Tel Aviv. Ambassador Eban left an Aide-Mémoire which covers the points made. These were:

1. The Arab States have been enabled to strengthen their armed forces beyond the scale of Israel's increase in defensive strength. Egypt, which is within easy range of Israel, has already acquired many jet-propelled aircraft from the Western Powers, while Israel has not a single aircraft of equivalent speed or power. The Ambassador recalled that the invasion of Israel in 1948 began with bombing attacks by Egyptian aircraft on the undefended city of Tel Aviv.

2. The United Kingdom, in November 1952, announced its willingness to sell further jet-propelled aircraft to Egypt, and 14 such aircraft each to Iraq, Syria, Lebanon and Israel. The results of this transaction were:

a. a further and sudden increase of the air strength of the Arab States in relation to Israel; and

b. the imposition on Israel of the necessity to keep pace with this Arab rearmament by diverting funds from economic development to arms purchases. Israel was given to understand that the United States had not supported, but had been unable to prevent this action by the United Kingdom.

Thus, a fair level of armament was no longer being observed between Israel and the States whose armies had invaded her in 1948; the Western Powers were sending arms to Arab States without tripartite coordination; and an arms race had begun, involving political tensions and financial strain.

3. On November 10, 1952 the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom replied to a Note which the Israel Government had submitted on this question on September 30, 1952. These replies were deeply disappointing. They implied that the refusal of Arab States to negotiate a peace settlement with Israel had no effect on the fitness of those States to receive shipments of arms from the very Western Powers which strongly believed that a peace settlement should be negotiated.

4. On November 13, 1952, Foreign Minister Sharett asked Ambassador Davis for information on United States policy in the supply of arms to Arab States and suggested alternative methods whereby the United States might assist Israel to make the arms purchases necessitated by the unfortunate decision to supply jet planes to the Arab States.

5. On December 17, 1952, Israel's disquiet was increased by a conversation between Acting Assistant Secretary of State Jernegan, Minister Goitein and Colonel Chaim Herzog of the Israel Embassy. From this statement it emerged that

a. The United States did not intend to oppose the supply of jet aircraft by the United Kingdom to Arab States, or to facilitate by financial aid the acquisition of jet planes by Israel.

b. On the other hand, the United States appeared to be contemplating a measure of special military aid to Egypt in order to strengthen the regime in power there.

In their conversation on December 26, 1952, Ambassador Davis was able to give Mr. Sharett no assurances which would indicate that the apprehensions of the Government of Israel were not well founded.

6. On December 30, 1952 the Government of the United Kingdom publicly announced its intention to continue selling jet aircraft to the States of the Near East. This statement was issued immediately after the Arab governments, meeting in Cairo, had reaffirmed their refusal to conclude a peace settlement with Israel, notwithstanding the express desire of the Western Powers that they negotiate such a settlement.

This disposition by the United States and the United Kingdom to increase the armament of Arab States, principally Egypt, has coincided with the following political developments in the Near East.

a. On September 14, 1952, at a time when a moderate atmosphere was beginning to prevail, six Arab States decided to raise a discussion of the "Palestine" question in the United Nations on the basis of vehement charges against Israel and extreme one-sided proposals. The General Assembly ignored or rejected all these charges and proposals, but only after the Arab States had provoked a fierce debate which increased regional tension.

b. In September 1952, under the initiative of General Naguib, the Arab States published a declaration that they were "at war" with Israel and threatened the Federal Republic of Germany with drastic reprisals if that Government did not repudiate its agreement obliging it to make material compensation for the plunder of European Jewry.

c. In the United Nations on November 12 and November 25, 1952, Egypt again announced its alleged state of belligerency with Israel as a reason for opposing the Israeli-German agreement. The Ambassador said he understood that it has not been usual for the United States to authorize the export of arms to States which proclaim belligerency and a "state of war" with other States in friendly relation with the United States.

d. During December 1952 the Arab States in the United Nations, together with Asian and Communist states, opposed a Resolution supported by the United States, the United Kingdom, France, many countries of Western Europe, the Commonwealth and Latin America, and later approved by the Special Political Committee of the General Assembly, calling for a negotiated peace between the Arab States and Israel. The United States spokesman had described this Resolution as "fair to all legitimate Arab interests." Israel had accepted it and made a detailed peace proposal, including non-aggression undertakings, to which the Arab States had failed to respond.

e. Egypt has continued, and still continues, to refuse compliance with the Security Council's Resolution of September 1, 1951 calling for an end of all blockade regulations and practices. While Egypt appears to have retreated, under the prospect of discussions in the United Nations, from particular extensions of the blockade recently initiated by General Naguib, the blockade regulations as they existed when the Security Council condemned them on September 1, 1951 are still in force without any modification. The Ambassador said he understood that it has not been usual, since the establishment of the United Nations, for the United States to authorize the export of arms to a government which was in violation of the security provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, as interpreted in a Security Council Resolution. Indeed, on August 4, 1949, according to statements made by Ambassador Warren Austin, the United States undertook to support the resumption of arms to Near Eastern states only on condition that no "acts of hostility" would be committed and by definition of the United States representative in the Security Council on August 16, 1951, blockade is certainly to be regarded as an "act of hostility".

f. The Arab Governments, especially Egypt and Syria, have continued to dissociate themselves from all plans for defending democracy in the Near East against any aggression from outside. It will be recalled that in the Security Council on June 25, 1950, Egypt had declined to approve resistance to aggression in Korea, with the result that this resistance was almost deprived of the international sanction which constitutes one of its most important moral and material assets. Proposals for regional defence in the Near East have been frustrated by Egypt's opposition in principle, which has still not been modified. As recently as December 23, 1952, Egypt and Syria aided a Communist propaganda manoeuvre by leading a group of Arab-Asian States in abstaining on a Resolution directing gross insult against United Nations forces, and especially American troops in Korea.

g. Democracy, which is the only sure moral foundation for a free world united against tyranny, has been increasingly set aside in Arab States in favor of dictatorships, at the very time when Parliamentary government has been stabilized and widened in Israel. To the Government of Israel it appears inconceivable that the Western Powers, in their arms policy, should discriminate in favor of those whose internal and international policies show no responsible awareness of the threats to world freedom.

The Ambassador summarized by saying the Arab Governments, principally Egypt, are in conflict with the policies of the free world, including Israel, on the following points: Refusal to negotiate an Arab-Israel peace settlement; maintenance of a doctrine of belligerency and war; active practices of blockade in pursuit of a theory of belligerency rejected by the Security Council; neutralism accompanied by a refusal to cooperate with Israel or with other powers in organizing the defence of the area for freedom; unwillingness to maintain or respect free institutions.

Each of these factors by itself might well justify the suspension of projects for increasing the armament of Arab States. In aggregate, they seem to constitute a remarkably impressive list of disqualifications for arms aid.

There are many methods, short of the perilous increase of military power, whereby the Western Powers, if they desire, can strengthen the economic stability of Near Eastern States in ways which would not affect Israel's security. There are also opportunities whereby the influence of the Western Powers could be effectively used to promote peace and democracy in the area. But for the Western Powers to select this moment of renewed tension for sending arms to Egypt, or other Arab countries, would surely constitute a threat to the security of Israel; to the peace of the Near East; and to principles of equity, caution and restraint which the United States and the United Kingdom both agreed to observe in statements to the Security Council on August 4, 1949, and in the Tripartite Declaration which they made jointly with France on May 25, 1950.

The Secretary stated that he was impressed with the seriousness of the problems raised by the Ambassador. The Arab reaction to the Israel-German agreement came as a surprise to him, the Secretary said, as he had not anticipated such a strong reaction. He hoped a solution would soon be worked out.

The Secretary then referred to the question of arms for the Arab States and said that our participation in the Tripartite Declaration was, and continues to be, a serious undertaking. We do not have the slightest disposition to start an arms race.

The Secretary said we do want to strengthen General Naguib, although we find it difficult to determine how best to do so. The Secretary felt that General Naguib has moved a long way toward a solution of the Sudan problem, and appears willing to do something regarding the base. After these two problems have been resolved General Naguib should be able to move toward peace, including the Suez blockade and other problems which more directly concern Israel.

The United States has considered ways to extend economic help to General Naguib, but we have a surplus of what the Egyptians have available for sale. Long staple cotton is an example. General Naguib wants military equipment. Most of it is for internal security purposes, but some is not. Regarding the latter, the Secretary felt that the Israel Government was rightly concerned. However, we do not consider the amount contemplated involves any threat to Israel. Our purpose is to provide General Naguib with a foundation of military assistance—to encourage him and to get him into a position where he will be with us, and not out of control. We see no threat to Israel—or at most only a "paper" or theoretical threat, as General Naguib's army is not very good and our military aid will be so modest it could not cause any upsetting of the balance in the Near East.

With regard to the British decision to supply jet aircraft to certain Near East states, the Secretary said that this came as a surprise to him. He understood the British motivation was purely commercial.

In conclusion the Secretary said that all he could say at the moment was that he was deeply appreciative of the seriousness of the problems raised by the Ambassador and that he would carefully reexamine them in the light of what the Ambassador had said. He emphasized, however, that we believe it is most important that two problems—Sudan and the base—be settled as soon as possible.

Ambassador Eban informed the Secretary that Israel's Foreign Minister, Mr. Sharett, has gone to Rangoon to attend the Asian Socialist Conference. The Foreign Minister instructed Ambassador Eban to express to the Secretary Israel's appreciation for the consideration which the Secretary has always shown and the help given in the solution of some of Israel's problems.

The Ambassador in Syria (Moose) to the Department of State

SECRET DAMASCUS, January 6, 1953.
No. 402

Ref: Embtel 462, January 1, 1953 [1]

Subject: Head of State Selo Comments to Ambassador on Syro-Israeli Relations

During a conversation on subjects of mutual interest on December 29, General Selo made some interesting observations on his country's present and future relations with Israel (see enclosure), [2] in the course of which he predicted "peace" with that country in due course if Israel would abandon its provocative tactics. The Head of State ridiculed Israel complaints about Syrian "aggressive" intentions, stating that there was no thought of using arms which Syria has or may eventually secure against Israel, and indicated his willingness to give assurances to this effect if the additional arms Syria needs for its defense could thereby be obtained.

So far as the Embassy knows, this is the first reference by a Syrian official, even privately, to the possibility of "peace" with Israel. General Selo's comment reflects the increasingly realistic view which he and Colonel Shishikli are taking of the Palestine question. His remarks lend added moment to Syria's standing offer to Israel (Embtel 400, 12/1/52) [3] to undertake direct negotiations with a view to replacing the present demilitarized zone with a de facto frontier. Though the Syrian Government will hardly go as far to meet Israeli desires as the Tel Aviv Government would like, it is hoped that the opportunity created by the Syrian willingness to negotiate some points of difference now will not be lost through continued delay in the Israeli reply. A limited frontier accord such as is now desired by Syria need not exclude the possibility of more general settlements in the future.

EXCERPT FROM MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION OF DECEMBER 29, 1952, BETWEEN AMBASSADOR MOOSE AND GENERAL SELO

General Selo ridiculed Israeli complaints about Syrian "aggressive intentions". He stated that Syria is desirous of eliminating frontier incidents with Israel, adding that he recognized the fact of Israel's continued existence and the need for Syria to accommodate its policy to that fact. He predicted peace with Israel in the course of time, provided Israel can be persuaded to abandon its provocative tactics. He described the role of "God's chosen people" as being difficult for any nation and said that Israel has hitherto been anything but a good neighbor to Syria. However, the Syrian authorities have no thought of using arms which they have, or may eventually secure, against Israel. General Selo indicated his willingness to give assurances to this effect if he could thereby be enabled to secure arms which Syria needs for its own defense.

[3] Although Deptel 679, January 14 [4] was not received until today, January 16, Embassy lost no opportunity express USG interest in success of talks and stress advantages settlement demilitarized zone problems. Most recent occasion was January 13 when matter was discussed with Kozlek now Director General office Prime Minister, who agreed that all possible should be done reach settlements with Arab neighbors. Later he advised that he had discussed matter with Ben Gurion, who is now taking vacation in Tiberias, and that latter was in agreement re importance of making real effort improve relations.

In presence of Director General Foreign Ministry, Walter Eytan this morning, Joseph Tekoah who attended yesterday's meeting as representative Foreign Ministry reported that meeting was convened at 11:30 a.m. at Rosh Pina where UNTSO was represented by Colonel Taxis and Mr. Vigier Syria by Lieutenant Colonels Jaddid and Shetula, and Israel by Brigadier General Dayan, Lieutenant Colonel Gaon, and Majors Friedlander and Modai. He stated that in opening remarks General Dayan accepted Syria's suggestion that negotiations be within framework of armistice agreement. Colonel Jaddid then proposed agenda of four points, namely implementation of Security Council resolution May 18, 1951; status quo in demilitarized zones; restoration of normal civilian life therein; and modification of demarcation line. Israeli Government representatives raised Yugoslav delegation objections to considering first three points, adding observation that if agreement should be reached on point four discussion of others would be unnecessary.

Informant stated Colonel Taxis supported proposal to exclude first three points in order to "get along with" important fourth point. Jaddid accepted, whereupon Chairman called a recess during which Jaddid stated informally he would propose demarcation line that would extend through center of Huleh Lake and thence along course of Jordan River through center of Lake Kinnereth (Sea of Galilee). He intimated this would not necessarily be last word, which was taken to mean that Syria would be disposed to consider a line taking into account Israeli agricultural settlements on eastern shore of both lakes (Dardara on Huleh and Ein Gen on Sea of Galilee). It was agreed that meeting should be reconvened so that Syria delegate could make his proposal of record and Israel's representative could make reply for consideration of Syrian Government prior to next meeting.

After recess Jaddid put forward proposal as above outlined; and General Dayan replied line as suggested would be unacceptable to Israeli Government, which considers international boundary with possibly minor modifications to East and West, proper basis for settlement. Next meeting was set tentatively for Monday January 19.

It was mentioned in conversation which followed that Syria proposed stipulation that agreement would be "without prejudice to a final settlement", concerning which Eytan remarked facetiously that he might add "and without advantage to Israel". In discussing Syria's interest in fishing rights, those present expressed view there should be no difficulty over this point since Israeli Government had already taken position it would recognize rights of individuals to fish as under mandate. It was apparent however, that Foreign Ministry representatives felt that proceedings of meeting had gone much as expected, and although not optimistic they consider it desirable proceed with negotiations.

Rafael (Israel), who expects to return to Israel for reassignment at the close of the second part of the GA, told USUN Jan. 16 he had been asked to become a kind of "high commissioner for peace" in the Middle East, with the overall task of directing the new peace initiative. In his view, the Israel Government was in much stronger position now to formulate and carry through concrete plans for settling matters with the Arab governments.

In general, Rafael said, their program would follow the lines of Eban's (Israel) blueprint for peace as put forward during the GA debate. Plans had been worked out to a certain point in the FonOff and now required inter-departmental consideration.

Rafael stated he would not accept the proffered assignment until he knew what the final program would be. The FonOff thinking was that an over-all plan should be developed to cover every element in the total ME picture, each question to be approached from the standpoint of practical, beneficial appeal to the Arabs' self-interest, and each to be related to the others.

Specifically, Rafael continued, the blueprint would include the problems of compensation to Arab refugees and territorial adjustments. On both, they hoped now to go beyond the principles involved and set forth detailed propositions.

—Hopes for consultations with US—

Once discussions in the government had reached a concrete form, Rafael hoped consultations could begin with the US. Agreement between the two governments on a program and the implementing measures seemed to him essential to success.

Meanwhile, Rafael hoped the PCC would lie low. He questioned, therefore, the advisability of the PCC sending a communication to the Arab states as had been done last year. This might provoke embarrassing requests from the Arabs which would prejudice later action on the Israeli peace program. He suggested letters to the parties be deferred at least until the end of the GA.

His delegation planned to seek an early meeting with Senator Lodge to discuss its new approach to ME questions, Rafael said. He expressed great satisfaction over Lodge's appointment and felt the delegation and administration were in a particularly fortunate situation to take the initiative in the Middle East.[1]

Now that Foreign Minister has returned, I propose seek early opportunity discuss with him importance of continuing efforts to improve relations with Arabs despite "disillusionment," mentioning particularly proposed publicity support when release of blocked balances is about to take place.

Embassy comment: While there may be some disappointment that announcement plans release Arab blocked balances had so little effect, it is believed that this has been relatively minor factor in "disillusionment" and that reasons are much broader. As Department knows, Israel has always doubted effectiveness of unilateral gestures as means of overcoming Arab unwillingness make peace or negotiate settlements with Israeli Government, and unquestionably certain recent events have intensified this feeling greatly of late. Some of more important and direct causes have been concerted Arab effort to upset German reparations agreement, and general stepping up of political and economic measures against Israel (e.g. Embtel 1167). SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, January 23, 1953—8 p. m.

1183. During past 3 months, Israel has suffered series of shocks that have affected profoundly public thinking and morale. Roughly in order of importance, adverse factors have been: 1, Prague trials and subsequent developments making Russian bloc's change of policy from one of no racial discrimination to one frankly exploiting anti-Semitism and unfriendliness toward Israel; 2, Intensification of Arab collective action against Israel; 3, Success of latter in increasing Israel's economic difficulties, notably by delaying and jeopardizing German reparations agreement; 4, Action of UK in supplying Arab countries jet planes in numbers Israel cannot hope to match; 5, Fear this presages change in Western arms policy from that enunciated in tripartite declaration 1950.

Embassy believes that above developments will have far reaching effects and that continued deterioration in Arab-Israel relations could bring about what would be precisely to Russia's advantage, namely renewal of Arab-Israel hostilities with serious consequences to Western powers in general and tripartite countries in particular. There is no question of Israel's desiring such development. On contrary last thing government and great majority of people here want is war with their neighbors. Danger lies in possibility that Israelis may become convinced they have no chance of peace, their financial position is hopeless, and their existence is in imminent peril; and that as a consequence some untoward event may precipitate active hostilities.

Their faith and determination are still strong but the discouraging developments alluded to above and lack of any favorable reaction to their efforts to improve relations as reported Embtel 665, October 23 have resulted in some feeling of disillusionment (Deptel 673 [2] and Embtel 1174 [3]). Israelis are especially disappointed that both Shishikli and Naguib, with whose efforts to improve conditions in their own countries they are in sympathy and from whom they hoped for some constructive move toward area peace, should apparently have given way to pressure for increased Arab action against Israel. They felt especially keenly Naguib's public action against German reparations agreement, which diminished their hopes for rapprochement with Egypt under his leadership. Defeat of eight power resolution in GA and deterioration in relations with Jordan have served to intensify earlier disappointments.

In circumstances prospects for progress toward area stability have lessened and potential dangers of explosive situation such as that developing with Jordan have increased. One impression gained during and since my trip to neighboring countries in December is that Arab attitude toward Israel has hardened due in part at least to feeling that blockade has Israel in critical situation. Another impression gained from colleagues in Arab countries was that altho question of compensation of refugees important, Arabs unlikely to ease blockade to make compensation payments possible, since to do so would be inconsistent with Arab hopes to bring Israel to knees by means of economic measures and common policy of making no separate agreement with this country.

It is obvious that Russian influence can be counted on to do utmost to prevent local, national or area agreements that would improve Arab-Israel relations. Russian techniques already observable include creation of popular demand for imposition unattainable conditions as prerequisite for negotiations, stigmatizing as traitor any one disposed to settle difficulties, incitement of students, use of "anti-imperialism" propaganda, and exploitation of xenophobia in general.

Depcirtel 586[4] outlines constructive approach, believe new developments call for review of immediate policy objectives and methods. Recommendations follow.

more serious military aggression. Israel motive presumed to be desire to impress western powers with undesirability of arming Arab states but Israel appears to intend to make Jordan appear responsible (see Tel Aviv's 1167, January 21).[2] This idea reflected in sensational article in Israel press.

Embassy assured on unimpeachable authority that Arab Legion has taken radical steps to avoid possible clashes on armistice line.

When Israelis announced that they about to denounce local commanders agreement Jordan MAC representative said that Jordan would enter into no further such agreements as they had been violated by Israel and had proved ineffective.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] January 26, 1953.

Subject: Current United States–Lebanon Relations

Overall

Late September of 1952 saw the downfall of the nine year regime of President Bechara el Khouri through abdication, and its replacement by the reform government of President Camille Chamoun. The present cabinet consists of four men: Prime Minister Khalid Chehab, Foreign Minister Musa Mubarak, Minister of Defense Selim Haidar, Minister of Finance George Hakim. The new government, which is not expected to last long, has concentrated on reform by decree law of abuses prevalent the former regime. Elections under the new law are expected in early Spring. Overall relations with the United States Government continue to depend largely on United States actions towards Israel.

Point IV

On January 15 the Lebanese Government signed 12 more Point IV project agreements; this removed the existing impasse and signified a considerable advance over the last months of inactivity, during which proposed agreements had been delayed or shelved by the Lebanese. The Lebanese objected to the small scale aid as compared with United States aid to Israel. A number of hitherto inactive United States technicians are now able to put their plans into operation. Only seven technicians out of 67 now remain uncovered by signed agreements, and may be reassigned elsewhere in the area. Lebanese newspapers are now voicing support for Point IV; they had previously criticized the program.

Private Interests

The Trans Arabian Pipeline agreement with Lebanon, signed in May 1952, is now under examination by the Lebanese Government with a view to Lebanon's possibly asking for renegotiation of the terms and royalties. Lebanon's moves will to a large extent depend on Syrian discussions with the pipeline companies.

Military Aid

Lebanon has asked the United States for arms assistance (telecommunications equipment, subchasers) with which to better equip its small army. A joint State–Defense recommendation is being sent forward to the Mutual Security Director, asking that Lebanon be declared eligible for cash-reimbursable military aid within the limits of existing priorities.

Political

The new Lebanese Government is basically well disposed towards the United States, but on matters such as the Middle East Defense Organization (MEDO) and the Israel question Lebanon continues to follow the lead of the Moslem Arab States, albeit sometimes reluctantly. Lebanon shares the Arab hope for a "New Deal" from the new administration. The inaugural address was well received.

Dr. Malik

Charles Malik (Greek Orthodox) is subject to considerable criticism in his own country for being too pro-American and not sufficiently "Arab". He has been subjected to continual sniping by the new Government's Moslem leaders (Mubarak, Ammoun). He reportedly will try to determine his future plans during his forthcoming trip to Lebanon. The Lebanese Government has told our Ambassador Harold Minor that he is being given the choice of Security Council or Lebanese Ambassador. Malik states he has been only offered the Security Council on condition he leave Washington. He states he will resign first.

1200. Deptel 702,[2] Embtel 1184.[3] In conversation with Foreign Minister yesterday afternoon I referred to press story his report to Cabinet on deterioration relations with Jordan and inquired whether he had anything he wished to tell me. He replied he had informed Cabinet that he intended speak to both the American and British Ambassadors on subject. He made point that he does not regard Israeli Government as having denounced local commander's agreement asserted it had become "inoperative" because of failures to act in accordance with its stipulations. He said that circumstances which had "added fuel to fire" had now been cleared up by the return of members Israel Armed Forces.

Sharett said Israel Government representative saw Vigier of UNTSO Saturday night[4] and expressed desire for meeting to endeavor normalize border situation. Foreign Minister commented on worsening border relations, which he attributed to several factors including what he described as "deterioration in watchfulness of Legion", utilization on frontier of national guard which tends to get out of hand and participate in raids or profits from them, and indifference of "Palestine element" among higher officials. He contrasted latter with Jordanians, who he said had shown greater sense of responsibility.

He stressed seriousness of infiltration problem saying reported cases of theft actually perpetrated in Jordan sector of frontier during calendar year 1952 numbered 952 cases as compared with 415 in Egyptian sector and 17 and 11 on Lebanon and Syrian frontiers respectively. He added that 13 persons had been murdered in the Jordan sector as compared with none in the other three sectors. These did not include guards and military personnel of whom 53 were killed and 56 wounded in clashes with infiltrators. He said that despite fact Jordan frontier longer he still thought figures disproportionate. He estimated loss due to damage and theft at about 1 million pounds, of which the principal items were cattle to the value of 400,000 pounds, some 2,000 meters of irrigation pipe and pump engines valued at over 200,000 pounds and some 13 kilometers of copper wire much of which would be difficult to replace or could only be replaced after considerable delay. He commented that the cattle stolen for the most part were valuable pedigreed stock which could scarcely be sold on the Jordan market without attracting official attention, and that the same would be true of such valuable equipment as irrigation pipe, electric motors and copper wire in large quantities.

Sharett did not make any reference to subject of two numbered points in reference Deptel nor did he voice any complaint about General De Ridder or the proceedings of the MAC. He said he was not ready to accuse the Jordan Government of a deliberate policy of stepping up infiltration, but expressed a strong desire to see the present deterioration in relations rectified.

Comment: Both Israel Government and IDF taking serious view of infiltration problem and would prefer diminution present tension on Israel–Jordan border. Am informed that Israel has asked Vigier to seek meeting between General Dayan and Colonel Jundi of Arab Legion in hope latter will be convinced of importance to both sides of tighter Jordan control of infiltrators. Statement by Colonel Gaon that Israel must "prepare to take active defense" believed to indicate that situation on Israel–Jordan border has once more played into the hands of the "treat 'em rough" school of thought and that there is danger of facts of reprisal which can be very damaging in their consequences. In reply to direct query concerning Israel's present attitude toward reprisals, Foreign Ministry spokesman described them as "last resort when they are only means of handling situation". End comment.

1209. Embtel 1183. [2] In light recent developments, it is believed ME problems require some redefinition. It seems quite clear that we are confronted by something more serious than mere "Arab prejudice" toward Israel that presumably could be overcome by a few minor territorial adjustments, resettlement of refugees, payment of compensation, etc. All these are important but do not seem to represent a basis on which Arab leadership is now prepared to move toward peace. These problems could no doubt be largely resolved by means of direct negotiations, lifting of blockade and establishing of normal relations, but Embassy knows of no instances where Arab leaders have found it feasible to advocate such measures publicly; and it recalls the cases of two who tried secretly to reach settlements and failed, viz King Abdullah, and Tuquan Bey of Jordan (Embtel 105). [3] It is hoped the Syrian-Israel conversation now in progress may prove to be an exception (Embtels 1198 [4] and 779 [5] and Damascus Embtel 345 to Department. [6])

Judging from contacts with and reports from colleagues in Arab countries, public positions and attitudes of leaders seem to be controlled largely by the extremists who aim at nothing less than destruction of Israel. Plain facts are that Israel's economic condition is more precarious than is generally realized, and that it could not now withstand the blockade without outside assistance. It is obvious to the Arabs that private and public aid from US is all-important factor in defeating their purpose. Hence, we incur resentment which may be expected to result in measures against our interests, such as boycott of firms doing business in Israel, harassment of petroleum companies, and perhaps even effort ultimately to deprive West of ME oil.

Use of word "impartial" to describe our policy is inexact as to fact and unfortunate psychologically. It is too negative to describe our attitude of interest in and friendliness toward all the countries of ME, in first place; and it is susceptible of interpretation as committing us to an unrealistic equality in distributing aid. Our policy is to prevent economic collapse of any ME country, and blockade necessitates greater aid to Israel than would otherwise be necessary. In present circumstances, if aid to Israel were suddenly withdrawn or drastically reduced it would bring almost immediate financial collapse with far-reaching political consequences.

In view of seriousness of threat to our interests in whole region, Embassy recognizes great potential importance of leaders who have some realistic conception of Russian danger and show signs of readiness to cooperate with West. If we find it advisable support Naguib, and possibly Shishikli, as best means of preventing loss of ME, it will be important bring Tripartite declaration of May 1950 into accord with such policy, and take steps oviate danger of renewal Arab-Israel hostilities. We should not lose sight of possibility that such hostilities, if they occur may be precipitated as result of economic warfare and would be sporadic in early phases with both sides endeavoring to place other in position of being technical "aggressor".

In reformulation of policy it will be of greatest importance to relate settlement of Palestine question to general problem of area defense. There may be some temptation to develop latter without taking sufficiently into account that realization of our principal policy objectives of achieving political stability, economic improvement and area defense will depend largely on our success in liquidating Arab-Israel conflict. Giving aid to Arabs conditional upon prior peace with Israelis recognized as unrealistic and self-defeating at present. But it is believed program of aid should include steps designed to encourage at some stage constructive attitudes toward easing of tensions and ultimate settlement, as confidence in and dependence upon us increases. In meantime it will be important to make our policy abundantly clear to both sides, so that they will have no doubt that while ready and willing to render aid to and build up strength in area, we are committed to prevent destruction or over-running of any free country and that we regard prolongation of conflict within area as unnecessary, and harmful to parties themselves, region and the free world.

Success of policy will be jeopardized if psychology of desperation and panic should develop in Israel. At best it would cause intensive lobbying and publicity campaign that would be unnecessary and harmful; and at worst it might result in acts of desperation that would endanger area peace. It was possible to avoid such reaction at time Egypt was invited to join proposed MEC, and it should be again with timely explanations at high level, assurances that forcible changes in frontiers will not be tolerated, and practical indications that we recognize the importance of Israel to any scheme of regional defense.

619. While I was absent on west bank for purpose of visiting front line villages, including Aqalama [Falama?], village attacked January 23 and January 29 by Israeli forces. Lynch was summoned to Foreign Office 10 a. m. January 31 and in absence of Prime Minister who is ill was received by Anwar Nuseibeh Minister of Defense and Ihsan Hashem Undersecretary of Foreign Affairs.

[1] Repeated to Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Beirut, Damascus, Cairo, London, Paris, Baghdad, and Jidda.

Nuseibeh stated HKJ talks extremely serious view of present situation along border and stressed urgency of his representations. Whereas HKJ making every effort avoid incidents, Israel launching organized attacks by regular troops inside Jordan territory. These could only be result top level decisions by GOI. He was at loss to explain Israeli attacks but suggested Israel had enough confidence in Zionist propaganda machine to feel sure that fact of Israeli aggression should be obscured. Suggested possibility of GOI intention to cause curtailment arms shipments to Arab States but felt such attacks should in fact serve to emphasize to any impartial observer need of Arab States for more arms in order defend themselves and maintain stability in area.

Nuseibeh reminded Lynch of responsibility of US under tripartite declaration. He stated he considered Israeli attacks sufficiently serious and flagrant to warrant invocation of declaration but he did not specifically request invocation. Nuseibeh admitted Arab infiltration but stated infiltration by civilians was not in any way comparable to Israeli organized armed attacks carried out with machine guns, mortars and mines. Furthermore he said Jordan Government making every effort prevent infiltration.

Nuseibeh said he felt US had moral responsibility force Israel terminate aggressions and he knew that US could if it wished bring sufficient pressure on Israel to force Israel to do so.

He added "we know these people are your protegés. You put them there. You can control them if you want."

He assured Lynch HKJ wants no trouble with Israel. "We want stability and so do you." He stated Lynch could have no conception increased hatred toward Israel engendered by attacks and tenseness of situation in areas involved. They made chance of settlement between countries more remote.

Conversation between Lynch on one hand and Nuseibeh and Hashem on the other was conducted with extreme formality apparently in effort to emphasize great concern with which Jordan views situation. As indication of atmosphere of conversation Hashem addressed Lynch as "Mr." for first time in 18 years of intimate friendship.

Deptel 579 [2] was received subsequent meeting described above. Lynch immediately called again on Foreign Office and conveyed sense that telegram to Hashem. Hashem said that Prime Minister would be encouraged by fact that Israeli aggression apparently recognized by US Government for first time.

He afterwards informed Lynch Nuseibeh's approach to him was on somewhat different lines. Tripartite declaration not mentioned in his interview but Jordan UK treaty of alliance was strongly emphasized and following specific suggestions were made: (1) Immediate visit to Jordan of British Commander in Chief Middle East; (2) meeting of UK Jordan joint defense board; (3) increase in number British troops in Jordan. Walker said Nuseibeh pointed out that Aqaba only place in country where there are now British troops was hardly satisfactory base for assistance to country in event of Israeli invasion. He suggested troops also be stationed Mafrazin Northeast Jordan.

It has become increasingly evident that Israel's recent incursions into Jordan and Gaza strips result from major policy decision based on conviction that volume of infiltration was intolerable and that Arab authorities concerned could not or would not cooperate in keeping it in check. It seems further that present violations of frontiers are principally military operations resulting from pursuit of armed marauders across frontiers in endeavor capture or destroy them. This is borne out by information obtained from several sources here and Jerusalem ConGen reports. Sharett told me Saturday that time and place of incidents had not been determined by IG in advance but had depended on circumstances of pursuit as part of action against intruders.

Above was confirmed by Lt. Colonel Gaon, Commander Israel delegate MACs, in informal conversation with Embassy officer last night. Gaon described present activities as policy of "active defense" explaining that Israel patrols had instructions to ambush armed infiltrators and not lose contact with them until they are destroyed. He commented further on complete failure of Commander's agreement to control infiltration, remarking that it was a good agreement if implemented but in circumstances it only served to tie Israel's hands. Like Foreign Minister (Embtel 1200)[6] he qualified his statement re official Jordan responsibility for infiltration, saying on basis item DF interrogation of large number of infiltrators he believes only small percentage were deliberately sent as part of policy of espionage and sabotage. On other hand he agrees with Foreign Minister's view that chief encouragement is due to lack of effective action to prevent infiltration and sale of stolen property by Jordan officials, who he asserts see no threat to Jordan's interests "from organized theft and harassment of Israel". He replied to query by British Army Attachés to what UK should do, now that Jordan has invoked Anglo-Jordan treaty, by saying defense action against infiltration could solve problem.

Foreign Ministry informs Embassy that three infiltrators and one civilian returned to Israel by Jordan had been mistreated and beaten and all are hospitalized. Same source stated that Arabs in Taibe-Tira area of Israel have suffered sufficiently at hands of infiltrators to have requested IG to approve licenses for them to bear arms and have permission to post armed guards.

Embassy comment: It is believed that foregoing should be considered in light general summary contained in Embtel 1183[7] and 1209,[8] and that concerted effort be made to eliminate basic cause of present tension.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, February 3, 1953.

A-246. Mr. Gontran de Juniac, Minister of the French Embassy in Washington and Mr. Bernard Burrows, Counselor of the British Embassy in Washington, called on Mr. Henry Byroade, Assistant Secretary of State, on January 29 to leave with him an aide-mémoire concerning freedom of transit through the Suez Canal. The text of the aide-mémoire is given below. As an aid toward assisting the Department in arriving at a position on this question your telegraphic comments are invited.

"Her Majesty's Ambassador for the United Kingdom presents his compliments to the Secretary of State and has the honour, under instructions from Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to put to him the following proposals for an exchange of views between the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France concerning the freedom of transit through the Suez Canal:—

"Recent events have shown that the Egyptian Government appear to be bringing more understanding and at the same time a realistic approach to bear on the discussion of international problems. Although it is necessary to guard against over-optimism, the possibility cannot henceforth be excluded that agreements may be reached on questions, such as those of the Sudan, Suez Canal and Defence, on which a deadlock had been caused by former Ministries.

"2. But any agreement relating to the Suez Canal Zone or to the defence of the Near East will have necessarily in order to be legally valid, to respect the international status of the Canal, resulting as this does from its guarantee by international agreements reinforced by uninterrupted usage. It follows then that we should define and formulate the principles which the signatory powers of such an instrument would intend to respect in this regard, and which would have in any case to be invoked in the text of any final agreement.

"3. The Governments of the United Kingdom and the French Republic consider that without delay the United States, British and French Governments should consult together about the matter.

"4. If the attitude of the Egyptian Government were afterwards to disappoint the Western Powers, such conversations would turn out to have been even more indispensable.

"5. Developments in the last few years in the Middle East have made it possible to estimate the degree to which the political instability of this area directly affects the security and freedom of communications through the Suez Canal. They have at the same time clearly displayed the solidarity which exists among those nations principally interested in the maintenance of this freedom and security.

"6. The Governments of the French Republic and the United Kingdom, while realising that the political instability existing in the Middle East has had serious repercussions on international navigation through the Isthmus of Suez and could eventually have repercussions still more disquieting, consider that such a state of things would lead in the end to a consequence even more serious, that of allowing the establishment of a precedent which would risk the calling in question of those very principles on which freedom of transit through the Canal rests in law. They have been confirmed in their opinion by the representations made on this score by shipping companies and the International Chamber of Shipping.

"7. The rights of the Maritime Powers cannot be contested.

"8. They have as their basis the Convention of Constantinople of the 29th October, 1888, and the uninterrupted use of the Canal for more than eighty years under conditions which have given to the Canal an international status based on the three principles of (i) freedom of access and of passage, (ii) equality of flag without discrimination and (iii) the obligation on the Powers not to indulge in this area in any act of hostility or of war.

"9. The Egyptian Government, without contesting that these principles remain the charter of the Powers interested in the use of the Canal, have taken various measures, which, under the pretext of protecting individual rights which they claim, have resulted in seriously compromising freedom of communications through the Canal.

"10. The Governments of the United Kingdom and of the French Republic, as well as the Government of the United States, have always contested the equity and legality of these measures. They are, however, especially concerned to avoid the always possible deterioration of the situation, which might in certain circumstances lead to the complete stoppage of traffic through the Canal by reason either of direct interference with shipping or of action detrimental to the regular and satisfactory working of the technical services of the Suez Canal Company. They consider therefore that the Maritime Powers should study the means of safeguarding their common interests, and in particular whether at a suitable moment they should declare publicly their common desire to ensure freedom of communication. The Egyptian Government could be and ought to be associated in this declaration, inspired as it is only by respect for treaties and in the interests of all the Powers without exception.

"11. It would in addition be in the interest of these powers to take counsel now with a view to finding means of maintaining the freedom and security of communications, as a safeguard against the eventuality of the Egyptian Government's refusing nevertheless to join the other Powers or, having subscribed to a common declaration, acting in a manner incompatible with it.

"12. If the Government of the United States shares the opinion of the Governments of the United Kingdom and of the French Republic about the position outlined above, they will no doubt agree with them that a preliminary exchange of views among the three Powers ought to take place as soon as possible with an agenda covering the following points:—

> "(1) Definition of the basic principles on which the Maritime Powers concerned would wish to base the right of freedom of transit through the Suez Canal, and what this implies for the effective maintenance and eventual safeguard of this freedom.
> "(2) Study of the conditions under which the Maritime Powers concerned would:

"(a) persuade Egypt to reaffirm these principles;

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

"(b) make, in default of this solution and at a suitable moment, a public declaration reaffirming these principles.

"(3) Examination of the measures which might be taken in the last resort by the interested Maritime Powers in order to safeguard, in circumstances to be defined, freedom of transit through the Canal.

"13. These preliminary conversations would take place in the greatest secrecy. In the light of their conclusions, the three Governments would be able to decide by what method to approach the other principal users of the Canal, i.e., the Norwegian, Netherlands, Italian, Danish and Swedish Governments and invite them to associate themselves eventually with the action proposed."

642. Prime Minister explained to me February 5, measures have been taken in recent weeks to curb infiltration into Israel. He believes that these measures are about as effective as they can be made.

It is probable that measures to prevent infiltration can be improved and the present effort of the Jordanian Government to improve them may reduce infiltration though in the nature of things it can not be expected that the government can entirely prevent it. In any case I am convinced that Government is acting in good faith and is neither encouraging or conniving at infiltration. My British colleague who has carefully studied the matter concurs with me in this opinion.

Prime Minister stated that he fears large-scale Israeli aggression. He said that he had deliberately refrained from invoking tripartite declaration as yet in the hope that US and UK pressure on Israel would be sufficient to oblige Israel to cease attacks such as have kept the borders in a ferment during these last weeks. He believes US influence paramount in Israel and he requested me to recommend that US make forceful representations to Israeli Government to put an end to present situation.

1247. Deptel 726,[2] Embtels 1226,[3] 1231,[4] 1240, 1246.[5] Foreign Minister Sharett told me this morning Cabinet under chairmanship Prime Minister Ben-Gurion had considered crisis in relations with Jordan yesterday and had decided to make following confidential comment to diplomatic representatives of US, UK and France. He stated that a "mounting tide of violence emanating from Jordan" had reached unprecedented climax in attack on main railway line February 2 when track had been mined and train wrecked near village of Eyal. He added that after the wreck attackers fired about 800 rounds on village and train.

Foreign Minister characterized this as an outrage culminating "long and continuous series, carried out by armed bands involving loss of life, robbery of property and dislocation of normal conditions". He said it was shock to public sense of safety and challenge to government and defense authorities of country.

He stated that Israel Government holds that of Jordan responsible for "negligence, connivance, or even instigation" in connection with these acts. He interpolated that Israeli authorities have what they regard as reliable information that responsible officials organized some of most serious acts perpetrated and added that in any case that last one "bears every mark of a carefully planned military action, an act of war in effect".

Sharett made quite a point of zone where attacks in question took place, which he described as Israel's "jugular vein" through which extend main highway and railway line connecting northern and southern parts of country.

He concluded with statement that unless Jordan authorities show themselves ready and able to control situation, Israel Government "would consider itself entitled, and in duty bound, to use all measures in exercise of legitimate self-defense to put end to attacks, protect life and property and ensure security of traffic".

SECRET AMMAN, February 6, 1953—6 p. m.

643. In the four years which have elapsed since the cessation of hostilities in Palestine we have made no headway toward achieving a permanent settlement between Israel and the Arab States. The Palestine conciliation commission has worked hard and conscientiously in its search for a solution and a minority group of powers in the UN General Assembly has recommended immediate direct negotiations. But like the numerous investigative commissions to pre-war Palestine all measures have failed. If during the four year search for a settlement there have been signs of progress they have been illusory for they have been built upon quicksand. The fact is negotiations based on a recognition of the present status quo will never materialize apparently on conciliatory attitudes by an Abdullah, a Naguib, or a Shishikli notwithstanding.

[1] Repeated to Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, London, Paris, Tel Aviv, and Baghdad.

Let us face the hard and bitter fact that the Arab world will not consent to a permanent settlement with Israel except on the basis of certain conditions which will perforce require a change in the status quo. Any attempt at settlement which ignores these conditions is destined to failure at the start. Nothing has occurred to soften this attitude and there is no prospect that anything will. On the contrary, Jordan's position vis-à-vis Israel has stiffened considerably in the last several weeks as a result of the cold-blooded Israeli attacks on Arab border villages as well as Israeli attempts to place the blame on the Arabs. So deeply are what they consider the wrongs of Palestine embedded in the psychology of Arabs on Israel's periphery that there are absolutely no prospects of an Arab-Israel peace in our time except along lines which entail concessions by Israel.

We may adopt either of two alternative lines of action: Either (1) we continue to go along with the present situation deluding ourselves into believing that a solution to the Arab-Israel deadlock can be found on the basis of the present status quo or (2) we immediately exercise our natural influence over Israel to oblige that country in its own interest and in our interest to enter into negotiations with the Arab States through channels acceptable to them on the basis of certain conditions indispensable to the establishment of peaceful relations between Israel and her neighbors:

a. The internationalization of Jerusalem.
b. Recognition of the right of the refugees to return to their homes and lands.
c. Full compensation to all those who do not exercise this right.
d. Rectification of the existing boundaries between Israel and her neighbors with special reference to the areas where villages are left on the Arab side of the armistice lines while most of their cultivatable lands are held by Israel.

To continue to follow the first line of action invites failure if not disaster. It necessitates the continued outlay of US capital to buttress a precarious Israel economy doomed by an Arab blockade. It requires the continued outlay of US capital to support refugees who cannot be supported by host countries whose economies suffer from the blockade they are imposing on Israel. It means the exhaustion of whatever American influence and prestige remains in this area. Finally it courts the peril of widespread Communism in Arab States where the mood is one of despair and where confidence in the West is being replaced by hope in the East. Circumstances such as these do not augur well for MEDO or any other US plans for the area.

The second line of action offers a real hope of success. From numerous conversations that I and members of my staff have had with Jordanians at all levels I am convinced that if the four conditions mentioned above are used as a basis for negotiations peace between Israel and the Arab States is a distinct probability. The attitudes of the Jordanian leaders are not controlled by extremists who aim at nothing less than the destruction of israel as alleged elsewhere. Jordanian leaders will listen to reason and reason to them in the Arab-Israel complex starts with the acceptance of these four conditions.

If we adopt alternative two we shall not only have real chances of peace but we shall be acting in the best interests of the US. It is not too late to recoup our losses—financial, strategic, in prestige or otherwise—but time is running out and we must act now. The present state of affairs between Jordan and Israel makes this a matter of extreme urgency and the present economic situation in Israel (see Tel Aviv's 1209 January 29 [28]) would seem to present a golden opportunity.

1257. Embtel 795.[1] Foreign Minister Sharett requested me to call at his residence this afternoon. He opened conversation by saying that it had been nearly one year since IG first indicated desire to be made eligible to receive nonreimbursable military aid and that it is now IG intent to renew request. He repeated point that Israel willing use such aid largely for harbors, roads, railroads having strategic value, rather than arms and munitions.

He referred to recent conversation between Assistant Secretary Byroade and Minister Goitein of Israel Embassy Washington from which he, Sharett, understood that US plans to aid Naguib as best means preserve political stability and build strength in area in belief that course in best interests all concerned including Israel. He understood also such aid would include military as well as economic assistance and repeated misgivings reported in prior telegrams such as 1039.[2] He stated quite frankly that he feels US is neglecting ally on which it can place reliance, and expressed conviction it unnecessary permit the withholding of military aid from Israel to become a condition for Arab cooperation.

"Having in mind what he has said to me several times recently Ministry Foreign Affairs asked Ralph Bunche on Saturday to tell Sharett that Egypt is willing to envisage eventual settlement with Israel on lines of resettlement of and compensation for refugees and some frontier rectifications. Bunche told Sharett Sunday and after consultation with his Government he replied that they warmly welcome this approach." (Telegram 1819 from Cairo, Feb. 10, noon; 320.2 AA/2-1053)

Ambassador Davis reported on Feb. 9 that Bunche had arrived in Israel from Cairo on Feb. 7, and that Bunche had seen Ben-Gurion, Sharett, Eytan, Shiloah, and others with whom he had been associated as Palestine Mediator. In a press interview Bunche stated that he had had a " 'friendly chat' " with General Naguib. Davis reported further that "in conversation with Israelis he seemed consciously to avoid touching off optimism re relations with Egypt that might result in harmful press speculation, but his visit nevertheless tended to allay somewhat tense feelings. He told me privately he was struck by fact Naguib had not even mentioned Palestine problem to him. He said however Israel had been mentioned in his conversation with Fawzi whom he quoted as saying he saw no reason why Egypt should not move toward peace with Israel if certain conditions could be met." The Consul at Jerusalem (Tyler) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY JERUSALEM, February 8, 1953—2 p. m.

102. About January 28, Lt Col Gaon informed Vigier, senior UN representative here, about attack on train and highway between Tel Aviv and Haifa (Tel Aviv telegram 1224, January 30). [2] Israel, usually so quick to complain, made no complaint to MAC. Jan 30 edition Jerusalem Post reported Herut's article day before complaining no official communiqué published about incident and added, in reference to supply of arms to Arab states by Western powers, "Israel might still turn tables on Arab countries as quantitative advantage is still on our side". This article led Vigier to suppose Herut was Israeli army newspaper.

In two years here I have found UN observers lean over backwards to be fair. Although not wishing to be cynical they know if they show any prejudice they will lose jobs, which, especially to non-Americans, are exceptionally lucrative for them. They admit infiltration is frequent, but frankly they have not observed recent great increase reported by Israel (Tel Aviv telegram 1247). [3] As Dr. Ralph Bunche (arrived Jerusalem February 7) observed "smuggling has been part of external history this part of world". UN personnel aware Israel's precarious economic plight and have begun confidentially to wonder if some loss by them is not from one Israeli Kibbutz to another.

They also disturbed by recent events, such as weakness Israel contention an arms depot was robbed in reply to Jordan contention Israel trying to supply arms to Mt. Scopus (Consulate General despatch 103, December 22, 1952); [4] and Israel claim three soldiers and civilian driving teacher "accidentally" crossed no-mans-land at extremely difficult spot marked and guarded (Contel 80, January 13). [4] With reference to recent Israel attacks on Rantis and Falama border, as military men wonder who if Israel forces in company strength, met Arab infiltrators in Israel, no wounded or dead found as evidence. While Israel generally protests to MAC over each Arab infiltration caught, wounded or killed in Israel they never before, according to UN, have made such strong protests over infiltration in general. If they so worried about it why did they break local commanders' agreements which helped curb it? (Contel 80, January 13.)[5] Also Sharett's strongly worded protest to Ambassador Davis should have come before their attacks so that pressure could have been brought on Jordan to curb infiltration. As result such reasoning UN personnel, while still guessing infiltrators from Falama blew up railway, it fits in so well with Israel complaints, gives them such favorable publicity with so little damage done (it was repaired before investigated) that they are not free from thoughts expressed Amman's telegram 630, February 24.[5]

CONFIDENTIAL NIACT TEL AVIV, February 9, 1953—7 p. m.

1265. Deptel 753.[2] In response request for comment and analysis Cabinet decision and Foreign Minister's statement reported Embtel 1247,[3] Embassy regards latter as intemperate, but fairly accurate reflection present IG state of mind, induced in part by worsening relations with Jordan, but more by factors of much broader character. Present emergency is serious mainly because it may detonate larger explosions ME and it would be mistake, therefore, to attempt to deal with it as new or isolated problem. Israel is rapidly becoming convinced that her basic interests are in jeopardy and that unless she asserts herself in time policies may be adopted, which will threaten her continued existence.

Principal factors contributing to growing apprehension of IG and public were outlined in Embtels 1183[4] and 1209.[5] Always highly subjective, Israelis have not fully grasped harm which has been done their interests by their attitude in early cases of Huleh controversy 1951, acts of reprisal committed a little over a year ago, notorious and unnecessary "barrel-barrel" episode, delay in compliance with Riley request re Mt. Scopus, and recent incursions into neighboring territory pursuant aggressive effort curb infiltration. They feel strongly, however, that refusal of Arab countries to make peace as contemplated by UN at time armistice agreements were negotiated is matter of overriding importance as compared with other instances of failure both sides to implement UN decisions.

Infiltration has long been highly troublesome problem in Israel–Jordan relations, which has reached near solution at times only to deteriorate again. It will be recalled that Amman telegram 244, February 29, 1952 to Department reported that Ahmad Tuzan, Jordan's former MAC representative, expressed view Israelis have legitimate grievance against large-scale Arab infiltration, but reprisals not warranted. He favored measures which worked "surprisingly well" and felt improvements might lead to broadening base of settlement with Israel. One of reasons Tuzan gave for resigning (Jerusalem Consulate General telegram 136, May 29 to Department)[6] was inability to get Jordan Government to agree to pass stronger anti-infiltration legislation. Jordan's failure to approve Latrun agreement and other adverse factors noted in Embtel 105[7] marked early stages present deterioration in Israel–Jordan affairs. IG is especially sensitive to developments in Jordan: It has noted with misgiving appointment of former member of Mufti Government in Gaza as chairman Jordan MAC and placing of MAC affairs under supervision of Palestinian Arabs (Jerusalem Consulate General telegram 15, July 26 to Department;[6] and more recently press reports that Rhodes agreement again under attack in Jordan Parliament. IG has been especially disturbed by possibility that Jordan behavior may be part of concerted Arab effort growing out of decisions taken by joint meetings of Arab MAC delegates.

There is no question but what there has been a deterioration in border relations since middle of last year and the infiltration problem has assumed major proportions. Statistics for 1952 on loss of life and property by Israelis at hands of armed marauders were provided by Foreign Minister Sharett (Embtel 1200).[8] Figures did not include casualties inflicted on Jordanians but toll there also was high. There has been fault on part of both parties to dispute, and it is believed that US interests will not be served by concentrating to too great an extent on assessing blame or by seeming to take sides. Our major efforts should rather be devoted to bringing about renewal of cooperation essential to maintaining peace. While we must necessarily be realistic about sharp conflict in views, we should refuse to regard situation as hopeless, and be firm in our support of UNTSO pressure on both sides to keep the peace.

While present tension already is diminishing, real solution of basic problem will have to be on a regional basis and directed at primary policy objectives of achieving political and economic stability and building up area defense potential. Because of importance of regional peace to these policy objectives, it is believed that another major effort to effect peace should be made after prior consultation on policy among parties to tripartite agreement. Believe approach should make no secret of fact that real peace is objective but hold forth worthwhile advantages. These could include uncertainty military as well as economic aid, and involve compensation to refugees on adequate scale. It might be helpful to find a person of proven ability and considerable prestige in region to undertake coordination of plan.

In present circumstances it may be difficult to get Israel's cooperation on plan involving regional arms build-up. This difficulty will be increased if Israeli Government feels that its interests and security are being neglected, or that this country is not being kept informed of area plans and developments. It will be recalled that Israeli Government originally had misgivings about MEC plan and expressed them in private, but later did not oppose invitation being extended to Egypt to be charter member of Command and kept press criticism at minimum. She was however kept informed of developments and was given assurance that her interests would not be disregarded.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] February 11, 1953.

Subject: American-Israel Relations

Participants: The Under Secretary [1]
Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel Embassy

---

[1] Walter Bedell Smith.

Minister David Goitein, Israel Embassy
Mr. Waller—NE

Ambassador Eban, accompanied by Minister Goitein, called on the Under Secretary at 11:30 today to present a review of the present position of American-Israel relations. He left an aide-mémoire of the conversation, together with a note (AE/804) renewing Israel's request for grant military assistance and a note (AE/806) requesting that Israel's productive and industrial potential be taken into consideration in the formulation of offshore procurement programs in Western Europe for the fiscal year 1953-1954. [2] The notes have been referred for action to the appropriate offices of the Department. A copy of the aide-mémoire is attached.

In summary, the Ambassador listed eight "guiding principles" which the Israel Government believes have guided United States policy towards Israel and the Arab states. These are:

Support of Israel's statehood.

Support of the general armistice agreements between Israel and Arab neighbors.

Support of direct negotiations between Israel and the Arab states to reach peace settlements.

Support of the settlement of Arab refugees in Arab countries while encouraging Israel to do everything possible to alleviate the plight of the refugees.

Support of minimum conditions for internationalization of Jerusalem and opposition to drastic proposals for territorial internationalization.

Assistance to all countries of the Near East in need of economic and technical assistance.

Support for the ratification and implementation of the German-Israel Compensation Agreement.

Special interest in the development of stable democratic governments in the Near East.

The Ambassador said his government assumes that the above policies were formulated by American leaders after consideration of all responsible points of view, since many of them were presented to international tribunals as articles of national policy. His government therefore hopes that the new American Administration will find it possible to issue an early statement making clear that abandonment of these policies is not contemplated, in order to counteract the tension created by the expectancy of some Arab leaders and newspapers that the United States will somehow turn its back on its undertakings and assurances to Israel.

The Ambassador said his government believes there are opportunities for a new development of American policy in the interests of Middle East and world peace. He had in mind a reiteration by the US in favor of direct negotiations between the Arab states and Israel and that no statement of American friendship for the Arab world should be made that could inadvertently encourage the Arab states to increase their pressure on Israel or condone their refusal to negotiate directly for a peace settlement.

Ambassador Eban said that his government hopes the US will give some public opposition to Soviet and Communist attacks on Israel as a state. He gave notice that his government intends to raise in the UN the matter of Soviet and Communist anti-Semitic charges against the Jewish people.

Ambassador Eban said that his government is apprehensive that an attempt may be made to establish a Middle East Defense Organization to include all the Arab states but excluding Israel. In conclusion, he expressed the hope that the views outlined in his aide-mémoire would be taken into account in any examination of US policies for the Middle East.

(Military aid and arms supplies were the subject of one of two notes left by the Ambassador. The subject of economic aid, which is covered in paragraph five of the aide-mémoire, was not mentioned orally by the Ambassador. It is noted from the aide-mémoire, however, that the Government of Israel anticipates a financial crisis in March and April of this year and that the Department's assistance may be requested if a loan application is made to the Export-Import Bank.)

Early in the conversation General Smith interrupted the Ambassador and stated he trusted the Ambassador was not going to suggest that Israel was being discriminated against by American policy. The Ambassador replied that no such contention was meant and then went on with his remarks. When the Ambassador finished, General Smith said that his familiarity with the problems raised by the Ambassador was rather superficial but that the Ambassador's remarks sounded to him like a severe indictment of American policy. He stated that surely the US Government is neither so blind nor so warped in its views that it would pursue policies consistently detrimental to any particular country. He said that he would go over the questions very carefully with his colleagues but that he could say categorically that Israel, as a key entity in the Near East, would not be overlooked. The US realizes that Israel has the only really effective military force in the Near East and that Israel also has other assets of use to the US.

General Smith stated that the US deplores the sudden wave of anti-Semitism which has recently emanated from the Soviet Union and satellite countries. The Under Secretary then referred to his long association with some of Israel's present-day leaders, including his long friendship and affection for Prime Minister Ben-Gurion, whom he has known since before Israel became a state. The Ambassador would therefore understand the friendly feelings which he has towards Israel and its problems. In this context, the Under Secretary said he wished to say privately that the Israel Government does not make it easy for the US to be helpful and that our problems are complicated by military action on the part of Israel forces raiding neighboring territory and by military counteraction against Arab neighbors.

Ambassador Eban said he had not intended to present an indictment of American policy. He had, in fact, meant his remarks to show Israel's appreciation for American support in many fields. In analyzing American policies toward Israel he wished to express the hope that those policies would be carried forward still further, but that his government was particularly unhappy about US Near East defense planning.

General Smith replied that the Israel Government should weigh any dissatisfaction in this regard with the many other policies that were undoubtedly pleasing to Israel. He said he wanted to emphasize that Israel would not be disregarded in plans for a Middle East defense organization if for no other reason than because of Israel's military effectiveness.

296. For Lodge. Understand Eban calling on you this afternoon after visiting Under Secretary this morning. One of Eban's principal points expected allege Arab intransigence delaying Arab-Israel reconciliation. In this connection, following facts may be useful: (1) Increased tension between Israel and Arab states now confined to Jordan border where Department believes Israel shares considerable responsibility for current incidents, (2) Only other Israeli neighbors who could conceivably cause trouble are Syria and Egypt. US Government notes Syria now making two impressive moves towards removing tension from area. These are: (a) agreement with UNRWA to accept and resettle permanently 80,000 refugees within Syrian territory, and (b) cooperation with Israel and UN Mixed Armistice Commission in boundary negotiations which are currently underway. (3) FYI, Embassy Cairo has repeatedly reported Naguib's intention work out peaceful settlement with Israel when Sudan and Canal Zone Base problems settled with UK. As recently as February 7 Bunche asked by Naguib to convey this information to IG which Bunche did February 8.

TOP SECRET CAIRO, February 11, 1953—4 p. m.

1837. Following are our comments requested A-246 February 3 re joint British-French aide mémoire on freedom of transit through Suez Canal:

While there would seem to be no objection to the three powers concerting as to joint attitude to be adopted toward Egypt to secure reaffirmation of basic principles re freedom of transit through canal, we believe that third item of agenda set forth in paragraph 12 need not be considered until outcome of forthcoming Suez defense negotiations with Egyptian Government is clear. It would seem logical that if these negotiations succeed Egyptian Government could easily be persuaded to make appropriate statement concerning freedom of transit and that, therefore, "last resort" measures would not be necessary.

We suggest that as interim measure it should not be difficult to intimate to General Naguib advantages to Egypt of making an exparte declaration reaffirming principles of Constantinople convention. Naguib might conveniently make such declaration on conclusion of base agreement. Once Egypt took this position it might then be easier at a later date to secure Egyptian adherence as an equal partner to some new international convention for freedom of transit through Suez.

Foregoing comments do not ignore fact that US is not party to Convention of Constantinople of 1888 and that US Government for other reasons might wish not to become party to such an instrument. We take it for granted that US policy re Panama Canal will be kept in mind before entering into conversations proposed by British and French.

Our overall conclusion is that meeting proposed in paragraph 12 should take place after forthcoming base and defense negotiations as course to be followed with Egypt will then be more clear.

110. Comment my telegram 102, February 8. In recriminations as to who right or wrong on border issues it vitally important Israel and Arab states not lose sight of total picture. Responsible political and other leaders of public opinion both sides must be made to understand grave dangers world situation so they earnestly strive for peace and cease border bickerings, charges and counter-charges which becloud real issue although local issues very real to them.

Without going into merits either side one fact clear: Israel is in possession of much Arab land and presence of refugees is constant aggravation and reminder. Israel argument Arab military defiance 1947 partition resolution was cause does not diminish fact that nearly one million refugees are destitute. In present state affairs it would be political if not actual suicide for Arab leaders to talk sweet reasonableness to Israel. And yet I have met no responsible Arab who did not concede Israel here to stay. They may not always continue to think so and many statements and impossible demands now being made for home consumption are dangerous because it becomes unpatriotic to put forward more moderate claims (a Soviet technique).

Above all Israel must be made to see Arab point of view and realize it is often her own provocative acts and justification of them that so inflames Arab populations, that Arab leaders are forced in self protection to make such statements. Israel must grow up and not, like a little boy, yell "you're another" at every Arab act or sword-rattling pronouncement. She must return to the philosophy of Jacob who told his sons going into Egypt "take a little honey". Arab pride has been profoundly hurt by loss of war and as winner Israel must be magnanimous and conciliatory. She often does just opposite in overt actions, public statements, and unless she stops she will never have peace and will in long run fail to convince even her friends she wants peace. She must exercise patience. When she rates a gesture of goodwill such as unfreezing some Arab funds she should understand she cannot expect immediate and enthusiastic response from those whose funds they are in first place. She waited 2000 years for her state and should see wisdom of waiting patiently and accepting a few hard words for a few more to make friends with her neighbors. We should use what patient and persuasive powers we have to convince Israel and that large group of American Jews who have influence in Israel of importance this attitude.

[1] Repeated to Amman, Cairo, Beirut, Damascus, London, Paris, and Rome; sent by pouch to Baghdad, Ankara, Jidda, and Tel Aviv.

Some of Israel's own leaders recognize her unfortunate inability to see any point of view other than her own and as Reuven Shiloah stated "her insistence on always being right is a national fault". But World War III can start here and Israel's very existence may depend on a change in her tactics.

If Israel's present state of mind described in Tel Aviv telegrams requires repetition of guarantees we determined to support her economically and prevent forcible territorial changes, these should be given. It realized it may not be too easy for Israel to show conciliation not only for internal reasons but because such action her part may be taken by Arab states as sign of weakness and result in stiffer attitude. In this Israel must trust our assurances, of which the Arabs are aware. She should also be reminded that while our official policy is to support them we are a democracy and publication of her brutal aggressions across frontiers becoming known will lessen sympathy for her and make it difficult for Congress to appropriate the needed funds.

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, February 12, 1953—7:54 p. m.
PRIORITY

625. Department has carefully studied the excellent reporting from Tel Aviv, Jerusalem and Amman on Israel–Jordan border situation and Department's analysis and action required are indicated hereunder:

---

[1] Repeated to Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, London, Paris, Ankara, and the Arab capitals.

Analysis

1. Even with complete goodwill on part Jordan and Israel authorities some frontier friction would occur, particularly at harvest time, since lengthy frontier and difficult terrain make total elimination infiltration virtually impossible. The problem is for each government to exercise maximum control its inhabitants to limit infiltration to minimum.

2. HKJ authorities state all possible measures to prevent infiltration have been taken. Nevertheless the National Guard is the main if not only border enforcing agency except in the Jerusalem area where the Arab Legion exercises some if not complete control. Indications are National Guard not completely reliable and hence not capable handling its responsibility. Greater use of Legion would undoubtedly decrease border violations.

3. The MAC has the responsibility for policing armistice agreements and for investigating violations arising under the agreement. The MAC does not have enforcing powers.

4. There is no basis for assumption that the US and UN are synonymous and US should therefore enforce armistice agreements. Fact is while US is member of UN it possesses same prerogative as all other member nations, namely, one vote which the vote of any other state could nullify in the GA.

5. Department believes solution problem Israel–Jordan border relations lies in concerted effort both parties to arrive at permanent workable arrangements which are faithfully implemented by both sides. The MAC has been established for this very purpose. Declarations of desire for stable, peaceful relations on border do little to contribute to stability if not followed up by conscientious action by both of the parties to the agreement.

6. The MAC has verified that Israel forces crossed demarcation line and attacked Falama but has ascertained that Jordan forces had no part in the mining of the railway in Israel. USG therefore cannot consider the two incidents comparable since all indications point to the Israel attack on Falama as a carefully planned operation carried out as a part of a major policy decision of IG.

7. Israel's policy of reprisal raids has already been subject of strong US disapprobation, as for example, Byroade to Sharett June 20,[2] Hart to Makleff June 24,[3] and, most recently, Jernegan to Goitein January 30[4] (see memos conversation those dates). IG officials have always maintained that retaliatory raids are necessary and justifiable to keep down infiltration. IG to date has been unwilling to give assurances that such raids will cease. Is USG therefore to assume that IG will continue to flout friendly counsel and take matters into own hands? USG considers these raids a grave danger to the security and stability of the area and if they are not expressly and clearly abandoned it must accordingly reserve its right to take appropriate action under the Tripartite Declaration and possibly under UN procedures.

Action for Amman

1. Paragraphs of above analysis considered applicable to Jordan are one through five. These should be incorporated into an aide-mémoire which should be left by Ambassador with Foreign Minister after oral representations along same lines.

2. The information contained in paragraphs six and seven may be conveyed orally to Foreign Minister after completion action contained preceding paragraph. No written record of these two paragraphs are to be left with HKJ Government.

Action for Tel Aviv

1. Paragraphs of analysis considered applicable to Israel are one, five, six and seven. These should be incorporated into an aide-mémoire which Ambassador should leave with Foreign Minister. Verbal report of démarche to HKJ should be given to Foreign Minister.

2. In conveying foregoing information to Foreign Minister you should express USG regret that IG has not seen fit to accept friendly counsel and that USG must consider what further step will be required to impress IG sufficiently with importance of abandoning policy of reprisal raids into neighboring territory.

CONFIDENTIAL AMMAN, February 14, 1953—4 p. m.

688. Deptel 625 [2] received noon Friday 13 on which day all government offices closed; therefore action prescribed was deferred until February 14.

In absence of Prime Minister (see Embtel 641, February 5) [3] I called on acting Prime Minister and acting Foreign Minister Said Mufti. Under Secretary of Foreign Affairs acted as interpreter.

After I had conveyed substance of "analysis" in reference to orally making clear distinction between paragraphs 1-5 and paragraphs 6 and 7 acting Prime Minister expressed appreciation of attitude of US Government and of understanding of the situation reflected in my representations.

Acting Prime Minister detailed at some length efforts of HKJ to diminish infiltration. He stated emphatically that government believed that infiltration was not in interest of HKJ. He referred to the numbers of infiltrators or alleged infiltrators captured and held in detention camps. He said that he would speak to CINC tomorrow in regard to possible reinforcement of Arab Legion on border.

Comment, general:

Representations made in compliance instructions in reftel have served to clear the atmosphere, promote understanding and improve relations between HKJ and US Government.

Re paragraph 1. Infiltration may be reduced but it will continue create difficulties until refugee problem is solved and until peace is established. Although we may understand why it is necessary that Arab families be separated and that Arabs be separated from the lands on which they formerly dwelled, it is often difficult for the uneducated Arabs to understand that they commit a crime going to visit their parents or in harvesting crops on lands which they formerly cultivated. No amount of policing can absolutely prevent infiltration in these circumstances.

Re paragraph 2. The Department will note that in the aide-mémoire the language of reftel re national guard has been slightly modified. I feel it necessary to make this modification in order to avoid any language which might be considered derogatory to the national guard. The national guard having stood the brunt of recent Israeli attacks enjoys high popularity in Jordan and members are treated as heroes. It is believed that the language as modified conveyed the sense intended and greatly diminished possibility of giving offense. Copy of aide-mémoire pouched.

Two battalions of Arab Legion have been moved to border districts since Falama incident. They may be further reinforced. I am informed that Glubb feels however that Arab Legion cannot be used primarily as police force for preventing infiltration. Concentration of too great proportion Arab Legion near border interferes with necessary military training.

Re paragraph 4. Embassy is not aware that anyone in authority in Jordan has assumed that US and UN are synonomous or that US should enforce armistice agreement. Prime Minister and others have indeed expressed opinion that is in fact so dependent upon the US that the US could exercise great influence upon Israeli foreign policy when US foreign policy would seem to demand such action.

1318. Deptel 770 [2] and Embtel 1311. [3] Saw Foreign Minister Sharett personally this morning at 10:15. Made oral representations and delivered aide-mémoire in accordance with instructions Deptel 770. Sharett stated that on matter of such importance he would not attempt any immediate oral reply but assured me answer would be based on most careful consideration by IG.

In absence Foreign Minister yesterday Eytan had been given outline of representations. Sharett told me he had received advance report from Eytan and had immediately informed Prime Minister Ben Gurion, who would wish to discuss matter with me later. While he avoided any formal reply or comment, Foreign Minister gave me impression that he received favorably information that USG had expressed view to both Israel and Jordan that their border relations could be solved only through concerted effort on part of both countries to agree upon permanent and workable arrangements which should be faithfully implemented by both sides, utilizing facilities of mixed armistice commission. It was my impression further that he received in all seriousness representations based on numbered paragraphs 6 and 7 of reference Department's telegram. Reuven Shiloah was also present at my meeting with Sharett.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] February 17, 1953.

Subject: Interview with Under Secretary Smith by Diplomatic Representatives of Seven Arab States.

Participants: Mr. Mohamed Kamil Abdul Rahim, Egyptian Ambassador
Dr. Farid Zeineddine, Syrian Ambassador
Mr. Abdullah Ibrahim Bakr, Minister Plenipotentiary, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim of Iraq
Dr. Yusuf Haikal, Minister of the Hashemite Kingdom of the Jordan
Sayed Abdurrahman Ibn Abdussamed Abu-Taleb, Chargé d'Affaires, Legation of Yemen
Mr. Hassan Saab, First Secretary, Legation of Lebanon, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim
Sheikh Mohammed Muhtasib, Second Secretary, Embassy of Saudi Arabia, Chargé d'Affaires ad interim
Under Secretary Walter Bedell Smith
Assistant Secretary Henry A. Byroade, NEA
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

This call had been requested on an urgent basis on February 16 by the Egyptian Embassy, speaking on behalf of the Arab group. The Egyptian Ambassador acted as primary spokesman for the group, being Dean of the Arab corps. He stated that the purpose of the visit was twofold: first, to congratulate Mr. Smith on his appointment as Under Secretary and, second, to express the deep concern of the Arab states over the implications which the recent rupture between the Soviet Union and Israel might have in terms of Zionist pressures on the United States Government. He said that it was evident that this rupture would provoke a renewed wave of sympathy in the United States for Zionism and might result in pressures for statements or actions by the United States Government which would be interpreted in the Arab world as unfriendly. He pointed out that the Communist "line" in the Arab world emphasizes anti-Zionism and extreme Arab nationalism, and that Communists would have little difficulty in attracting Arab sympathy if the United States Government took a position on behalf of Israel and against the Soviet Union which would, by implication, be a position against Arab interests. He pointed out that the rank and file of Arabs would not be able to discriminate between the Communist "line" and the truth, and that the reservoir of goodwill toward America which still remains in the Arab world would be heavily drained if the United States Government should yield to the pressures of Zionism exerted through American Jewry.

Ambassador Zeineddine of Syria commented further that such a yielding by the U.S. Government would undermine the position of moderate pro-Western leadership in the Arab states to the point where it might be removed from authority.

The Under Secretary asked Mr. Zeineddine for further elucidation as to the dangers which he envisaged. Mr. Zeineddine replied that he feared military aid and disproportionate economic aid to Israel. In effect, he feared a continuation of the general orientation of the previous Administration.

General Smith responded that he had recently had occasion to call to the attention of his friend, Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel—for whom he had always entertained high respect—that the United States could not be accused of discriminating against Israel in its policies. He felt that by the same token the U.S. had a good record of helpfulness toward the Arab countries; the U.S. Government sought peace and stability throughout the area and stood firmly against any aggression. Indeed, as his visitors were probably aware, the U.S. Government had recently dispatched a very strong note to Tel Aviv regarding the recent incursions by Israeli armed forces into Jordan, which it felt could not be excused by Israel on grounds of individual infiltration from the Jordan side. With respect to the recent rift between the Soviet Union and Israel, his visitors might fear that this might result in a recrudescence of large-scale Jewish emigration from Eastern Europe into Israel.

However, from his years in Moscow, the Under Secretary felt certain that the Soviet Union would never permit large-scale emigration from the Iron Curtain, this being contrary to very firmly established Soviet policy. Turning to Ambassador Zeineddine, whom he had known in Moscow, he inquired whether the latter agreed. Both Mr. Zeineddine and the Ambassador of Egypt responded that they did agree and that this was not what the Arabs mainly feared. What they feared most were public statements supporting Israel, resolutions by Congress and general diplomatic support which would "pour oil" on the smoldering fires of resentment against the U.S. which existed as the result of America's part in the creation of the State of Israel and its subsequent assistance to that country.

Note: Contrary to February 18 reports in the American press, the Arab representatives did not seek assurances from the Under Secretary that the United States would cease all aid to Israel; nor did they seek direct commitments on any subjects. The purpose of their visit was to give expression to their apprehensions and to their hope that this Government would not yield to Zionist pressures.

SECRET AMMAN, February 20, 1953—8 a. m.

701. Anwar Nuseibeh, Minister of Defense, discussed with me very informally at my home February 18 desirability of peace with Israel and prospect of bringing about a peace on reasonably satisfactory terms.

He emphasized unity of Arab States on this issue, said that if Israel had any hope of dividing Arab States by making separate peace with either Syria or Egypt, Israeli Government was deceiving itself; clearly implied that he made this statement on basis authoritative information. Said that Arab States would not make peace as they had made war—that is, each on its own, and that peace negotiations would have to be through Arab League channels.

Nuseibeh said Arab leaders have become reluctantly convinced that Israel is there to stay and that best policy is to make peace with a neighbor, however much disliked that neighbor may be. Without going into great detail he indicated that to him a reasonable peace meant a peace along the lines indicated in Embassy despatch 215, January 19 [2] and Embtel 643 of Feb 6.

Problem which seemed to assume great importance in his mind was: "Who is to take initiative." I suggested Arab States might well take initiative. He said that would seem too much like the vanquished begging peace of the victor. With him it was a question of "face." I replied that I saw no reason why Arab States should not take initiative, on the premise that even though Israel had been victorious in war Israel's present precarious economic situation, due in large part to Arab blockade, would enable parties to deal more or less as equals.

It was clear from what Nuseibeh said that the ideas he expressed were not only the result of discussions with his colleagues in the Cabinet but also the result of conversations between Jordanians and representatives of other Arab States.

The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY TEL AVIV, February 20, 1953—9 p. m.

1348. Deptel 770,[1] Embtel 1318,[2] Embassy despatch 761 February 16.[3] Prime Minister Ben Gurion invited me to meet with him, Foreign Minister Sharett, Kollek and Bendor yesterday afternoon to discuss US-Israel relations in general and representations made pursuant to Deptel 770 in particular. Although Prime Minister showed some of subjectivity mentioned in section one Embtel 1265 in discussing Embassy's aide-mémoire re reprisals, it was obvious he took representations very seriously and is anxious avoid injuring relations with the United States and other Western powers.

Prime Minister commenced discussion with expression of hope US policy of 5 years of support for Israel should be continued and expanded. He stated he would be the first to recognize that without help of American Jewry and US Government, Israel could not survive; and that he realized also that free peoples of world must help themselves and that they should not "create difficulties". Commenting on importance of regional peace to Israel and Western powers, he expressed hope that US could improve situation by lending support of its influence and prestige. He saw no reason, however, to delay preparations for defense until regional peace is achieved, saying he thought it none too early to prepare for an emergency. He said Israel would be in position to mobilize considerable armed force and provide important strategic facilities. He dilated on this subject in some detail saying Israel could train force of some 200,000 to 250,000; and could be important as center of communications, supply, repairs, etc.

He commented on how little progress Israel has made in getting military aid, and made plea for early consideration of his request, stressing willingness to cooperate. He said in event war comes there is no assurance most of countries in Middle East would not attempt to remain neutral, and expressed opinion US would be obliged defend Middle East in any case. He mentioned three possibilities in order of their desirability:

(1) To achieve area peace, presumably through Egypt, bringing whole including Israel into regional defense plans;

[1] Printed as telegram 625 to Amman, Document 567.

[3] Not printed, but see footnote 4, ibid.

(2) If area peace cannot be achieved in time, make arrangements separately with all willing to cooperate, in which connection he confirmed prior assurances Israel would cooperate on such basis, and

(3) Make arrangements defend area even though some Arab countries refuse to cooperate on either basis, in which event Western powers would have to depend principally on Turkey and Israel.

As to Embassy's aide-mémoire of February 16 based on Deptel 770, Prime Minister stated he would be less than frank if he did not say he had been "a little astonished and hurt by some of the statements and the general tone". On other hand he was gratified at evidence US realization its position of world leadership and did not resent its frank criticism when based on facts. He agreed that friction with neighboring countries should be avoided and that infiltration and countermeasures are not purely local matters. He took exception to implication of mutual guilt with regard to infiltration saying that it is Jordanians who enter Israel to loot, rather than vice versa.

While conceding impossibility stop border incidents entirely, he says it has been demonstrated infiltration on large scale can be prevented. Shishikli, he said, had reduced border depredations to a minimum and he is convinced infiltration problem with Jordan can be controlled if Jordan Government and Arab Legion seriously wish to achieve this result. He felt it was not fair, moreover, to excuse the Jordan Government of responsibility in connection with the railway explosion saying "to mine a railway required planning and whether committed by regulars or irregulars makes little difference to Israel".

As to all-important question of reprisals, the Prime Minister said that he knew they make trouble for his government and for the friends of Israel, and that he would like to have advice as to how lives and property could be protected, saying "I confess I do not know how we can do it without fighting back". He urged that we look back in our own history to times when frontier settlements were exposed to raids and that we consider what it would mean to us if we were subjected to proportional killing and looting. He added "we cannot give our people the feeling that they are not being protected. Believe me, I am as strong for peace with the Arabs as you are, since for us it is vital, but until there is peace we must protect our people". In course conversation, I reviewed our attitude toward reprisals saying present representations are result series of events which are regarded as unnecessary and extremely harmful to interest of Israel as well as US. Specific mention was made of the El Hamma bombing in 1951, the Beit Jala and other acts of reprisal in 1952, the "barrel incident" and the recent attacks on Jordan villages.

While Prime Minister who determines Israel Government policy, still believes reprisals might in certain circumstances, "be only effective means of self-defense", Embassy believes he is sincere in wishing to avoid them. Ultimate effectiveness of representations will depend it is believed on extent to which both parties take seriously US interest in easing tension and make real effort control situation.

Letter adds: "Whenever an Arab inhabitant of the DZ elects to leave his present abode because of the zone's division, he shall be suitably compensated. Director United States Division Foreign Ministry stated this morning Israel Government understanding Syria willing proceed with present discussions on above basis if this does "not rule out compensation outside DZ" for Arabs who desire leave lands on Israel side new demarcation line. [3] In telegram 1310 from Tel Aviv, Feb. 13, Davis reported that Sharett stated he had not yet received details of the latest Syrian proposal for a new demarcation line but Vigier had given the Director General of the Foreign Ministry a preview of its general lines. Sharett expressed gratification at this indication that Shishikli still desired an agreement, and responded favorably to Davis' expression of hope that the new proposals would receive careful consideration and that every effort would be made to avoid fixing conditions or making pronouncements which might result in breaking off negotiations. (684A.85/2-1353)

By way of background he explained that in saying lands given in compensation need not lie within DZ, Israel left open to discussion area suggested by Syria but provided a much more palatable formulation for domestic political purposes. He stated this formulation had further advantage avoiding mention name of area (Derbashiya) which has no precise limitations. He assured me it is Israeli Government intent to try to reach agreement within framework present offer and reply. He stated that although Israel would much prefer to pay compensation in money for the property of Arabs wishing to abandon their property on Israel side of demarcation line, letter clearly indicates readiness to negotiate compensation in form of lands outside demilitarization zones.

Dept's reasoning is that time must be allowed for further improvement in climate leading to peace and in meantime Israel, which has most to gain, should not pursue a course which would make it more difficult for us to be helpful in settlement of NE problems. Further, to move FonMin now would invite attack on Israel in current session of GA.

4. Representatives of UK, France, Italy, Belgium and Australia have informed Dept their governments oppose transfer and will keep missions in Tel Aviv. These governments have requested USG join in démarche to IG with view IG leaving FonMin Tel Aviv.

1404. Content Deptel 660 [2] was conveyed to Foreign Ministry but feeling that Israel is being disregarded in matter of direct concern to her has increased (Embtel 1064 [3] and 287 [4]).

Tekoah, Assistant Legal Advisor Foreign Ministry, has outlined to Embassy legal position Israel as riparian state and called attention to right of Palestine Electric Corporation as holder concession under Palestine mandate in 1927 and "in Jordan by 1928 enactment". Director United States Division, Bendor, referred recently to call Fryer and I made on Sharett (Embtel 281), [5] saying Foreign Minister had been motivated in suggesting consultations at technical level by genuine interest in possibility of settling refugees, but in so doing Sharett had not waived principle Israel's riparian rights, which would have to be referred to Cabinet. It was naturally expected consultations would take place soon to provide basis for government consideration. Referring to reports Syria had authorized signing agreement with Jordan, Bendor suggested that if it is not too soon for considering agreement on matter between Syria and Jordan, it should not have been too soon for consultations suggested by Sharett.

Same source stated Israel officials feel genuine concern lest project, which requires international agreement, reach advance stage without Israel's being consulted. Said Israel has repeatedly expressed willingness settle matters this kind outside context general peace settlement and Yarmuk Plan presents "excellent opportunity for technical cooperation". He remarked plan apparently was suggested to Jordan authorities on unilateral basis by TCA engineer, and is now under study without one of governments directly affected being consulted regarding its interests.

[4] In telegram 287 from Tel Aviv, Aug. 19, the Embassy stated its belief that consultation between American and Israeli engineers on Near Eastern water problems and Yarmuk water rights in particular would yield much useful information to the United States. The Israeli Government, assisted by American consultants, had already made extensive studies, and had frequently expressed the desire to consult with American engineers working on the Litani and Yarmuk projects. In view of the unlikelihood of direct discussions in the near future between Arab and Israeli engineers, the Embassy felt that something was to be gained by discussions between U.S. and Israeli engineers. The Ambassador in Israel (Davis) to the Department of State

SECRET TEL AVIV, March 10, 1953—6 p. m.

1426. Joint Embassy-TCA message. Embassy telegrams 1305 and 1306.[1]

In effort "synchronize" with financial discussions being initiated Washington by Israel Embassy, Foreign Minister Sharett asked me to meet yesterday with him, Minister Finance Eshkol, Avriel and Bendor. Meeting was attended also by Russell, McDaniel and Jones. Principal points made by Sharett follow:

1. Israel Government has honored obligations undertaken in notes exchanged last September, having avoided further increase in short term debt total. This had been done he said at cost reduction standard of living, deferment development program, and rise unemployment.

2. Unwieldy short term debt remains, nevertheless, and imposes both financial and administrative burdens. By putting foreign exchange operations on cash basis (paying off all supply creditors but retaining bank fees) Israel Government estimates refunding operations would yield $10 million saving in financial costs. Would also enable Israel Government officials plan more rationally.

3. While Israel Government has actually reduced total short term debt by over $20 million, shortfall $20 million expected from April 1 through June 30. Sharett stated Israel Government will do utmost meet this itself along lines previously reported (see Embtel 1305). Pointed out, however, that even if successful, Israel Government would be worse off because it might be "mortgaging future". Will endeavor obtain cash advance from Germans, but if unsuccessful may have to resort to borrowing offsetting reductions thus far this year in short term debt (see Embtel 1306).

4. Israel Government will in any event have to come to United States Government for "one time" special assistance after June 30. Proceeds to be used only for refunding purposes. Amount not specified.

Comment: While Israel Government has made progress in implementing Mikesell report, and while there are compelling arguments for eventually refunding Israel short term debts, Embassy-TCA feel refunding should, if possible, be (a) disassociated from emergency assistance to avert default and (b) identified with attainable balance of payments objectives and projections that go beyond 12 months.

This year's foreign exchange budget now apparently being operated on one shot basis with next fiscal year problems to be met when they arise. While it may be possible to get through June 30 even though German cash payment unattainable or delayed, by rolling back some maturities into next fiscal year, by pledging future income against current borrowings and by incurring additional short term debt, this only means trouble for period after July 1. It provides little assurance, moreover, that Israel Government can yet desist from rebuilding short term debt after a refunding operation and indicated that any refunding operation after July 1 may get involved in emergency financial assistance.

Uncertainty over German reparations agreement has admittedly dislocated Israel Government foreign exchange budgeting this past year. Embassy-TCA feel however, that, even though it may be difficult in this fluid situation, it is essential (a) for Israel Government to start establishing some attainable balance of payment goals and projections going beyond just one year (b) that these goals and projections should give expression to broad economic policy reforms such as outlined in CRANE D-30 [2] and (c) any refunding operation should be related to these two steps rather than to emergency financial assistance.

It is also felt that focus United States influence might now be shifted from that of introducing foreign exchange budget and orderly financial procedures to that of attaining broader policy objectives. Former focus was of overriding importance at time Mikesell report and essential prerequisite to broader economic reforms needed here. Time has now come for United States to use its aid to exert influence toward attaining type of economic reforms envisaged in CRANE D-30.

The Secretary of State to the British Ambassador (Makins) [1]

SECRET

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to His Excellency the British Ambassador and has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of his note No. 46 of January 29, 1953 [2] which proposes the initiation of discussions between the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France concerning the freedom of transit through the Suez Canal. An aide-mémoire, identical in content to the Ambasaador's note, has also been received from the Embassy of the French Republic.

[1] A similar note, not printed, was sent to the French Embassy on Mar. 11.

After due consideration of the United States position with respect to the free use of the Suez Canal as it relates to presently existing circumstances in Egypt, the United States Government wishes to express to the Governments of Great Britain and France its opinion that the holding at this time of secret conversations between the three Governments relating to the agenda set forth in numbered Paragraph 12 of the note under reference would be premature and possibly prejudicial to the conclusion of agreements of larger significance to the Western Powers.

Although the United States Government is not a party to the Convention of Constantinople of October 29, 1888, the views of this Government on the subject of the freedom of transit through the Suez Canal are well-known. By its co-sponsorship of the United Nations Security Council Resolution on Egyptian restrictions on Canal traffic of September 1, 1951, the United States gave emphatic public expression to its views with respect to the free flow of traffic through the Canal. The Egyptian Government is well aware of the attitude of the United States Government in this respect.

While it is true that the situation with respect to unimpeded passage through the Canal is not yet ideal, the United States joins the Governments of the United Kingdom and France in their belief that the general disposition of the present Egyptian Government offers reasonable grounds for the expectation that satisfactory consideration of international rights will be afforded.

The Government of the United States understands that negotiations with the Egyptian Government on the long outstanding defense question may soon be under way. The successful conclusion of an amicable understanding would materially alter, to the benefit of the free nations, the situation in the Middle East. In view of the importance of these negotiations with Egypt, the United States is reluctant to take the risk of prejudicing their successful outcome. The proposed exchange of views between the three Governments, particularly since other maritime powers are to be invited to associate themselves with an agreed plan of action, might well result in seriously affecting the negotiations with Egypt. This is especially the case in the event that it should reach public notice that such a consultation was taking place without the knowledge or participation of the Egyptian Government.

The United States Government will be pleased to receive any further comments of the Government of the United Kingdom respecting the matters set forth above and desires to express its continued interest in the views of the British Government with regard to the freedom of transit of the Suez Canal.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, March 18, 1953—7 p. m.

1470. Joseph Tekoah, assistant legal adviser to Foreign Ministry, states that March 16 Israel-Syrian meeting discussed demarcation line in all sectors of demilitarized zone and that following points of divergence between parties emerged:

(1) Northern sector demilitarized zone. Israel argued for line established on basis of present cultivation and possession of land, with compensation for Arab-owned land being cultivated by Israelis. Syrians argued for line based on ownership of land. Syria allegedly rejected suggestion by Vigier that Commission be set up to inquire into present cultivation and ownership and to propose to next session line taking into account both principles.

(2) Central sector. Divergence on three major points: (a) Syrians "insisted" on principle of land compensation for all Arab-owned land in demilitarized zone "regardless of whether Arabs at present inhabiting zone as in case Shamalna or whether Arabs living in Syria". According Tekoah, Syria was thus returning to its position prior to acceptance Gaon letter to Vigier (Embtel 1380) [2] of "demanding right annex piece of land equivalent to sum total of Arab-owned land left on Israel side of new demarcation line." (b) Syrians put forward claim for "island of land between two arms of Jordan River opposite Buteiha." Tekoah described this as departure from Jordan agreement to line along eastern bank of river. Added that Israel was prepared consider giving them island on understanding eastern arm of river would be "dammed off" but that this was rejected by Skugan representatives. (c) Syria reportedly claimed "full water rights". According Tekoah, this was departure from earlier Syrian agreement accept Israel's position on Jordan River (Israel sovereignty) on understanding Syrians would continue enjoy water rights they have had in past.

(3) Southern sector. Not discussed in detail. Compromise proposal expected to result from March 10 meeting (Embtel 1438)[3] not presented and positions both parties at that meeting reportedly unchanged. Tekoah described territorial problem this sector as most complicated because of "interlacing" of Israel and Arab lands. Claimed that Syrian position March 10 meeting, by suggesting line which would bring Syria "very close to high war", had gone beyond what Israel had previously been led to expect both from conversations Colonel Taxis and prior informal talks with Syrian representatives.

In conclusion Tekoah stated his impression Israel representatives discouraged and "outlook much less optimistic" as result above meeting. Gave as reasons (1) belief here that Syrian representatives are reverting to original positions in matters on which Israel understood compromises had been reached and (2) increasing propensity Syrians present proposals on basis that if Israel not prepared accept Syrian position little use in continuing. He praised Vigier for what he described as efforts keep Syrians in negotiating frame of mind and reported no decision yet on whether there will be meeting March 23.

The official stated that both sides presented views on the proposed demarcation line for the southern sector of the demilitarized zone, and each was to report to its government and to Colonel Taxis to propose a compromise line on the basis of this discussion. 535. Department disturbed at reported trend of events re Israel-Syrian border discussions (re Tel Aviv 1470 Mar 18 and Damascus 601 Mar 19). Reference cables present first indication "uncompromising" attitude on part Syrian Government. This indication is particularly disturbing since Department in its formulation of policy towards Middle East has noted and has been placing emphasis on Syrian progressive leadership with respect such outstanding Arab-Israel problems as refugee resettlement and border settlement.

While Department hesitates speculate cause apparent Syrian change of attitude Department hopeful this does not reflect Syrian over-confidence based on anticipation "new approach" by present Administration towards Middle East. If so, Syrians should be made realize intransigence will not attract US support but likely instead be interpreted here as confirmation warnings such as have been repeated by Israeli Government that any change of U.S. attitude towards Arab states would make settlement of outstanding issues more distant.

Department considers urgent that your fullest influence be appropriately used to urge border settlement which seemed so near. (Reference Damascus 574 Feb 28 [2] and Tel Aviv 1370 Feb 26, [3] 1380 [4] and 1383 Feb 27). [2]

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel

SECRET WASHINGTON, March 24, 1953—6:11 p. m.

863. Embtel 1426.[1] Israel Government represented by Eban, Sherman, Shalit and Lewin has made similar presentation here to that described reference telegram, except for strong implication that assistance relieve Israel Government of short-term debt burden should come before June 30, and argument that transferability provisions Mutual Security Act makes this feasible. Request was made for roughly $70 million in grant funds to meet debt estimated $98 million in payments falling due during period April 1, 1953 to May 30, 1954, less about $28 million in normal lines of credit. Representations were made that reduction in level indebtedness would be permanent.

Department finds Embassy–TCA comments very helpful and concurs that if funding operation undertaken it should generally follow lines reference telegram.

Following appear to be major arguments in favor operation: (1) Unless assistance granted Israel may default during forthcoming fiscal year. On economic side this would (a) probably cause immediate termination all bank and most commercial lines of credit; (b) cause serious disruption flow consumers goods and raw materials until purchasing placed on cash basis; with major portion dollar income already pledged to banks, transfer to cash basis might be delayed until after severe hardship caused Israel population. On political side default would (c) be harsh psychological blow to Israel people which would probably shake confidence in present moderate Government; (d) encourage Israel Government to follow policy of desperation; (e) provide evidence to Arab states of success boycott, tend to reverse present trend toward acceptance Israel as permanent feature Near East and upset slow improvement in political climate which US hopes will eventually lead to peace; (2) Funding would decrease extra cost (estimated $7 or $8 million annually in direct and indirect charges) of maintaining present short-term debt, which now reduces free dollar exchange available and reduces impact U.S. aid; (3) Operation would relieve high Israel officials of time-consuming and difficult problem of turning over short-term indebtedness; Israel Government generally is now subjected difficulty of making constructive plans because credit problem interferes with ability plan effectively.

While recognizing these arguments, Department weighing other factors: (1) Severely adverse affect on U.S. relations with Arab world of such additional assistance to Israel; (2) Possibility that release Israel officials from discipline imposed by necessity turn over short-term loans may be premature, and result in less careful fiscal management; (3) It would be difficult, most likely impossible over extended period, for IG to avoid building up new short-term indebtedness as result improved credit position, thus nullifying long-term effect of operation; (4) Precedent of bailing out Israel creditors may lay U.S. open to heavy pressure to bail out other important and influential U.S. creditors at some future time and may also open U.S. to similar demands from other countries; (5) Practical difficulty finding funds this purpose because of scarcity of and legal limitations on grant-aid funds, and difficulty obtaining convincing demonstration that repayment loan funds would be assured. Further Embassy comments, particularly on factors (2) and (3) immediately preceding, will be welcomed.

Department has initiated discussions problem which include representatives Treasury and Export-Import Bank. Apparent from early conversations that it would be very difficult find Mutual Security Act or loan funds for this purpose before June 30, even if decision were made that U.S. assistance warranted. Decision unlikely immediately in view complexity matter. Department hopes take advantage Ambassador's return air problem thoroughly before final decision made.

611. Pursuant Deptel 535, March 21 I saw Shishikli March 24 and made points outlined last paragraph reftel. I expressed hope he would continue display leadership in eliminating points of friction with Israel. Shishikli summarized situation as follows:

goodwill reciprocated there is no question of failure in present negotiations. He had been encouraged by progress made in ISMAC meetings to establish new demarcation line. He asserted parties had agreed compensation in either lands or cash should be made 6 dispossessed Arabs whether or not they left during or since hostilities. In March 16 meeting however Israel withdrew its agreement compensate such Arabs no longer living zone. Shishikli stated he could not sacrifice rights of Arabs who owned property in demilitarized zone (Embtels 550 and 551, February 11)[2] and if Israel did not recognize these rights negotiations might reach impasse. Shishikli termed Israeli "about-face" on property rights of Arabs device to prevent agreement prior departure Colonel Taxis. He suggested I confirm Israeli reversal attitude from Vigier or Taxis. Comment: Many Arabs have either left or been forced out of zones by Israeli policies, mainly in central and southern zones. Others including important Damascus families are absentee owners of lands west of Jordan.

2. Shishikli asserted task of ISMAC in current discussions is to agree upon provisional demarcation line, without prejudice to existing water rights. Final agreement on water rights must await permanent settlement. This confirms his position set forth in enclosure to Embdes 279, November 6, 1952.[3] However he stated Syria could hardly permit Baniyas and Hasbaya waters continue flow freely into Jordan if Israel were meanwhile to carry out unilaterally developments calculated to buttress Israeli claim to larger share of Jordan waters than it now utilizes.

3. Shishikli impressed me as being sincerely desirous reach settlement and disappointed at Israeli attitude. It is obvious some confusion exists between Shishikli understanding of present status of negotiations and those of Israeli and probably even his Syrian negotiators. Embassy hopes any differences may be cleared up in meeting tomorrow between Shishikli, Vigier, and Taxis.

Colonel Taxis states in meeting with Colonel Shishikli March 26 he and Vigier apparently cleared up Shishikli's misunderstanding Israeli position and Shishikli corrected false impression intransigeance created by Syrian negotiators at last meeting. Summary preliminary information follows:

1. Syria wishes reach equitable agreement with Israel on frontier questions even if negotiations require number of months. (Shishikli expressed to Vigier his mystification at US action in recalling Colonel Taxis prior conclusion current talks.)
2. Shishikli asserted dispossessed Arab landowners whether or not living in zone should be compensated but not necessarily all through exchange of land. Shishikli proposed compensation be in form of exchange of all available land within zones then in Israel territory outside of zone along Huleh, with due regard for natural boundaries; landowners not receiving land under this formula should be compensated in cash. (Taxis estimates cash compensation would be required for roughly 6,000 donums Arab owned land after above exchanges. This is equivalent to holdings of two Arab families west of Jordan. He and Vigier hope secure Syrian-Israel agreement compensate all small landowners in land and these two large landowners in cash.)
3. Shishikli declared he did not seek "unlimited" irrigation rights but only confirmation of existing rights with right of either side to negotiate for increases of amounts of water needed in future. Neither party should unilaterally increase its use of Jordan waters.

Taxis and Vigier much encouraged by Shishikli's attitude and consider Israeli fears expressed Tel Aviv Embtel 1470, March 18 unfounded. Taxis hopes Embassy Tel Aviv will encourage Israelis continue negotiations in spirit compromise. He assumes Israeli religious holiday may delay next meeting until April 9 or later.

The Arab states principally concerned and also by Iraq, might be considered to affect American interests adversely. He trusted that USG might by advice to United Nations or otherwise, bring about Riley's immediate recall.

Prime Minister said that no Jordanian official except those assigned to MAC would henceforth be permitted have any official dealings with Riley and that unless he were soon recalled Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan would prohibit his entering Jordan territory.

Prime Minister requested that I report his statements to my Government.

SECRET WASHINGTON, April 1, 1953.

Subject: Syrian Ambassador's Representations Regarding German Reparations to Israel

---

[1] This memorandum of conversation was sent to Secretary Dulles under cover of a memorandum of Apr. 3 by Byroade, which reads as follows:

"The Syrian Ambassador recently received a directive from his Government to place before you personally his government's views on the question of German reparations to Israel. Your schedule has been such that I told the Syrian Ambassador

Continued

Participants: Henry A. Byroade, Assistant Secretary for NEA
Dr. Farid Zeineddine, Ambassador of Syria
Richard Funkhouser—NE

Assistant Secretary Byroade expressed his regret that the pressure of work was such that the Secretary was not able to see the Syrian Ambassador at this moment, but he assured Zeineddine that he would personally carry to the Secretary all points which the Syrian Ambassador wished to make on behalf of his Government.

The Syrian Ambassador stated that he had been instructed by his Government to raise with the Secretary of State on an urgent basis the question of German reparations to Israel. He stated that his Government was unable to view these reparations the same way as did the Government of the United States, and he indicated that his Government did not have the same impression of the motives which prompted these reparations payments.

As his first point, Ambassador Zeineddine stated that the reparations payments to Israel were most substantial compared with the budgets of other countries in the Near East. The annual payments were, in fact, equal to the entire Syrian budget. His Government considered this as a matter of importance.

The Ambassador stated secondly that his Government was concerned with the list of materials which were reportedly being sent to Israel. His Government had noted that the bulk of these material shipments would fall under categories termed by the United States Government to be "strategic materials". Directly or indirectly, this, according to the Syrian Ambassador, would create an impressive military potential in Israel which would be of concern to his Government.

Thirdly, Ambassador Zeineddine stated that his Government was concerned that these payments would be made to a "group in Palestine which had never experienced in their majority any persecution from the Nazis". He listed numerically the Jewish population in Palestine before World War II, immigration of European Jews you would be unable to see him for some time and that I had been designated to receive his message on your behalf. The attached memorandum of conversation presents his points and the general lines of my reply. He and I have talked about this matter so often that I did not feel it necessary to cover all the factors involved.

"As the Ambassador was directed to see you I promised that I would bring this point to your attention as quickly as possible and that he would receive an official reply. I therefore feel committed to ask you to consider briefly the points he raised. If you agree with the general line of my reply I can give it to him again verbally as representing your position."

The following notation appears on Byroade's memorandum of Apr. 3: "Sec saw & approved per our phone conversation—6 April R[oderic] L. O'C[onnor]." (262.84A41/4-1553) who were escaping from persecution which the Ambassador considered in no way connected to the Nazis, and post-war immigrants who the Ambassador stated were in no way escaping Nazi persecution.

As his fourth point, the Ambassador stated the Syrian Government viewed with great concern the serious jeopardy to equilibrium in the Middle East which would follow from such an agreement, particularly one which recognized Israel as a state which represented world Jewry. The Ambassador stated that this "political aspect" was of "supreme importance" and felt that the German-Israel agreement thus became an "international problem rather than one which could be considered solely within Israel-German relationships".

Ambassador Zeineddine expressed his Government's view that the United States was in large part responsible for this agreement. Ambassador Zeineddine referred to the essential financial assistance which the United States was giving to Germany which in turn made it possible for Germany to pay reparations to Israel. He also mentioned that his Government considered that the United States had given direct support to those groups in Germany which favored the reparations agreement. The Ambassador's instructions concluded with a plea that the United States Government cooperate with the Syrian Government in "bringing about circumstances whereby German assistance would be channeled to those Jewish individuals directly affected by German persecution rather than go to Israel as a state representing world Jewry, and a state where such aid would be used not for the individual but directly or indirectly for the development of an economic and military potential which could be directed against Arab states". If such a position were acceptable to the United States Government the Syrian Government, according to the Ambassador, would hope to discuss ways and means to put such a plan into effect.

"Having fulfilled my Government's instructions", Ambassador Zeineddine stated, "I will now try to convince you of the fairness of our approach". He then discussed the fact that an Arab League meeting was to be held shortly at which time this subject would be considered. He also discussed the possibility of placing German reparations into a "pool" for those refugees who had individually suffered from the Nazi regime. He placed emphasis on what he considered an existing "moral relationship" between the German debt to the Jews and the Israeli debt to the Arabs. He conceded that, whereas the United States Government might not have the power of decision in this case, it was in a position to influence strongly both Germany and Israel. He hoped that the United States would be able to intercede with German authorities to postpone either the final promulgation of the agreement or at least its implementation until the above program could be fully studied. He stated that he had mentioned to the Director of Near Eastern Affairs his hope that such delay could at least take place until the Secretary of State completed his trip throughout the Middle East. He wondered if this question could not be discussed with Chancellor Adenauer during this forthcoming trip to Washington. He asked if the United States could not make an appointment for the Chiefs of Arab Missions to discuss these problems with Chancellor Adenauer during his stay in Washington. He felt that such a move, which he considered a small one, would be received most favorably among the states of the Middle East.

Assistant Secretary Byroade stated that he would bring these matters to the immediate attention of the Secretary of State. He stated that whereas he could not speak for the Secretary he would like to present his own views on several of the points made by the Syrian Ambassador. Mr. Byroade stated that many of the Ambassador's points were well taken. He agreed that there was a "moral" connection between the German Jewish refugee problem and the Israeli-Arab refugee problem. He stated that the problem which had occupied the major part of his attention in his work as Assistant Secretary of State for NEA was the devotion of his energies to finding ways to right the wrong done to the Arab refugees.

However, the Assistant Secretary stated that whereas he could find fault with some of the details in the current German-Israeli agreement, he felt such a move by the German people was as Adenauer had put it "good for the German soul". Mr. Byroade stated that he had come in close contact with the German problem in his previous position as Director of German Affairs and felt more encouraged by this gesture on the part of the West German people than perhaps any other single move they had made. He told Ambassador Zineddine that in Chancellor Adenauer the world possessed a great statesman and for the United States Government to make any moves which could be interpreted as opposing this Adenauer-backed agreement at this point could be used by Adenauer's enemies in Germany to undermine his position. Assistant Secretary Byroade stated that those elements in Germany which had opposed the reparations agreement unfortunately included all those elements about which the United States was worried for Germany's future. Mr. Byroade concluded by stating that rather than move backwards to block this reparations agreement, he believed it more proper and productive to devote all energies to righting the other wrong which had been done to the Palestine Arabs. Assistant Secretary Byroade was determined to pursue these efforts to a successful conclusion.[2]

The Syrian Ambassador stated that he appreciated the position of the United States Government in this problem and was promised the earliest possible official reply to his representations.

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 8, 1953.

Subject:
1. Future status of the Suez Canal
2. Military aid to Israel
3. Prospects for Peace in the Near East
4. Transfer of Israel Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem

Participants:
NEA—Mr. Byroade
Israel Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett
Israel Ambassador Abba Eban
NE—Mr. Waller

After an exchange of courtesies Foreign Minister Sharett said that his Government would shortly send to the Department a written communication regarding the Suez Canal problem which would make two main points. These would concern Israel's interest in (1) the Suez Canal as an international waterway and (2) defense arrangements. The Foreign Minister said that Israel is an interested party since any changes in the present status of the Canal would directly affect Israel. He pointed out that it is one thing to have an important Western power exercising a moderating influence on Egypt's control in the Canal Zone but quite another matter to give the Egyptians control without any precautionary measures being taken to satisfy the rights of other states. He said that the removal of Egyptian restrictions and prohibitions on Canal traffic to and from Israel is no longer considered by the Israel Government as an act of grace on the part of Egypt but a matter of right.

Mr. Byroade said that on this matter he could reassure the Foreign Minister because we also are of the opinion that the restrictions and prohibitions should be removed. He said that for us the Suez question is one of defense of the area and of the assurance to be obtained from Egypt to guarantee that the waterway will remain international. Mr. Byroade said that we are fully aware that the Suez Canal affects not only the United States but also the French position in Indo-China, the British, Israel and other states. However, we believe it preferable for the Egyptians and British to reach an agreement before we go to work to get the boycott lifted against Israel. Both the British and French have asked us to participate formally in tripartite talks on the Canal question but we have thus far refused because of the possibility of a leak. It would not help the negotiations with Egypt if Egypt should learn that representatives of the United States, Britain and France were sitting in Washington discussing the future status of the Suez Canal. Nevertheless we want to sit down with the British and French and have secret low level talks with them about the problem.

Mr. Byroade referred to the Constantinople Convention of 1888 pertaining to the Suez Canal and pointed out that the Soviet Union is a signatory but that the United States is not. One of the facets of the problem is the suggestion recently made to the French by the Egyptian Ambassador in Paris that Israel become a signatory to the Convention. He was unable to say whether the Egyptian Ambassador was speaking officially or unofficially but since the suggestion was being made to the French Government the French assumed it was an official approach. Mr. Byroade said that from our point of view the Suez Canal must remain international but that in any event Israel's interest would be kept in mind.

Mr. Sharett endeavored to point out the great gain which would fall to Egypt if the British evacuate the Canal Zone but Mr. Byroade said that he was not at all sure what, if anything, Egypt would gain. He continued by saying that although our position is not very far from the British position we do disagree with the British on tactics. The British want written commitments from Egypt before evacuating the Canal Zone; the Egyptians say that the British must evacuate the Canal Zone as a matter of right and that they will not buy British evacuation. Each side has stated its position publicly and it is therefore difficult to reconcile the two points of view. Perhaps a little secret diplomacy is needed. As matters stand at the moment the Egyptians have offered to talk with the British without an agenda and without any signed commitments; to talk with the British informally to see whether an agreement would be possible on a formal basis. Mr. Byroade said that he felt sure that the Egyptians would be sensible and agree to talk of other items but that in the meantime there is danger that the recently concluded Sudan Agreement might come unstuck.

Ambassador Eban said that Mr. Byroade's remarks raise the question whether General Naguib is preparing to identify Egypt with the West. He said that there had been nothing in the Egyptian press to prepare the Egyptian public for such a policy. Mr. Byroade replied that since it would take perhaps a year and a half for the British to evacuate some 80,000 troops from the Canal Zone there appeared to be time to prepare the Egyptian public for any change in policy that might be decided. Foreign Minister Sharett suggested that the United States could be more flexible in pursuing its objectives with Egypt as Turkey would undoubtedly support the United States. Mr. Byroade replied that he is more interested in seeing the atmosphere prepared for regional defense rather than to obtain formal signatures to a particular document.

2. The Foreign Minister said that the second part of Israel's concern pertains to military aid. He said he understood that grant military aid had not been forthcoming because the United States has been hamstrung by "an elusive 10 percent". (The statement referred to a provision in the Mutual Security Act to the effect that the President could under certain circumstances divert to other countries of the Middle East 10 percent of the funds authorized for military aid to Greece, Turkey and Iran.) Mr. Byroade said that the Department is attempting to correct that situation by asking Congress to authorize funds without the 10 percent provision. The Foreign Minister said he was glad to have this information and continued by suggesting that the United States take the lead now in starting preparations for the defense of the Middle East. Mr. Byroade expressed the view that the defense of Israel and the Near East was in the mountains north and east of Israel rather than in the Galilee area of Israel and asked whether the Foreign Minister believed that open coordination of defense plans with Turkey and Israel would inspire the other Near East states to cooperate. Ambassador Eban stated that in his opinion open United States support of Israel in defense arrangements would stimulate the Arab states to ask the United States for a similar arrangement with them. He pointed out that this has already happened in the economic field. The Foreign Minister took up the point by saying that intelligence reports show an alarming increase in the military strength of the Arab world. Whether the Arabs could combine was a matter of opinion but the Arab states continue to attack Israel and although the Arabs were defeated they have probably learned by their experiences and in any event have continued to proclaim the inevitability of a "second round". Thus it appears to be very difficult to change their hearts so far as Israel is concerned.

3. Mr. Byroade said that peace is the question uppermost in the Secretary's mind and the problem was how to achieve it. The Foreign Minister said that for Israel the question was vital.

Mr. Byroade recalled that several weeks ago he had asked Ambassador Eban to think about the maximum price that Israel would be willing to pay for peace and was repeating the question to the Foreign Minister—not that he wished to be informed of the conditions himself but so that the Israel Government would have its thoughts clarified and ready when the time to negotiate arrives. The Foreign Minister replied that if there is to be peace it must be between the Arab states as they now are and Israel as she now is. Mr. Byroade asked whether this reply meant that Israel would make no territorial concessions and the Foreign Minister replied that Israel would be willing to make certain adjustments in the Latrun and perhaps another border area or so, but asked to whom territorial concessions should be made and why. He said that Jordan has grabbed Arab Palestine and none of the Arab states has suffered any loss of territory. To make territorial concessions to the Arabs would not bring about peace but would on the contrary whet the Arabs' appetite for more territory. Mr. Byroade pointed out that some of Israel's present territory was acquired by force of arms but the Foreign Minister explained that the territory Israel now holds beyond what was contemplated in the United Nations Partition Resolution of 1947 was obtained because the Arab states refused to accept the partition plan and invaded Palestine to attack the Jews. Territory can only be taken away from Israel by force of arms, the Foreign Minister added.

Mr. Byroade suggested that since neither Israel nor the Arab states appeared willing to devise a plan for peace the United States might have to make its own plan—and it was probable that neither side would like it. Foreign Minister Sharett said that he wished to warn anyone devising a plan which included depriving Israel of territory that the plan would have to include the sending of a military force to support it. Ambassador Eban dwelt at some length on the large areas already held by the Arab states and the comparatively small area of the State of Israel. The Foreign Minister then added that considering territorial changes in the concept being discussed would mean that Israel must immediately stake out claims to land in the Arab states in order to be in a bargaining position if for no other reason.

The Foreign Minister referred to the refugees and asked where they should be settled and who would pay for it. He said that the ability of the Israel Government to pay was dependent on the lifting of the Arab boycott.

Mr. Byroade asked whether his understanding of Israel's position as enunciated by the Foreign Minister means Israel would make no territorial concessions and that the refugees must all be settled elsewhere than in Israel. The Foreign Minister replied "definitely".

Mr. Byroade then asked whether the Foreign Minister would suggest that the United States put in troops to enforce Israel's decisions and the Foreign Minister replied that in the event of a conflict Israel could undoubtedly hold out as long as the Arab states. Mr. Byroade next asked whether it was the Foreign Minister's opinion that the United States should pay for everything. The Foreign Minister recalled that he had already said that if the boycott were lifted it would enable Israel to earmark funds to pay compensation to the refugees, or, should a special loan be raised for this purpose, Israel would with funds derived from the lifting of the boycott repay the loan over a period of time. Mr. Byroade said he does not see how peace can be achieved unless Israel makes some gesture to Arab public opinion and that he had hoped the Foreign Minister would be able to suggest something. The Foreign Minister said that he had one thing which was being held very confidentially, namely, that the Israel Government would be willing to provide an arrangement for a free passage across southern Israel to connect Egypt with Jordan. Mr. Byroade asked whether Israel would agree to accept a certain number of refugees but the Foreign Minister replied that to do so would only open up the whole refugee question and would encourage in the refugees a hope which could not materialize. Mr. Byroade said that he understood that very few refugees would wish to return to Israel. What he was really looking for, he said, was a gesture on the part of Israel which would make the next move up to the Arabs. He asked what suggestion the Foreign Minister had that the United States could use to promote peace. Mr. Sharett replied that the United States could point out to the Arabs that they are pursuing a suicidal policy. Mr. Byroade wondered how to get the Arabs away from such a policy and suggested that even the use of United States troops would not accomplish it. The Foreign Minister said that Israel would put up with her present boundaries, would grant facilities for passage between Egypt and Jordan so as to eliminate the isolation of one part of the Arab world from the other, would grant free port facilities at Haifa for the use of Jordan and other Arab states, and would agree to an international water system under international control.

The Foreign Minister stated that the Arabs had made a serious error in not accepting the United Nations Partition Resolution of 1947. Had they done so the present difficulties would not be with us. However, it is not possible to take a sponge and wipe out history, we must go on from here. He said that Egyptian Foreign Minister Fawzi recently told Dr. Ralph Bunche that some accommodation with Israel must inevitably come. Fawzi mentioned the question of compensation, resettlement of refugees (note: not repatriation), territorial contiguity of the Arab states to be provided by a passage between Egypt and Jordan, and some arrangement for Jerusalem. Dr. Bunche pointed out to Foreign Minister Fawzi that Jordan would object to any territorial internationalization of Jerusalem and Fawzi then dropped this point Foreign Minister Sharett said that on learning the foregoing he had asked Dr. Bunche to tell Foreign Minister Fawzi that Israel is agreeable to the agenda and that the question of passage could be brought up to Egypt at the time of any discussion between Egyptians and Israel representatives. The Israel Government believes that if an agreement can be reached with Egypt agreements with other Arab states will follow.

Mr. Byroade emphasized that the Administration at the present time has no plan for peace in the Middle East and that his talk with the Foreign Minister today was just an exchange of ideas. Rumors to the effect that the Secretary has a plan which he hopes to sell to the Near East states are simply not true, he added. It may be necessary for the United States to formulate a plan because it is in our interest that peaceful conditions return to the Near East and with us that is a primary objective. However, it is unlikely that our policies will be formalized until after the Secretary returns from his trip.

4. The Foreign Minister said his Government is interested in the question of Jerusalem—not the internationalization of the city but in the transfer of Israel's Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem. He said that the United States and Israel had in the past supported the same plan for the internationalization of Jerusalem and he hoped we would work together in the future. In any event this is not a present problem. He said that as Foreign Minister, he was greatly concerned by our recent representations to the effect that the Foreign Ministry must not be moved to Jerusalem. He said that the Foreign Ministry being separated from the other ministries of the government, which are all in Jerusalem, results in the Foreign Ministry losing its grip on the conduct of foreign relations and his office loses contact with other ministries also interested in foreign relations. He pointed out that Israel has always held that Jerusalem is its capital and, following representations made by the United States and other governments to the Government of Israel last July, delayed moving the Foreign Ministry in order to permit the United Nations General Assembly to have another opportunity to determine the status of Jerusalem. That opportunity was not taken and so the Israel Government has been proceeding with plans to transfer to Jerusalem the Foreign Ministry where all other parts of the Government are already assembled including the President, the Knesset and the other ministries. He said, in addition, that the diplomatic corps, being in Tel Aviv, loses contact with the Government, which is in Jerusalem. Since it appears that the United Nations does not contemplate any action and, according to his information, the Vatican is not interested, plans were made to move the Foreign Ministry the end of May or early June of this year. The Foreign Minister said that if he were faced with a clear-cut choice of choosing between being near his Government or being near the diplomatic missions his choice of necessity would have to be the former. He said he was not urging the United States to move its diplomatic mission to Jerusalem, although he hoped it would be done, but what the Israel Government did want was for the United States to discontinue urging Israel not to move its Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem. Mr. Byroade replied that he realized the Israel Government has a real problem; that many years from now Sharett would agree with him that the Jews had made a mistake in making Jerusalem their capital; and that he could not give him any hope that our feeling regarding the Israel Foreign Office would change.

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, April 11, 1953—noon.

1566. Director General Foreign Ministry Eytan raised with me yesterday morning situation on Israel–Jordan border, stating that Israel Government "seriously worried". Was strongly critical of De Ridder's refusal call emergency MAC meeting on Kfar Hess killing (Embassy telegram 1550). [2] Argued that MAC agenda now clogged, that purpose of emergency meeting is enable MAC isolate serious incidents and that latest decision De Ridder bound to encourage people responsible for killing. Saw possible first indication of latter in machine gun wounding of woman and 21 year old son in same area night of April 8. He mentioned that last two incidents had taken place in particularly delicate area and stated that under present circumstances Israel had no idea what, if anything, Jordan doing to stop this nor "any guaranty" same thing would not happen again. Concluded by saying that he did not know whether purpose was "merely maintain tension on border" or provoke retaliation, but hoped means could be found discourage such activity.

[2] Telegram 1550 from Tel Aviv, Apr. 8, reported details of the Israeli Government's report of the killing on the night of Apr. 5 of two 18-year-old soldiers between Kfar Hess and Tel Mond, well within Israeli territory. In a conversation with Ambassador Davis, Bendor, Director of the United States Division of the Israeli Foreign Ministry, referred to other border incidents of the last 2 months, and recalled Davis' conversation of Feb. 19 with Sharett (see telegram 1348 from Tel Aviv, Document 573). Bendor repeated that Israel would welcome advice on how to protect lives and property " 'without fighting back,' " and requested that the United States impress on Jordan the need for keeping peace and controlling infiltration. The Embassy understood that similar approaches had been made to British, French, and Turkish representatives. (684A.85/4-853)

Comment: Fact that Israel Government despite general uneasiness over recent incidents (Embassy telegram 1562)[3] has apparently replaced reprisal policy with approach to western powers is step forward. To encourage this change Department may wish again to call attention of Jordan Government to fact that our insistence that Israel not pursue policy of reprisals implies Jordan responsibility take effective measures combat infiltration. End comment.

CONFIDENTIAL AMMAN, April 14, 1953—8 a. m.

866. Re Tel Aviv Embtels 1550,[2] 1560,[3] 1566.[4] Embassy concerned over tension developing in Israel over alleged deterioration of border situation. As indicated Embtel 785[5] Arab Legion believes Israel exaggerating and falsifying specific cases of Arab infiltration for some ulterior motive. It claims border is quieter at present than at any time since the local commanders agreement was denounced by Israel last January.

Legion questions whether murder of two Israeli soldiers night April 5 was committed by Arab infiltrators. "Footprints to Jordan border" hardly considered sound evidence, particularly since Qalqilia area built up and densely populated. Support given this view by fact that MAC investigations found insufficient evidence to establish Jordanian guilt.

While Embassy realizes that conflicting views regarding border incidents are inevitable, it has found Arab Legion intelligence reports restrained and on the whole accurate in the past. Present state of publicity on border situation in Israeli press, with some articles apparently complete distortions of facts, seems follow an unpleasantly familiar pattern (Embtels 569 [6] and 594). [7] Embassy does not believe that there is any deliberate terrorism by dispossessed Arabs. There is too much evidence to contrary. Jordan Government believed sincerely desirous peaceful border and to be making real effort curb infiltration (Embtel 642 [8]) and eliminate sources of tension. Jordan does not have anything to gain by "maintaining tension on border" or "provoking retaliation" (Tel Aviv 1566).

While Embassy does not expect Israeli armed military attacks such as occurred in January and February after similar press campaign, it is apprehensive over what may be developing. Embassy wonders whether present Israel allegations that border situation has worsened do not again aim at demonstrating Arab misuse of arms and thus inadvisability of arms aid to Arab States. Perhaps principal Israeli fear is now of United States arms aid to Egypt.

Israel Ambassador Abba Eban
Col. Vivian Herzog—Defense Attaché
NE—Mr. Waller

Ambassador Eban, at his request, accompanied by Col. Herzog, called on Mr. Byroade this afternoon at 3 o'clock regarding the two subjects listed above.

1. The Ambassador read from a paper entitled "Notes on border incidents along the Israel Frontier" and presented a copy which is reproduced as an enclosure to this memorandum.[2]

The Ambassador was asked for clarification of paragraph 14 regarding the murder in Jerusalem April 20 of a rabbinical student and his niece, reportedly American citizens, as our information indicated the murder was committed by "thieves" which would open the possibility of the perpetrators having been Israelis rather than "Arab infiltrators" as the Ambassador reported. He was also asked to amplify the information in paragraph 10 regarding the killing of two Israeli watchmen near Nevo-Botar, since Jordan authorities claimed the watchmen were killed in Jordan territory. The Ambassador replied that he was providing information furnished him by his Government and he therefore believed it to be accurate.

Mr. Byroade replied that whereas we were not in a position to determine the responsibility for the incidents, he nevertheless agreed with the principles stated and we would look into the matter to see what could be done. The Amb. said similar representations were being made by his colleagues in London and Paris.

2. Regarding the scheduled UK-Egyptian talks about the Suez Base problems, the Ambassador stated his Government in its note of April 14 (see memo April 14 reporting conversation between Israel Minister Goitein and Mr. Jernegan)[3] had not meant to imply that Israel should become an official party to the negotiations. The Israel Government fears that decisions may be taken affecting Israel's interests which might be made known to Israel as accomplished facts. Israel wishes to be consulted in advance on vital matters.

Mr. Byroade replied that as a practical matter he foresaw no difficulty as Israel's interests would be kept very much in mind and we may want Israel's advice at certain points. He made it clear, however, that he could not undertake to advise the Israel Government officially concerning the negotiations as the United States is not scheduled to participate. When the Ambassador suggested that, after a certain momentum has been reached in the negotiations, there might appear a "golden moment" for the question of Arab-Israel peace to be brought up, Mr. Byroade said he could see no way to inject this problem into the negotiations. He added that a more appropriate moment might be when the Secretary talks privately with General Naguib during the Secretary's Near East trip, which he believed would be done.

The Ambassador expressed the opinion that General Naguib is at the parting of the ways. He must either go forward or fall by the wayside. Mr. Byroade said he agreed and that this is causing him considerable concern. The Israel question is a tough one for General Naguib—the next step toward its solution appears to be a personal talk to General Naguib by the Secretary.

[Enclosure]

The Israeli Embassy to the Department of State

NOTES ON BORDER INCIDENTS ALONG THE ISRAEL FRONTIER

1. The continuous tension along the Israel border and in particular along the Jordan and Egyptian frontiers is a direct result of unrestrained infiltration by Arab marauders, against which no preventive measures have been taken by the respective Arab Governments.

2. On February 9th, 1953, the Commander in Chief of the Arab Legion, Major General Glubb Pasha is reported by the Near East Broadcasting Services, to have stated in a speech that:

> "Arab infiltration to Israel is the cause of tension in the border area . . ."

3. The situation along the Egyptian and particularly along the Jordan border may be compared with that of comparative peace and calm prevailing along the borders of Syria and Lebanon, where the authorities of both countries have apparently determined to control and successfully prevent outbreaks such as have occurred along other sections of Israel's borders. The comparative quiet along these borders invites certain conclusions, in regard to the less tranquil borders with Jordan and Egypt.

4. In the year 1952 Arab marauding created 3,714 incidents along the Israel border. These incidents included 874 cases of theft, 43 cases of robbery with violence, 1,395 cases of attempts to steal and some 395 attacks on the Israel Defense Forces. As a result of these incidents in the course of the year, Israel sustained losses amounting to 59 killed, 74 wounded and 35 prisoners and approximately $3,000,000 worth of damage to facilities and installations, the replacement of which will cost foreign currency.

5. In January 1953, 295 incidents occurred along the Israel border, including 159 cases of theft and 39 attacks on the Israel Defense Forces. Israel's losses for that month included 2 killed, 21 wounded and 7 prisoners and approximately $150,000 worth of material damage.

6. In February 1953, 384 border incidents were reported, including 220 cases of theft and losses included 2 killed, 4 wounded, 6 prisoners and approximately $120,000 worth of material damage.

7. In view of the persistent occurrence of grave and serious incidents along the Jordan border, the Government of Israel submitted on March 25, 1953 to the Jordan Government, through the Mixed Armistice Commission a list of proposals, which in the view of the Government of Israel, would assist in combating infiltration and reducing tension along the borders. No action has been taken by Jordan on this proposal, a copy of which is attached herewith.

8. On the contrary, the situation has rapidly deteriorated from one in which the violence and acts of sabotage were carried out by infiltrators, marauders and saboteurs to one in which the Armed Forces of Egypt and Jordan openly commit acts of aggression against the State of Israel.

9. The Government of Israel now wishes to draw attention to several very serious incidents which have arisen in recent days.

10. On April 17, 1953, four Jewish watchmen 1,000 feet within Israel territory near Nevo-Botar, were fired on by Jordan National Guardsmen; two were hit and were dragged over the border. Their dead bodies were returned on April 19.

11. On April 18, a Jewish woman on a housetop in Jerusalem, some 50 feet from the Old City Wall, was killed by a single shot fired by an Arab Legionnaire on the Wall. The Legionnaire on the Old City Wall denied access to civilians and police to the roof in order to retrieve the body, by threat of force. The body was later removed by United Nations observers.

12. On April 18, a group of infiltrators was encountered by an Israel police patrol in the center of Jerusalem. After an exchange of fire, the infiltrators departed leaving one dead dressed in military uniform.

13. On April 19, Arab Legion soldiers opened fire on the house referred to in paragraph 11, in which the murder of a Jewish woman took place on April 18.

14. On April 20, Arab infiltrators broke into an apartment in Kiryat Moshe in Jerusalem and murdered a rabbinical student and his niece, both United States citizens; the former, a resident of Jerusalem, and the latter, a tourist. The request of the Israel representative to the Mixed Armistice Commission to call an emergency meeting was rejected by the Chairman of the Jordan–Israel Mixed Armistice Commission.

15. On April 20, an Israel patrol encountered 50 armed Jordanians in the area of Beit Jibrin, some 600 feet within the Israel border. An exchange of fire continued for a number of hours before the Arabs withdrew across the border.

16. On April 17, an Egyptian Naval frigate encountered five Israel fishing boats on the high seas, 25 kilometers west of the Gaza Strip. The boats were first ordered to leave the area, then fired upon and ordered to halt. They were boarded by Egyptian Naval personnel who later returned to their frigate.

17. This Egyptian attack is a flagrant violation of the Israel-Egyptian Armistice Agreement, and of the United Nations Security Council Resolution of September 1, 1951, which specifically denies the right of search and visit of vessels of one country by the forces of the other country. This incident can be attributed, in part, to the failure of the major powers to enforce the aforementioned Security Council Resolution.

18. On February 16, 1953, following a series of incidents along the Israel–Jordan border, the Government of the United States indicated that it regarded retaliatory raids to be a grave danger to the stability of the region and councelled the Government of Israel to have recourse in all cases to United Nations machinery.

The Egyptian aggression has been declared by Arab sources to be a retaliatory act, and in consequence the United States Aide-Mémoire to Israel on February 16 pointing out that it considers retaliatory raids to be a grave danger to the stability of the region, is most applicable.

19. Since the receipt of the aforementioned Aide-Mémoire from the United States Government, a series of crimes has been perpetrated along the border by Arab infiltrators and by Arab Armed Forces. Israel, as always, has endeavored to have full recourse to United Nations machinery. This recourse has been denied to Israel on a number of occasions when the Chairman of the Israel–Jordan Truce Commission refused to convene an emergency meeting, and indeed the use of United Nations machinery has not shown any results or brought about any form of improvement.

20. It is submitted that the Mixed Armistice enforcement machinery has been considerably weakened by the fact that the Arab countries have apparently reached the conclusion that the major powers fail to appreciate the real responsibility and causes for the border incidents. It is felt that the real failure is that of the major powers and their failure to insist on the strengthening of the United Nations machinery and unequivocal compliance by all parties with Security Council Resolutions and Mixed Armistice Commission decisions.[4]

CONFIDENTIAL NIACT AMMAN, April 23, 1953—noon.

899. The unpleasantly familiar pattern of exaggeration and distortion by Israeli press of recent border incidents led the Hashimite Kingdom of the Jordan to fear that the culmination would be an attack by Israel (see Embtel 866, April 14 expressing apprehension over what was developing). The attack has now taken place. At 5 p.m. April 22 rifle fire was directed from several points in Jerusalem area against Arab Legion posts and any soldiers or civilians within sight. Firing lasted until 6 p.m., was renewed April 23 at dawn. Casualties reported by Arab Legion: Military, 4 killed, 3 wounded; civilians, 2 killed, 9 wounded.

It is assumed Consulate General Jerusalem will telegraph details.

Embassy in receipt of note dated April 23 from Minister Foreign Affairs in part as follows (translation):

> "The Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Hashimite Kingdom of the Jordan presents its compliments to the American Embassy and has the honor to inform it that the Israeli Forces fired from various points in Jerusalem at soldiers of the Arab Legion, at Jordan Security Forces, and at civilians, beginning at 5 p. m. Wednesday, April 23 without provocation and without justification.—This action constitutes a flagrant breach of the Armistice Agreement and is considered a treacherous aggressive action.
> "It was observed before the firing that a signal was given after which the civilian population in the Jewish zone disappeared. It is understood that the Jews carried out a rehearsal a few days ago when the same signal was given and civilian population of the Jewish zone disappeared from the front-line areas. This proves, very clearly, that the above-mentioned aggression was an organized and arranged military operation, the purpose and intention of which was to attack Jordan territory with flagrant treachery. This operation greatly resembles the Jewish aggressions against Falama and Rantis.
> "As the United States of America is a party to the tripartite declaration, the Jordan Government appeals to it to take the necessary measures to guarantee the stopping of these treacherous aggressive actions which threaten and endanger peace and security in this part of the world etc."

RESTRICTED NIACT AMMAN, April 23, 1953—1 p. m.

900. On occasion reception to Diplomatic Corps at Palace April 23 King, in conversation with me, spoke with deep emotion of Israeli attack at Jerusalem. I said that some months ago in similar circumstances I had counselled Prime Minister to exercise patience of Job and that I thought that the counsel was wise in present circumstances. King replied that he did not know how long restraint and forebearance could govern action of people attacked as inhabitants and Arab Legion outposts at Jerusalem had been April 22 and 23.

After conversation with King, Prime Minister asked my British colleague and me to accompany him to his office in Palace. Minister of Defense acted as interpreter. Prime Minister addressed us formally, emphasizing flagrancy of attacks, stating that if firing continued Arab Legion would necessarily reply and that there was grave possibility that full scale military operations might result. He specifically invoked tripartite declaration and called upon us to urge upon our governments that they take action to bring an end to Israeli aggression without delay.

Prime Minister then turned to British Ambassador and invoked Treaty of Alliance asking him to request his government to consider means of implementation. He said that if firing continued he would in next few days ask British Ambassador to see him to discuss joint action to put an end to aggression.

Prime Minister said that Hashimite Kingdom of the Jordan was looking forward to Secretary's visit with intention of discussing with him possible settlement with Israel but that military aggression of yesterday and today exacerbated feelings of the people and made possibility of settlement more remote.

British Ambassador and I replied in almost identical terms saying that we viewed situation with great seriousness, that we had already reported to our respective governments and would report substance of this conversation.

I then expressed strong hope that Hashimite Kingdom of the Jordan would exercise moderation and restraint even in this difficult situation. To that suggestion Prime Minister replied very much as King had replied earlier.

SECRET PRIORITY JERUSALEM, April 24, 1953—8 p. m.

142. Exchange of fire in Jerusalem on 22nd between armed forces Jordan and Israel most grimly serious threat to peace between two countries since armistice signed. UN not able to determine who fired first shot. Both sides agreed yesterday not to fire in Jerusalem area even if fired at unless an all-out attack was in progress. But after this meeting (Contel 139, April 23)[2] three shots were fired from Israel side. Lt. Col. Gaon immediately visited lines and came back shaken. He had found, he told General Riley, the shots came from civilians who had installed themselves in house in no man's land about 200 yards from American Consulate on Arab side. All police and army posts had been quiet.

One of civilians has been captured, the name of a second known and although Gaon was not explicit he fears a gang is abroad in Israel–Jerusalem. Whether terrorist, Herut revisionist, all matters for speculation, but this may go far to explain hitherto unexplained murders blamed on infiltrators (mytel 141, April 24).[2] It may be they who started shooting on 22nd with intent to start larger armed action.

If there does prove to be a gang intent on getting Israel to war with neighbors, made easier by Israel's too often repeated cry of 962. Re recent Jordan-Israel border incidents.

1. Department informed British Government has instructed British representatives Amman and Tel Aviv to inform respective governments along following lines:

a. To Israel British expressed concern at Israel's uncooperative attitude towards UN authorities and at lack restraint their armed forces. Urged Israel Government to agree to revival local commanders, agreement, to cooperate with UN officials in investigation recent incidents, and to moderate publicity.

b. To Jordan British noted HKJ intends to refrain from provocative action and wants to reach eventual agreement with Israel. Urged HKJ to cooperate with MAC and make constructive reply to Israel memorandum (apparently of March 25 via MAC).

c. Both Israel Government and HKJ urged to enter into high level discussions on whole border problem.

2. British and French stand on Tripartite Declaration but French at least do not consider it has been invoked. Department preliminarily considers declaration inapplicable in recent incidents in absence evidence either side preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines. MAC report awaited to clarify this point.

3. British informed Department Israel refused MAC access to six wounded Israelis. If confirmed, Tel Aviv should inform IG failure to cooperate with UN will raise doubt on validity Israel claims.

4. Tel Aviv and Amman should urge acceptence UN proposal for high level talks on border problems.

5. Comment requested on suggestion that three separate Jordan-Israel MACs be set up one for Jerusalem area and one each for northern and southern areas. Idea would be to make UN machin-

1688. I informed Director General Foreign Ministry Eytan yesterday of our views on proposal for high level talks on border problems (point 4, Department telegram 962). [2] He voiced Israel Government's warm support.

Re point 3, reference telegram Eytan categorically denied that MAC had been refused access to six wounded Israelis saying in fact no such request had been made. Gave assurances that if request made Israel will accede immediately.

While setting up three separate Jordan-Israel MACs (point 5 reference telegram) would not solve problem of infiltration it would:

(1) Reduce delays due to clogging of MAC machinery;

(2) Bring more observers into the field presumably closer to scene of incidents;

(3) Demonstrate the UN far from taking seriously attempts to discredit MACs is determined support and strengthen them.

Decision would, of course, presuppose ability and willingness both parties spare competent personnel for MAC duty, and would be constructive contribution only if additional UN observers were carefully selected with eye to special problems in area. Plan might involve in addition to increase in number of UN observers, individual chairman for each new MAC.

934. Deptel 873, paragraph 5.[2] Although the setting up of three MAC's might expedite investigations at times when several border incidents occur more or less simultaneously, disadvantages of such fragmentation of present organization would seem to outweigh advantages. Principal disadvantages would be (1) probability of decisions based on conflicting principles with resulting confusion and (2) difficulty HKJ would encounter in finding three competent men willing to undertake distasteful and unpopular duties required.

It is suggested that if any change of organization is to be made it should await arrival of successor to General Riley and be based upon his suggestions. Any suggestions for reorganization would have to be carried out by agreement between HKJ and Israeli Government (see Jerusalem's 147).[3]

Embassy is not familiar with details of MAC organization but it is my impression that what is needed is not so much reorganization as (1) improvement of quality of observers and (2) more effective cooperation between HKJ and Israel Government by means of restoration of local commander's agreements.

One of the principal weaknesses of MAC is that its decisions are not published. That enables both sides to give out fragmentary and in some cases distorted versions of MAC action. I strongly recommend that arrangements be made for immediate release to the press of texts of all decisions reached on border incidents. Such publicity would, I believe, have a very salutory effect, as prompt and accurate publicity in Jordan, in Israel and abroad would be a deterrent of aggressive acts and a strong incentive to the maintenance of order along the border.

1708. While it is important determine responsibility for Jerusalem incident (Embassy telegram 1683) [2] more vital task is taking steps reduce basic causes such incidents.

In reply to recent inquiry to General Riley whether he felt infiltration problem substantially worse than in past and therefore a convincing explanation of Israel Government's recent actions and policies or whether Israel Government currently blowing up infiltration problem as a means of forcing bilateral talks between Israel and her neighbors, Riley indicated in his opinion probably a little of both.

Most serious border incidents at present are on Israel–Jordan frontier. Israel–Jordan relations deteriorated after resignation last year of Ahmed Bey Touqan as result inability get Jordan Cabinet agree on stronger infiltration law and obtain support for settlement of Kalkilyer and Latrun problems (Jerusalem Contel 51 June 29, 1952, [3] and Embtel 105). [4] Inclination Arab leaders use refugees as weapon against Israel (Baghdad's despatch 477, January 13) [5] and statements from time to time by them directed at Israel have not helped.

Israelis at fault for attributing doubtful incidents to infiltration; unnecessary ruthlessness in cases of relatively harmless and inevitable infiltration; irritating aggressiveness within the Israel–Jordan MAC (e.g. unwarranted demands for emergency MAC meetings, renunciation of local commanders agreements); dramatizing and publicizing certain incidents in manner which has effect of discrediting MAC machinery and MAC personnel; and for high-handed acts of reprisal against innocent persons. Tripartite powers should continue press strongly against all such action.

Necessary realize, however, that infiltration has strong political psychological impact on Israelis. Not mere question of statistics.

While responsible Israel officials privately concede that certain amount of infiltration is inevitable so long as there is absence Arab–Israel peace and large numbers of refugees concentrated near Jordan border, any conspicuous amount of stealing or killing attributable to infiltrators regardless of whether statistics are higher or lower excites fears for security on part of population and places pressure on government.

Moreover from point of view Israel psychology, infiltration is one of most concrete and unnerving of numerous factors causing uneasiness here such as desperate economic situation, recent USSR developments re Israel, prospects some change in Western powers policy toward Middle East, any psychological trauma from being surrounded by peoples who are bitterly respectful [resentful?] toward them.

Real danger in present situation lies in possibility that incidents may get out of hand and lead to resumption of hostilities, or that Israel is living in border areas and extremists seeking troubled waters to fish in will take law into own hands and undertake extra-legal action as in mandate days.

Immediate steps that can be taken include strengthening UNTSO, encouraging Israel renew acceptance local commanders agreements with Jordan, and urging both sides strengthen such agreement by devising at high level discussions effective means of curbing infiltration. Solid improvement in situation however will require overall approach with objective of securing mutual Israel-Arab concessions and cooperation in dealing with interlocking basic problems such as refugee resettlement and compensation, water resources, et cetera for which Secretary's visit to Middle East offers best hope.

JORDAN-YARMUK RIVER PROJECTS

Background

Israel's present boundaries give Israel physical control of the mainstream of the Jordan above Lake Tiberias, control of the Lake and its outlet, and control of the mouth of the Yarmuk River, the Jordan's main tributary, which enters the Jordan 6 kilometers south of the outlet of Lake Tiberias.

Important streams at the sources of the Jordan River arise in and traverse Lebanon and Syria.

Sources of the Yarmuk River rise in Syria and Jordan, in whose valley lies the boundary between these countries until near its mouth it enters Israel territory.

Plans for Israel's optimum agricultural development call for the diversion of a very substantial volume of the water now entering Tiberias, through gravity canals to the plains of Esdrallon and Israel, and to points farther south; such plans would require diversion of the Yarmuk into Lake Tiberias, to maintain adequate supplies of fresh water in the Lake itself and in that part of the Jordan River that flows past Israel's Beisan plain on the northwest corner of the Jordan Valley, to enable the Beisan plain to be irrigated by water pumped from the channel of the River.

On the basis of present boundaries, Jordan's optimum plan for the development of its territories in the Valley would require the use of all waters available from the Yarmuk River, and a substantial volume of additional fresh water from the Jordan itself which can only reach a Jordanian destination in the southern section of the valley if Israel curtails its plans to divert waters flowing into Tiberias from the North.

The prospects of development of the Jordan Valley hold out the most immediate hope for a partial solution of the Arab refugee problem. Maximum use of Jordan River waters for this purpose might result in a livelihood for as many as 200,000 persons, a majority of whom could be found in the ranks of the 460,000 refugees now on relief in Jordan. $40 million of UNRWA funds have been tentatively allotted for such development. Present thinking in Jordan looks to the construction of a high dam on the Yarmuk, providing a reservoir which would permit flood waters of the river to be released as required for irrigation and electric power. Jordan would receive the benefits of the irrigation, and would share the power with Syria. This proposal—"The Yarmuk Scheme"—has originated in the Point IV program in Jordan, and it is being made the subject of thorough engineering analysis through funds made available by Point IV, UNRWA, and the UK. This engineering analysis will also include thorough study of the water resources of the minor tributaries of the Jordan River wholly under Jordanian jurisdiction, and designs for canals to follow the course of the valley on its Eastern and Western sides, as well as the design of a diversion weir on the Yarmuk to serve the canal on the Eastern bank. We are committed to complete these surveys with despatch. We are not committed further, and later commitments, which presumably could be made with UNRWA and possibly other funds, must wait until we have tighter estimates of costs, time factors, and benefits—i.e. a reasonable estimate of refugee resettlement that will follow expenditures. Division of lands to be irrigated between refugees on the one hand, and indigenous citizens on the other, will raise serious domestic problems for the Jordanians, and the technical problems underlying the best use of the land remain to be solved.

It may well be that an alternative to the construction of a high dam on the Yarmuk should be considered. It would involve the use of Tiberias as a regulating reservoir for irrigation purposes, diversion of Yarmuk flood waters into Tiberias, and construction of gravity canals that would extend the length of the valley on both sides to the Dead Sea. No such proposal, however, can be considered in Jordan, nor discussed with the Jordanians, as long as Israel remains in control of the outlet of Lake Tiberias.

In order to obtain an authoritative and informed opinion on alternative methods to make use of the waters of the Jordan, an estimate of the probable costs, and an appraisal of the resultant benefits, UNRWA retained the services of the TVA as consultants. TVA is assembling, from data available, a report on the development of the valley, and the TVA findings should reach our hands during the summer of 1953. [2] The TVA report may enable the U.S. and the UNRWA to reach more precise determinations as the reasonable division of waters between Israel and the Arabs, and to appraise cost and time factors of alternative plans for development.

What seems clear today is that the United States cannot agree to finance conflicting and competing plans on different sides of a political boundary. It appears equally clear that along with other outstanding issues of the Palestine dispute—compensation, repatriation, Jerusalem, boundaries—there is a fifth element, water, which must be considered as we approach a final settlement.

[2] For the text of the report as published, see The Unified Development of the Water Resources of the Jordan Valley Region, prepared at the request of UNRWA, under the direction of the Tennessee Valley Authority, by Charles T. Main, Inc. (Boston, 1953).

In Israel, the government intends to raise the issue with the Secretary, and the Israelis will doubtless contend that Israel's viability cannot be achieved unless Israel is free to follow her optimum plan for uses of the Jordan waters.

In Jordan, high hopes will be expressed as to the possibilities of the Yarmuk scheme, and disappointment that our surveys have not been carried out sooner.

U.S. Position

1. In discussions in Israel:

Inform the Israelis that while no commitment has been made beyond expenditures for surveys, the UNRWA, with U.S. backing, must look to the irrigation of the Jordan Valley as its major resettlement prospect. While all facts are not yet precisely determinable, suggest that it lies in Israel's interest to insure the success of this opportunity by renouncing certain of her claims to waters of the Jordan and the Yarmuk, and that as soon as further facts are available, to make detailed discussion fruitful, the Israelis will be informed.

2. As to discussions in Jordan:

Advise the Jordanians of our interest in assisting the Government of Jordan to develop the resources of the valley and that we shall continue to support the UNRWA to the extent that costs determined by engineering findings, and agreement by the government to assure a reasonable measure of refugee benefits, permit. In this context, point out that it is our hope that Jordan will rapidly enact necessary legislation to assure that the benefits of irrigation accrue to its needy people, rather than to specially privileged groups.

SECRET

[Washington, May 5, 1953.]

[1] One of a series of papers prepared for the briefing book for the Secretary's trip to the Middle East and South Asia; see footnote 1, supra.

ISRAEL

SUMMARY PAPER [2]

1. Financial and Economic Aid to Israel—Israel is not a viable state and requires outside financial assistance. It has been largely sustained by United States contributions, private and public. However, we are endeavoring to follow a policy which will (1) avert financial collapse causing even greater area instability; (2) hold our contribution to the minimum; and (3) encourage development and fiscal policies in Israel that will allow us to terminate United States Government grant aid as quickly as possible.

2. Military Aid to Israel—Israel may now purchase military supplies and equipment from official United States sources on a cash reimbursable basis. Israel wishes to be found eligible for grant military aid. Among the reasons we have declined grant aid are, (1) military aid is a regional problem, (2) Israel's military establishment is believed to be greater than that of any present combination of Arab states, and (3) no Near East state has been found fully eligible for grant assistance. While we are prepared to give grants to Israel at the appropriate time, we are not indicating this while Egyptian negotiations are going on.

3. MEDO (Middle East Defense Organization)—Israel thinks MEDO should include her. She feels her geographic position and her military establishment entitles her to charter membership. We hold that with the present Arab-Israel tension, no Arab state would share military information with a MEDO which includes Israel. We have evolved a formula whereby Israel would not be a charter member but would be kept generally informed by means of parallel arrangements.

4. Refugees (Arab)—These problems include blocked Arab accounts, compensation to Arabs for property in Israel, and refugee resettlement in Israel. Israel has agreed to release the blocked accounts and has agreed to the principle of paying compensation, and, in connection with an overall peace settlement once offered to accept up to 100,000 refugees.

The United States has provided considerable sums for the care and resettlement of refugees in Arab states and has urged Israel to make a unilateral declaration that up to 100,000 Arab refugees would be permitted to settle in Israel. We have also urged Israel and the Arab states to settle their differences, including those over refugees, by direct negotiations.

[2] Annexed to this summary paper as tabs were position papers on each of the problems summarized.

5. Jerusalem—Israel believes that in any plan for internationalization of Jerusalem, political control should remain with states now occupying it. Israel further believes that, as Jerusalem is Israel's capital, all government ministries should be there. The Ministry for Foreign Affairs is to be moved to Jerusalem about June of this year.

We are obligated by UN resolutions to oppose annexation of Jerusalem by Israel and Jordan, the occupying states. At the same time we realize that the present uncertain status should not continue indefinitely. We have informed the Israel Government we do not intend to transfer our mission from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

6. Border Problems—Israel until recently followed a policy of armed retaliation against Jordan border settlements as a means of controlling infiltration into Israel by Jordan nationals. Jordan-Israel border troubles have been referred to as a "miniature war". We have urged both parties to follow policies of patience and restraint and to make fullest use of United Nations machinery and procedures. To make United Nations machinery more effective, we are considering two ideas: (1) to have three (instead of one at present) Jordan-Israel Mixed Armistice Commissions and (2) to have whole border situation aired in Security Council.

General Riley USMC (Ret.), present UNTSO Chief of Staff, has resigned effective May 15 and we are looking for a successor.

7. Immigration—Israel's Jewish population increased from 650,000 in May 1948 to approximately 1,425,000 at present (plus 175,000 Arab population today). Israel's policy of unlimited immigration has been drastically curtailed for economic reasons. A potential threat to Near East stability is the number of Jews in the Soviet Union (about 2,500,000). Should they be able to emigrate, we consider it would be a problem for the world rather than for Israel. The United States has contributed to Israel during the past two years well over $100,000,000 for rehabilitation and settlement of Jewish refugees already in Israel.

8. The Arab League—The Arab states have organized themselves against Israel in an economic boycott and in a collective security pact. The boycott is hurting economically but is not likely to strangle Israel. The cost to Israel is paid by the United States, in effect.

Israel is particularly concerned about Egypt's Suez Canal restrictions on commerce to and from Israel and has asked our assistance to force Egypt to comply with the Security Council Resolution of September 1, 1951 calling on Egypt to desist from restricting commerce. We have declined to comply with Israel's requests in the belief that the present Egyptian Government should not be hampered in its effort to gain prestige, which will be necessary to enable it to talk peace with Israel.

[Tab 1]

FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC AID FOR ISRAEL

Background

Israel's present agricultural and industrial resources are inadequate to support a population of 1,600,000 people accustomed for the most to a relatively high standard of living. While immigration is no longer high and an austerity standard of living is being enforced, substantial outside aid is necessary simply to maintain the present level of consumption. Additional help is required (1) to provide service and repayment on a heavy foreign indebtedness, and (2) to finance a development program which might some day make Israel self-sustaining.

The United States Jewish community has contributed some $700,000,000 since 1945 to Jewish Palestine and Israel. This private aid has not been sufficient in recent years, however, and has been supplemented by United States Government aid. Specifically, in fiscal years 1950–51 $135,000,000 in Export-Import Bank loans and $23,250,000 in free agricultural commodities were provided. Technical economic aid totalling $64,950,000 was granted in fiscal 1952 and $73,000,000 in fiscal 1953.

Israel Position

Israel has requested MSA aid of $118,000,000 for fiscal 1954 to be used for immigrant relief and resettlement and for economic development. In addition, Israel has requested a "one-time" grant of $70,000,000 to pay its short- and intermediate-term debts falling due during a twelve-months' period. This additional request is supported by Israel on the grounds that its large overhanging foreign debt threatens to paralyze its supply program, seriously encourages internal inflation and jeopardizes its hopes for peace with the Arab states by stimulating Arab expectations that Israel's economy will break down.

United States Position

Our analysis indicates that MSA aid of $50–60,000,000 should be adequate to maintain present austerity standards of living and provide possibly $10–20,000,000 for modest capital development toward viability. We question whether large-scale aid to pay Israel's debts would be justified at this time. While there are strong political and economic reasons why we should help Israel, if necesary, to avoid default, we are inclined to feel that if default becomes imminent, consideration might first be given to meeting the problem from loan funds or, if this is not feasible, by making emergency use of MSA funds already appropriated for Israel's benefit.

[Tab 2]

MILITARY AID

Background

The armed conflict between Israel and the Arab states of the Near East was terminated in 1949 by armistice arrangements. Efforts to conclude peace agreements have not been successful.

Israel considers her existence is endangered by the absence of peace with her four Arab neighbors (Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Egypt) and their threats of a "second round" with Israel. Israel therefore believes it essential to her existence to maintain defense forces (Army, Air, Naval) capable of effectively resisting attacks by any combination of the Arab states.

There are three procedures whereby Israel may procure military equipment from the United States, namely, from United States official stocks on a cash reimbursable basis, from the United States Government on a grant basis, and from commercial sources. Israel was found eligible in July 1952 for cash reimbursable assistance and has submitted a list of items desired, part of which has already been approved. Israel continues to purchase military supplies in the United States and elsewhere from commercial sources. Israel has not, however, been found eligible to receive grant military assistance from the United States.

Israel's Position

Israel considers most unusual the furnishing of military aid by a friendly power (United States) to a country which considers itself to be at war with Israel (e.g., Egypt) and believes peace with Israel and appropriate regional defense arrangements should precede military aid to any Arab state.

United States Position

While recognizing the legitimacy of Israel's concern, the United States position has been that the best possibility of peace in the Near East at present is through Egypt's Premier General Naguib, whose regime must be strengthened before his public opinion will permit him to arrange a settlement with Israel. For this reason Egypt has been found eligible for grant military assistance for training, and the necessary agreement is under negotiation. Also, we have offered to sell Egypt $11,000,000 of military equipment. We are prepared in principle to offer Israel grant aid, but we cannot do it now without jeopardizing present tendency of Arabs to move toward peace with Israel. We are therefore not saying anything about this step.

The only other Near East state found eligible for grant military assistance is Saudi Arabia, where special considerations (Dhahran Air Base) made the finding necesary.

MEDO (MIDDLE EAST DEFENSE ORGANIZATION)

Background

Because de jure peace does not exist between Israel and the Arab states of the Near East, it would not be possible at this time to set up a MEDO which would include both Arab and Jewish members. Therefore, efforts to establish MEDO have considered only the Arab states as charter members (plus, of course, certain Western powers).

Israel's Position

Israel believes that her geographic position, and the fact that she has the most effective military establishment in the Middle East, exclusive of Turkey, makes essential her membership in MEDO for it to be a success. She considers it lacking in logic for the West to organize MEDO without her.

United States Position

The United States and other powers trying to organize a MEDO recognize there could not be a MEDO with Israel as a charter member. They also recognize the validity of Israel's contentions. They have therefore evolved the formula whereby only the Arab states would be invited to become charter members but parallel arrangements would be made with Israel and Israel would be kept generally informed of developments. This formula has been made known to the Israel Government.

[Tab 4]

ARAB REFUGEES

(See Regional Paper on Refugees) [3]

Background

The end of the armed conflict in 1949 found almost one million Arabs as refugees, having fled or been driven away from their homes in the new State of Israel. The Arab states hold Israel responsible for the status of the Arab refugees. They insist on recognition by Israel of the "right" of the refugees to return to their homes, on payment of compensation by Israel for their property losses, and on release of the blocked refugee bank accounts in Israel.

Israel's Position

Israel has agreed to the release of the blocked Arab accounts, which amount to the equivalent of approximately $14,000,000, and to the actual payment of a first installment of one million pounds sterling. Details of the transfer were worked out by the PCC (Palestine Conciliation Commission) and the mechanics of the operation are being carried out by certain banking institutions, assisted by United Nations Relief and Works Agency. Some Arabs have signed the application for the release of their funds but the vast majority, on the urging of Arab governments and Arab leaders, have refused to sign the complex application form pending a clarification of its exact implications.

Israel has agreed to the principle of paying compensation for Arab properties in Israel. The extent of the problem is now being examined by the PCC and the amount of the obligation is expected to be known within the next few months. The question then will be where Israel is to obtain the funds with which to make the payment. Israel believes that it would be unrealistic for her to attempt to pay such a large obligation as long as the Arab states continue their economic boycott against Israel.

Israel offered to accept, in connection with an overall peace settlement, up to 100,000 Arab refugees. While that offer has since been withdrawn, Israel would probably agree to it again as a part of a general peace settlement with the Arab states.

United States Position

The United States has worked with the United Nations and its various organizations, both directly and by diplomatic support, in trying to find solutions to the various problems mentioned. We have successfully urged Israel to release the blocked Arab accounts, to agree to the principle of compensation without any quid pro quo, and we have provided substantial sums for the care and resettlement of the refugees in the Arab states. We have urged the Israel Government and her Arab neighbors to enter into direct negotiations in order to solve or alleviate mutual problems. It is probable that in the near future we shall want to make a new effort to get the parties together to resolve the refugee and other problems blocking Arab–Israel peace.

[Tab 5]

JERUSALEM

Background

The United Nations resolution of November 29, 1947, contained a provision for the internationalization of Jerusalem which has thus far not been possible to implement, although the UN has had before it proposals extending from complete territorial control by a UN authority to the Swedish-Belgium proposals for a UN supervisor of the Holy Places with the administration of the city to remain with the states in occupation. In December 1949, despite UN admonition, Israel began the transfer to Jerusalem of its legislature and ministries. At present only the Ministry for Foreign Affairs has not moved to Jerusalem.

In addition to the political problems of Jerusalem, the city and its environs are of tremendous importance to three of the world's principal religions. It contains the third most holy Moslem shrine; it is closely associated with the life of Jesus Christ; it was the site of ancient Jewish religious life and contains the Wailing Wall and other places of religious significance to the Jewish people.

Israel's Position

Israel believes that political control of Jerusalem should be left with the states now occupying it, but is willing to provide guarantees of free access to the Holy Places and would accept a form of internationalization which would limit United Nations functions to supervision of the Holy Places.

The Israel Government has informed us that it intends to complete the establishment of the government in Jerusalem by the transfer of its Foreign Ministry from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem in about June of this year.

United States Position

The UN should have an opportunity to devise a workable status for Jerusalem. We have recognized that the occupying states should not be required to wait indefinitely for determination of the city's future status. It has been foreseen that, if the UN fails, complete control will remain with the occupying states by default. In the meantime, we have declined to recognize that Jerusalem is the capital of Israel and have joined with other states in requesting the Israel Government not to transfer its Foreign Ministry from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. We have informed the Israel Government that we have no intention of transferring our mission to Jerusalem although we understand the inconvenience that is involved for the Israel Government in having its ministries located in the two separate cities.

BORDER PROBLEMS

Background

Israel's neighbors are the Arab states of Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Egypt. With each of these states Israel has an armistice agreement setting forth the armistice boundaries and the elementary rules for keeping the peace. The United Nations has set up a Truce Supervision Organization (UNTSO), the Chief of Staff of which is Lt. General William Riley, USMC (Ret.), and a Mixed Armistice Commission (MAC) for Israel and each of the four Arab states. These four MACs have national members but the chairman of each is a military officer of a neutral state. Their primary function is to investigate violations of the armistice agreements. They have no enforcement authority.

Israel's borders with Lebanon, Syria and Egypt have been relatively quiet for the past year or so. The border with Jordan, however, has been the scene of almost constant marauding and infiltrating into Israel territory with resulting killings, thefts and disturbance of the peace of the border areas.

The Jordan–Israel MAC has become so bogged down with complaints that it has not been able to investigate them promptly even on an emergency basis.

Israel's Position

Israel's analysis of the Arab character has led Israel leaders to believe that the only language the Arabs understand is that of force. This has brought about a policy of armed retaliation against Jordan border villages when infiltration has reached a point considered unbearable by Israel. From the Israel viewpoint the policy is justified by the heavy losses in lives and property suffered by communities along the border. Prime Minister Ben Gurion has referred to the Jordan–Israel border troubles as "a miniature war."

United States Position

In addition to our responsibilities as a member of the United Nations, the United States, with France and Britain, is a signatory of the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950. We have therefore urged both Jordan and Israel to make fullest use of the United Nations machinery and procedures (MAC, UNTSO, and Security Council) and not to resort to armed retaliation. As a Tripartite Declaration signatory we have joined with Britain and France in diplomatic respresentations to both parties urging them to follow policies of patience and restraint, and to cooperate fully with the United Nations agencies.

In addition, we are considering ways and means of making the United Nations machinery more effective. Two ideas are now being examined. One is to have, say, three Jordan-Israel MACs instead of one as at present in order to provide prompt and more effective investigations into causes and to fix responsibility for armistice violations. The other idea is for the whole border in question to be aired in the Security Council in order to clear the atmosphere and permit the new UNTSO Chief of Staff (to be appointed to succeed Gen. Riley who has resigned effective May 15) to get a clean start. In the meantime we are urging restraint on both sides.

IMMIGRATION

Background

One of the most important stones in the foundation of the State of Israel is that Israel is declared to be the homeland for Jews everywhere and hence must be open to any Jew who wishes to go there. A total Jewish population of about 650,000 in May 1948 has increased to approximately 1,400,000 today.

A policy of unlimited immigration almost caused the economic collapse of the state, so that a de facto policy of limited immigration was necessary and was begun early in 1952. The Government still publicly adheres to a policy of unlimited immigration.

Although the communist satellite states have permitted Jews to emigrate until quite recently, the USSR has not permitted emigration. The Israel Government hopes the 2½ million Jews in the Soviet Union will be permitted to emigrate.

This attitude is one of the main causes of Arab fears with respect to Israel. The Arabs' reason that further large-scale immigration will force Israel into an expansionist policy, to get "lebensraum" for the increased population.

Israel's Position

Even though the State of Israel is being kept alive today by foreign governmental and private contributions, access to a haven in Israel is offered to any and all Jews permitted to emigrate from the communist states.

United States Position

The United States has not really formulated its position in the event of immigration into Israel of an additional mass of Jewish people from the communist countries. Preliminarily, however, we have felt chaos would be created in Israel and the Arab states by the sudden influx into Israel of any appreciable number of immigrants. Our thinking is that the release of a large number of persons from the USSR should be treated as an international problem which would require the settlement of the majority in countries other than Israel.

Well over $100,000,000 of United States Government economic aid to Israel during the past two years has been extended for the rehabilitation and settlement of refugees already in Israel.

[Tab 8]

ISRAEL AND THE ARAB LEAGUE

Background

The Arab states of Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Jordan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Yemen, having seen their armies defeated by Israel in armed conflict, have taken two important measures against Israel. They have organized among themselves an economic boycott and they have joined in a Collective Security Pact.

The economic boycott has been effective. It has taken the form of 1) discontinuing the supply of oil through the pipe line from Kirkuk (Iraq) to Haifa (Israel), 2) the blacklisting of American and other foreign firms having branches in Israel, 3) refusing to admit travelers whose passports contain Israel visas or otherwise show the traveler has been in Israel, 4) the denial of entry visas to persons of the Jewish faith regardless of nationality, and 5) refusal of facilities to vessels transitting the Suez Canal carrying goods destined to or from Israel. The latter restriction is particularly onerous because it denies Israel access to cheap markets for purchases and sales, including petroleum from the Persian Gulf for the Haifa Refinery.

While the exact cost of the Arab boycott to Israel can not be accurately determined it is estimated to be several million dollars annually. It should be noted that this cost to Israel is, in effect, paid for by grant aid funds authorized by the United States Congress.

The Arab Collective Security Pact is at present only potentially disadvantageous to Israel as, with the exception of Jordan's Arab Legion, the Arab states generally are militarily impotent.

Israel's Position

Israel, of course, objects to the Arab economic boycott, particularly the Egyptian regulations pertaining to the Suez Canal. Israel periodically addresses the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom and France calling their attention to the Security Council Resolution of September 1, 1951 requiring Egypt to discontinue the restrictions.

United States Position

The United States has made representations to certain Arab governments whenever the economic boycott against Israel has appeared to discriminate against American business interests, and was one of the powers sponsoring the Security Council resolution of September 1, 1951 mentioned above. However, because of the delicate negotiations imminent between Egypt and the United Kingdom for the past year and now taking place, and because we believe the present Egyptian regime requires substantial support, we have declined to insist that Egypt comply with the Security Council resolution. We are nevertheless aware that the time will probably come when we must join with other powers and insist that Egypt comply.

JORDAN

SUMMARY PAPER [2]

1. Relations with Israel—Extremely bad because of (a) the state of affairs along the artificial Israel-Jordan armistice line and (b) the hundreds of thousands of Palestine Arab refugees living in Jordan. Sporadic fighting along the armistice line and pressure from other Arab states as well as from Jordan's discontented population has effectively blocked any progress in solving the Palestine issue as it affects Jordan. Only a handful of Jordanians are even willing to consider a permanent settlement with Israel. The United States has urged Jordan to follow a policy of patience and restraint and to rely on the United Nations in approaching its problems with Israel.

[2] Attached to this summary paper as tabs were position papers on each of the problems summarized.

2. Refugees—About 450,000 or one half of the Palestine Arab refugees live in Jordan. They are a great burden on Jordan's weak economy and exert considerable influence on the Jordan Government, especially by their deep hatred of Israel and the Western powers. They manage a bare subsistence through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, to which the United States contributes about 70% budgetwise.

3. Economic Development—United States Aid—Jordan is not economically viable and has always had to be supported by British subsidies and loans. The country's basic economic need is the reintegration of the Palestine refugees (see above) within its borders, together with such development as can be achieved of its meager resources. Jordan wants foreign economic assistance. The TCA program in Jordan for FY 1953 was approximately $3,000,000. There are plans to expand this assistance.

4. Fertile Crescent Idea—The Kings of . . . Jordan and oil-rich Iraq are of the same family. Syria opposes Jordan-Iraq union, since Syria would be placed at a disadvantage. Syria would prefer a Syria-Jordan union, which would be to Iraq's disadvantage. There have been no recent indications of Jordan-Iraq, Jordan-Syria, or Jordan-Iraq-Syria union, and recent Jordan governments have not promoted a union. The United States would not oppose Arab union if it were achieved in accordance with the wishes of the peoples concerned. A union would have economic advantages for the area and possible political disadvantages for the West, since a larger, more powerful state might be more difficult to deal with.

RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL

Background

The Jordan-Israel Armistice Agreement was signed on April 3, 1949 and established an armistice line which, although subject to change in a final peace settlement, is the official boundary between the two countries. By this Agreement Jordan's frontier was extended westward to include a large portion of what was Palestine and which today is known as West Jordan or Arab Palestine. The Jordan-Israel boundary has been the scene of thousands of incidents during the past five years (see topic paper entitled "Border Problems" in Israel section). Incidents arising along the border have been a major cause of tension between the two countries. One recent series of incidents was described as the "bloodiest since the Armistice Agreement".

In an effort to normalize relations, Jordan's Arab Legion was withdrawn from the border areas and responsibility for the maintenance of order in those areas was given the Jordan National Guard. The National Guard has not been effective in preventing Jordan nationals crossing into Israel or in apprehending Jordan nationals returning from Israel with stolen goods or, in many instances, after they have perpetrated crimes on Jews in border communities. The Jordan Government has endeavored to plug the gap but, because of the mountainous nature of many parts of the border, has not been able to control the situation.

Prospects for peace with Israel are not bright. Jordan opinion extends all the way from the belief that the only way to have peace is to drive the Jews into the sea to the very small moderate minority which considers the settlement on Arab terms of problems relating to refugees, compensation and blocked accounts as a prelude to peace with Israel.

Jordan's Position

Jordan's position vis-à-vis peace with Israel has been most difficult. Pressure by other Arab states has been an important deterrent. Even more important has been the political situation within Jordan. In July 1951 King Abdullah was assassinated. He was succeeded by his oldest son, Talal, who was deposed in August 1952 because of a "mental illness". Next in line was Talal's son, Husein, who assumed his royal prerogatives as King on May 2, 1953, his 18th birthday. During this period of uncertain leadership [illegible] Prime Minister found it necessary to "be more Arab than [illegible] Arabs" and to tread a narrow line which formed the balance between East Jordan and West Jordan. The latter consists largely of refugees who have no cause to love Israel.

There are minor evidences that it may be possible for Jordan to endeavor to reach a better understanding with Israel.

United States Position

We have urged Jordan to follow a policy of patience and restraint in connection with the numerous border incidents and to use and cooperate with the United Nations machinery for investigating the incidents. It has not been possible during the past year or so to take any important initiative in suggesting to the Jordan Government that it resolve its difficulties with Israel. The time appears to be imminent however when we can take more positive steps to that end.

[Tab 2]

REFUGEES

Background

At the conclusion of the Israel-Arab armed conflict, about half of the Arab refugees found themselves in Jordan. They are still there today, and number approximately 450,000 out of a total Jordan population of around 1,300,000. They are now treated as Jordanian citizens. Comprising a third of the population, they exercise considerable political influence in the Jordan Government. Their animosity toward Israel has been an important contributing factor in keeping public opinion in Jordan and the rest of the Arab world alive against Israel.

(See the regional paper on refugees for more general discussion of the refugee problem. [3])

[Tab 3]

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—UNITED STATES

Background

Jordan is not economically viable and has always had to be supported by British subsidies and loans. Although its economy is basically agricultural and pastoral, only a small percentage of the land is productive. Industry is trivial and there are few natural resources of actual or potential commercial value. Over-all trade is seriously out of balance and trade with the United States is negligible as is the opportunity for private investment.

Although Jordan still has the smallest population of any Arab State, the number of its inhabitants has more than doubled in the past five years with the addition of East Palestine (now West Jordan) and the influx of the refugees. The country's basic economic need is consequently the reintegration of the United Nations supported refugees together with such development as can be brought about from its poor endowment of land and natural resources.

Jordan Position

The Jordanian Government needs and wants foreign assistance for economic development and has been more cooperative on this score than most other Near Eastern countries. Its agreements with

[3] See the paper on the Arab refugee problem, designated STA D-1/2a, Document 610.

TCA are the only ones in the area which provide for the creation of special "cooperative departments" within the ministries—analogous to the "servicios" in Latin America. Jordan has received development loans, as well as subsidies from the British and was the first Arab country to sign an agreement with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for the improvement of the refugee living standards. Recently it joined the International Bank and Fund.

United States Position

The United States contribution to Jordanian economic development involves:

1. A TCA program currently involving 42 American technicians and a total program contribution for fiscal 1953 of approximately $3,000,000. Among the TCA projects are engineering surveys of Jordan-Yarmuk Valley development, a 2,000 acre water-spreading project on desert land which has been made to yield forage at an unusually high rate and the cleaning and repair on a demonstration basis of the country's numerous but unused Roman cisterns. The latter project has since been copied in seven villages.
2. Plans for grant aid from the regional "special economic aid" package for fiscal 1954. Capital assistance funds for Jordan-Yarmuk Valley development may come from this source as well as from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency to reflect interest in indigenous inhabitants as well as in the refugees.
3. Seventy per cent financial interest in the United Nations refugee relief and reintegration operations.

[Tab 4]

THE FERTILE CRESCENT IDEA

Background

. . . ; Iraq is rich from oil revenues; other states such as Syria fall between the two extremes in viability. Individually they are weak; united they could be fairly strong militarily and economically.

Jordan and Iraq are bound by family ties of their respective kings (cousins—members of the Hashemite family). Syria would not like to see Iraq and Jordan united as the combination would put Syria at a disadvantage. Syria would prefer a Syria-Jordan union which would ease Syria's fears of Iraqi aggression.

There have been no recent indications of progress in the development of the idea of Jordan-Iraq or Jordan-Syria or Jordan-Syria-Iraq union, and recent Jordan governments have not favored such union.

United States Position

A firm position has not recently been taken on this subject since the issue is dormant. It is realized, however, that the present Arab states are, in general, artificial entities created by the British and French some thirty years ago to divide the Arab world into small states so that they could be more effectively controlled. In view of the paucity of resources in the individual states, and in view of the changed political situation, there would be important advantages, as well as disadvantages, for the United States in a union of two or more Arab states. The advantages would include 1) it would be simpler to deal with one state, rather than several, in MEDO, Point Four and other programs, 2) the new entity would presumably be more viable and hence require less foreign aid and 3) would be more attractive for private United States investment. Disadvantages would include 1) the possibility of the larger more self-sufficient entity being more intransigent and hence more difficult to deal with, 2) more of a danger to us if the larger state would oppose United States policies.

Announcement new draft constitution imminent, with publication text and popular referendum this summer. Elections possible in autumn. Confused reform by decree law continues. Internal and external plotting against State so far unsuccessful.

2. Palestine Question: Shishikli has quietly authorized settlement 80,000 Arab refugees in Syria; is conducting secret negotiations Israel for revision common border. Privately admits desirability "modus vivendi" with Israel, although publicly still calls for full implementation United Nations resolutions by Israel.

3. Area Defense Arrangements: Shishikli does not regard Russia as major and imminent threat to Syria (Near East). Israel viewed as main and almost exclusive enemy. Therefore area defense seen as protection against Israel, as well as being primarily function of Arab states, who should be included from inception in any plans for a MEDO.

4. United States Military and Economic Aid: United States offer of cash reimbursable aid not taken up; Shishikli wants grant military aid of the sort extended to Turkey. His willingness meet United States proposals on Palestine and MEDO is directly proportional to amount military aid United States willing give Syria. Syrian Army incapable more than limited defensive operations, is principally effective for internal control.

TCA not accepted by Syria. Economic aid considered secondary to military aid, but Shishikli would like economic program of Turkish type, with grant assistance for development projects. Return must justify political risk to Shishikli of signing agreement which likely to be labeled "treasonable" by street.

5. Fear of Hashemite Expansion: Shishikli fearful of possible Iraqi attempts unite Syria, Jordan, Iraq under Faisal II's Hashemite crown. Recent plotting against Shishikli by ex-Syrian officers on Iraqi soil lends credence his fears. Tripartite Declaration May 1950 could deter this threat under certain conditions.

[Tab 1]

INTERNAL POLITICAL SITUATION

Background

By a bloodless coup from November 29–December 1, 1951, General (then Colonel) Shishikli took over the Government of Syria, dissolved the Parliament, dismissed a day-old cabinet, and began ruling by executive decree through his front man and Head of State, General Fawsi Selo. A rubber-stamp cabinet later was created and encouragement given to organization of a "national" party, the Arab Liberation Movement. A multitude of reforms and autarchic measures have been decreed, but in the pressure of vested interests and the confusion of amateur government, many decrees have never left paper.

Signs have multiplied recently that Shishikli will soon end the "period of transition" and allow Syria to return to parliamentary forms of government. Officials have been preparing a draft constitution which reportedly vests strong powers in the President. The contemplated changes in form should not modify Shishikli's control. In fact he is likely to become the President, with a legislature composed of sympathetic deputies. Elections will take place in the autumn at the earliest.

Political parties are officially dissolved, whereas the Arab Liberation Movement has not developed as hoped. In fact Shishikli appears disgusted with his "test-tube" party and is leaning more to his old favorite, the Syrian Social National Party, which though covert is well organized, patriotic, anti-communist and cast as a loyal opposition. The SSNP, however, cavils at any alteration of its platform by Shishikli.

There is considerable discontent in Syria at Shishikli's regime, as manifested by an abortive coup, arrests and plots (see Tab 5). However, no united opposition has developed which would be capable of successful revolt, and by and large the populace is apathetic. Meanwhile, Shishikli has shown how firm a control he has over the country, and the people at least compare his regime favorably with those of the pre-coup, filibustering parliaments.

United States Position

While Shishikli is not pro-Western in a full sense, he has been fairly cooperative with the United States, at least more so than his predecessors. There is no successor in sight who would be more inclined towards the United States; in fact his disappearance could well herald a very anti-Western regime. Moreover, since he is firmly anti-communist we should do what we can to give his regime encouragement.

[Tab 2]

PALESTINE QUESTION

(See Regional Paper on Arab-Israeli question.)[3]

Probable Syrian Position

Much of General Shishikli's thought may focus upon this problem, the responsibility for which he will of course attribute to the U.S. at least in part. Privately he has recognized that Israel will be a factor in the area for a long time. He might refer to the possibility of "peace", but he will make it conditional upon U.S. pressure on Israel to: (a) arrange a better frontier with Syria; (b) accept limited repatriation of Palestine refugees; (c) grant refugee compensation; (d) agree to Jerusalem's internationalization; (e) limit Jewish immigration into Israel.

While General Shishikli is reluctant to use such terms of finality as "peace" and "resettlement", he has paid them somewhat more than lip service. He had authorized resettlement on Syrian soil of 80,000 Palestine refugees now in that country; UNRWA accordingly will expend $30 million to assist the resettlement. His representatives are negotiating secretly with the Israelis, under the aegis of the UN Mixed Armistice Committee, for a frontier modus vivendi and a resolution of the Demilitarized Zone. Both resettlement and frontier questions are, however, far from fully resolved. Moreover, Shishikli is marking time on them until he sees how much less "favorable" a policy the new U.S. Administration will have towards Israel vis-à-vis the Arab states.

U.S. Position

The U.S. believes that resettlement of refugees and adjustment of border anomalies are to Syria's advantage regardless of how much U.S. support and aid is or is not forthcoming. Syria needs the manpower for economic development and can absorb the bodies without upsetting its economy. A continued spirit of compromise with Israel on border revision talks can mean removal of a prime friction source and allow Syria to concentrate more on important internal development problems.

[Tab 3]

AREA DEFENSE ARRANGEMENTS

(See Regional Paper on Defense of the Middle East.)[4]

Probable Foreign Position

While Shishikli is cognizant of Soviet designs, he does not regard Russia as the primary threat to peace in the area. That role is assigned almost exclusively to Israel. Therefore area defense is conceived of as defense against Israel (the Arab Collective Security Pact), and Shishikli is less concerned with defense arrangements of the Western powers against Soviet aggression. Should Shishikli mention this subject, he will emphasize that area defense is primarily a function of the Near Eastern people (Arab), and that all Arab States should be included in area defense plans from inception. At present, however, he considers that the U.S. has not offered sufficient inducement for Syria to cooperate with the West on either Palestine or area defense. He will probably indicate to the Secretary that Syrian cooperation on these matters will only come after U.S. offers of more liberal proportions than orthodox technical assistance or cash reimbursable military aid, both of which his country has already rejected or shelved (see Tab 4).

[Tab 4]

U.S. MILITARY AND ECONOMIC AID

Background

The U.S. has offered Syria technical assistance under Point IV and cash reimbursable military aid. Neither has been accepted. (See Regional Paper on Aid to the Near East.)[5]

Probable Syrian Position

General Shishikli is very likely to renew his demand for more modern military equipment, and to explain that this should not be forthcoming in the limited, cash reimbursable form now offered, but rather in quantities and as a grant, along the lines of U.S. aid to Turkey. Shishikli particularly prefers American equipment to the hodge podge of antiquities he receives presently from France and Britain. Moreover, he will probably try to show why Syria merits special treatment. Both he and General Selo have indicated that Syria would be willing to give consequent assurances that it has no aggressive designs on Israel. The fact that Egypt and Saudi Arabia have been declared eligible for grant aid, while Jordan is subsidized by the UK, only strengthens Shishikli's conviction that Syria is unjustly being left out.

General Shishikli views economic development as secondary in importance to increased military strength. However, he describes Syria as a poor country which would welcome the "right" type (i.e. U.S. grant aid to Turkey) of economic aid. He does not expect quite the volume extended to Turkey, but wants money to execute a number of development projects in land reclamation, irrigation, housing and transport. He maintains that he is weary of surveys, and wants to see actual construction. He insists that he must receive enough aid to justify the political risk of signing an economic agreement with the U.S.; the street elements will otherwise succeed in shouts of a "sellout to the imperialists". Shishikli has dallied with thoughts of UN and IBRD financial aid, but nothing has materialized except for the as yet unexpended $30 million UNRWA grant for resettlement of the 80,000 refugees.

Fear of Hashemite Expansion

Background

The Hashemite dynasty in Iraq and Jordan has long dreamt of Jordanian-Iraqi-Syrian political unity as the "Fertile Crescent", under a Hashemite crown naturally. King Abdullah cherished the scheme while he ruled Jordan, and the Regent of Iraq leads the advocates in his country. Rumors still persist that Iraq is plotting to absorb Syria and Jordan, particularly since the Regent is technically out of a job in Iraq since May 2nd. Recently some credence has been lent to these rumors by substantiated reports that disaffected Syrian Army Officers are plotting (on Iraqi and/or Lebanese territory) against General Shishikli. Reportedly the Iraqi palace is financing the plotters.

Probable Syrian Position

Obviously General Shishikli does not subscribe to these ideas. He has asked if the United States through the United Kingdom can induce Iraq to restrain the Syrian officers.

United States Position

The United States wants as full a confirmation of these reports as is ascertainable, before and if any representations are made to Iraq. We do not adjudge the May 1950 Tripartite Declaration applicable, unless irrefutable facts show that a state is actively supporting, sanctioning or participating in aggressive international military action. However, Ambassador Moose has assured Shishikli that the United States would regard with concern any activities by a Near Eastern state which were directed clearly towards infringement of any other state's sovereignty.

LEBANON

SUMMARY PAPER [2]

1. Internal Political Situation: Decree law "civil service" cabinet has completed program and resigned April 27. New parliamentary cabinet had been formed, recently by Saab Salaam, and will implement reform measures, initiate new ones, and continue general program started after bloodless coup of September 1952. Cabinet must try to restore confidence in parliamentary system, and silence critics who maintain reform program not going fast enough.

2. Palestine Question: Lebanese resent creation of Israel, but not quite as do other Arab states. Officially, however, Lebanon must adhere strictly to Arab League position. Refuses give permanent residence to 125,000 refugees now in country.

3. Area Defense Arrangements and United States Arms Aid: Lebanese leaders privately favor a MEDO; cannot openly advocate in face of public opinion locally and in other Arab states. President Chamoun has made good-will visits to Arab capitals and secretly tried use influence in promoting regional defense with West. Lebanon has signed necessary assurances to United States, can now receive cash reimbursable military aid; would prefer grant aid, however.

4. Future of United States Technical Assistance: Technical assistance program finally reached firm ground in December 1952-January 1953. Largest staffed program in Arab states. Lebanese now appreciate its long range aspects, but also will want grant assistance to finance major development program, e.g., Litani River Development, which United States has surveyed.

5. Lebanon's Share in Pipeline Earnings: Lebanon infected by agitation elsewhere and convinced oil companies making excessive profits. Lebanese pressing for renegotiation of Tapline (United States) agreement in order obtain increased revenues.

6. Boycott of Blacklisted Tankers: Lebanon is thinking of boycotting foreign-owned tankers which call at Haifa after loading at Lebanese ports. We disapprove this action.

INTERNAL POLITICAL SITUATION

Background

After nine years of rule Lebanon's first President, Beshara El-Khouri, discredited by charges of corruption, was ousted without violence in what Lebanese call their Constitutional or September (1952) revolution. The new President, Camilla Chamoun, is honest and industrious and was one of an eight-man group which led the attack on Khouri. However, he has been under attack by former allies whose political aspirations have not been satiated, by those who are dissatisfied because a millenium has not issued forth, and by those who suffer from the general negative nature of Arab mentality.

During the six months decree law authority, a civil service cabinet promulgated nearly 100 reform measures, including a controversial electoral law. This cabinet resigned on April 27, and is now being replaced by one composed of Deputies and headed by Saab Salaam, a former Premier. Salaam must try to restore confidence in the parliamentary system and see that reforms are carried through and are supplemented. He faces a trying opponent in Kemal Jumblatt, leader of the Progressive Socialists. Jumblatt advocates a Third Force, a socialist administration, and a program far removed from moderation and compromise; he is gaining considerable following.

Common agreement on the necessity for religious equilibrium helps political stability, however. Other elements furthering stability are a mercantile mentality, stemming from Lebanon's Phoenician ancestry, and a high literacy rate owing to well developed educational institutions. There is not much danger that Lebanon will become fanatical like Iran or Egypt. There is some feudalism, but democratic government has a broader base in Lebanon than elsewhere in the Arab world.

PALESTINE QUESTION

Background

Lebanese, like other Arabs, resent the creation of Israel, although some Christian leaders are privately not unhappy at establishment of another enclave against the Moslem world. Trade with Israel is also a thought which the mercantile Lebanese consider not uninviting. Officially, Lebanese have no choice but to follow other Arabs on the Palestine issue, and certainly the emotions of the street can arise on the question as easily as in more fanatical countries.

The immense United States reservoir of good will was heavily drained in Lebanon by our support of Israel. Exhortation by the United States and other outsiders for peace with Israel is like waving a red flag to a bull. Moreover, Lebanon refuses adamantly to give residence to 125,000 Palestine refugees now in the country, because they are 80% Moslems and their presence constitutes a threat to Christian supremacy. Without refugees there is unemployment in the Lebanon.

Probable Lebanese Position

It is less rigid than in other Arab states, but many Lebanese unofficially believe eventual peace is attainable with Israel if Israel: (a) guarantees present frontiers with possible minor rectifications in Western Galilee; (b) offers the refugees either repatriation or adequate compensation; (c) agrees to internationalization of Jerusalem.

United States Position

See regional paper. [3]

[Tab 3]

AREA DEFENSE ARRANGEMENTS AND U.S. ARMS AID

Background

While Lebanese leaders privately favor a MEDO, they are powerless to take any step in that direction because popular feeling can be easily stirred against it—particularly as long as Palestine and Egyptian problems exist as overriding irritants.

However, Lebanon has expressed specific interest in securing limited arms aid from the U.S.; to that end, Lebanon has been declared eligible for cash reimbursable military aid, and has signed the necessary assurances, although grant aid would be preferred. Moreover, in a conversation with the American Chargé in October 1952, President Chamoun said "If it ever came to war with the Soviets, Lebanon would be 100 per cent on the side of the West, our harbors would be open to your ships, our airfields to your planes, whether or not we have any kind of treaty or agreement in writing." Of late President Chamoun has made a number of good-will visits around the Near East, during which he has sounded out other leaders and tried to use his influence in promoting a regional defense arrangement with the West, probably within the scope of the Arab Collective Security Pact.

Probable Lebanese Position

See regional paper. President Chamoun has stated also that Israeli, Turkish or French troops would never be allowed in Lebanon, nor could Lebanese soldiers leave their own territory.

FUTURE UNITED STATES TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

Background

Besides military aid, Lebanon seeks technical and economic assistance from the United States on a grant basis. The Technical Assistance program got off to a slow start, but since the inauguration of a "hard to get" policy by the United States last December, we have received good Lebanese cooperation. The program has the largest staff of any in the Arab States—70 technicians—and the projects are varied and numerous. Of particular importance are the engineering survey of the Litani River basin for hydroelectric and irrigation development; the Kasmie Irrigation and Rural Improvement Projects, and the Agricultural Extension Program.

Probable Lebanese Position

The Lebanese now appreciate the long range aspects of technical assistance, and as time passes and benefits appear more frequently, they may request an even larger program. However, they do not possess oil revenues or other substantial capital sources, and they will inevitably seek economic assistance from the United States, as well as from IBRD and other sources, in order to finance aspects of their development program resulting from surveys and other technical advice.

United States Position

Our policy has been to discourage the Lebanese from looking for a handout, while encouraging them to find means of self-financing and to utilize international banking institutions. Simultaneously, we urge the Lebanese to make the best possible use of our technical assistance.

[Tab 5]

LEBANON'S SHARE IN PIPELINE EARNINGS

Background

Lebanon is a major oil terminal for Saudi Arabian and Iraqi crude oil pipelines. No transit or tanker payments were received from pipeline companies during the mandate period. Pipeline payments were initiated after World War II and have been subject to continual controversy since that time. Lebanon now receives approximately one cent a barrel from each of the two companies (Iraq Petroleum Company and Trans-Arabian Pipeline Company), or a total of 2½ million dollars a year.

Probable Lebanese Position

Lebanese officials continue to demand more from the companies. Ambassador Malik has requested $10,000,000 per year; Foreign Minister Hakim has asked for 50 percent of the net profits; the Lebanese discuss the problem sporadically with the oil companies, the United States and United Kingdom Governments, as well as with the other Arab states involved.

United States Position

The problem has not deteriorated to the point where the political aspects override the commercial, and consequently, the United States Government considers the matter one for direct discussion between the oil companies and the Lebanese Government. Respect for negotiated agreements on the part of the Lebanese Government should be the best inducement for further attraction of foreign capital into the Lebanon.

[Tab 6]

BOYCOTT OF BLACKLISTED TANKERS

Background

Foreign Minister Hakim is Lebanon's protagonist in enforcing the Arab League boycott of Israel. Efforts are reportedly being made to prevent foreign-owned tankers which have called at Haifa from loading at Lebanese ports. Concurrently, the Lebanese Government is attempting to enforce the boycott by requesting all airlines to discontinue their services to Israel.

Probable Lebanese Position

Lebanese officials will probably avoid discussion of the boycott. Defense would be along traditional lines that Arabs are still at war with Israel, and that Lebanese are taking advantage of sovereign rights similar to those invoked by United States in China embargo.

United States Position

Advantage should be taken of every appropriate occasion to make clear United States disapproval of Arab boycott measures which make solution of Arab–Israel problems more difficult. Concessions from Israel are more remote in face of increased Arab efforts to strangle Israel economically.

ARAB-ISRAELI RELATIONS

Arab-Israel differences and the part played by the United States in the establishment and support of Israel contribute very substantially to (a) continued and increasing anti-American and anti-Western sentiment in the Arab world, (b) Western inability to create an atmosphere of confidence, (c) lack of progress in strengthening the defense of the Near East, and (d) delay in improving the fundamental economic and social conditions of the area. The Arab states continue to believe that U.S. policy in the Near East is partial to Israel although they are hopeful that the change in Administration in the United States will bring a change in this. They believe that Israel harbors additional territorial ambitions and they fear continued immigration into Israel will stimulate the desire for more territory. A genuine conflict of interest does exist between the Arab states and Israel. If the United States is to be successful in removing Arab suspicions it will be necessary to make substantial efforts in the political, economic and psychological fields. In addition military assistance will have to be made available to the Arab states irrespective of whether Israel likes it or not. Finally it will undoubtedly be necessary for the United States to exert considerable influence on Israel to secure a modification in certain of its policies. This is not an easy matter. Before undertaking any such steps or indeed before making any significant moves which affect the Arab-Israel problem the Executive branch should be assured of substantial support from the Congress and American public.

Israel is unquestionably a vigorous and progressive body politic. Although small and surrounded by hostile neighbors, it looks to a combination of its own prodigious efforts and continued American aid to survive and develop strength. Israel is dependent on U.N. public and private aid and moves from month to month on the verge of financial default. Up to this time, Israel has preferred to consolidate everything it has gained through U.N. resolutions, American support, and force of arms. It has not shown enough real disposition to settle its differences with the Arab world, even though its future well-being depends on establishing satisfactory relations with the states in the area. Israel's attitude toward the Arab refugees is an example in point. It has taken few of them back, has made no provisions for compensation, and has no evident intention of giving up any territory which would support some of them. On the other hand, the Israelis are highly literate, industrious, and relatively free from the diseases which handicap other peoples of the area. In relation to their proportion they are capable of contributing substantial and effective numbers to a fighting force.

Any effort to turn back the clock on the existence of Israel would be unrealistic, politically impracticable, and morally dubious. To date, however, the American partnership with Israel has been a lopsided arrangement, with the United States giving massive aid and support while receiving little or nothing in return. One reason for this situation is the existence of heavy and effective Zionist pressure which has been brought to bear on both the Executive and Legislative branches of the American Government. Courses of action designed to strengthen the overall position of the United States in the Near East have been sidetracked or so cluttered up with "compensating favors" that they have not brought the desired improvement. This imbalance in United States–Israel relationships is the more remarkable since Israel actually has nowhere else to turn save towards the West and cannot, therefore, develop diplomatic counterbalances in its foreign policy.

In order to progress towards a settlement of the principal problems in the Arab-Israel situation, the United States must be prepared to follow policies which do not temporize on the essential issues yet which provide a realistic basis for courses of action on the part of both sides. The principal problems which require an early solution are: (a) the future of the 850,000 Arab refugees; (b) the question of further Jewish immigration to Israel; (c) territorial settlement; (d) the future of the city of Jerusalem; (e) Arab blockade of Israel, and (f) regional defense.

(a) Arab Refugees

There is no single answer to the Arab refugee problem, but by pursuing a series of interrelated policies we may be able to reduce the problem to manageable proportions. We are urging Israel to release blocked Arab accounts and compensate for property left by the refugees. We are seeking to settle as many of the refugees as possible in surrounding Arab territory and are providing some financial assistance for them through UNRWA. We also hope that some refugees may return to Israel and others may be able to immigrate to the Western Hemisphere.

(See Regional Paper on Refugees D–1/2,[2] and Israel Paper[3] on Refugees D–3, Tab 4)

(b) Further Immigration to Israel

Large scale Jewish immigration into Israel would jeopardize any chances of Arab-Israeli settlement. If the potential emigration from the Soviet Union takes place, we should seek to absorb those refugees elsewhere than in Israel.

(See Israel Paper on Immigration D–3, Tab 7)

(c) Territorial Settlement

Solution of this extremely complex problem is at an impasse, since the Arab states unrealistically wish to return to the partition boundaries of November 1947, while Israel wants to retain every bit of land she won through the hostilities of 1948. Although there is no question of accepting the Arab point of view, we think Israel must be prepared to make some concessions. This problem is considered too technical for discussion on this trip.

---

[2] Not printed; see the revised paper, STA D–1/2a, infra.

[3] Reference is to the Department of State Position Paper, STA D–3, and its Tabs 1–8, Document 605.

(d) Future of Jerusalem

An international regime for Jerusalem could not be imposed without the use of force. Israel prefers a settlement along the present de facto lines, and the Arab states might accept such an arrangement if they were to receive certain concessions in return. (For example, Egypt might accept a road link with Jordan.) As a minimum there should be freedom of access to the Holy Places and arrangements should be made to reestablish circulation of goods and people between the two parts of the city.

(See Israel Paper on Jerusalem D–3, Tab 5)

(e) Arab Blockade of Israel

We oppose this blockade, whether it takes form of halting of pipeline operations, blocking Israel-bound traffic in Suez, blacklisting tankers, boycotting airlines or other measures and have urged relaxation of those by the Arab states. We recognize, however, that this blockade is a symptom of the Arab-Israeli tension, and that lasting progress in this question depends upon resolving other, more basic differences.

(See Israel Country Paper on the Arab League D–3, Tab 8 and Egyptian Country Paper D–2, Tab 2 [4])

(f) Regional Defense

If the difficulties between the Western powers and the Arab states concerning the development of regional defense are imposed directly on the differences already existing between Israel and the Arab states, the prospects of resolving either of these issues are slight. It is our policy, therefore, to keep these problems apart. We are seeking to establish a Middle East defense organization based initially upon Egypt. At the same time we are trying to maintain the present uneasy balance of military forces between Israel and the Arab states, so that Israel will not feel impelled to engage in an arms race and the Arabs will not let their traditional hostility toward Israel block cooperation with the West.

We are working on the theory that a settlement of the Anglo-Egyptian dispute and the establishment of a Middle East defense organization will place us in a much better position from which to move on the problem of Arab-Israel peace. The Israelis, however, are very vocally taking the position that Arab-Israel peace must be a pre-condition of the other moves, and will doubtless resort to every possible expedient in order to further this policy.

Department of State Position Paper [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON, May 8 [?], 1953.]
STA D–1/2a

THE ARAB REFUGEE PROBLEM

As a result of the Arab-Israeli hostilities in the spring of 1948, about one million Arabs were driven from their homes in what then was Palestine and became refugees in the neighboring Arab states.

Our efforts toward a solution of the refugee problem are channeled through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA), with headquarters in Beirut. At the Sixth Session of the General Assembly, 49 countries voted for a three-year plan for UNRWA. The three-year period ends June 30, 1954, and commits a fund of $250 million—$200 for rehabilitation and $50 million for relief on a descending scale of annual appropriations.

Progress on the refugee problem, while disappointing has made some headway. The number of refugees registered with UNRWA on January 31, 1953, was as follows:

475,233	—	In Jordan
206,005	—	In the Gaza Strip (held in Egypt)
103,149	—	In Lebanon
85,746	—	In Syria
868,133

810,000 "rations" are distributed to the group, a "ration" consisting of flour and other foodstuffs calculated to yield 1600 calories daily. The reduction of the relief rolls from approximately one million to 868,133 refugees has been made possible in part through a number of UNRWA's small-scale projects, in part through the initiative of individual refugees who have found employment legally or otherwise and in part through the Agency's more stringent conditions for granting relief. General agreements have been entered into between Jordan, Egypt, Syria and Libya with respect to projects enabling refugees to become self-supporting. The Syrian agreement is designed to furnish self-support opportunities so that the refugees in that country will no longer require relief from UNRWA. Large scale irrigation projects in Jordan are being planned to remove substantial numbers from relief rolls—estimates vary from 100,000 to 300,000 (see paper entitled "Outstanding issues between Jordan–Israel in Connection with Use of Waters of the River Jordan"). [2] At present it looks as though Lebanon offers little opportunity for absorbing permanently the 103,000 refugees in the country, but the government has indicated tentatively that it might consider settling 20,000. Current negotiations with Egypt look toward projects in the Sinai to provide employment for approximately 70,000 Gaza refugees. The UNRWA has an agreement with Libya to settle 1,200 families in that country. Iraq has taken responsibility for its 4,000 refugees, and these no longer are listed on the UNRWA relief rolls.

[1] One of a series of position papers on regional problems in the Near East prepared for the briefing book for the Secretary's trip to the Middle East and South Asia; see footnote 1, Document 604.

The refugees are an embittered group, subject to subversion, for obvious reasons.

John B. Blandford, Jr. has resigned as Director of UNRWA and pending the appointment of a successor who will be an American, British Deputy Director Leslie J. Carver is Acting Director.

U.S. Position

We must acknowledge that the task of settling the refugees cannot be completed by June 30, 1954, the end of the three-year period, and we must shortly lay the groundwork for an extension of this program, which course will involve eventual action in the General Assembly. The initial extension should be for perhaps two years, though we recognize it will require much longer to settle the problem.

An eventual solution requires:

(1) Possible territorial concessions by Israel, and agreement by Israel to relinquish claims to a substantial volume of the Jordan waters or some arrangement for the cooperative development of the Jordan and Yarmuk waters. This could be the moral equivalent of partial repatriation. Alternative to the above may be partial repatriation.

(2) A determination by the UN, backed by the United States and the United Kingdom, to continue programs looking to economic development in the Near East, from which the refugees can benefit.

(3) An extension of direct economic development assistance by the United States to Syria, Jordan, and to other nations willing to provide homes to the refugees, so that the native populations can see benefits accruing to themselves as well as to the refugees.

[2] Not further identified.

(4) Preparation by Israel for payment of its debt, for compensation, and continued efforts to appraise this debt by the UN. Expeditious payment of all blocked refugee accounts in Israel.

150. It is not MAC which needs enlarging (Deptel 59) [2] or changing but attitude of Israel and Jordan who established it in article 11 of armistice agreement to rule on compliance both parties with that armistice. Both sides should:

(1) Cease using MAC as propaganda scoreboard to expose evil acts of other.

(2) Discipline its own individual offenders when found. Punishment may not always be necessary as understandable fright may cause an illegal shot and unwitting crossing line very easy here.

(3) Where national prestige and security reasons allow, show good faith and admit in MAC just complaints of other side. Israel is especially prone to rush in counter claim for the record to every Jordan complaint.

Observers have difficult job at best and by time they reach scene of incident clear evidence not always available and evidence can and has been faked. Small wonder De Ridder has to abstain from voting on many complaints for lack of convincing evidence. Israel's denunciation of him as biased because he does not vote for Israel is to be condemned.

(4) Israel should cease yelling "infiltrator" before adequate time has elapsed for investigation, and stop calling on MAC observers for work that is primary responsibility of Israel police for crimes committed inside Israel. MAC not police force, and to criticize MAC for not doing work it is not supposed to do shows ignorance or deliberate undermining of UN prestige in area for reasons that are at best obscure. I reiterate that if Israel sincere in her protestations against infiltrators her stubborn refusal to reinstate local commanders agreements, the best method of controlling it discovered so far, not understandable (Contel 131). (5) When Israel police have fingerprints, bits of clothing or other evidence they feel point to infiltrator they should give such evidence to Jordan MAC delegates with request for investigation (not done in Genauer case—Contel 143).[4] Jordan would be admittedly reluctant to find its own citizens guilty but it does not want murderers wandering around Jordan unpunished.

UN itself can help bring about increase in prestige of MAC by appointing press officer who, while withholding names of observers and certain gruesome details tending to inflame public, would publish correct version. MAC decisions are now known to both Israel and Jordan authorities who varnish them for propaganda purposes. A UN press officer could do much to tone down some of the purple prose of Nashashzbi and the frequent distortions of fact and worse, the building up of tension and fear, appearing in Israel press.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY AMMAN, May 13, 1953—2 p. m.

962. Foreign Minister in conversation with me and Counselor of Embassy May 13 formally confirmed and elaborated statements made in earlier brief conversations I have had with him and with Prime Minister in regard position Arab Governments have agreed to take in conversations with Secretary State concerning possible peace with Israel. He said that meeting of Foreign Ministers in Cairo had unanimously decided that only basis of peace which could be considered is complete implementation of all United Nations resolutions on Palestine beginning 1947.

I suggested that Arabs might lose golden opportunity if they gave Secretary of State impression that they were unanimously intrasigent and unwilling to consider compromise or negotiation and I urged a more reasonable attitude. He was rigid and adamant stating that he was enunciating fixed determination of HKJ on this subject.

This attitude differs widely from attitude of former Prime Minister, former Minister of Defense and ex-senior Regent as previously reported. I surmise that Cairo meeting crystalized policy in an atmosphere in which no representative of any Arab state dared be reasonable lest he appear less patriotic and less anti-Israeli than the others.[2]

Green noted that a reflection of this influence appeared in the conversation he and the Secretary had with the Prime Minister on May 15: Instead of insisting on "implementation" of all U.N. resolutions from 1947, he spoke of U.N. resolutions as the "basis for negotiation." The Secretary of State to the Israeli Prime Minister (Ben-Gurion)[1]

SECRET [TEL AVIV, May 18, 1953.]

Subject: Paraphrase of Secretary Dulles' Personal Message to Prime Minister Ben-Gurion

For security reasons the Embassy was unable to deliver the Secretary's personal message to Prime Minister Ben-Gurion in the form in which it was received (Damascus reference telegram). An aide-mémoire containing the following paraphrase of the message was left with Foreign Minister Sharett May 18:

During our conversations you expressed your concern over the deterioration of border conditions between Israel and Jordan. You will recall that I shared that concern.

I have found in my talks in Jordan that Jordan officials are also concerned over this situation which all agree is both irritating and politically dangerous.

It is my feeling that the government of Jordan, as a means of reducing the tension, might welcome the reinstitution of the local commanders agreements.

I believe also that, at this particular stage and in view of their local scene, Jordan would prefer to have any meetings at that level rather than at higher levels of government.

[1] The text of this personal message from the Secretary, as delivered on May 18 in an aide-mémoire to Foreign Minister Sharett, was sent to the Department by Tel Aviv on May 19 in despatch 1193. (110.1 DU/5-1953) The fact that the message was delivered was reported in telegram 1766 from Tel Aviv, May 19. (110.11 DU/5-1953)

I would like to express the hope that you will consider seriously whether initiative by you at this time might not result in the reinstitution of these agreements to ease the situation on the border.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, May 22, 1953—6 p. m.

1782. At meeting yesterday at his request Foreign Minister Sharett informed me of attack few nights ago on car traveling Jerusalem-Tel Aviv road. Gave following details: Approximately 1:30 a.m. night of May 19-20 car traveling from Jerusalem to Tel Aviv containing no passengers caught in automatic fire between Shaar Hagai (Bab el Wad) and Shariff. Car hit about 20 times and driver wounded. No empty cartridges yet found. Foreign Minister said military censorship invoked to keep out of press item "which would have tended create atmosphere of panic". (US protest has been lodged with MAC.)

Foreign Minister also reviewed other border incidents during month of May.

Firing at that traffic along road, he asserted, was serious matter that meant road no longer safe at night and communications with Jerusalem endangered. He recalled that similar situation had been faced between 1936 and 1938 and more seriously between 1947 and 1948 ("that is why we fought"). If this kind of incident continues, he asserted, Israel will have to consider itself "in state of war" and will have to take appropriate action to defend itself. "May have to occupy one or two spots to control places adjoining roads so that flanks of road are under effective protection", he explained. Added that he making these observations with full realization of seriousness of what he was saying and of incidents. Concluded that while Israel not anxious precipitate problem, continuation such incidents would make position "untenable".

Pointing out that above situation one of the complex of many problems in the Middle East to which Secretary Dulles presently giving his attention, I expressed hope Israel would exercise restraint in order give Secretary and Department opportunity to study these problems on basis Secretary's conversation with leaders of Israel and her neighbors. I pointed out that action of future foreshadowed in his remarks would result in greater loss of life and have more serious results than continuation to be considerd separate and apart from answer to Secretary Dulles personal message to Prime Minister Ben-Gurion (Embassy telegram 1766) [2] which he hoped have in few days.

1783. Embassy suggests Foreign Minister's statement (Embassy telegram 1782) [2] be evaluated in light of:

1. Israeli belief that Jordanese are permitting infiltration and border incidents as a deliberate tactic in effort to harass and weaken Israel.
2. More evidences Israel Government and public have been finding psychological pressure of enmity of Israel's neighbors (Embassy telegram 1708) [3] and increasing concrete manifestations of perilous economy hard to bear. to assume initiative in forcing developments along lines its policies rather than waiting for policies emerge from Secretary's discussions.

6. Statement of respected and responsible Israeli journalist recently replying to query from French representative as to why Israeli press so actively and unanimously stirring up public on border situation. "Must understand Israel dependent for its existence first on American Jewry who in time of crisis prepared give unlimited support but who, when things calm, tend to forget about Israel; and secondly, on USG which is adversely affected by crisis psychology. It is a hard dilemma."

7. Temptation for Israel Government to use Bab El Wad incident: as laying groundwork for possible turndown of Secretary's request to Prime Minister to reinstate local commanders' agreements; to lend point to arguments which had been advanced in conversation with the Secretary concerning Israel's problems with its neighbors; to dramatize need for high level discussions on border problems.

Embassy recommends Israel Government be informed:

1. We recognize that the Israel–Jordan border situation constitutes a most serious situation and we will support steps which we regard as making a contribution to the solution of the problem.

2. We feel Secretary's trip this area offers opportunity for constructive approach to many interlocking problems of which border situation is one and that Israel Government action suggested by Foreign Minister would seriously lessen possibility success this approach.

3. United States would regard action of kind contemplated by Foreign Minister as aggression and tripartite powers would have to act accordingly.

4. United States economic and military aid policies would have to be reviewed in light of any such developments.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Israeli Ambassador (Eban)

[WASHINGTON,] May 25, 1953.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Thank you for your letter of April 24 enclosing a copy of a memorandum entitled "Notes on Border Incidents Along the Israel Frontier", [1] which was the subject of your visit with Mr. Byroade April 22.

I have delayed replying pending the determination of responsibility for the April 22–24 incidents. The receipt of General Riley's report,[2] just released by the United Nations, indicates that it has not been possible to fix the responsibility.

It may be of interest for you to know, and thereby see the extent of the problem, that at approximately the same time you were calling on Mr. Byroade, Jordan officials in Amman were protesting Israel's attacks and requesting that we (as a Tripartite Declaration signatory) use our influence to keep peace and order along the Jordan–Israel frontier.

I believe that my remarks to you of last February counseling your Government to refrain from retaliatory action by Israel forces against neighboring states, are still good. Further steps toward maintaining border peace could include restoration of the local commanders agreement, as suggested by General Riley and accepted by the Jordan Government, and by high level discussions on the whole border problem as advocated by General Riley and accepted by the Israel Government. I am confident your Government will cooperate fully in making a success of any discussions that may be arranged and that your Government will continue to make full use of, and cooperate with, United Nations organizations established to investigate violations of the armistice agreements.

Please convey my warm greetings to your Prime Minister.

Sincerely yours,

"It can only be effectively handled (a) if the Jordan Government accepts responsibility for preventing unauthorized crossings of the lines by its nationals, as we are willing to do for our nationals (b) if the central authorities of Jordan adopt and enforce a system of basic preventive measures. In March, at Jordan's request, we handed them a memorandum outlining the measures we think are needed. Jordan promised to study these proposals, but to this day there has been no reaction to them (c) if the two governments consult each other at a proper level to coordinate their efforts. As far back as January, we proposed a high-level meeting. On 23 April General Riley renewed this proposal. My government agreed forthwith. Jordan has failed so far to respond.

"Experience has shown that the agreements which provided for local commanders meetings were an ineffectual palliative, because they could only deal with isolated incidents and then only after their occurrence, and therefore did not attack the evil at its roots. Local commanders meetings can help to implement, but cannot be a substitute for, more general measures to be agreed upon in high-level discussions.

"In response to your personal appeal, and in order not to neglect any chance of helping the situation, we are prepared to have the local agreement renewed. The terms will have to be adapted to present circumstances. I must add that unless Jordan accepts full responsibility for keeping its nationals on the Jordan side, it is doubtful whether the agreement can be efective, though we will do everything in our power to make it so."

Wording of final paragraph Prime Minister's message (Embassy reference telegram) somewhat ambiguous. May refer to situation existing when local commander agreements terminated. General Riley yesterday afternoon in half hour private talk I had with him described that situation as follows: Israel Government insisted terms of local commander agreements be changed before it would agree to reinstituting them. Jordan took position it willing to discuss changes in agreement if they reinstituted but not willing be in position of being forced to agree to changes as pre-condition of reinstitution. Riley at that time urged Israel to agree to reinstitute for sixty days during which time discussions could take place on possible amendments. Israel Government refused.

Yesterday afternoon at reception given by Riley at government House (after my talk with him) attended by Sharett, Eytan, Comay and Makleff, they mentioned to him exchange of messages between Secretary and Prime Minister. He urged them to agree to a brief indeterminate reinstitution of agreements which could be followed immediately by discussion of changes in "terms adapted to present circumstances."

Director General Foreign Ministry Eytan this morning told me discussions between Makleff and Riley were continuing and that Makleff was working on "practical suggestions" for reinstituting the agreements.

While Embassy believes United States and other tripartite powers should under no circumstances countenance proposed Israel action reported Embassy telegram 1782, it is important we continue efforts reduce basic cause of present tension. Prime Minister's expression of willingness renew local commanders' agreement (Embassy telegram 1787) is step forward, however small and offers possible opening for further steps ameliorate present state of Israel-Jordan border relations.

Israel leaders state their belief that present situation on border is result of deliberate Jordan policy encourage, through inactivity, harassment of Israel by infiltrators and cite as confirmation failure Jordan reply to memorandum on infiltration (Embassy telegram 1515)[6] and reluctance Jordan Government accept Riley suggestion for high level meetings. Opinion advanced by some that Jordan behavior is part of coordinated Arab strategy to weaken and eventually destroy Israel and that through infiltration Arabs have found means of in effect engaging in warfare without risking full consequences.

Police and Military leaders express belief that much of recent killing and stealing committed by organized gangs operating out of Jordan, some of which engaged only in robbery, others in robbery and incidental killing and some with purely political motivation engaged primarily in killing. As instance of former Inspector General Israel Police Sachar says Genauirs (Embassy telegram 1636)[7] were killed by three members of Arab gang active in New City Jerusalem area for past three years who have customarily combined robbery and killing. As instance latter, believes killing of two soldiers Tel Mond (Embassy telegram 1550)[8] and Azriel crime (Embassy telegram 1715)[7] committed by gang financed by Mufti, "interested only in murder" and "under operational leadership of doctor and Arab Legion officer married to British subject". Usual response to queries as to whether Israel makes such information available to Jordan authorities through MAC is in negative, accompanied by argument "it would do no good" which fact "only makes police and army task more difficult". Contention is that when local commanders agreement was in effect Jordan authorities reluctant follow through with preventative measures, arrests, and adequate punishment.

Even if above Israel beliefs are exaggerations (General Riley tells me he not able form firm opinion concerning Israel police contention re organized gangs), would seem desirable encourage Jordan meet directly present Israel lack of confidence in Jordan motives. Department may wish use Prime Minister's reply to Secretary (Embassy telegram 1787) to call attention Jordan Government to Secretary's personal intervention and express hope Jordan Government will cooperate and endeavor demonstrate that Israel contention Jordan unwilling take effective action against guilty parties has no foundation in fact. At same time we should urge Israel as its contribution to more effective implementation local commanders agreement to provide Jordan authorities information it states it has re identity of persons committing crimes from Jordan territory.

In reply Foreign Minister said he would call my statement attention Prime Minister Ben Gurion. Gave following as own "off-hand reactions":

Re point (1) reference telegram, while Israel had placed emphasis on responsibility of Jordan in matter because of its belief that main onus for tension here, Israel unreservedly subscribed to doctrine that concerted effort both sides reach permanent workable arrangement was key to solution.

Re sentence on point (2) commented that even if for sake of argument it were assumed that Israel was responsible for certain incidents, fact that it was "reaction to provocation from other side of attempt stem tide of lawlessness" should be borne in mind. Except as such reaction can be argued, Israel has not taken initiative to venture into neighboring territory. He contended therefore that if this point were taken out of context and made to suggest there has been "undiscriminate series of attacks by both sides" for which both were equally to blame, it would "be a serious misreading".

Re rest of point (2) reference telegram, Foreign Minister stated he was glad to say thus far no repetition of attacks arose and he was "taking full note of our position without for time being adding or retracting".

Re point (3) reference telegram, Foreign Minister stated that while Israel was naturally interested in adapting terms of local commanders agreement to present circumstances he did not wish this tendition [condition?] to be viewed as "obstructive". Israel's emphasis, as Department's, is on reinstitution of agreement. At moment formula is being worked out for presentation to General Riley and Sharett said he would do his best to hasten matter.

In conclusion I pointed out that at present heart of problem is gravely disturbing episodes along border and that it is essential that break be made in present chain of action and reaction. Failure exercise necessary restraint, I stressed, would jeopardize success Secretary's efforts to help in arriving at solution of pressing area problems.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs (Waller)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 9, 1953.

Subject: 1) Discussion of Secretary's Speech of June 1 [1] (Arab resentment, Israel expansion, resettlement of refugees, defense organization, Israel territory); 2) Military Aid; 3) Military Missions to Israel; 4) Jerusalem; 5) MSA Program.

---

Participants: Ambassador Abba Eban
Mr. David Goitein
Mr. Byroade—Assistant Secretary
Mr. Waller—NE

Ambassador Eban opened the conversation by saying he would like to express some frank reflections and in turn obtain clarification of some parts of the Secretary's recent address. He said the speech shows there is general unity of policies between the two governments, particularly on the character of the relationship, the need for peace in the Near East and the general approach to peace. There were some points, he said, regarding which the Israel Government would prefer to go somewhat further than the United States, such as the settlement of all the refugees in Arab countries and the concept of peace as a prerequisite to a defense organization, but these exceptions only emphasized the extent of the points of agreement.

There were three points concerning which the Israel Government would like clarification. These were:

(1) Arab resentment toward the West, and the United States in particular. The Israel Government does not question the existence of the resentment, but it questions the justification for it. He said that several Arab states have been created in recent years such as Jordan and Libya, and there was no opposition or resentment by Israel or by any other country. Israel's national independence should therefore not be a matter of concern to others. During the period of Israel's national existence, neighboring countries such as Jordan and Egypt have even expanded their boundaries.

The Israel Government believes that the Arab states owe the West, particularly the United States, a great deal of gratitude for the benefits they have obtained in contrast with the relative benefits for Israel. The main point which he wished to emphasize, he said, was that by pointing out to the Arabs that they have cause for resentment will only confirm in their minds justification for the resentment.

(2) Arab fears of Zionist expansion and aggression. Ambassador Eban pointed out that it was the Arabs who made the war by invading Palestine and it is the Arabs who refused to make peace with Israel, not vice versa. He suggested that the United States might alleviate to some extent Arab fears of Israeli aggression by expressing our confidence that Israel has no aggressive intentions. He continued by saying that if the Arabs wish guarantees, they could have them any time in a peace settlement.

(3) Resettlement of refugees. The Israel Government believes that the Arab world must undertake its responsibilities toward the refugees and resettle them in Arab countries. He said that Israel's refusal to agree to the return of refugees is primarily because of security reasons and to a minor extent economic.

The Ambassador then asked for an interpretation of "inter-related" as used with reference to a defense organization and of the phrase "territory under Israel control". He wondered whether the first had some reference to the Arab League Collective Security Pact and said with regard to the second that Israel does not have any territory not sanctioned by treaty or agreement and that the present Armistice lines are guaranteed by the tripartite powers and by the Security Council.

Mr. Byroade said he was grateful that the Israel Government had found in the Secretary's speech so many points for reassurance. He felt it was unfortunate that the speech as originally drafted was too long for the radio time allotted and had to be cut by several minutes. He also felt it was unfortunate that a trip of the kind just completed could not have permitted the party to visit Israel first and then again as the last country. However, he said, he could reassure the Ambassador on some points. The first pertained to resentment in the Arab world. He felt that the Ambassador's reference to the need of a counter-balance to Arab criticism was well taken. The American audience wanted to know the facts, however, and the Secretary's intention was to provide those facts. He said that if only Israel and Arab relations were concerned, the problem would be relatively easier. What is at stake, however, is the possible loss of all Western influence in the Middle East, including oil, airfields, etc. The decline in influence has resulted partially from Western support of Israel, and we are quite concerned about it. He said that Arab resentment against the West and especially the British is worse now than last year and it is so serious that warfare may break out in Egypt at any time. The American people and the American Congress should realize that the United States and the West is not in a position to exert much influence on the Arab world today. It is in Israel's interest, Mr. Byroade said, to have us retain a position of influence in the area, and Prime Minister Ben Gurion has wisely recognized this.

With regard to Israel expansion, Mr. Byroade said that in his opinion the Arabs are not greatly concerned over the short-term; they are not worried about Ben Gurion and Eban and their contemporaries. The Arabs do believe, however, that one day Israel will be forced to expand. There is the feeling in the Arab world that if, for example, the Soviet Union should permit the departure of Jews from Communist countries and if they should find their way to Israel, Israel would be forced to expand its frontiers to make room for them. He said he did not know how to allay the Arab fear, but we must keep trying.

The use of the expression "territory now under Israel control" was an accident of drafting and had no hidden significance. The Secretary apparently feels that peace cannot be achieved unless the back of the refugee problem is broken. Settlement of refugees along the lines of present endeavors is not going to work because, for example, Syria cannot settle refugees on a higher standard than that of the present population. Future settlement must be in such a way that the camp or locality cannot be labelled "refugee". Further, we know now that available water is sufficient for not more than half the present number of refugees. Therefore, the Secretary feels that if there are areas in Israel where the refugees could be settled, as in hill areas, it is in the interest of all to cooperate. He emphasized that we were not thinking specifically in terms of Western Galilee, the Negev, or in numbers such as 50,000 or 100,000 or any other number. We are thinking of the possibilities in general terms only.

Mr. Byroade said, with reference to a defense organization, that it was immediately evident on reaching the field that the past concept of a Middle East Defense Organization would not work at the present time. That decision had actually been reached in the Department some six months ago. In Egypt it was apparent that the East-West conflict was happening on another planet so far as the Egyptians were concerned. In Iraq the situation was somewhat different because Iraq fears for her northern frontier. The Iraqis tell us that they cannot wait forever on Egypt for a defense organization. They need help and Mr. Byroade said he did not see why we should not extend military aid to Iraq in a modest way. Pakistan also offered important possibilities. The amount which the Department hoped to get for the area ($100,000,000) must be spread all the way between Libya and Pakistan and it is thus evident that this amount would not create a powerhouse anywhere.

Mr. Byroade said he did not believe military aid should go to Syria in great amounts as long as the Israeli situation exists and that we no longer believe that military equipment should go to Egypt as long as the trouble with the British remains unresolved. Instead we are thinking more of strengthening the mountain pass states in the northern part of the area.

For Israel, Mr. Byroade said that he would like to see some of the funds used in Israel for construction of strategic roads, for port improvements, etc., but not for anything in combat terms. He emphasized that he was not quoting from any plan but was merely expressing thoughts that developed during the recent trip.

Ambassador Eban asked whether the concept for defense would be to find states willing to cooperate. He felt it would not be prudent to consider a state having anti-Israel sentiments and supply to that state the missing element for aggression, namely arms. Mr. Byroade replied that the Ambassador's analysis would depend on the situation, e.g., if we could have prevailed on the British to move more rapidly, and if we would have given Egypt some small arms aid after the Sudan agreement, we would probably not be in our present impasse in Egypt. In any event, Iraq and Pakistan offer the main prospects for beginning a defense arrangement. We have not given up the desirability of having a regional defense arrangement of some kind, but until that can be achieved we plan to concentrate on individual states.

Ambassador Eban thanked Mr. Byroade for his clarification of the Secretary's address and asked if he could take up some other matters. He said that in discussions between the Pentagon and Israel Embassy officials, it was apparent that there was great interest in the Pentagon in Israel's military potential. In the past all United States military missions to the Near East had stopped short of Israel and Israel was beginning to get the feeling of being boycotted. Lt. General McAuliffe and Major General Eddleman are planning a trip to Greece and Turkey in the near future and have expressed a willingness to go on to Israel. The Israel Government has invited them and would like to have the Department of State's "no objection" to it. Mr. Byroade expressed doubt that the Greek-Turkish team would be the best one to visit Israel and suggested that General Hull might more appropriately visit Israel. He said that it had been planned for General Hull to visit the Near East but it had been postponed because of the Secretary's trip. He thought it might be possible for General Hull to make the trip early in August, but he would like to think a little more about it. The purpose of General Hull's visit would be to see what can be done toward the defense of the area.

Mr. Byroade said that the Secretary believes that something should be done with reference to Jerusalem. Although there is no plan, he feels that this question should have about the same priority as the settlement of the Arab refugees. The Secretary realizes that any plan for Jerusalem must not be too disruptive to Israel and Jordan and cited as an analogy the New York Port Authority which operates ports, tunnels and other facilities by an agreement between the States of New York and New Jersey.

Ambassador Eban said he had one more matter, namely, the mutual security program for Israel. He said that approximately $6,000,000 remain in MSA funds for the present fiscal year. The Israel Government would like to use this money for debt retirement, rather than for the regular program. It could apparently be authorized by MSA with some slight change in administrative procedure. In support of the request he wanted Mr. Byroade to know that figures would be supplied the Department and Mr. Stassen's office tomorrow. Mr. Byroade said he would do whatever he could under existing authority but it would not be possible to ask Congress for anything requiring additional legislation. He concluded by emphasizing again that he was indulging in a purely informal exchange of views on a number of subjects and that his thoughts were not necessarily firm on any of them; also that he had spoken much more frankly than with any other representative from the area and he hoped Ambassador Eban would bear this in mind in reporting the conversation to his Government.

SECRET WASHINGTON, June 9, 1953—6:12 p. m.

976. From Secretary and Stassen. Following our visit to area we have given much thought question Jordan–Yarmuk development, which we recognize is of great importance. We are convinced this development is essential part any settlement refugee problem and that it should be carried forward as fast as possible. We are determined that its execution shall provide greatest good to greatest number and that decisions shall be based strictly on merits taking into account political well as economic and social realities in area concerned.

Much as we would like take some prompt dramatic action as concrete evidence US positive interest we have reluctantly come conclusion this not yet possible. We need more factual engineering data (which we expect TVA study to provide) before we can determine course action on riparian rights issue and it does not appear that commitments on major construction can be made until both TVA study and TCA engineering surveys on spot are further advanced. We believe we must take into account both physical facts of geography and interests of Israel and Arab States in determining best use limited water resources involved. Jordan obviously must carry out proposed agreement to assure reasonable refugee benefits, which agreement should make concessions by Israel on riparian rights easier to work out, particularly if Jordan also agrees to equitable division basin waters among riparian states.

For moment therefore believe probably only concrete action possible is to proceed with detailed surveys in Jordan as proposed by TCA making use of engineers to consider alternative water development proposals and phasing of plans and designs. As soon as adequate data available we intend direct intensive study rights and interests of riparian states together with possibility of incorporating Litani in regional water development scheme as suggested by Israel.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 11, 1953.

Subject: Publicity Regarding Messages to the Prime Ministers of Jordan and Israel

Following our telephone conversation, I have consulted the Office of Near Eastern Affairs about the desirability of issuing some form of press statement to point up the signing of the "Local Commanders Agreement" between Jordan and Israel. NE recommends, and I concur, that we do not attempt to publicize this development. To do so would run the risk of bringing adverse pressure from the other Arab States, and from the people of Jordan itself, on the Jordan Government.

While the Arab States are from time to time willing to do reasonable things in their relations with Israel, they ordinarily do them only when acting alone and quietly. Experience shows that collectively the Arab States are much more intransigent than singly. In public and among themselves each Government feels obliged to be more uncompromising than the next in its attitude toward Israel.

The publicity attendant on a special message from the Secretary of State, if it were released, would probably have an additional disadvantage of implying that the agreement was negotiated under American pressure. I am afraid this would be so no matter how the statement or message were worded.

Even if publicity did not affect Jordanian implementation of this agreement, it might work against the execution of the next step for which we hope—the initiation of high level talks between Jordan and Israel on the border situation.

It is our present belief that as a general rule maneuvers in the ticklish Arab-Israel situation should be carried on as unobtrusively as possible.

The Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart) to the Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery)

TOP SECRET

MY DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Thank you for your letter of May 5, 1953 [1] analyzing the present attitude of Egypt towards a possible peace settlement with Israel. The ideas that you advanced are strikingly similar to those put forward by Ambassador Davis in his talks at the Department. They were in accord with my fears that very little interest exists at present among the Arabs in resolving this troublesome question.

However, a recent development, if our information proves accurate, gives cause for slightly more optimism. This report was obtained by a representative of the Department most informally and confidentially from an official of the Israeli Embassy here. This source alleged Colonel Gamal Abd Al Nasir has written a letter to an unspecified Israeli addressee soliciting Israel's help in "achieving Egypt's aspirations." The letter did not discuss or raise particular issues. The communication and the Israeli reply were exchanged at Paris.

To me this is a most surprising development, particularly the fact that Nasir should put anything of this nature in writing. I would appreciate your views as to the report's authenticity and any other information on the matter which may come to the attention of the Embassy.

[1] Not printed.

Another indication of a more favorable Egyptian attitude is Egypt's apparent readiness to sign an agreement with UNRWA for refugee projects in the Gaza-Sinai area. If these projects materialize, they may prove an opening wedge for further moves leading to a decrease at least in the number of unassimilated refugees under Egyptian control. I would much appreciate your comments on the possibility of this agreement being signed and on its significance.

Sincerely yours,

PARKER T. HART

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan) to the Secretary of State [1]

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 18, 1953.

Subject: Israel's Short-Term Debt

Discussion:

The Israelis are pressing DMS on this subject. Mr. Eban has written Mr. Stassen asking (a) for assistance in meeting a threatening financial crisis by making available to the Israel Government, to pay debts, $7 million remaining from unused 1953 appropriations already voted for Israel; and (b) for his intercession in securing a $75 million loan from the Eximbank to enable Israel to consolidate a portion of its present indebtedness. This amounts to $386 million, of which $111 million matures in the twelve months April 1953–March 1954. It is necessary to determine the Department's position: to enable DMS to avail of necessary policy guidance; and to enable an appropriate reply to be made to the Israelis if, as is likely, they also approach the Department.

The debt of $386 million has gradually accumulated during the past four years, and without a substantial increase in private gifts to Israel there is no immediate prospect of reduction in its total. Debts are owing to the Eximbank, American and foreign private interests, and for liabilities arising out of current import transactions.

We are also informed that Israel's current requests for military equipment to be purchased for cash from the U.S., Canada, the U.K., and France, total $40,000,000. A specific inquiry has been reported from London for 40 Centurion tanks.

The Israeli case is as follows:

1. Provision of $7 million forthwith will tide them over a present crisis, prevent default between now and July 31st.

2. Provision of a loan or grant of $75,000,000 would enable Israel to consolidate its debt and distribute future maturities on a manageable schedule, maintain its credit position with resultant economies in carrying charges, and prevent further impairment to Israel's relations with the Arabs, who count on economic collapse in Israel and therefore are reluctant to talk peace. It would avert an internal crisis which might follow external default.

[1] Sent through the Executive Secretariat.

Embassy Tel Aviv, in Despatch 1262 of June 8th,[2] argues that the balance of evidence appears to favor averting a "general default." A default would have serious political consequences within Israel, would encourage Arab intransigeance, and might have adverse effects on Israel's ability to raise money from private sources abroad. The effect of default might put more power in the hands of extremists in Israel, and prejudice the sensitive border situation.

The case against meeting Israel's requests is as follows:

1. An advance of $6 or $7 million will buy only a few weeks' time, and therefore it is preferable to reach a decision, now, on the merits, rather than postpone it. The advance would reestablish the pattern of paying old debts, and thereby make it more difficult to avoid accommodating other creditors later. (But note that the few weeks "bought" are weeks in which Congress will still be in session, and the time gained might avoid special Congressional interest and action, and loss of what we have gained in presenting the Near East "package" program.)
2. There are no funds to provide a $75 million grant, and it is undesirable to seek a "political" loan from the Eximbank, for which no basis of repayment exists. Furthermore, assistance, whether by loan or grant, beyond that now contemplated in MSA legislation, would do violence to our fundamental Near Eastern policy, by weighting aid to Israel much more heavily than aid to Arabs.
3. This step might set a precedent in violence to this fundamental policy, as it is the first occasion when the present administration has had to decide on such an issue.
4. A default, or "moratorium", by Israel might not necessarily result in upsetting the political situation in Israel and in the area.

NSC 129/1,[3] paragraphs 14(a), and 14(f), and 17(f), provide general guidance.

There is general agreement at the staff level against support for Israel's request for a loan or grant of $75,000,000, over and above funds programmed for Israel in 1953 and 1954 MSA legislation.

The case for acceding to the request for an immediate advance may be summarized as follows: We "buy" six weeks' time and thereby: enable future policy to be determined in the knowledge of what FY 1954 appropriations are; we can review again our basic relations with Israel to determine anew policies on the grant aid program to Israel; we avoid probable Congressional entanglement which might work to the detriment of objective policy determinations; we give the Israelis a further opportunity to put their financial house in order, in the light of knowledge that no loan or grants are available in excess of present MSA legislative proposals. A hasty decision to decline the request would prevent further evaluation of the effect of the adverse forces in the Near East that such a decision sets in train.

Recommendations. That you advise Mr. Stassen: (1) The Department does not support any proffer of assistance, loan or grant, beyond amounts now contemplated in MSA legislation; (2) The Department has reluctantly concluded that it is not in U.S. interest to allow a default at this time, and therefore Mr. Stassen has our support in taking appropriate measures within the limitations of 1953 funds already voted for Israel to prevent such default; (3) Interagency discussion should continue on future policy with respect to Israel's financial problems. [4]

[4] According to a note of June 22 by O'Connor attached to this memorandum and addressed to Jernegan, "the Secretary agreed to $7,000,000 only and disapproved the rest, after talking with Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Stassen." A handwritten notation indicates that the Secretary agreed with the three recommendations contained in the last paragraph of Jernegan's memorandum of June 18.

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, June 22, 1953—7:13 p. m.

1139. Joint State-DMS. Following principles should be considered as guidelines in operation grant program in Israel:

1. Primary objective of Aid Mission should be hastening viability of Israel. In administration of program we should seek to achieve maximum influence on the economic policies of GOI and maximum impact on economy as a whole, recognizing relationship internal conditions to external viability. US influence can be focused upon problems internal and external stability through (a) continuous consultation and review of Israel foreign exchange expenditures; and (b) vigorous control over amount, rate, and purposes of release both dollar and counterpart funds. Consultation machinery was established by IG note August 1952.

2. Following specific objectives should be sought by means outlined in (1) above:

(a) Achievement and maintenance of internal economic stability through encouraging GOI to adopt appropriate fiscal and monetary measures designed to retard inflation, bring about most effective use of resources and reduce need for external aid.

[1] Drafted in the Technical Cooperation Administration.

(b) Adoption and maintenance (through periodic revision when necessary in light of foreign exchange position) of exchange budget in which current foreign exchange expenditures, including amortization payments on long-term debt, are balanced against foreign exchange income. In view various uncertainties respect income and debt turn-over foreign exchange budget should be subjected continuous review. Licensing and procurement system should be made sensitive to revised exchange budget;

(c) The allocation of the maximum amount of resources to investment designed to make Israel self-supporting in shortest possible time;

(d) This necessarily means minimizing consumption;

(e) Heavy exchange commitments by Government for industrial investment not based on local resources should be discouraged. Investment in industry should be made only after careful analysis full direct and indirect foreign exchange costs and with special encouragement to private capital investment; internal and external. Priorities should be developed on basis such analysis.

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

TOP SECRET CAIRO, June 23, 1953.
OFFICIAL–INFORMAL

DEAR PETE: I have read with interest your note of June 15 regarding the letter which Gamal Abd Al Nasir is supposed to have written to an Israeli addressee.

We have known for some time that Nasir has a friend in Israel, dating from Palestine War days. I therefore have had one of the Embassy officers ask him frankly but informally if there is anything to the story which you cited.

Abd Al Nasir's reply was: "I have writtten no letters since July 23" (1952). The inference is that he may very well have written such a letter at some time in the past but, if he did, it was in a purely personal capacity.

I continue to believe that there is little prospect at this juncture of the Arabs agreeing to an over-all peace settlement except on terms which Israel is clearly unprepared to accept. Furthermore the other Arab states, in return for their support of Egypt's stand on the Canal Zone issue, have obviously extracted in return the assurance that Egypt will not break the united Arab front against Israel. The hopes which we once held that Egypt might be induced to move unilaterally on this issue are therefore considerably dimmed. I need hardly add, however, that a settlement of the Anglo-Egyptian dispute would afford new possibilities for an attack on the Palestine problem.

With regard to the Sinai refugee project, this was included among the projects approved by the National Production Council last January (Embassy despatch 1546, February 3, 1953).[1] We are under the impression that the primary motivation has been economic rather than political. The project may produce food for Egypt over and above the needs of refugees at no cost to the Egyptian Government except for the water that is provided.

With good wishes,

Sincerely yours,

JEFFERSON CAFFERY

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State[1]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, June 23, 1953—6 p. m.

1951. Acting Director General of Foreign Ministry Comay saying he making statement at specific request of Foreign Minister Sharett who is absent from country said yesterday he wished "confirm Israel's understanding of parts of Secretary's June 1 address[2] on which Israel had sought clarification in conversation between Byroade and Eban":[3]

(1) Phrase "area presently controlled by Israel." Israel understands not implied by this phrase it would be asked to give up some of its territory. Comay added that if no special significance attaches to phrase, "it would be happier avoid expressions creating unwarranted expectations." Referring to Secretary's reaffirmation of tripartite declaration (which was "designed strengthen existing frontiers") he said "it would be valuable to use language which would have effect of strengthening those frontiers rather than giving air of impermanence to them."

(2) Phrase "inter-related defenses." Comay said this phrase interpreted by many in Israel and elsewhere as giving endorsement to idea of support of Arab League Collective Security Pact, especially in light of UP story. Israel now understands Secretary in mind there would be military aid to individual countries willing to cooperate, such as Pakistan, Iraq, Syria and Israel. He added that while this assurance was welcome, Israel still had fears and misgivings with regard arming any Arab State prior to establishment peaceful relations with Israel.

(3) Phrase "alleged Israel encroachment." Comay asserted manner in which phrase followed statement about Arab economic warfare implied latter warranted by these "alleged encroachments" and that Foreign Minister Sharett wondered what these "encroachments" were.

Comay said he also wished mention two other questions:

(1) Jerusalem and holy places. Israel understands Secretary had in mind scheme for internationalization of holy places that would not affect Israel sovereignty. He said Israel interposed no objection in principal, would welcome any suggestion with respect tactical and parliamentary steps particular reference next General Assembly.

(2) Coordinated use of water resources. Comay said there appeared to be contradiction between Secretary's reference to coordination and fact that Yarmuk program going forward concerning details and implications of which Israel in dark.

I replied that I had no instructions on specific points he raised and could only give informal comments. I said Secretary's address was not attempt to set forth definitive and detailed solutions to problems of area but rather to indicate lines of approach which could serve as basis further discussion. Precise phraseology of kind Comay suggested might well defeat this purpose. Re "area presently controlled by Israel" I pointed out refugee problem can only be solved if frame of mind can be induced in Arab countries which will lead them to desirable solution and therefore to agree to resettlement major portion of refugees in Arab countries. I added that great many Americans uneasy over refugees and feel there are moral grounds for permitting some of them return to land they once owned which is now "in area presently controlled by Israel." Said Secretary's remarks raised both these tactical and moral considerations.

Re "inter-related defenses" I said Department constantly examining and re-examining problem of area security and I viewed Secretary's statement as effort narrow down solution my ruling out on one hand tightly knit approach such as one built around Arab League Collective Security Pact and on the other the notion of each country going it alone. Secretary may well have hoped general delineation of arrangements without spelling them out in detail would promote realistic and cooperative approach to problem.

Re "alleged encroachments" I suggested Secretary undoubtedly attempting indicate how situation looks to Arabs, which necessary for us to do if we to make headway with them.

Re "Jerusalem and holy places" I said I knew of no concrete plan as yet for implementing arrangement which would take cognizance of legitimate interests of religious groups in the holy places in Jerusalem area but suggested from "tactical" point of view a plan which Arabs felt they had played some part in evoking might stand best chance.

Re Yarmuk. I reviewed present status of matter along lines Embassy telegram 1563. [4]

In summary I suggested complicated area problems can be ameliorated only if all parties concerned willing move toward solution a step at a time without efforts by individual countries to try any runs or drives through center. United States, I said, should be able to play constructive role in adducing receptive frame of mind among Arabs, but at present Arab countries feel United States more partial to Israel than to Arab States and many Arabs despair of United States adopting evenhanded attitude. Until Arabs have confidence in our impartiality we can do very little. In attempting achieve it may occasionally have to use expressions Israel would not itself select.

In conclusion Comay noted Israel Government had refrained from public reply to Secretary's speech and had attempted avoid appearance of controversy above issues.

[4] In telegram 1563 from Tel Aviv, Apr. 10, Chargé Russell reported on a conversation with Eytan in which Russell reviewed the importance which the United States attached to the success of the Yarmuk project as an instrument for meeting the refugee problem, as a symbol to the Arabs of constructive possibilities of cooperation, and therefore as helping to create an atmosphere conducive to peace in the area. Russell reiterated the U.S. expectation that Israel would cooperate in the resolution of any conflicting riparian claims and expressed the hope that there would be no action by Israel which might make the solution of the question of riparian rights more difficult. In conclusion, Russell informed Eytan of the expected visit of Arthur Z. Gardiner later in April and suggested the entire question could be discussed then in greater detail. (884A.211/5-1053)

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

SECRET TEL AVIV, June 26, 1953—4 p. m.

1965. Joint Embassy-TCA message. At regular weekly meeting at Finance Ministry Wednesday, Embassy-TCA representatives and Mikesell presented elements of policy outlined in Department telegram 1139.[1] Israelis present at meeting were Eshkol, Koller (members of Finance Ministry Staff). Principal points emphasized were: (1) objectives of hastening viability of Israel; (2) maximizing productive investment and minimizing consumptions; (3) need for attaining internal economic stability; (4) desire to consult on foreign exchange and development budgets with view to implementing objectives set forth in Department telegram 1139. United States representatives pointed out need for examining investment expenditures under government control on basis of priorities as to foreign exchange earning or saving potentialities and optimum utilization of human and material resources.

With regard to debt problem, United States representatives emphasized desirability of avoiding use of program funds for debt repayment, since such diversion would not contribute to viability. United States representatives stated Mission desires to follow very closely debt problem and to consult with Government of Israel regarding means of financing, but referred to statement of Dulles and Stassen that fundamental responsibility for this problem lies with Government of Israel.

In reply to United States representatives' statement of policy objectives outlined in Department telegram 1139, Eshkol spoke disparagingly of experts and their advice. He also defended Israel's deficit financing policies in past and stated United States should help Israel in dealing with past debts. Eshkol implied that Israel would continue to borrow as much as possible in future for rapid development of economy in a manner determined by statesmen motivated by faith in Israel and not by experts, bookkeepers and statisticians, and urged the United States to approach Israel's problem in that light. Eshkol's response appeared to be based on conviction either that Israel will receive a United States Government refunding loan or alternatively 1954 funds will be available in free dollars for debt management by approaches to Washington without reference to Mission.

Over the past nine months considerable progress has been made in achieving financial reform in Israel economy by administration of program funds in TCA Tel Aviv. Further progress along these lines and in the implementation of policy objectives of Department telegram 1139 requires firm administrative approach to Government of Israel backed up with threat of aid curtailment. Embassy, TCA and Mikesell concur in view that it will be impossible to obtain Israel adherence to United States recommendations re exchange and development budget and to develop effective aid program without reestablishing primary responsibility here for determination and administration of use of program funds. While special circumstances may justify using modest portion of available funds for debt payment, we believe that negotiations even on short term debt crises, insofar as they concern use of program funds, should take place initially in Israel. This will have following advantages: (1) Mission's bargaining position re Israel Government would be greatly strengthened. Without such responsibility Government of Israel will continually circumvent Mission and render it powerless to carry out objectives of Department telegram 1139.

(2) It will minimize duality in Israel debt management and tend to place full responsibility with local ministry of finance officials.

(3) Mission in best position to obtain and evaluate information from Government of Israel.

(4) Embassy in key position to evaluate internal political and economic consequences of alternative courses of action, including that of default, and to make appropriate recommendations to Washington for policy determination.

In view of recent developments, furtherance of policies set forth in Department telegram 1139 not only requires transfer to Tel Aviv of initial responsibility for debt problem but perhaps also a reconsideration of past policy of not allowing Israel under any circumstances to default on its external obligations for following reasons: (1) The present policy of preventing default has become known to Israelis and the threat of withholding assistance cannot be employed effectively as a means of achieving our objectives; (2) Borrowing capacity of Israel and hence propensity to expand indebtedness will remain high so long as firm United States policy against default is known to exist; (3) Government of Israel will not make maximum effort to handle debt problem through private channels so long as it is convinced that United States Government will not allow default; (4) Continued failure of Government of Israel to take realistic steps toward viability may require shock of default or partial moratorium as only means of bringing about reforms; (5) It is possible that preventing Israeli default during next fiscal year will require use of bulk of grant appropriation for net debt repayment. In this event, effects loss of program goods on economy must be carefully weighed against consequences of default.

Transfer of initial responsibility for debt problem to Embassy TCA Israel would necessitate immediate sending of competent financial expert so that he could be briefed before departure of Mikesell and Patterson.

CAIRO, June 30, 1953.

DEAR PETE: With reference to my letter of June 23, Gamal Abd Al Nasir has volunteered to an officer of the Embassy some further information about his Israeli contacts.

He confirmed that in addition to his friend in Israel he has contacts in Paris and in Turkey through whom he attempts to keep informed about the situation in Israel. He said that, although an eventual settlement with Israel is in his mind, his present contacts are for informational purposes only. He added that, in his opinion, any peace settlement is still a long way off.

Both Nasir and Abd Al Hakim Amir, the newly-appointed Commander-in-Chief, who was also a party to the conversation, displayed considerable lingering bitterness over the roles of the other Arab states, particularly Jordan, in the Palestine War. Mingled with this was an attitude of skepticism as to the seriousness of the opposition of the other Arab states to Israel.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] July 8, 1953.

Subject: Israel Request for a Funding Loan

Discussion

On June 11, 1953, Ambassador Eban requested Mr. Stassen's assistance (a) in obtaining a $75,000,000 loan from the Export-Import Bank for debt refinancing, and (b) in making available certain unused funds from the FY 1953 NEA appropriation to meet a short-term debt crisis. You recommended that Mr. Stassen accede to the second request, which he did, and agreed with him that the first should be rejected. However, Mr. Stassen has not as yet informed Ambassador Eban of the rejection, and we understand he may seek your guidance as to when and in what manner the Israel Government should be notified.

[1] Sent through the Executive Secretariat. An attached note of July 13 from O'Connor to Byroade reads: "The Secretary has talked to Mr. Stassen along the line of your attached memorandum."

Developments in Israel indicate that the Israelis should be informed as quickly as possible. In a recent conference between Embassy–TCA personnel and officials of the Israel Government (Tab A), [2] the Israel Minister of Finance (a) defended Israel's deficit financing policies, (b) reiterated that the United States Government should help Israel in dealing with its past debt, and (c) implied that Israel would continue to borrow to the hilt for the rapid development of the economy "in a manner determined by statesmen motivated by faith in Israel and not by experts, bookkeepers and statisticians." Embassy Tel Aviv believes that the Minister's statement may have been based partly on the belief that Israel will receive a funding loan as a result of direct approaches to Washington, and that until it is made clear no loan will be forthcoming, it is unlikely that the Israel Government will take the steps necessary to place its finances on a sounder basis. Our best information is that the Israel Government will probably be confronted with another financial crisis no later than July 31, 1953. Delay in making our position clear may be construed by the Israelis as evidence that they can rely on a funding loan.

Recommendation

That you suggest to Mr. Stassen, if he telephones, (1) that he inform Ambassador Eban (or Minister Goitein, his deputy) as soon as possible, that an Export-Import Bank loan will not be forthcoming, (2) that he also tell Ambassador Eban that the Israel Government would be well advised to seek private arrangements respecting its debt, and (3) that his staff arrange with the Department for concurrent notification of this decision to the Israel Government by Embassy Tel Aviv. A copy of the proposed telegram to Tel Aviv is attached (Tab B). [3] The original is in Mr. Stassen's office for clearance.

45. Transfer Israeli Foreign Office to Jerusalem affords I believe first real test of new American policy toward Near East. For six months Arabs have heard reports of new American policy toward Near East and have been encouraged. For six months they have listened to promises whether direct or implied and have become hopeful. But their mode, if I understand it, is one of firm determination to see promises and words translated into concrete acts. For them this means political acts; no amount of aid or arms will alter this fact. Arab faces will turn from eastward prayers to Mecca and look inquiringly and hopefully westward to see how West especially US meets this Israeli move. They would be electrified by a simple American statement that we had advised Israel not to move Foreign Office to Jerusalem, that we do not intend to move our Embassy to Jerusalem and that our officials will not be permitted to go to Jerusalem to conduct business. If on the contrary this is handled in such a manner as to give credence to the widely held Arab view that we are incapable of saying "no" to political Zionism our

93. Resumption relations between Israel and Soviet Union creates change in the context in which Israel's foreign relations will be conducted and in light of which our policies toward Israel must be evaluated:

1. The break in relations last February gave Israel a sharp sense of loss of maneuverability, and of forced dependence upon western powers, particularly the United States. Resumption of relations will create feeling she has gained bargaining power and has larger number of options which she will be tempted to utilize as means of influencing United States on matters of importance to Israeli Government.

2. Renewal of relations will reawaken hopes of Israelis in possibilities emigration of Jews from Eastern Europe. Taking note that Egypt in her capacity of territorial power is primarily responsible for the security of the Suez Canal;

Recognising that the Canal is a universal channel of communication;

Conscious of the community of interest which unites Egypt with the other users of the Canal in ensuring respect for the principles on which its international status rests;

Considering that the users of the Canal have an overriding interest in the uninterrupted maintenance of traffic through the Canal and in the regular and satisfactory working of the technical services of the Canal, under the conditions which have prevailed since its opening;

(additions may be required in the light of circumstances)

recall that the international status of the Canal, resulting from the international agreements and reinforced by uninterrupted usage, rests on the following principles:—

1. freedom of access and of passage in time of war as in time of peace to all vessels of war or of commerce;
2. absence of all discrimination against individual flags, ships of every nationality having full and equal rights of freedom of access and passage;
3. prohibition of all warlike or hostile acts likely to interfere with free navigation in the Canal and its ports of access and within a distance of three miles from these ports;
4. right of the Powers to ensure respect for the principles outlined above;
5. recognition of the particular rights and responsibilities of Egypt in her capacity as territorial Power within the framework of the agreements and conventions at present in force. End of verbatim text.

We plan inform United Kingdom and France we unable agree to conference Maritime Powers. Egypt certain to learn of conference and react adversely, especially to any consideration "last resort measures". We plan also state believe Egypt would refuse participate in joint declaration suggested to her by Maritime Powers acting in concert. Believe numbered paragraph 4 of draft would prove especially objectionable.

As alternative we planning propose quiet approach to Egypt by one of three powers at propitious moment with suggestion Egypt issue unilateral declaration reaffirming freedom of transit. Approach would be made only when Suez Base issue settled or well on way to solution. Other Maritime Powers could subsequently take note individually of Egyptian declaration.

118. Joint Embassy-TCA. In response to request for appointment Hakirya, Tel Aviv, with Foreign Minister Sharett and Minister Finance Eshkol pursuant Department telegram 41,[1] was informed Foreign Minister would see me at his home (Tel Aviv) yesterday but Eshkol unable be present. McDaniel and I called on Foreign Minister yesterday morning and after reviewing Eshkol's remarks (Embassy telegram 1965)[2] made point paragraphs 1 to 4 Department telegram 41.

Stating he was giving "interim off hand reactions," Foreign Minister Sharett replied along following lines:

While Eshkol probably gave voice to "legitimate faith in Israel's future as support for request for United States assistance," Foreign Minister confident there was no intent change policy expressed paragraph 5A, Israel Embassy note August 11, 1952. He stated he would confirm this impression with Minister of Finance. Argued with reference statement paragraph 2 Department telegram 41 (negotiations who would take place Tel Aviv), that it would present Israel with "great difficulty" and be using its "dire need to force it into undignified position of upsetting time-honored routine of meetings with Ministry of Finance in Jerusalem." Suggested further conference to make clear present Israel Government policies re paragraph 5A of August 11, 1952 note and that "to circumvent any difficulty presented by Embassy's instructions re Jerusalem," conference take place at Ministers of Finance in Jerusalem rather than Foreign Ministry. Said he (Sharett) might or might not be present. I commented if such meeting were in Jerusalem it was a question—view importance of subject and my present instructions re Jerusalem—that [whether] his presence or his absence would present the greater difficulty and therefore meeting in Tel Aviv might be preferable.

I said that problem of whether financial negotiations to take place in Tel Aviv or Jerusalem had been precipitated by Israel's moving Foreign Ministry, that Department had stated while it always prepared to hear Israel Embassy on any subject, prompt consideration by United States of Israel's financial problems required discussions be initiated and concentrated in Tel Aviv; that Embassy-TCA would request Department's guidance with regard his proposal for conference Jerusalem with Finance Ministry to clarify Eshkol's remarks.

Comment: Embassy recommends [garble] authorized state of Foreign Minister that present practice of TCA discussions with Ministry of Finance in Jerusalem on ordinary questions of administration and implementation MSA program will be continued (Department telegram 32) but that discussions involving major problems of financial-economic policy, since they should be attended by representatives of both Finance and Foreign Ministries, must be held in Tel Aviv; and therefore meeting with Eshkol referred above should take place in Tel Aviv.

Department of State Press Release

No. 401 WASHINGTON, July 28, 1953.

JERUSALEM

Asked about the international repercussions to the transfer of the Israeli Foreign Office from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem and the position of the United States in this regard, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles at his news conference today made the following remarks:

The United States regrets that the Israeli Government has seen fit to move its Foreign Office from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

We have made known our feelings on that subject to the Government of Israel on two prior occasions. It was done in July 1952 and again in March 1953, when our Ambassador, hearing rumors that this was in contemplation, called upon the Israeli Government and requested them not to transfer their Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem.

We feel that way because we believe that it would embarrass the United Nations, which has a primary responsibility for determining the future status of Jerusalem. You may recall that the presently standing United Nations resolution about Jerusalem contemplates that it should be to a large extent at least an international city rather than a purely national city. Also, we feel that this particular action by the Government of Israel at this particular time is inopportune in relation to the tensions which exist in the Near East, tensions which are rather extreme, and that this will add to rather than relax any of these tensions.

The views that I express here are, we know, shared by a considerable number of other governments who have concern with the development of an atmosphere of peace and good will in that part of the world.

We have notified the Government of Israel that we do not intend to move our own Embassy to Jerusalem.

A–29. Reference minutes United States-United Kingdom-French discussions on freedom of transit of Suez Canal, Deptel 113, July 27[1] and Cairo's 137, July 28.[1]

Possible Egyptian unilateral declaration quoted Deptel 113 tabled by United States at meeting July 29. French and United Kingdom delegates stated would transmit draft to their Governments, and ask for instructions.

In informal discussion of draft, British and French delegates stressed two points:

1. Disadvantages of eliminating numbered paragraphs contained in United Kingdom-French draft (Deptel 108 to Cairo)[2] which spelled out principles upon which freedom of transit based, and substitution as last paragraph of general statement of those principles. Both delegates felt principles should be fully stated so that all parties would know where they stood. They were particularly disturbed at omission from United States draft of intent underlying Paragraph Number Four of their draft. They argued that principles, including Paragraph Four, should be detailed in first approach to Egypt and that if Egyptian resistance encountered, general statement could be substituted.

United States delegate replied that, even if United Kingdom-French suggestion on tactics adopted, he would be unable to agree to inclusion Paragraph Four since Egyptian rejection certain.

2. Urgency of problem. Both delegates emphasized some reaffirmation of principle of freedom of transit essential before evacuation of British troops. United Kingdom delegate insisted this should be obtained before agreement on evacuation is signed.

Request Ambassador Caffery's views by telegram on following two points:

1. Would inclusion of detailed enumeration of principles governing freedom of transit in first approach to Egypt prejudice prospects Egyptian consent to issue unilateral declaration?

This approach would be adopted only on understanding that a general statement similar to one in United States draft would be substituted if Egypt objected.

2. Provided progress is made in Anglo-Egyptian negotiations on Suez Base and this problem approaches a solution, could the approach to the Egyptians be made before actual signature of agreement?

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan) [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 4, 1953.

Subject: Arab Attitude Toward Transfer of Israeli Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem.

Participants: Sheikh Asad Al-Faqih, Ambassador of Saudi Arabia
Dr. Charles Malik, Ambassador of Lebanon
Dr. Ahmed Hussein, Ambassador of Egypt
Dr. Farid Zeineddine, Ambassador of Syria
Mr. Abdul Jalil Rawi, Chargé d'Affaires of Iraq

---

[1] This conversation was summarized in circular telegram 83, Aug. 7, 6:45 p. m., sent to the Arab capitals, Tel Aviv, and Jerusalem. (784A.02/8-753)

Sayed Abdurrahman Ibn Abdussamed Abu-Taleb,
 Chargé d'Affaires of Yemen
General Walter B. Smith, The Acting Secretary
John D. Jernegan, NEA

Dr. Malik acted as spokesman. He began by emphasizing the unique character of Jerusalem as a spot Holy to all three of the world's great monotheistic religions. He felt that such a place deserved special consideration, particularly in the present age of atheistic materialism.

He continued that the recent Israeli move of the Foreign Office to Jerusalem was a matter of the greatest concern to both the Arab Governments and their peoples. The Arab Governments considered that it was appropriate to discuss the question of Jerusalem with the United States Government for a number of reasons, which he enumerated as follows:

1. Secretary Dulles himself had recently taken the initiative on at least three occasions to discuss the Jerusalem problem publicly; (1) in his speech of June 1, 1953, (2) in his first press statement of some three weeks ago on the move of the Foreign Office to Jerusalem, and (3) in his second press statement issued last week. With regard to these statements, Dr. Malik observed that there were certain points he wished to note. For one thing, Mr. Dulles had spoken of the Israeli move as being "inopportune at this moment". This appeared to imply that at some later time the move would have been proper. Secondly, the Secretary had spoken of the internationalization of the "city" of Jerusalem, whereas the United Nations in its three resolutions on the subject had called for internationalization of the "area" of Jerusalem. Thirdly, Mr. Dulles had at least implied that what the United States had in mind for Jerusalem was only a partial internationalization. Dr. Malik emphasized that the United Nations had repeatedly called for complete internationalization.

2. The United States had participated in the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950, which had emphasized its desire to see peace in the Near Eastern area. By its recent action, Israel had defied the World and such a step could not promote peace in the area. The United States was, therefore, necessarily concerned with this development which was contrary to the principle laid down in the Tripartite Declaration.

3. The change in location of the Israeli Foreign Office constituted a violation of the Armistice Agreements upon which reposed the present state of peace in the area. This again was necessarily a matter of concern to the United States because of its declared policy of promoting and maintaining peace.

4. It was to be noted that the Foreign Office move substantially coincided with the resumption of Soviet-Israeli relations. As shown by statements of the Israeli leaders themselves, Israel regarded this resumption of relations as a gain in its policy of trying to play the East against the West. Such a policy in the Near East does not contribute to peace in the area and is therefore a matter of concern to the United States.

5. Dr. Malik recalled that when Prince Faisal of Saudi Arabia visited Washington early this year, he was assured by the President and others that the United States was going to try to redress any injustices which might have been committed with regard to the Arabs. This assurance had been welcomed by the Arab leaders, who attach great importance to it.

6. All the Arabs were convinced that the complete establishment of the Israeli capital in Jerusalem was only a preliminary to further Israeli aggression against the rest of Jerusalem and of Palestine. This was clearly shown by the nature of Zionist doctrine and statements of Zionist leaders, who would never rest until they had possession of the entire Holy City. Furthermore, the Israeli capital in Jerusalem was in a terribly exposed position at the end of a narrow salient and almost entirely surrounded by alien people. No one would so expose a capital unless he intended later to make it secure by annexing surrounding territory.

7. It is difficult to see how real peace can be brought about in the area if a policy of faits accompli is allowed to succeed time and again without forceful reaction on the part of the rest of the world.

8. Everyone in the world knows that without the United States there would have been no State of Israel and that Israel could not exist today without American aid. Israel depends on the United States economically, morally and politically. Therefore, the United States must be held responsibile for Israel's international acts.

In the light of the above reasoning, Dr. Malik and his colleagues considered it proper and necessary for the United States and the Arabs to consult together in a frank and friendly fashion on this problem.

Dr. Malik added that the Arabs were also greatly concerned about the possibility of large-scale immigration to Israel from behind the Iron Curtain of Eastern Europe. It would be tragic if the United States should help in this process.

He concluded that the Arabs were very grateful for the interest shown by the present American administration in their problems; they greatly appreciated, among other things, our efforts to solve the Anglo-Egyptian problem, our readiness to listen to Arab views and our frequent expressions of good will.

The Acting Secretary said he welcomed the visit of the Chiefs of Mission, whom it was always a pleasure to see. He also welcomed their frank expression of opinion and would be equally frank in reply.

With regard to the Secretary's recent statements, he would only observe that they stand on their own feet and mean what they say.

The United States Government, General Smith said, deplores Israel's recent act. It cannot, however, accept responsibility for all that Israel does. We must treat Israel as a sovereign state, just as we treat the Arabs, and he wished to point out that the Israeli representatives frequently attacked our policy even more severely than the Arabs. We were in the unhappy position of being in the middle between the two.

Since Dr. Malik had referred to history, General Smith wished to recall that the Arabs themselves, especially Jordan, had refused to accept the 1947 United Nations Resolution which provided for the internationalization of Jerusalem. They had resorted to arms and the verdict of war had been given. We ourselves regretted that the internationalization had not gone into effect but that was now history.

We were not prepared to use force in the Jerusalem matter, and he was not prepared at this time to say what other steps we might take.

He had no comment to make at this time on the statement that the Foreign Office move constituted a violation of the Armistice Agreements. This would require some study.

With regard to the question of the Holy Places, General Smith understood that all the Moslem Holy Places were in the area of Jerusalem controlled by Jordan. Mr. Malik confirmed that the most important Moslem Holy Places were in fact in Jordan-held Jerusalem.

General Smith concluded by saying that we sympathize with the Arab worries and that we stand by the United Nations resolutions and by what we have ourselves said. He promised that he would convey the visitors views to Secretary Dulles.

Finally, he emphasized that the United States has a supreme interest in the Near Eastern area and that we are prepared to help the Arabs just as we have helped Israel.

In reply to General Smith's question, Mr. Jernegan said that there were several observations he would like to make on Dr. Malik's remarks, but he felt that this had better be done on a different occasion since it would involve going into details which might take too much time.

(It is of interest to note that the Jordan Embassy was not represented among the group, although Dr. Malik repeatedly said he was speaking for all the Arab States. Following a call at the Department later in the day, on a different subject, the Jordanian Minister emphasized to newspaper correspondents that he had had nothing to do with the joint approach of this morning.)

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan) to the Secretary of State [1]

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 10, 1953.

Subject: Need for Early Diplomatic Initiative by U.S. Government re Arab Refugees and Related Palestine Issues.

Discussion:

The attached memorandum (Tab A) sets forth at considerable length outstanding problems in Palestine and a specific course of action in connection with the Arab refugee program. We believe that:

(1) We should take the initiative at this time in moving toward partial solutions to the Palestine problem and should anticipate Israel's diplomatic moves on an Israeli "Peace Plan" which would probably not be fruitful. We must discuss with Israel and the Arabs the question of economic use of water in the Jordan Valley. We should take action before the 8th Session of the General Assembly, and should be prepared to discuss at least the refugee aspect of the Palestine question at the Assembly. The UNRWA program and its continuation must in any case be considered at that time.

(2) The most urgent issue in the Palestine case, and one requiring top level consideration, is the progress of UNRWA. The U.N. and the Arabs have a strong moral case in demanding action looking to rehabilitation of the Arab refugees in Israel if rehabilitation is also to occur in the Arab States. The recent report of the Near East Subcommittee of the Senate, attached as Tab C, [2] is especially helpful in this connection. This report chides Jews, Arabs, and the U.N., for lack of progress, and suggests that the specific problem of the waters of the Jordan River should be tackled forthwith.

(3) We now have an authoritative basis in a study [3] financed by UNRWA and conducted by TVA to consider economic division of the waters of the Jordan as between Israel and the Kingdom of Jordan, and an evaluation of the engineering factors which leads to the conclusion that on economic grounds we can save as much as $60 million by making use of Lake Tiberias as a storage reservoir rather than creating an artificial reservoir on the Yarmuk River. This undertaking is considered to be politically impossible, unless we can arrange boundary adjustments which would, in the words of the Senate report, "provide the basis for joint control of Jordan waters" and would assure "that the countries concerned could depend on their continued flow." Fully realizing that an approach to joint control is likely to meet considerable resistance by both Israel and the Arab states, NEA nevertheless feels that the attempt should be made, and that there are sufficient inducements at hand to offer some chance of ultimate success.

Tab A deals with the foregoing issues in considerably greater detail.

Recommendation:

Discuss this subject with the President, and obtain his agreement to negotiate with Israel and the Arabs to obtain their agreement to an overall plan for equitable division of Jordan waters together with related territorial adjustments and the repatriation to Israel of a limited number of refugees. Tell him that we would propose to work through diplomatic channels and through the U.N. at the 8th Session of the General Assembly, and that a policy statement by him may be required at an appropriate time.

If the President concurs in this approach, we will submit to you specific steps to be taken to arrange an economic division of the Jordan waters in accordance with the TVA suggestions, with such territorial adjustments as necessary to provide a basis for joint control and continued flow of the waters in accordance with findings of the Senate subcommittee (Tab C), so that the Jordan-Yarmuk water resources may be used to best advantage and contribute toward a solution of the Arab refugee problem.

Tab A

Detailed Discussion of Need for Early Diplomatic Initiative by U.S. Government Re Arab Refugees and Related Palestine Issues

1. There is a growing Arab mood of disillusionment that your visit to the Near East and your address of June 1 have not been followed up by a visible attack on the basic causes of tension in the Palestine area.

2. An Israel "Peace Plan" (peace with the Arab States) is understood to be in preparation, for use after the 8th U.N. General Assembly, or possibly earlier. Although its features are not known, indications of Israel's attitude on peace terms make it virtually certain that this "plan" will constitute an appeal for world (especially American) support to place the Arabs at a moral disadvantage and thereby neutralize growing American interest in Arab friendship. The Israel plan, however conciliatory (it is expected to offer no major concession), will be rejected out of hand by the Arabs because of its origin. Israel will seek to enlist advance U.S. Government blessing for its plan; in any event it is likely to seek the support of Congressional and American public opinion.

3. Israel is extremely nervous over the prospect of U.S. military aid to the Arab world; has stepped up her own orders for ordinance equipment from U.S. and elsewhere (these are being carefully screened by our secret tripartite committee with the UK and France); and may accelerate her "peace plan" and even provoke border incidents to block military aid to the Arabs.

4. The Department has received an Israeli note (Tab B)[4] calling for a regional application of Lebanon's Litani, as well as the Jordan and Yarmuk water resources along lines favoring Israel's plan to divert Jordan water to the coastal plain and the Negev. While diversion of the Litani might assist the further development of the Jordan valley, we cannot afford to delay other action in view of Lebanon's certain condemnation of such a proposal; further, Lebanon is developing her own plans for use of Litani waters in Lebanon. The Litani lies entirely in Lebanon.

5. If we are to win a measure of confidence in U.S. good will and impartiality in the Near East as well as broad support for our new policy in the United States, I am convinced we should take some action, however limited, to demonstrate our attitude before Israel seizes the diplomatic initiative and the initiative with American public opinion.

6. It is desirable that such U.S. action be undertaken unilaterally and before the regular UN 8th General Assembly session.

7. The most urgent issue—and one wherein time works clearly against area peace and stability—is that of the Palestine Arab Refugees. Linked therewith are problems of the Jordan-Yarmuk water system, boundary rectifications, repatriation, compensation and resettlement in Arab lands. Progress on existing plans for resettlement of refugees in Syria, Jordan and Egypt is painfully slow. All plans are still largely on paper, and there is no prospect for resettlement in Lebanon and Iraq. Whatever the clarity, or obscurity, of issues such as boundaries and Jerusalem, the humanitarian aspects of the refugee problem are very clear. There is an unfulfilled moral and legal obligation of Israel (as well as of the Arab States) to share in the refugee burden. Whatever may be the historic validity of Israel's present legal position of water rights and boundaries, Israel has little else but a little water and land to contribute to a solution of this problem. Her stated willingness to compensate the refugees has never been spelled out into a firm offer, and it is our belief that such compensation would have to be made primarily with outside assistance.

8. Israel, even with its present expanded boundaries (as compared with the 1947 Partition Plan) is a crowded land of 1.6 million, yet her avowed intention is to welcome 2½ million Jews (or any releasable fraction thereof) from behind the Iron Curtain. Her renewal of relations with the USSR, while probably intended primarily to increase Israel's maneuverability between East and West, has the stated objective of encouraging this emigration to Zion.

9. Israel is in a weak moral position in welcoming such immigration, or any substantial fraction thereof, while insisting as she does that she will not permit repatriation of any Arab refugees. She therefore points to the security risk of such repatriation. While we recognize the security factor, it is not a decisive argument against re-admission of up to 100,000 peasants, who might work land which has lain fallow since 1948.

10. The one firm Palestine issue in which we can take a balanced, impartial position now is in regard to the duty of both sides to assist the UN in an accelerated program to give many of the refugees a chance to work and make their living.

11. We therefore think we should separate the refugee problem for special attack at this time. The report of the Near East Subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee (Tab B [C]) is helpful in this connection.

12. Following is a rough outline of possibilities open to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees:

In Jordan—A general agreement has been signed that holds out prospects, if engineering and political problems are solved, of settling (out of approximately 450,000 in Jordan) between . . . 150/200,000

In Syria—Shishakli has signed an agreement covering the 80,000 refugees now in Syria, but he will not publicize this agreement and is slow in making land available to UNRWA . . . 80/80,000

In Egypt—The government has signed an agreement to provide for settlement in Sinai, has made this agreement public, and engineering studies are going ahead. Out of approximately 200,000, this might cover . . . 100/150,000

In Israel—No progress toward repatriation is noted, but a case could be made and pressed for as many as . . . 100/100,000

In Lebanon—Lebanon has so far refused to settle any of the approximately 100,000 refugeees camped in her territory, fearing to upset her delicate balance between Christians and Muslims.

In Iraq—Iraq has refused to cooperate beyond sheltering approximately 5,000 refugees. Her reasons are insistence on repatriation and on her primary duty to settle Bedouins and other indigents.

Total prospects in sight therefore are within the range of . . . 430/530,000

13. This leaves about 320/420,000 refugees unprovided for. Our timetable for the lower range of prospective settlement is admittedly a long one.

14. The most immediate hope for action lies in Jordan, and local hopes are high for development of the Jordan Valley. Economic and time-saving development of the Jordan Valley requires action specifically directed at the problem of the Jordan River.

As a result of a study financed by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees and conducted by the Tennessee Valley Authority, who employed Chas. T. Main, Inc., of Boston, as consulting engineers, we are in a position to determine basic engineering factors regarding the use of waters within the Jordan watershed. From these facts it is necessary to draw conclusions both economic and political in their nature.

Israel's political boundaries were designed with a view to obtaining access to strategic points on the Jordan River in order to be able to divert a substantial volume of the waters of the river into Israel. These plans are in conflict with those of the Arab States. A realization of Israel's plans to the full extent would preclude the irrigation of more than one-third of the Jordan Valley; our principal hope for the rehabilitation of a sizeable number of the Arab refugees rests on the irrigation of the entire valley.

Based on the belief that any substantial territorial readjustments would be impossible to achieve, the Jordanian government, with the use of U.S. technicians under the Technical Assistance program, is advocating the development of a storage dam on the Yarmuk River at a site which is within the control of Syria and Jordan. Analysis by the TVA and their consultants indicates that a dam and the necessary appurtenances at the proposed site at Maqarin would cost approximately $66,000,000, and would take five to eight years to construct. Because of the nature of the terrain, the resultant reservoir would not serve as a satisfactory regulator of the flow of the Yarmuk River, as an insufficient quantity of water could be stored to avail to the full of the irregularities in the flow of the river over a period of years. Furthermore, from the best estimates available, in which the TCA engineers in Jordan concur, the regulated flow of the Yarmuk would barely suffice to provide the necessary water to irrigate the eastern side of the Jordan Valley, leaving the western side of the Valley in Jordan territory unserved except to the extent irrigation could be conducted on the western side by control of the wadis flowing into the Jordan from west to east and from underground water. These sources are inadequate to serve more than a fraction of the west side of the Valley.

The economic approach to the irrigation of the Jordan Valley requires the use of Lake Tiberias, a natural reservoir, for storage and regulation of the flow both of the Jordan and the Yarmuk Rivers. It would involve an eventual division of the waters involving the use by Jordan of 774 million cubic meters annually, and by Israel of 394 millions, resulting in irrigation of 490,000 dunums in Jordan and 416,000 dunums in Israel. Use of Lake Tiberias as a reservoir would require the construction of a diversion canal from the Yarmuk River into Lake Tiberias and a small increase in the height of the present dam at the outlet of the Lake. The costs of these two operations are insignificant in comparison to the cost of a high dam on the Yarmuk, and much less time-consuming. It is estimated that increasing the height of the dam at Lake Tiberias would require the expenditure of about $700,000, and that the construction of a canal from the Yarmuk into Lake Tiberias would cost approximately $2,300,000.

Furthermore, these works could be undertaken and completed within a two-year period. Development of the Jordan Valley along these lines would permit sufficient water to be available from the Jordan and the Yarmuk rivers to irrigate substantially all of the available land of the Valley, both on the east and west sides of the river. A smaller dam than presently contemplated could be built at Maqarin to provide electric power.

This development, on the other hand, presents two great obstacles: first, it will require Israel to renounce her claims to more than 400 million cubic meters of water for diversion into Israel. Israel had counted on 850 million cubic meters for irrigation, on which in turn her hopes for an expanded population are based. Israel has further sought the presently unused waters of the Lebanon's Litani, for which river Lebanon is developing other plans for part if not all of its waters. The proposed development of the Jordan would also require an adjustment of boundaries at the southern end of Lake Tiberias to enable the Arabs to be reassured as to their continued supply of water from Lake Tiberias. Israel's boundaries presently extend to the east of the Jordan and of Lake Tiberias, and the Arabs will not agree that their resources of water be under the physical control of the Israelis. This subject was considered by the subcommittee of the Senate which recently considered the Palestine Refugee problem, and the report of the Senate Subcommittee (Tab C) reads in part as follows:

> ". . .The United States is prepared to furnish its share of the technical services and funds, but essential to the success of the project is effective action by the United Nations to secure an understanding on the disputed issues of water rights, and adequate measures to assure the appropriate control of these waters so that countries concerned could depend on their continued flow. Territorial adjustments to provide the basis for joint control should be considered."

It should be noted that Israel's ability to divert substantial volumes of water from the Jordan and its tributaries north of Lake Tiberias on an economical basis depends on the cooperation of Syria and Lebanon to permit Israel to carry out construction in the demilitarized zone on the upper Jordan, and to permit storage of certain waters in their own territories. It is significant that negotiations between Syria and Israel looking to boundary settlements on the Jordan have recently been broken off.

Funds which are available for special economic aid to the Near East could provide inducement to Israel to agree to the proposed division of waters, if a portion of these funds were directed to development of Israel's share of upper Jordan waters. Progress is now stalled because of Syrian and Lebanese opposition, and shortage of funds. Syrian and Lebanese opposition to Israel's development of the upper Jordan waters in the demilitarized zones might conceivably be overcome if resultant benefits to the Arabs in Jordan were demonstrated.

ISRAEL

THE PROBLEM

To estimate the current situation and probable developments in Israel.

CONCLUSIONS

1. The prolonged and bitter conflict between Israel and the Arab states profoundly influences Israel's relations with the outside

[1] A note on the cover sheet reads as follows:

"The Intelligence Advisory Committee concurred in this estimate on 11 August 1953. The FBI abstained, the subject being outside of its jurisdiction.

"The following member organizations of the Intelligence Advisory Committee participated with the Central Intelligence Agency in the preparation of this estimate: The intelligence organizations of the Departments of State, the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the Joint Staff."

world and many aspects of its internal situation. The Arab-Israeli dispute has seriously damaged the US security position in the Middle East.

2. There appears to be no prospect of a full peace settlement between Israel and the Arab states for many years, though certain specific Arab-Israeli problems might be resolved.

3. In the present highly charged atmosphere, war could break out between Israel and the Arab states as the result of accident. However, an early renewal of hostilities is unlikely as long as there is a near equilibrium of Israeli and Arab military strength and the US, the UK, and France exert a restraining influence on both sides.

4. Israel fears a build-up of Arab military strength by the Western Powers and will make every effort either to prevent such a build-up or to maintain the present power relationship by obtaining equal aid for Israel.

5. Israel has sought good relations with both the US and the USSR. It has also sought to gain a bargaining advantage from the East-West struggle. We believe that Israel will probably endeavor to remain neutral in the East-West struggle as long as possible, but is, under present circumstances, more favorably disposed toward the West. In time of war, however, Israel will follow the course that it deems most expedient in the light of the pressures and inducements existing at the time.

6. Because of Israel's strategic position and communication facilities, wartime access to Israeli territory is highly desirable for the defense of the Middle East by the Western Powers. However, peacetime arrangements for the use by the West of Israeli territory are unlikely and would almost certainly provoke bitter Arab ill-will.

7. Israel is now politically stable under a coalition government which is dominated by Israel's strongest political party, the moderate socialist Mapai. Israel will probably continue to be governed by moderates who will be able to control the country without departing from the established democratic system. Under crisis conditions, however, the government would probably take effective measures to maintain control.

8. Israel's economic position is precarious. Israel is not self-supporting economically and even under the most favorable circumstances is unlikely to become so for many years. Israel's scanty resources are wholly inadequate to provide for the settlement of Jewish immigrants, maintain armed forces capable of defending the country against concerted Arab attack, and support the standard of living to which the government is committed. Israel has given a higher priority to the task of taking in Jewish immigrants and refugees and to the huge burden of military defense of the state's existence than to the development of a balanced national economy.

9. Israel has been and will continue to be heavily dependent on public and private foreign aid. Israel can probably maintain precarious solvency if substantial foreign aid continues to be available. Sharp curtailment of foreign aid would require further downward revision of the investment program and/or downward revision of military preparedness expenditure; failure to make such cuts in expenditure would result in graver financial difficulties and a lowered standard of living. Israel would probably choose a slower rate of development or a lowered standard of living in preference to reduced military security. Renewed mass immigration or outright warfare with the Arab states would require increased funds from foreign sources to prevent economic collapse.

DISCUSSION

10. Israel has an importance out of proportion to its size, population, and resources because: (a) it is one of the key factors in the current instability in the Arab states, and (b) it has the political and financial support of the Zionist movement and of many influential groups and persons in the Western nations, particularly the US.

11. Beginning in the last decade of the nineteenth century, the Zionist movement encouraged Jewish immigration into Palestine with the object of founding a Jewish state. Immigration was stimulated by the intensification of anti-semitism associated with Hitler's accession to power, and the Jewish population of Palestine grew from about 200,000 in 1932 to about 650,000 in 1948. Persistent efforts by the British Mandate Government and by the UN to reconcile conflicting Jewish and Arab aims failed to stay the increasingly violent conflict between the two groups. A UN plan to partition Palestine between Jews and Arabs was rejected by the Arabs in 1947. The proposed Jewish state of some 900,000 persons would have included about 400,000 Arabs and the proposed Arab state of some 735,000 persons would have included about 10,000 Jews. Immediately after passage of the partition resolution, strife between Jews and Arabs increased throughout the area. Irregular but hard fighting broke out in December 1947, and by May 1948 a few hundred thousand Arabs had been driven from their homes. The British Government gave notice that it would terminate the Mandate on 15 May 1948; the Mandate under which Palestine had been ruled since 1923 came to an end at midnight on 14 May 1948; and the situation was left to the UN and to the conflicting parties. Immediately following the withdrawal of the British, Jewish leaders proclaimed the new state of Israel, and the armies of the surrounding Arab countries entered Palestine for the avowed purpose of helping the Arab population and bringing about the fall of Israel.

12. Conflicts of national and personal interest and policy disorganized the efforts of the Arab states, and their armies proved inferior to the skillful and determined Israeli forces. The decisive military defeat of the Arab effort led to the signing of armistice agreements between Israel and the Arab states of Egypt, Syria, Jordan, and Lebanon between February and July 1949. Armistice lines were agreed to on the basis of troop dispositions at the end of hostilities. Israel accordingly retained about 30 percent more territory than was allotted to it in the UN Partition Plan of 1947, including most of the New City of Jerusalem and a wide corridor leading to it. A large segment of central Palestine on the west bank of the Jordan River, including a small but highly strategic part of the New City of Jerusalem and all of the Old City and the Holy Places, went to Jordan. The Arab state provided for by the Partition Plan never came into existence, its territory having been appropriated by Israel and Jordan. The flight of Arab refugees during the period of the civil war and the Arab states-Israeli war which followed the departure of the British reduced the Arab population in what is now Israel from about 1,000,000 to about 175,000. Immigration has since increased the Jewish population of Israel from about 650,000 to almost 1,350,000.

13. Efforts by the UN and individual states to bring about a peace settlement have been fruitless. The armistice lines between Israel and the four contiguous Arab states are supervised by four Mixed Armistice Commissions under a UN Truce Supervision Organization. The Israeli-Jordanian armistice line is the scene of frequent incidents. UN resolutions in 1948 and 1949 favoring the internationalization of Jerusalem and the right of about 800,000 Palestinian Arab refugees to return to their homes and property or to receive compensation have not been enforced. Israel is involved in a cold war with the Arab states which has a profound influence upon its political and economic life and its relations with other states.

Government and Politics

14. A unique historical experience has produced in Israel a people imbued with a sense of the righteousness of their cause and bitterly hostile to those who oppose them. Their leaders are skilled and ruthless and are not disinclined to use force to gain their ends. Both people and leaders appear convinced that there is a special moral justification for any action that helps Israel. . . .

15. The people of Israel have come together from many parts of the world but the majority is united by: (a) the ideal of the Jewish homeland and the shared experience of building a new state; (b) widespread acceptance of a European social-democratic political ideology; and (c) a relatively high level of education and political activity. These provide the foundation for a political system on a European democratic model.

16. The integration of groups of various backgrounds into a national structure still constitutes a problem for Israel, however, and some religious, ethnic, and political minorities are still unassimilated. The greatest single problem of integration is posed by the backward "oriental" Jews who have immigrated from African and Asiatic countries since the Palestine war and now make up about 21 percent of the population.

17. The government is a parliamentary republican democracy of the Western type which has proved to be basically sound in spite of the tendency of Israel's numerous political parties frequently to divide and regroup. Israel was able to set up an effective government in May 1948 without delay because institutions inside and outside Palestine had for many years performed many of the functions of government for the Jews of Palestine. Although Israel is, in a sense, an outgrowth of the World Zionist Organization and the Jewish Agency and still depends upon them for financial support, Jewish leaders in Palestine assumed political control of Israel when the state was established and have made it a self-governing state in full control of its own policy.

18. The greatest concentration of political power is in the moderate socialist Mapai party, which has the advantage of the astute and experienced leadership of Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion and the support of most of the collective agricultural settlements. It also draws strength from its dominant position in the Histadrut, a unique labor organization which not only represents the majority of Israeli laborers but, as the sponsor of numerous collective development enterprises, is also the largest entrepreneur and employer of labor in the country. Mapai, however, has never held a majority of the seats in the unicameral parliament (Knesset) and so has had to resort to coalition government. Mapai has had difficulty in forming a stable coalition with any of the other large political parties. Its secular policies clash with the religious tenets of the United Religious Front; its socialistic economic policies conflict with the conservative economic views of the General Zionist party; and its policies toward the West have in the past been unacceptable to the more radical left-wing Mapam party.

19. In the most recent general election (July 1951) Mapai won 45 and the General Zionists 20 out of 120 seats in the Parliament. The present Mapai–General Zionist coalition was formed on 23 December 1952 after the breakup of the Mapai–United Religious Front coalition. Mapai and the General Zionists have had difficulties in reconciling their divergent economic views and their attitudes toward the extreme left. However, they have in general managed to agree on policies of favoring immigration of Jews of European background (while professing to support the principle of unrestricted immigration), of toughness towards the Arabs, and of noninvolvement in East-West issues. No basic change in the political situation in Israel is in prospect, and Mapai will probably continue to be the strongest party.

20. Israel is the only Middle Eastern state in which the Communist Party is not illegal. * Communist strength has declined in Israel since 1949, and the revival of Soviet anti-Zionism in 1952 and early 1953 has further decreased Communist influence. It is possible that a shift of Soviet tactics, such as abandonment of the anti-Zionist campaign and the renewal of Soviet-Israeli diplomatic relations in July 1953, might regain some of the lost ground, though it is unlikely that Israeli distrust of Soviet policy could quickly be overcome. The Communist Party has an estimated membership of about 4,000, 25 percent of which are Arabs, mostly Christian, and is supported by several "front" groups affiliated with international Communist organizations. It has 5 seats in parliament. The Israeli Communist Party also provides counsel, direction, and propaganda to Communists in Jordan, particularly among Arab refugee groups. Communist strength, like that of other opposition parties, would probably be increased by any serious economic or political crisis which discredited the government or caused widespread privation.

21. The strength and appeal of other extremist political parties of both the right and the left have decreased since 1951. Left-wing influence may, however, rise again as a result of improved Israeli-Soviet relations. The extreme left-wing Mapam party has some labor support and is still influential in some of the collective settlements. However, Mapam has been split and its strength in parliament reduced from 15 to 11 seats as a result of a conflict over policy toward the Soviet Union. Mapam's pro-Soviet wing has seceded and formed the Left Socialist party, which has two seats in parliament, but is not expected to exert as great an influence as it did as part of Mapam. The right-wing Herut party, which is the political heir of the terrorists of the Mandate period and expresses a latent popular view in its dedication to Israel's expansion, has only 8 seats in parliament and is not now politically important.

* There is a small legal Communist Party in Cyprus. [Footnote in the source text.]

22. Military policy is dominated by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, who is also Minister of Defense. Military personnel in Israel do not take part in partisan politics, and the armed forces are likely to remain under civilian control. The influence of military considerations on the political and economic life of Israel is, however, considerable because of extreme security consciousness in the country.

23. Israel is now politically stable and will probably continue to be governed by moderates who will be able to control the country without departing from the established democratic system. In the event of extreme economic or political crisis, however, latent tendencies to violence, which showed themselves in the terrorist activities of the Mandate period and during the Palestine war, might be reasserted. In such an event the government would probably take effective measures to maintain control.

Economic Situation and Prospects

24. Israel's economic situation is precarious. Neither the country nor its government has been self-supporting, and despite real progress in the direction of improved production and increased revenues the gap between Israel's means and Israel's expenditures remains large. After 5 years of national existence, Israel's exports pay for only 15 percent of its imports, and the country imports half its food. From the beginning, Israel has depended upon the financial help of the World Zionist Organization and upon other public and private grants and loans. Since 1948, outside aid has totaled more than one billion dollars. Israel has received almost $800 million in grants, loans, and gifts from the US, about two-thirds of which has come from private sources.

25. Israel has endeavored to move in the direction of greater self-sufficiency with regard to both increased national production and increased government revenues. Despite considerable progress in these directions, major state objectives have received government precedence overriding the attainment of a balanced economy. These overriding objectives are the "ingathering of the exiles" and the security of the State.

a. Immigrant Settlement. The cost of caring for and settling about 700,000 immigrants since 1948 has caused Israel to neglect and delay the development of its productive facilities. Between 1948 and 1952 about one-third of Israel's gross national expenditure was invested. A large proportion of this investment went into immigrant settlement projects, but it is estimated that twice as much investment would have been required to integrate the immigrants into the economy. In the past year immigration has fallen off sharply.

b. Security. The demand for the maintenance of armed forces and equipment capable of defending the country against the combined forces of the Arab states has also been a large drain on Israel's resources. Israel's defense costs are currently over 40 percent of the ordinary budget and almost 30 percent of total receipts (including foreign public and private aid) allocated for all purposes, including development.

26. Certain other factors have contributed to Israel's failure to raise productivity sufficiently to reduce its dependence upon foreign aid. These factors have to do with national and human resources and with customary living standards, and have a continuing long-range importance with respect to the possible future ability of the Israeli economy to become self-supporting.

a. Scarcity of Natural Resources. Israel is deficient in native raw materials and energy sources, and Israeli industry is heavily dependent upon imported materials, machinery, and fuel. In 1952, foreign exchange stringency and other causes brought about a raw materials shortage which forced Israeli industry to operate at only 50 percent of capacity. The cultivated area can be substantially increased only through costly irrigation works to fully utilize scarce water resources.

b. Nature of Labor Force. The skills possessed by the immigrants from European or other industrialized states have not in the main been well suited to the needs of Israel, and for a country so desperately in need of development, an excessive proportion of the working population is engaged in commercial and service work. There is a shortage of technically skilled labor of the kind needed to increase industrial production, and there are not enough scientific technicians presently available or in training to meet the country's needs. The low productivity of Israeli labor makes it difficult for Israeli industry to compete effectively in the export market. Israeli labor has shown little inclination for agricultural work, except in highly developed areas, and the government has found it extremely difficult to persuade people to work the marginal hill farms formerly tilled by the Arabs. The "oriental" Jews have been almost a dead weight on the economy.

c. Standard of Living. The European background of most of its population and the socialist labor outlook of its top leadership have led Israel to provide social services and maintain a general level of consumption and a wage scale beyond Israel's present capacity to support from its own resources. While Israel's standard of living is austere in comparison with the US, it is far above that of the neighboring Arab states and higher than that of Italy and Yugoslavia.

d. Reliance on Foreign Aid. The Israeli Government and people assume that world Jewry and the US have an obligation to continue subsidizing them. This attitude has not only reinforced their reluctance to undertake measures of austerity necessary to make Israeli self-supporting at an early date, but has also encouraged an irresponsible accumulation of short-term debts.

27. The various economic forces thus at work in Israel have produced a strong inflationary trend. This has been slowed down by a series of government measures: (a) credit has been greatly restricted; (b) the government has pledged itself not to issue more land bonds or treasury bills; (c) subsidies on consumption goods have been removed or reduced; and (d) some surplus purchasing power has been siphoned off by a variety of administrative devices. On the other hand, these measures have contributed to increased unemployment and the slowing down of privately financed economic expansion. The government has completed an agreement with West Germany for the payment of about $750 million over the next 12 years in German goods as reparation for Nazi damages against Jewry. This agreement will bring some improvement in Israel's difficult foreign exchange position.

28. While it has been assumed by both Israelis and Arabs that the Arab boycott and blockade constitutes an important obstacle to Israel's becoming self-supporting, it is unlikely that Arab abandonment of these measures would result in a very significant change in Israel's economic situation. Even without current Arab economic warfare measures, Israel's prospects for extensive trade with the Near East would probably be limited. The Arabs can produce many consumer goods more cheaply than Israel, and it is unlikely that Israeli industry can compete in the Arab market with the industries of the US, Europe, and Japan. The principal advantages to Israel that would follow cessation of the Arab boycott and blockade would be to reduce petroleum costs and enable the Haifa refinery to earn some foreign exchange. Israel could also expect lower prices for some imported foods. Thus, while relaxation of the boycott might bring some alleviation of economic difficulties, it would not solve the fundamental problems of the Israeli economy. Only a full peace settlement would bring substantial economic benefits to Israel, by making possible a reduction in defense expenditures.

29. It is unlikely that even under the most favorable circumstances Israel will become economically self-supporting for many years. The country will probably face successive economic crises like the prospective default on short-term government debts in the autumn of 1953 and spring of 1954. The country's long-term problems will continue to be low productivity in relation to consumption and development requirements, and the continued imbalance of exports and imports. The government's economic policies, if maintained, will continue to discourage private foreign investors who see neither chance of profit nor opportunity for secure investment in Israel.

30. Israel can probably maintain precarious solvency if substantial foreign aid continues to be available. Sharp curtailment of foreign aid would require further downward revision of the investment program and/or downward revision of military preparedness expenditure; failure to make such cuts in expenditure would result in graver financial difficulties and stronger inflationary trends which would affect the standard of living. Israel, however, regards national survival as its major problem and would be more inclined to accept a slower rate of development or a reduced standard of living than to reduce its military expenditure. Since crisis tends to stimulate outside assistance, Israel might deliberately provoke incidents with its neighbors in order to maintain the flow of funds. Renewed mass immigration or outright warfare with the Arab states would require increased funds from foreign sources to prevent economic collapse.

31. Scientists and scientific institutions make an important contribution to the development of the Israeli economy and maintain high scientific research standards. Israel has an adequate number of research scientists and teachers, but suffers from a shortage of trained technologists.

Military Capabilities

32. The Israeli Army is estimated to number about 50,000. Like the Arab armies, it is equipped with heterogeneous and obsolescent weapons. Israel also has about 145,000 trained reservists. From these, it could probably, in a period of national crisis, augment its organized forces to about 100,000 and provide many irregulars for local defense of cities and rural settlements. It could probably not support an army larger than 60,000 men for more than a few weeks without a substantial increase of outside financial and matériel support. Israel claims a mobilization potential of four infantry divisions, which would be built up from the four existing regional commands, and an armored division. In order to raise such a force, Israel would have to mobilize about one-third of all male Israelis between 15 and 49, with serious effects upon the economy. Futhermore, Israel is probably not capable at the present time of equipping more than three divisions, and those only partially.

33. The Israeli Air Force has a total personnel strength of about 2,600, including approximately 250 pilots, plus another 1,500 persons assigned to the Air Defense Force and to anti-aircraft artillery units. The Air Force has a heterogeneous collection of about 450 World War II-type aircraft of Western manufacture of which about half are in long-time storage. Less than half of the total are combat types. Fifteen Meteor jet fighters are on order from the UK, of which two have arrived in Israel. The airfield system in Israel is capable of supporting limited combat operations. There are twenty airfields, only one of which is capable of supporting sustained combat operations by jet aircraft. Four are potential bases for heavy and medium bombers, and seven additional airfields are readily adaptable for jet fighter operations. Significant expansion of the Israeli Air Force would be possible only with outside help.

34. The Israeli Navy has a personnel strength of about 3,000 and a collection of 30 World War II craft of varied origin, the most important of which are three frigates. Basic seamanship and shiphandling are of a high order, but there is a lack of modern equipment. Israel is at present incapable of significantly expanding and developing its Navy.

35. The Israeli Army is presently capable of repelling attack by any or all the armies of the Arab states and of maintaining internal security. The Israeli Air Force could carry out its mission of defense against an attack by a coalition of the Arab states and could bomb the Arab capitals. The Israeli Navy could dispose of the Egyptian Navy, which is the only Arab naval force likely to come against it. The Israeli armed forces probably could not win a war of conquest against a coalition of the Arab states, though they could win local tactical advantages if they could attack the Arab armies separately. Quantities of arms, ammunition, and equipment are believed to be more than sufficient for immediate defense purposes, but not for a long war. Outside military and economic aid would be a major factor in determining the outcome of a war between Israel and the Arab states.

36. Morale in the armed forces is generally good. There are a few Communists in the Israeli armed forces, but they are believed to be under control. Neither members of Mapam nor the survivors of the Irgun and Stern Gang terrorist organizations are believed to have an important influence.

37. The Israeli Army performs an important function in integrating new immigrants and members of minority groups into the community through the universal military training program, which includes indoctrination in citizenship and hygiene as well as military training.

38. Israel has a small but expanding munitions industry which produces small arms and ammunition and certain other items. Its current output is equal to or greater than the total output of the Arab states, and its capacity is in excess of Israel's current needs. Israel has sufficient repair and maintenance facilities to take care of the needs of the army and air force at present operational levels. Israel has expressed an interest in US offshore procurement orders, but the Israeli munitions industry is probably not capable of satisfactorily executing such orders for technical as well as economic reasons.

Israel and the Arab States

39. The prolonged and bitter conflict between Israel and the Arab states profoundly influences Israel's relations with the outside world and many aspects of its internal situation. Conflict with the Arabs has come to seem a normal factor in Israel's existence, and in adjusting themselves to this situation the Israelis have come to regard a tough policy toward the Arabs as a practical necessity. The Israelis believe that Israel is theirs by moral right, by right of conquest, and by virtue of the fact that they have retrieved it from centuries of neglect by a backward people. They would like to reduce defense expenditures and to see an end to the Arab boycott and blockade. However, because of intransigeance on both sides, virtually no progress has been made toward a settlement of the three outstanding issues: the Arab refugees, the establishment of permanent borders, and the status of Jerusalem.

40. To the Arabs, Israel is a creation of "Western Imperialism" and a symbol of Arab defeat and humiliation. It is the favorite grievance of almost all Arabs and a talking point for the most extreme nationalists. The Arab states have refused to discuss a peace settlement with Israel and have supported the Arab League boycott and blockade, hoping to weaken Israel and bring about an eventual increase of Arab strength relative to Israel's. Some Arab leaders may have begun to believe that compromise with Israel is now their most realistic course of action, but none has been willing to propose it publicly.

41. Of the three principal Arab-Israeli issues, the disposition of the Arab refugees presents by far the most substantial problem. 800,000-900,000 Palestinian Arabs fled or were driven from their homes in Israel into the surrounding Arab states. Almost all of them are dependent upon rations supplied by the UN, and about one-third occupy camps which are centers of unrest and targets of extremist propaganda ranging from that of the ex-Mufti to that of the Communists. The refugees themselves demand repatriation. Any inclination on their part to accept resettlement in the Arab states has been dissipated by the reactions of the Arab governments and of Arab extremist leaders of the left and right. The Arab states take the position that, in accordance with the UN resolution of December 1948, the refugees should be allowed, should they so desire, to return to their homes and property, or in the alternative to receive compensation from the Israeli Government. Israel is firmly opposed to the principle of repatriation, arguing that a mass return of Arabs would threaten the security of the Jewish state and would disrupt its economy. In this impasse, the burden of supporting the refugees has been almost wholly assumed by the United Nations. The Arab governments have taken almost no effective steps to resettle the refugees, probably preferring to exploit this issue as a means of influencing international public opinion. Syria and Egypt have signed agreements with the UN on resettlement plans, but nothing has yet been accomplished. It is probable that the vast majority of these refugees will ultimately have to be resettled in the Arab states because of their unsuitability for emigration to non-Arab countries.

42. A major current problem growing out of the failure to establish permanent borders is that of incidents along the armistice-line borders. Arabs from Jordan, many of them refugees, frequently cross the line to smuggle, steal, or visit their former homes and fields in Israel, and acts of violence frequently result. However, the Israeli policy of "active defense," pursuit of infiltrators into Jordan territory, and reprisal raids is probably responsible for the majority of serious incidents along the border. Strong representations to Israel and Jordan by the US and UK in May 1953 temporarily improved the situation, but incidents continue to recur. The armistice lines between Israel and Syria, Lebanon, and Egypt have been relatively free of such incidents since: (a) there is a lower concentration of refugees along lines close to their former homes; (b) the lines largely follow previous international boundaries; (c) the length of line and difficulty of terrain is less than in the Jordan-Israeli line. The Arabs now demand a return to the 1947 Partition Plan boundaries, which the Israelis reject as obsolete.

43. The Israelis have established their capital in the New City of Jerusalem. This violates UN resolutions and is regarded by the Arabs as evidence of Israeli willingness to defy international opinion and of Israeli ability to do so successfully. Though the Jordanians, who presently occupy the Old City and a small but highly strategic part of the New City, would probably accept the present arrangment, officials in all the Arab states insist upon the internationalization of the city.

44. Both Arabs and Israelis are psychologically capable of taking aggressive action, and in the present highly charged atmosphere, war could break out between them as the result of accident. However, we believe that an early renewal of full-scale hostilities is unlikely because, though Israel is strong enough to defend itself against Arab attack, it probably believes that it could not substantially expand its territory by an aggressive attack on the Arab states. Furthermore, Israel is restrained from aggression against the Arab states by fear of jeopardizing Western, especially US, support and by the possibility that an attack on Jordan might bring into effect the guarantees of the Anglo-Jordanian Treaty of Alliance, and the UK, French, US Tripartite Declaration of May 1950.

45. The Tripartite Declaration, in which the US, the UK, and France promised to prevent violation of the armistice lines, has probably had a restraining influence on both sides. A reaffirmation of the Declaration might further reduce the possibility of renewed hostilities, but probably only if it were restated so as to provide for specific punitive military action and economic sanctions as guarantees against Israeli or Arab aggression.

46. There appears to be no prospect of a full peace settlement between Israel and the Arab states for many years. Israel will almost certainly not change its position on the territorial, refugee, and Jerusalem issues. The Arabs will almost certainly refuse a general settlement that does not provide for boundary adjustment, refugee repatriation, and the internationalization of Jerusalem. They feel that the UN resolutions support their position on these issues, and that ultimately Israel will be forced to accept terms favorable to the Arabs. Furthermore, the Arabs will be reluctant to enter into normal relations with the state of Israel because they fear Israeli economic penetration and political intrigue.

47. It is, however, possible that certain specific Arab-Israeli problems will be resolved. Both Arabs and Israelis have shown a willingness to discuss better arrangements for the control of the armistice lines. Israel has expressed readiness to release a portion of the blocked Arab accounts. There have been indications that Israel might be willing to agree to slight modifications of its de facto borders, free port facilities in Haifa for Jordan, and a lump sum compensation for Arab property. In return, however, Israel would probably demand: reciprocal boundary rectifications, abolition of the economic boycott, and implementation of the UN Security Council Resolution of 1951 calling on Egypt to cease restrictions on shipping through the Suez Canal. In the present state of public opinion, Arab leaders will find it difficult to make such concessions. However, the Revolutionary Command Council government of Egypt, if successful in other fields, might take the lead in formulating a more conciliatory Arab policy toward Israel. The willingness of both sides to compromise and negotiate might be affected by a persistent Western policy of pressure and inducement, although neither Arab nor Israeli dispositions have thus far been significantly affected by limited Western efforts to achieve a compromise settlement.

Israel and the Great Powers

48. Israel has no ideological reason for being unequivocally on one side or the other in the East-West struggle. The influential socialist-labor movement in Israel takes the position that the East-West conflict is one between the extremes of capitalism and Communism, and that the middle-ground of socialism is superior to both. In order to insure the continuance of US aid and to keep the way open for the emigration of Jews from the Soviet Bloc, Israel has sought good relations with both the US and the USSR. It has also sought to gain a bargaining advantage from the East-West power struggle. We believe that Israel will probably endeavor to remain neutral in the East-West struggle as long as possible, but is, under present circumstances, more favorably disposed toward the West. Israelis are aware of the extent of their economic dependence upon the West. They are, moreover, suspicious of Russia, with its long record of anti-semitism and anti-Zionism and its totalitarian form of government, and probably also doubt the likelihood of getting any substantial number of emigrants from the Soviet Bloc. In time of war, however, Israel will follow the course that it deems most expedient in the light of the pressures and inducements existing at the time.

49. The USSR controls the only pool of probable future immigrants to Israel. The USSR is fully aware of this and of the potential which it gives them for throwing the Near East into turmoil. If the Soviet Bloc were to remove barriers to the emigration of its two and one-half million Jews, Arab fears of Israeli expansion would be increased, since they would be fully conscious of the pressures of a greatly expanded Israeli population for more land and resources. The "ingathering" of any considerable portion of the Soviet Bloc Jews would swamp Israel's already precarious economy and would require greatly increased financial and material assistance. However, a decision to permit the wholesale immigration of Soviet Bloc Jews to Israel would constitute a reversal of long established policies toward Soviet peoples, Jews or otherwise.

50. One of Israel's most difficult foreign policy problems stems from the conflict between Western interest in the defense of the Middle East against Soviet aggression and Israel's interest in security from attack by the Arab states. Israel fears a build-up of Arab military strength by the Western Powers and will make every effort either to prevent such a build-up or to maintain the present power relationship by obtaining equal aid for Israel. To maintain this relationship, Israel will almost certainly bring increased pressure to bear on the Western Powers, including the creation of border incidents, in order to support the argument that the Arabs are not to be trusted with additional arms.

51. Israel in the past has expressed a desire to join a regional defense organization for the Middle East under the sponsorship of the Western Powers. Its principal object was probably to participate in any rearmament program that develops, and to be in a position to observe and protest measures which would increase Arab strength relative to its own. In re-establishing diplomatic relations with the USSR on 20 July 1953, Israel promised not to join any "aggressive alliance directed against the USSR." This undertaking is in line with Israeli policy of not aligning itself with either the West or the USSR until forced to do so. It would not, however, be regarded by the Israelis as inhibiting their participation in defense arrangements for the Middle East if it seemed advantageous.

US Security Interests in the Middle East

52. The Arab-Israeli dispute has seriously damaged the US security position in the Middle East by increasing area instability, by adding to the difficulty of organizing area defense, and by posing a continuing threat of armed conflict. The Arabs belief that the US favors Israeli interests over their own has been chiefly responsible for the decline of US prestige and influence in the Arab world.

53. Because of Israel's strategic position and communication facilities, wartime access to Israeli territory is highly desirable for the defense of the Middle East by the Western Powers. However, in the present state of Arab-Israeli relations, peacetime arrangements for the use by the West of Israel's position and facilities would almost certainly provoke bitter Arab ill-will and jeopardize Western use of facilities in Arab countries. Moreover, Israel would demand an exorbitant price for any such peacetime arrangements, and has already indicated firm opposition to the stationing of foreign troops in its territory prior to the outbreak of war. Even in the event of hostilities, Israeli troops could probably not be used in combined operations with Arab forces, and Israel would be unlikely to send its own troops outside the country for fear of Arab attack. Israel would, however, fight tenaciously in defense of its own territory.

The Chargé in Jordan (Lynch) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET AMMAN, August 25, 1953—11 a. m.

91. Deptel 81. [2] Called on Prime Minister August 24 and informed him great concern my government over unsettled border situation and expressed hope Jordan's efforts prevent infiltration would be redoubled. As Jordan has apparently been making extraordinary effort prevent infiltration for some time past and as incidents have been comparatively few during past several weeks, I particularly emphasized unsatisfactory situation in Qatanneh area where frontier and no-mans-land have never been clearly demarcated and where Arabs, owing police inability or unwillingness take strong action, have been cultivating their fields in no-mans-land and even in what is almost certainly Israeli territory. Prime Minister insisted that Jordan was making all out effort prevent infiltration but admitted situation Qatanneh area extremely difficult owing uncertainty as to exact border.

I also informed Prime Minister US making representations to Israel regarding recent IDF attacks on Wadi Fukin and two other border villages, attacks which were condemned at August 12 MAC meeting. Prime Minister expressed gratification and asked me whether he was at liberty to mention these representations at same time as he publicly announced that US had made representations to his government on border situation. He said morale of people of Jordan required that they understand that they were being treated fairly by US and that it was not Jordan alone which was being singled out for American reprobation. I told Prime Minister I had no instructions on this score but suggested it woud be unfortunate if he made such statement before US representations to Israel had actually been made and suggested he wait several days in order to learn what Israel made public. I do not know just what he will do.

I expressed concern of US Government over troop build-up on and near border which I suggested increased possibility of flare-ups. Prime Minister emphasized view that recent border reinforcement was necessary defense measure and direct result of Israeli military activity. He said orders to Arab Legion were specific and no possibility of misunderstanding existed.

[1] Repeated to Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Paris, London, Beirut, Baghdad, Cairo, Jidda, and Damascus.

[2] Printed as telegram 154 to Tel Aviv, supra.

Orders were: (1) Legion was on border for defense purposes only; (2) under no circumstances was Legion to leave Jordan territory; (3) under no circumstances was Legion to undertake reprisal. He felt, therefore, there was little likelihood that border reinforcement would lead to border flare-up.

I expressed my appreciation of what appeared to me to be sincere effort of Jordan Government to preserve peace and told Prime Minister I would convey his statement to my government.[3]

LYNCH

[3] The Department replied on Aug. 28 by suggesting that the Chargé might at an appropriate opportunity wish to express to the Jordanian Prime Minister the appreciation of the U.S. Government for his statement of clarification regarding the Legion's orders, and indicate the continuing concern of the United States over the situation created by military build-ups on both sides of the border. The Department agreed with Lynch's suggestion that the Prime Minister was the best means of handling the publicity problem. (684A.85/8-2553)

Re (1) Dept stated possible solutions Jerusalem problem being studied; decisions not yet taken on desirability any particular solution or consideration question at forthcoming GA, which will have crowded agenda probably making it desirable avoid inclusion Jerusalem. Reiterated US displeasure over untimeliness Foreign Ministry transfer as not calculated reduce area tensions and reaffirmed intention retain Emb at Tel Aviv and refrain from visits Jerusalem. Latter prohibition strongly criticized by Eban and Sharett in personal letter to Secretary as "backward step" since such visits allowed prior to transfer. (Copy Sharett letter, which not yet answered, being airpouched.)

Re (2) Dept stated US plans allocate small amount military aid available for NE on basis collective defense plan when latter has satisfactorily evolved; timing such aid would not necessarily be same for all countries and aid would be fitted to their particular roles in area defense. US will do nothing with military aid which in its estimation will harm Israel. Israel will be informed soon as possible extent economic assistance it can expect under MSP, since IG's need this information fully appreciated. Eban said he proceeding in negotiations with non-governmental organizations on assumption MSP legislation prohibits use funds to help solve Israel's "financial" (apparently referring indebtedness) problem.

Dept assured Eban matters such as divergent US and Israel views re Jerusalem transfer should not be misconstrued as indication there has been any change friendly feeling US has for Israel, for which Eban expressed gratefulness. Eban was also informed US holds as continuing objective conclusion peace between Israel and at least one perhaps two of neighboring Arab states, and that conceivably Syria might precede Egypt in this due latter's preoccupation Suez issue.

Embtel 249.[5] In event IG argues Byroade did not specifically refer in Aug 19 conversation Eban to three IDF raids Aug 11, Emb should emphasize such incidents one of main reasons for US concern over border situation.

and 230 [2]) US attitude toward Israel default but obviously also obtain impression general US policies toward Israel. I repeated I knew no US policy that Israel default would be favorable development; on contrary US is deeply involved in effort build sound Israel economy and default would be retrogressive symbol aside from factors he mentioned. I said US aid was dual objectives of advancing general human economic levels and promoting security of free world; we necessarily survey each situation periodically to determine whether our programs in fact working toward those ends. Said we had been concerned over:

Israel's unusual degree of secrecy regarding military information, reprisals policy, deprecation MAC's, "over our dead bodies" attitude toward negotiation outstanding issues with Arabs, sudden removal of Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem in midst of efforts to secure solution of Jerusalem problem that would be equitable to all; growing indications of impatience with US desire to devote economic aid to goals of sound economy of which Ekukol outburst was only culmination; and Eban's high-handed disregard of plight of half million American boys in Korea. Said I was aware Israel leaders concerned over possibility of American military aid to Arab countries but that vacuum which existed from Turkey to sub-continent of India was open invitation to Soviet activity of kind which Soviet had thus far been unable to refuse; theory of defense of this area which is larger than whole United States by pouring military aid into Israel which is one-tenth size of Utah was unrealistic; effective strength of Israel could be destroyed by one planeful of bombs. Said Israel could have no legitimate fear re American policy of building strength in area since: (1) We had not contributed 300 million dollars to Israel only to have it pushed into sea, (2) our goal in area is peace and breaking out of war between Arab States and Israel would be negation of that, (3) Israel has as much to gain from policy of filling Near East security vacuum as any country since if Soviet bombs were to drop in area, the first would be against Israel.

[2] In telegram 230, Aug. 20, Chargé Russell reported on a conversation with Oliver Gass, Chairman of the Economic Advisory staff attached to the Prime Minister's office. Gass inquired about rumors that advisers to the U.S. Government in Washington were recommending default by the Israeli Government as a desirable measure. Gass said his own view was that Israel would be dependent on new loans, the refinancing of old loans, and capital investment for a long period to come, and in this light default would be most damaging. Russell replied that he knew of no U.S. Government policy favoring an Israeli Government default; that indeed for the reasons Gass mentioned and for other reasons, the United States believed default would have unfortunate consequences. Russell pointed out that U.S. financial aid to Israel was for the purpose of achieving economic objectives which had been made known to the Israeli Government; that, as Stassen had pointed out during his visit, economic aid would be related to free world objectives; and that it followed that the Israeli Government could not anticipate that the United States would under all circumstances guarantee the Israeli Government against default. (884A.10/8-2053)

Kollek commented he thought structure I had built of Israel non-cooperation was more imposing than facts indicated; that he would pass along my views.

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the President

[WASHINGTON,] September 1, 1953.

Subject: Famine Relief for Jordan

Public Law 216, 83rd Congress, authorizes the President to transfer agricultural commodities from the stocks of the Commodity Credit Corporation to meet famine or other urgent relief requirements of friendly peoples.

It is recommended that you determine that up to 10,000 tons (approximate value $1 million) of wheat, from stocks held by the Commodity Credit Corporation, may be used to meet famine and other urgent relief requirements in Jordan, leaving for later consideration the determination of additional amounts that may be required. This assistance would be furnished under an agreement to be negotiated with the Jordan Government by the Department of State providing for such direct relief to the ultimate consumer as is necessary and permitting the Jordan Government to sell the balance, if any, within Jordan. The sales proceeds would be used for work relief projects in the stricken areas to provide employment for the needy and a basis for general economic improvement.

The Foreign Operations Administration would carry out operations under this agreement, including participation with Jordan officials in the relief distribution, and would be available to advise the Jordan Government on the execution of the work relief projects. Such operations should be conducted with due regard to other programs in Jordan in which the United States has an interest.

This recomendation has the concurrence of the Department of Agriculture and the Foreign Operations Administration. If you approve the recommendation, a draft finding is attached for your consideration.[1]

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State[1]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, September 2, 1953—6 p. m.

287. Ambassador Eban called yesterday at his request; said Israel Government especially concerned over (a) absence any substantial contact between Foreign Ministry and Embassy following move of former to Jerusalem, and (b) United States plans for military assistance to Middle East.

Eban said Israel government could not understand sudden tightening of our position re Jerusalem pointing out other ministries and elements of government had been in Jerusalem for several years. I stated: Our postion had remainded unchanged since adoption of 1949 UN resolution and referred to chapter in McDonald's book Mission in Israel[2] describing original United States position; it was for Israel to decide what its own attitude toward UN resolution was to be, but move of Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem inevitably involved position of other governments toward UN; position of United States is that at a time when it has suffered 140,000 casualties in maintaining integrity of UN in Korea it is not disposed to violate UN resolution and weaken UN by following Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem; we have repeatedly made this known to Israel Government. I said it was particularly unfortunate Foreign Ministry had chosen to move at very time Secretary had indicated in public statements his hope that a solution to problem of Jerusalem could be found. In reply Eban's query as to what solution present impasse might be, I said most immediate and promising solution would seem to lie in making a reality of liaison office which Foreign Ministry had announced it would maintain; various officials of Foreign Ministry could make practice of being there at certain times each week for conduct of business. Eban said he thought there should be some reciprocity. I said I doubted whether specific quid pro quo could be given at present time in terms of visits to Foreign Ministry Jerusalem in view importance we attach to compliance with UN resolutions. I said practice of Israel press of distorting visits of any kind to Jerusalem as endorsement of Israel Government position had been unfortunate and in fact had resulted in chief on one mission (Argentine) giving instructions to all members of staff not to go to Jerusalem even for purpose of passing through Mandelbaum Gate.

[2] James G. McDonald, My Mission in Israel, 1948–1951 (New York, Simon and Schuster, 1951), pp. 204 ff.

Regarding Eban's query re our policy on military assistance I made following points: (1) Importance to Israel, as to whole area and to free world, of ending security vacuum in Middle East which now inevitably tempts Soviet Union as similar vacuums previously had in Eastern Europe, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Korea; (2) United States had made and will continue to make every effort to bring about peace between Israel and Arabs but if nothing is to be done to build security until Arabs willing to join with Israel in the effort, present indications are this would delay effective measures beyond point of utility; (3) A policy of one gun for Israel for every gun given to anyone else in the rest of the area would limit program to such proportions as to nullify it; (4) United States has as great a stake as Israel in assuring that security program for area achieves objective of area peace, as intra-area conflict could well bring in Soviet Union and touch off World War III; (5) important, therefore, that all efforts be devoted to finding ways accomplishing security objectives and not to obstructing program.

In following discussion I said we regarded Arab refugee problem as central to tensions of area and felt there was a triple—not a dual—responsibility for dealing with the problem; that Israel as well as Arab States and UN must make contribution to solution.

316. Have considered RECNE reactions TVA study and Jordan-Yarmuk proposal and wish make following observations and define present policy line.

[1] Identified also as telegram CRANE 19; repeated to Amman as 102, Damascus as 73, and Tel Aviv as 130, and by pouch to Cairo, Baghdad, and Jidda.

Observations:

1. Facts available to TVA are based on available data, much of it accumulation of precise engineering studies, well as Bunger's preliminary data.

2. Experience and knowledge brought to bear by TVA and Chas. T. Main is most unlikely to be refuted by subsequent studies; we may safely assume that general magnitude of costs of Maqarin high dam, and value of Maqarin reservoir as a regulator as compared with Tiberias, are now authoritatively determined.

3. Report itself will be available shortly for study and field comments as to its merits should await detailed study.

4. We may conclude that we shall be presented with these alternatives:

A. Follow line advocated Amman mission; commit additional $60/70 million for Maqarin high dam, requiring five to eight years and secure fewer benefits than would result from development along lines suggested by TVA, at same time freeing Israel to take unilateral action on waters under IG physical control;

B. Follow line suggested by interpretation facts TVA report, as supported by Senate Subcommittee, and endeavor search for formulae which would permit development of water resources on economic lines.

In either case it will be noted that there are elements in TVA proposals indentical with plans of TCA Jordan, which could be carried out soon as surveyed without prejudice eventual decision; and that TVA recommends dam Maqarin of intermediate height for power but not for storage.

As RECNE points out decision need not be made until Harza survey completed but preponderance of evidence suggests that eventual decision will be against commitment of time and funds required for Maqarin high dam.

Policy Line:

Present decision of Department and FOA made by Secretary and Stassen is to encourage dissemination of facts as presented by TVA report and to consider our future course after full import this document is understood by Arabs and Israelis.

Following receipt initial printed copies Bergus should seek Carver's agreement regarding dissemination of Report and Amman must somehow find way to stimulate Jordanian interest in a proposal which we are certain would bring Jordan and its refugees earlier and more substantial benefits than other known proposals.

Department of State Position Paper [1]

CONFIDENTIAL
SD/A/C.1/427

WASHINGTON, September 5, 1953.

PALESTINE REFUGEE PROGRAM

THE PROBLEM

The Palestine Refugee Program will be placed before the General Assembly in the Report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA) or in the Joint Report of the Director and the Advisory Commission. These reports (not available until some time after the General Assembly opens) will require a position on the folllowing questions: (1) Continuation of the Program Beyond July 1, 1954; (2) the level of the relief budget for fiscal 1954; (3) the relief budget for fiscal 1955; (4) administration of relief; and (5) acceleration of refugee self-support projects.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. Introduce or support a proposal for the continuation of a relief and reintegration program for an additional two-year period.

2. Seek to hold relief expenditures for the fiscal period ending June 30, 1954 to $— —.

3. Support a relief budget for Fiscal 1955 of $18 million subject to modification by the Ninth Session of the General Assembly.

4. Support the Director's proposal for the termination of health, education and welfare activities and their assumption by the local governments concerned, with financial and technical assistance from UNRWA, and call on the Agency to develop plans for the termination by January 1, 1955, of all UNRWA's relief administration, including procurement of supplies and distribution, with a report thereon to the next (ninth) session of the General Assembly.

5. Point up to need for speedier action on large-scale projects for refugee self-support which will involve not only the effective cooperation of the Arab States but also a more determined attitude on the part of UNRWA, and emphasize the possibilities of moving ahead more rapidly on projects which do not present major obstacles.

[1] For the instruction of the U.S. Delegation to the Eighth Regular Session of the U.N. General Assembly. This document was supplemented by a further position paper of Oct. 15, Document 688.

Comment

1. Continuation of the Program Beyond July 1, 1954

Assembly Resolution 513 (VI), January 26, 1952, provided for a $250 million relief and reintegration program ending June 30, 1954, of which $200 million was for reintegration and $50 million for relief. The reintegration program has moved very slowly and larger sums than estimated have had to be provided for relief. The Assembly will be called upon to extend the time period of the program. The need to extend the program beyond June 30, 1954, is apparent and will not meet with resistance. Insofar as the United States position is concerned this point has been brought out in the hearings on the Palestine refugee problem before the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on the Near East and Africa. At that time Acting Secretary Bedell Smith held that a two-year extension would probably be needed. While efforts may be made to authorize a longer period, the United States should oppose Assembly authorization extending the UNRWA program 1956 and should insist upon a further general review at Assembly in 1955. In supporting the two-year extension, this should be done in terms of continuing the $200 million reintegration fund and of effective progress in the obligation of available funds for refugee benefits. In this connection the United States Delegation may allude to other sources of funds for economic development benefiting the peoples of the countries giving homes to refugees, including US grant funds available for this purpose.

2. Level of the Relief Budget for Fiscal 1954

In Resolution 614 (VII) of November 6, 1952 the General Assembly authorized URWA to adopt a budget for relief of $18 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, subject to review at the Eighth Session of the General Assembly. The Director has proposed to the Advisory Commission an increased relief budget for this period of over $26 million which assumes that relatively few refugees will become self-supporting until large-scale self-support projects get fully under way and which takes account of the natural increase in the refugee population for which provision had not previously been made. The Advisory Commission is now considering this plan of expenditure and it is possible that a lower figure will be submitted in the Joint Report of the Director and the Commission. The Department's position on the amount of the relief budget has not yet been determined but it is hoped that reasonable cuts in the Director's proposal may bring the relief budget down to $24 million.

3. Relief Budget for Fiscal 1955

The General Assembly will need to give a directive to the Agency concerning the level of relief costs for the fiscal period ending June 30, 1955. The Director has estimated relief costs for this period at $18 million. This appears to be a reasonable estimate at this time since it involves a sharp reduction. If work on projects moves more rapidly and large numbers of refugees are employed thereon, a further reduction might be effected at the next session, when the General Assembly can review this figure.

4. Administration of Relief

The Director proposes that the Arab Governments concerned undertake the administration of health, education and welfare activities carried on by UNRWA as of July 1, 1954, and that steps be taken by them to assume responsibility for procurement and distribution of relief supplies. An effort was made in the Sixth Session of the General Assembly to transfer responsibility for relief administration to the local governments but the Arabs successfully resisted this proposal. The time has come to renew efforts to get UNRWA out of relief administration and develop definite plans for the transfer of this task to the Arab Governments. The resolution should emphasize termination of UNRWA's administration, but avoid mention of transfer of responsibility to the local governments, since they will not voluntarily accept such responsibility.

5. Acceleration of Refugee Self-Support Projects

Progress in obtaining agreements with Arab Governments for large-scale self-support projects has been slow. This factor, combined with the time involved for engineering surveys and decisions on specific projects has seriously retarded UNRWA's timetable. A major project being surveyed in Jordan regarding the use of the Jordan-Yarmuk waters has involved difficult engineering studies and raises political difficulties between the Arab states and Israel. The United States should call attention to the extensive US interest manifested by Congress in the Report on the Palestine Refugee Problem by the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee.[2] This report emphasizes that unless considerably more progress is shown in the near future than up to the present time, the Congress would not be justified in indefinite continuation of aid for this program.

NE—Mr. Frye

Mr. Hart said that he had been informed that Dr. Bunche had obtained some information of interest to the Department during his visit to Cairo and Jerusalem in February. He was taking advantage of Dr. Bunche's presence in Washington (to attend the meeting of the American Political Science Association, of which he is the President) to ask him about it.

Dr. Bunche said that on his return from India and Pakistan in February 1953, he stopped in Cairo where he was extremely well-received by General Naguib and other Egyptian officials. (He had a warmer reception in Egypt than in Israel.) During a talk with Foreign Minister Fawzi, the latter indicated that there had been a number of peace feelers from Israel. ("There have been knocks on the door.") Knowing that Dr. Bunche planned to go to Jerusalem from Cairo, Dr. Fawzi indicated that Egypt was interested in the possibility of talks with the Israelis. He said that "Egypt can accept one partition but not two," meaning that Egypt can accept the existence of Israel but cannot accept being separated from other Arab States by Israel control of the Negev. He presumably meant that Egypt wants some sort of corridor connecting with Jordan. Dr. Bunche asked whether he could inform the Israelis of Dr. Fawzi's statements and the latter said that he could, provided he did not suggest to the Israelis that the Egyptians had asked him to do so.

In Jerusalem, Dr. Bunche talked with Mr. Ben Gurion but had no opportunity to inform him of Dr. Fawzi's statements since the Israel Prime Minister was wholly preoccupied with the recent developments in Soviet policy on world Jewry. (The Soviet Legation in Tel Aviv was bombed just a few days after Dr. Bunche's visit.) Dr. Bunche did inform Foreign Minister Sharett of Dr. Fawzi's statements but got no immediate reaction. Subsequently, Mr. Sharett called Dr. Bunche away from a dinner to tell him that Israel wanted to talk with the Egyptians and were willing to go anywhere, even to Cairo, for the talks, which would be kept absolutely secret. The Israelis were willing to enter the discussions with no conditions and with an open agenda. Dr. Bunche asked Mr. Sharett whether he had noted Dr. Fawzi's reference to the Negev and Mr. Sharett said that he had. Dr. Bunche told Mr. Hart that he had never seen Mr. Sharett in so humble a mood.

On his return to Cairo, Dr. Bunche informed Dr. Fawzi of the Israeli "response" and Fawzi seemed genuinely interested and said that he would inform General Naguib.

Subsequently, the New York Times published a story concerning the incident and the Egyptians immediately denied that such an approach had been made.

It is Dr. Bunche's view that Mr. Sharett had not felt it necessary to consult Mr. Ben Gurion, and that if he had, the latter would not have been interested at that time since he was so preoccupied with the Soviet problem.

Dr. Bunche feels that if the two parties are to be brought together, it will require the assistance of a third party. In reply to Mr. Hart's question, he said that he felt that the United States would be an appropriate third party. He agreed that if and when the Suez Base negotiations with the British are resolved satisfactorily, it would then be a propitious time to attempt to get the Israelis and Egyptians to discuss a peace settlement. Dr. Bunche feels that an effort should be made to arrange that Egypt should be the first country to conclude peace with Israel since the other Arab States would probably follow Egypt's lead.

Following his return to New York, Dr. Bunche was visited by the Syrian and Lebanese United Nations delegates who inquired concerning his conversations with the Egyptians. He replied that the conversations were confidential and he could not discuss them.

General Naguib told Dr. Bunche that he thought the Israel War was "the best thing that could have happened to Egypt," since it had brought into the open the corruption of the Farouk regime and had led to a cleanup.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, September 10, 1953—9 p. m.

309. Embassy discussed this morning in Tel Aviv with Joseph Tekoah, assistant legal adviser to Foreign Ministry, developments referred to in Deptel 195,[2] Embtel 305[3] and Jerusalem Telegram 33[4] to Department. Tekoah made following points:

(1) Present construction is additional stage in work that has been going on in connection with Huleh project for last few years;

(2) It will not affect volume of water in river or utilization of that water by Israelis or Arabs presently using it;

(3) It is not the beginning of those aspects of larger Lowdermilk project discussed with Syrians in latter stage of Israel-Syrian negotiations but is limited project which can be [but] need not necessarily be linked after its completion in two to three years with basic Lowdermilk system;

(4) If linked at that time, would not affect present water supply from Jordan River to Arab lands on east bank of Jordan above Tiberias;

(5) No work has begun on larger water projects discussed with Syrians which Israelis consider still on agenda when negotiations with Syria resumed;

(6) Tillitson made no objection when informed of construction plans on day it commenced (September 2) and given guarantee it would not involve construction on Arab-owned land or affect present water supply to Arab lands;

(7) Tillitson after discussion with Shalev September 7 did not deliver letter requesting Israel stop damming Jordan River (Jerusalem 33 to Department);

(8) Israel did not stop construction of dike as requested in Bennike letter September 8, on ground that request made on basis incorrect assumptions that island was Arab-owned and would be flooded as consequence this damming. Tekoah stated island was seasonal, appearing in summer and regularly inundated in winter, and was to best of IG knowledge not Arab-owned;

(9) Question of discontinuing work not raised by Bennike at September 9 meeting between him, Vigier, Dayan and Shalev after situation explained to him and therefore Israel intends continuing with work;

(10) Emphasis of Bennike and Vigier after this explanation and assurances mentioned point 6 above was on desirability resumption Israel-Syrian talks to which main obstacle was Israel refusal pay compensation for brush fire started by Kibbutz Gonen in May;

(11) Israel representatives at that meeting agreed to Bennike-Virgier request that IG pay compensation and renew negotiations with Syria;

(12) Bennike stated at meeting that it would be advisable receive in writing some of assurances from Israel mentioned above but suggested this be postponed until he had had opportunity speak to Syrian representatives;

(13) IG understood that questions thus far raised had not been raised in response formal Syrian complaint but as result concern of United Nations over possibility infringements Arab rights.

Possibility must be considered, although on basis present evidence it is by no means clearly established, that (1) IG may have had knowledge of results of TVA study and of serious consideration USG giving to proposals based upon it; (2) IG opposed to plan and determined take measures to forestall its adoption and implementation; (3) present construction suddenly undertaken in belief that (a) it would drive Arab states into intransigent opposition to any Jordan water development plan, and (b) nevertheless, IG could muster case that it was within its rights. IG's case stronger in its legalism (at points questionable, e.g., Tekoah's first point) than in evidence it gives of desire to cooperate with UN. All evidence which Embassy has been able to obtain indicates that construction undertaken on extremely short notice (shortly after preparation of recommendations based on TVA report) and contrary to expressed expectations of those in IG who have been working most intensively on water development matters. Tekoah when told by Embassy representative that decision to commence construction seems to have been made on short notice, replied he knew nothing of that part of problem (although he is official in Foreign Ministry who has been intimately acquainted with water development problems for past few years and had prepared himself to brief Embassy on present developments after Embassy approached Foreign Ministry). US Army Attaché has twice requested Foreign Liaison Office of Israel Defense Forces for clarification military aspects of Huleh construction situation but met first with evasion and secondly with statement it was matter for Foreign Ministry.

Embassy agrees in necessity (Deptel 195) of withholding of aid if IG insists on taking action detrimental to plans for solution regional problems (see final paragraph Embassy Despatch 212, August 20, 1953).[5] Such actions should, of course, be taken only where IG's culpability can be demonstrated to US and world public. In Embassy's opinion there is no objection to delaying current release of aid for brief period pending clarification which may be shortly forthcoming (Jerusalem Telegram 34 to Department). Until then, Embassy believes not desirable give any indication that we are deliberately delaying or reason therefor.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for United Nations Affairs (Murphy)

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 11, 1953.

Subject: Jerusalem Situation

Participants: The Most Reverend Amlito Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate in Washington.
Mr. Robert Murphy, Assistant Secretary for United Nations Affairs.

Agreeable to the understanding with the Secretary and Mr. Byroade, I discussed today with the Apostolic Delegate in Washington, The Most Reverend Amlito Giovanni Cicognani, the prevailing situation in Jerusalem. I explained our point of view regarding a possible solution of the Jerusalem problem, avoiding a specific reference to the Swedish proposal,[1] and inquired whether there had been any recent change of view on the part of the Vatican regarding the corpus separatum idea. The Most Reverend Cicognani replied in the negative and said that the question, as far as he knew, had been quiescent for some time. It is a matter, he said, which he believes the Pope personally handles. He expressed the personal opinion that our present idea is certainly worth exploring and might appeal to the Vatican. He promised to communicate it immediately in the hope of eliciting a reaction in the near future. He stated the opinion that the present situation with the Jordanians and Israelis glaring at each other across the barbed wire barrier is obviously most unsatisfactory and that if some progress along the lines of our present idea could be made, it might start a movement of general conciliation which would be attractive to the Vatican. He promised to comunicate with me as soon as he has obtained the Vatican's reaction.

95. In anticipation General Bennike's having to make decision soon after September 15 on Israel's attempt to divert Jordan and in understanding that he may wish indication of support from US, you may inform him of following:

1. US is of view that Article 5 of Armistice Agreement formally establishes UN Chairman of ISMAC, and not Israel or Syria, as responsible party for general supervision and administration of demilitarized zone. This authority has been acquiesced in by both parties. This situation remains until Israel and Syria reach agreement to contrary or armistice agreement is modified. US took this position in SC debate on Huleh dispute in May 1951. It will reiterate this position as often as necessary.

2. We are prepared in absence full details in this incident of damming Jordan to assure him of US general support in any decision he may make within his authority since we are firmly of conviction MAC machinery must have adequate backing to assure effective enforcement of Armistice Agreements.

SECRET WASHINGTON, September 12, 1953—1:39 p. m.

207. Recent cables on Banat Yaacov diversion incident suggest more positive line action necessary on Jordan water allocation than proposed Depcirtel 316 to Beirut, rpt Amman 102 Damascus 73 Tel Aviv 190. [2]

Dept inferred Israel motivation along lines analysis paragraph 13 Tel Aviv 309. [3] U.S. interest in TVA study and necessity revise Hays Lowdermilk plan was brought out in open testimony before Congress. Fact that IG has revamped development budget to provide funds diversion upper Jordan after advising Mikesell and Patterson in July water development funds were to be largely concentrated in south lends credence Tel Aviv interpretation.

Dept fears Arab refusal to consider water problem on its merits in any forum, with or without Israelis present, will prejudice Arab case in U.S. and world opinion. While reasonable suspend operations Banat Yaacov pending examination project it will be difficult if not impossible insist on continued suspension, or exert U.S. moral or other sanctions on Israel to prevent any development on upper Jordan, if Arabs refuse discuss issues on technical and political level.

Dept believes TVA study furnishes sound basis on which hoped-for discussions could be based.

For reasons well known and understood, UNRWA cannot provide mechanism for discussion or mediation of issue of disputed waters; neither UNTSO nor PCC believed appropriate or desirable mechanism for such purpose. Following idea therefore submitted for field comment as possible line procedure:

On receipt TVA study UNRWA submit it to Hammarskjold for consideration, in view likelihood that UNRWA's plans for project development will be frustrated unless equitable division waters somehow determined and steps taken to permit their most rapid and economic development, which apparently impossible in present political framework. Hammarskjold then might draw issue posed to attention both Arabs and Israelis, and to public, setting forth UN dilemma in precise terms, and appoint representative to discuss problem as liaison between Arabs and Israelis. Solution might then evolve which would permit development of water by Syria, Jordan and Israel effectively and promptly.

We cannot avoid facing Arabs with dilemma: if Arabs refuse all discussion, then they put themselves in wrong with world public opinion and it will be difficult if not impossible for U.S. to (a) exert financial or other pressure on IG to accept reasonable allocation; (b) call for continued suspension IG plans Jordan waters; or (c) continue to back development in Jordan and Syria financed by UNRWA or other funds. If Arabs agree discuss, they face obvious domestic pressure underlying whole Palestine issue. Timing of UN discussions with Arabs appears all-important, and this approach can only be successful if Arabs are prepared in advance with groundwork of factual knowledge which will support an appeal to reason. Timing obviously needs careful consideration relative to Syrian elections October 10.

Dept appreciates position taken by Amman, Damascus, and Beirut at Cairo meeting RECNE, but believes that Banat Yaacov incident gives reason request further cabled comments on best procedure. Also request cabled views Carver and Bergus.

316. Embassy offers following comments (Deptel 207 [2]):

1. IG's hopes, especially re further large-scale immigration, have been firmly fixed on utilization by Israel of all of water of Jordan and part of Yarmuk. TVA plan will, therefore, encounter strong opposition on part of IG and public. Embassy feels, however, that its importance to our area objectives is so great and delay would so multiply difficulties that early action is highly desirable.

2. To help in extending to other area problems the marked unity which exists on Jerusalem, it would be desirable to advise friendly missions here prior to UNRWA submission of study to Hammarskjold.

[2] Supra.

3. An immediate question is whether, when, how, and by whom to get IG to delay further the construction on Jordan-Tiberias power project. Should we wait to see if General Bennike requests them to stop? If he should, that would take care of it. If he should decide not to, however, it might provide IG with excuse not to comply with a later request by US (although Bennike decision would presumably be on basis largely irrelevant to present problem, i.e., his decision would be on whether construction violated armistice agreement rather than on keeping things on even keel pending consideration of TVA plan). Should we wait to ascertain official reactions of Arab Governments before approaching IG? If, in response to our request IG stops now and Arab States then decline to give any consideration to plan, we might be discountenanced vis-à-vis Israel. On other hand, discontinuance by IG now at our request would be indication to Arabs we are capable of influencing IG action along peaceful and constructive lines. Conceivably, however, our argument with Arabs might be strengthened by sight of work in process. Arab country missions in better position evaluate these considerations.

4. In approaching Arab Govenments it could be pointed out Banat Yaacov likely to be only first of series of faits accompli, to serious and permanent disadvantage of Arabs, if TVA plan is not made occasion for regional study. [3]

Embassy will naturally defer detailed comment on desk study report until it is received. Embassy understands completed report has been in area for past several weeks and early copy would be appreciated. It wishes tentatively to record that it has certain reservations re statements in paragraphs one and two of reference telegram.

Re paragraph four reference telegram Embassy considers Department's presentation of picture is misleading, at least insofar as Amman's position is concerned, and therefore wishes to clarify its attitude. It has been strongly in favor of Yarmuk-Jordan Valley project as means early settlement large number Arab refugees and Maqarin high dam as essential aspect of scheme. Embassy, however, unable to accept rest of Department's reasoning in section 4 (a) until given full opportunity study TVA report because all of its previous information has indicated somewhat contrary views as to time required and cost. Embassy also unable understand why proposed use Yarmuk waters would make Israel any more free to take unilateral action on Jordan waters than she is at present and in fact is apparently now doing.

Embassy Amman does not question that if the area were a single political unit, or even a group of friendly states, the broad scheme for the development of the Jordan Valley by using Lake Tiberias as a holding reservoir for the waters of the Jordan and Yarmuk rivers would constitute the most economical use of these waters and would be the best plan for the area as a whole.

As the Department must be aware Embassy's opposition to the scheme and its advocacy of the Maqarin site as holding reservoir is based on the conviction that former plan is politically impracticable now, or in the foreseeable future. In other words, we are not presented with two alternatives and thus not a question of spending an "additional 60 or 70 million dollars for Maqarin high dam" but rather whether we are to do anything at all for Arab refugees.

If present plan involving use of Tiberias as holding reservoir is carried though, however, Embassy fears it will be considered by Arabs as just another example of US bowing to Zionist—not necessarily Israeli—pressure. However reasonable the scheme may be—and I appreciate that from the viewpoint of Washington it is entirely so—it must be remembered that the Palestinian and Jordanian Arabs are neither reasonable nor rational on the subject.

I have understood from numerous policy papers that owing to the strategic importance of the Near East the US had certain basic and vital objectives in the area. It is my considered opinion that if USG adopts the proposed TVA plan as a national policy the achievement of our objectives will not only be made more difficult but well nigh impossible. I think, for instance, it is quite within the realm of possibility that Point IV will be compelled to withdraw from Jordan altogether and of course any efforts on the part of the Embassy to promote friendship and understanding (by grant aid wheat, arms aid, educational grants or otherwise) will be completely nullified.

These statements doubtless sound extravagant and yet I think they present the situation with which we are confronted. To illustrate the Embassy's thinking I believe it conceivable that the Prime Minister and one or two of his more broad-gauge ministers of state might be persuaded in private that the plan, which I understand is proposed in the TVA desk study, would not only be the best for the areas as a whole, but in the long run, for Jordan as well. Even so, I do not believe that any Jordan Government would dare give such a scheme serious consideration, because of fact that it involves cooperation with Israel. I do not believe that I could even discuss this subject in confidence with this, or any other government in this country, because for their own protection they would feel compelled to leak it to the press and then on their own part come forth with a violently anti-American and "nobly patriotic" tirade uncompromisingly rejecting the whole project.

If Department finally decides to adopt recommendations of TVA desk study as official policy of the USG, I believe that we should not delude ourselves with the notion that because the plan is a rational one which would benefit Arab refugees or the area as a whole, that it will be acceptable or that it will advance us toward attainment or our oft-repeated objectives in area.

SECRET BEIRUT, September 17, 1953.

274. Replying last paragraph Deptel 348 September 12 [1] on Jordan water allocation, Embassy assumes in view of policy line stated in Deptel 316, September 6 [4], question boils down to best method and timing of dissemination of facts presented by TVA report.

It may be possible to convince local governments of logic of our position. The real problem is to overcome the emotion of the Arab public on whole Palestine issue. Speaker of the Lebanese Parliament told Congressman Hillings last night "any Cabinet of either Lebanon, Syria or Jordan which makes a definite move toward rapprochement with Israel would fall before sunset. King Abdullah, last man who tried it, was riddled with bullets." He added he could not see why a great power like US worries about relations with Israel when all we have to do is to give gushing spigot of US financial aid to Israel a quarter turn downward.

I regard Lebanse public opinion less violent than above remarks or than opinion in Syria or Jordan. However, it seems to me our best chance of overcoming highly emotional Arab public opinion is "dissemination of facts" on even wider scale than suggested in Department's policy line; viz., come out with broad policy statement of our views on whole Arab-Israeli impasse and what we propose to do about it (see Embassy Despatch 135, September 9). [2] Tiberias reservoir project might gain Arab public acceptance as part of such over-all solution. Hesitation and indecisiveness on our part likely to unloose Pandora's box of evils.

Since Department possibly unready for move dramatic enough to overcome emotion of Arab public, it would appear only practical alternative is continued dispassionate engineering study of Yarmuk high dam plan. Studies to date show amazingly divergent conclusions. This is project of sufficient magnitude to make real dent in refugee problem, at an annual cost much lower than amounts we are devoting to Israel.

2. To extent Israeli public does not understand United States position, it is in part result of efforts by Israeli Government and press to mispresent or withhold information about United States position (e.g. statement of Foreign Minister to me that no one aware United States Embassy not going to Jerusalem (Embassy telegrams 315 [2] and 67 [3]).

3. In talk I had with Bendor past week, he made point reported above concerning state of Israeli public opinion. I told him we must be equally concerned with trend of United States public opinion toward policies of Israeli Government; that this trend result of increasing doubts concerning:

(a) Effect of Israeli Government policies free world security in area. United States has made fearful sacrifices as result similar vacuum in Korea and US public wants make sure every effort taken now to remove temptation to Kremlin which currently exists here. Israeli Government position rightly or wrongly been widely regarded as obstructive.

(b) Israeli Government refusal take its share of responsibility for solving problem of Arab refugees. Warm support which American people gave to Israel, result of conviction Jewish people as refugees from totalitarian persecution entitled to help. Arab refugees from Israel similarly entitled to assistance in return to normal life. Widely held opinion in US, Israeli Government should cooperate.

(c) Israeli Government fait accompli approach to Jerusalem problem. Since World War II, between 72% and 94% of American public has supported United Nations. General belief that support should extend to resolutions US has not voted for as well as those we have. Israeli Government violation of General Assembly resolution on Jerusalem and particularly its recent efforts to induce countries having missions here to disregard it, not well received by informed United States public opinion.

The Chargé in Jordan (Lynch) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY AMMAN, September 21, 1953—1 p. m.

129. Deptel 123.[2] Embassy has described Jordan's position with respect to regional scheme for development of Jordan Valley in Embtel 125.[3] Embassy is convinced political and psychological considerations rule out possibility of Jordan's acquiescence under any circumstances short of an over-all peace settlement acceptable to the Arabs. So charged is the political atmosphere in Jordan vis-à-vis Israel, that economic sense is not the criterion by which they reach decisions. Emotion dictates a course of no piecemeal, non-political agreements with Israel until, if ever, a satisfactory over-all political settlement is achieved. This means that a course of US policy action which envisages a step-by-step approach to the solution of the Arab-Israeli problem (as exemplified by the regional Jordan Valley scheme) is doomed to failure at the start. Its only real chance of success is that it become an integral part of a realistic over-all political settlement based on a recognition of the fact that without major Israeli concessions (territorial and/or otherwise) there will be neither a settlement of the Arab-Israeli problem nor stability in the Middle East.

Given this hypothesis, it can be seen that the injection into the picture of new "circumstances" such as the Banat Yaacov diversion incident does not alter the situation as far as Jordan is concerned. That Israel has undertaken further unilateral action with respect to the use of Jordan Valley waters is, therefore, not a lever we can successfully use to persuade Jordan to give up her own unilateral scheme (the Yarmuk project) to the mutual interest of both countries. It is axiomatic of the Jordanian Arab, mirrored in the policy actions of his leaders, that he would rather hurt himself than help his "enemy". Even if Jordan is given to understand that refusing to accede to a regional scheme for development of the Jordan Valley means consummation of the Banat Yaacov scheme in the form of total diversion of the Upper Jordan into Israel, Jordan will stand fast. Presumably she would wish to go ahead with Yarmuk project on assumption that loss of Jordan waters would perceptibly but not seriously reduce the efficacy of Yarmuk scheme.

In light of foregoing, the problem before Department would seem to lie in choosing between: (1) Permitting unilateral development of Jordan Valley waters by both sides, with possibility of curtailing Yarmuk project for reasons already mentioned and with result that fewer refugees would be settled in Jordan Valley than anticipated, or (2) exerting financial or other pressure on Israel not to divert Upper Jordan waters in order to permit full consummation of Yarmuk project and to permit settlement of full complement of refugees in area. If there is greater urgency to the problem of settling refugees and ameliorating refugee problem than there is to settling Israelis in the Negeb, or elsewhere in Israel, then alternative (2) would seem like the logical choice. If this is not case and concomitantly, we wish to run the risk of further antagonizing Jordan and Syria (and possibly the Arab world) in permitting Israel to divert Upper Jordan, then alternative (1) is preferable. Engineers and legal observers all seem of opinion that from any water rights point of view, Jordan should be entitled to some of the waters of Jordan River.

If Department not persuaded to Embassy's view of situation, Embassy suggests Department take action along line advocated in paragraph 6 reftel. Turning matter over to UN has advantage of providing opportunity to test Embassy, Amman's thesis while at the same time removing in some measure, responsibility from Department of having made what may be most unacceptable recommendation.

Embassy agrees UNRWA not proper level for overture. Embassy does not clearly understand what Department means by "Arabs are prepared in advance by groundwork of factual knowledge" in penultimate paragraph. Who is supposed to do the preparing? Presumably, not US diplomatic missions in area because then we acquire the onus we are trying to avoid. UNRWA officials might do it at country director level.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Politico-Economic Adviser in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Gardiner)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 25, 1953.

Subject: Israel/U.S. Relations—Diversion of Jordan River

Participants: Mr. Eban, Israeli Ambassador
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israeli Embassy
The Secretary
Mr. A. Z. Gardiner, NEA

Ambassador Eban stated he wished to take the opportunity at this appointment, which was made a week ago, to review Israel/US relations in general, but that he first of all wished to review an urgent subject, the situation which had arisen with the UNTSO and with Syria in connection with the proposed diversion of Jordan water below the Banat Yaacov bridge. The Department will receive Mr. Sharett's detailed remarks to General Bennike on this subject.[1] The Ambassador stated that it was an electric power project, with no effect on the general topography of the region; that the new channel that is being cut does not empty the existing channel of the river and affects no land rights in the demilitarized zone; that the project had been instituted on September 2 with the knowledge and concurrence of Colonel Tillotson of the UNTSO, and work had continued on the project with his knowledge. Mr. Karrer, TCA Water Specialist, had been informed on the 5th or 7th of September. This was not a suddenly-undertaken enterprise and there was no doubt as to its legitimacy or value.

General Bennike, however, had ordered the work stopped; his action was based on misinterpretation of facts relating to land rights and flooding damage. There was no justification for suspending the work, and the Israeli government felt it could satisfy all points at issue on the technical level except for the point raised by General Bennike which concerned the military advantage of the project. A decision on a matter of this nature was necessary at a higher level, but the Ambassador did not think that development work of benefit to the region should be held up for military considerations. In any case his government was not the body carrying out the scheme, but it wished to preserve the rights of the Palestine Land Corporation, the concessionaire, as well as the rights of [1] In a decision of Sept. 23, Major General Bennike, as Chairman of the Israel-Syria Mixed Armistice Commission, requested the Israeli Government to cease its operations in the demilitarized zone so long as an agreement was not arranged. (U.N. doc. S/3122, Annex I) Foreign Minister Sharett replied on Sept. 24 with a series of reservations on the part of Israel. (U.N. doc. S/3122, Annex II) In a letter of Oct. 12, the Syrian Representative at the United Nations complained to the Secretary-General that Israel had violated the Israel–Syria General Armistice Agreement of July 20, 1949 (U.N. doc. S/3106); and in a letter of Oct. 16 to the President of the Security Council requested a meeting of the Council to consider the complaint. (U.N. doc. S/3108/Rev. 1) On Oct. 23, Bennike submitted a report to the Security Council on his decision of Sept. 23 (U.N. doc. S/3122). The Security Council considered the Banat Yaacov question at its 629th to 656th meetings, between Oct. 27, 1953 and Jan. 22, 1954. (U.N. docs. S/PV. 629–656) The text of Council Resolution 100 (1953), adopted on Oct. 27, is printed as Document 710.

Syrian landowners in the Jordan Valley. The Ambassador thought that all these rights could be respected. It is Israel's intention to appeal the case to the Security Council. He would like US assurance of a full opportunity to appeal the case through peaceful means.

Cutting across these issues had come Assistant Secretary Byroade's advice on the subject of our withholding the allotment of aid to Israel under the Mutual Security Act. The Israeli government had never regarded MSA aid as tied to political action, and it was most unfortunate to make it a counter in this complex issue. The Ambassador thought that linking the release of aid funds to the issue would prevent Israel from pursuing an orderly appeal through SC channels. He recalled that the Israeli case was sustained in the Security Council three years ago when similar issues arose in connection with the Huleh development. He therefore requested the Secretary to keep separate the subject of US aid to Israel and the immediate problem of water development. If the case does come before the Security Council he hoped that the US Government representative will take the same attitude adopted three years ago, and permit economic development to continue in the demilitarized zone. He further hoped that in view of the Syrian threats to take military action that the US Government would insist on peaceful procedures.

The Secretary replied to Mr. Eban at this point along the following lines.

The Secretary was unable to pass on the merits of the project from a technical standpoint. However, it was very difficult for the US when Israel took action in apparent disregard of UN decisions and created de facto situations which Israel could not later abandon. The Israeli Foreign Minister had said "What we have, we hold." This makes for a feeling here that it is Israeli government policy to create situations and then say "Here I am, unless thrown out by force." It would be much easier if Israel had more regard for UN action and legal processes.

At this point Mr. Eban stated that Israel's territory was fixed by armistice agreements which set the limits of Israel's existence. Israel however was willing to discuss territorial revisions. Mr. Eban pointed out that Israel was a small country of only 8,000 square miles, where there were 2,000,000 square miles of territory in Arab lands.

The Secretary asked whether this was a new position of the Israeli government, and the Ambassador replied that Israel had always been prepared to discuss territorial adjustments at a peace conference and that they were quite prepared to bargain with the Arabs for territory.

The Secretary observed that many people felt that Israel had received too many immigrants. He further stated that it would make a good impression in the United States and be of help to the United States if Israel agreed to comply with the UNTSO decision unless and until such a decision was reversed on appeal. He pointed out that we were trying to adopt a fair, even-handed policy in the Near East. This was difficult to accomplish if the Israeli government appeared to be disrespectful of United Nations decisions while we continued to furnish aid which from our point of view was discretionary. The incident of the diversion of the Jordan waters had closely followed the move of the Foreign Office to Jerusalem which had caused strong protest in Congressional circles. Both these situations will make matters very difficult for us if there appeared to be defiance of the UNTSO decision by Israel.

At this point Mr. Eban stated that work at Banat Yaacov had begun with UN acquiescence and that Israel would be prejudiced if the work was now stopped.

The Secretary then asked what Israel intended to do if the decision were against Israel, and the Ambassador stated that Israel hoped to be able to continue the work and to satisfy the controversial issues.

The Secretary stated that the whole question of the Jordan waters appeared controversial and that both sides were suspicious that the other side would steal water which rightfully belonged to it.

Mr. Eban affirmed that Israel would like to engage in discussion of regional water problems but their neighbors would not agree to do so. The Secretary pointed out that their neighbors in the present instance were sustained by a decision of Bennike and while the Secretary was not familiar with the merits of the case, the fact that General Bennike came to the scene as an unbiased person, and had reached a presumably unbiased decision, was an important consideration. Under these circumstances, he did not see how the Israeli government could say it was not going to pay attention to his decision.

Ambassador Eban pointed out that we had previously taken no action in matters of this kind until the matter reached the Security Council. He also pointed out that all Security Council decisions had been honored except by Egypt in the case of Suez Canal transit.

The Secretary again referred to Israel's right to appeal to the Security Council but said that if Israel took action to continue construction while an appeal was pending a situation might be created which could not be undone.

Ambassador Eban responded that no water would be actually diverted until sometime in 1954.

The Secretary then asked if the Israeli government felt it prudent to invest funds in a project which might not be sustained by the Security Council and Ambassador Eban stated that only two or three million Israeli LS were involved.

The Secretary then stated that an effort might be made to secure an opinion from Bennike to permit certain work to continue while the appeal was pending, assuming that the facts as to individual rights would be found as stated by Ambassador Eban.

The Ambassador then requested the opportunity to consider the more general subjects of American/Israeli relations. It would not be prudent on his part to conceal the fact that a cloud had fallen over these relationships. While no one issue was paramount, the cumulative effect of many minor issues had caused growing concern on Israeli public opinion. He referred first to the reluctance of US officials to reassert in public the firm friendship which existed between the two countries. The absence of such protestation was noticeable now because so many had been made in past years. US leaders are now eloquent on the subject of Arab friendship, and appeared to have lost their balance. He referred to a recent Presidential message to a Zionist group which lacked any reference to the friendship existing between the US and Israel. In the second place, as far as Jerusalem was concerned there were two aspects to the conflict of opinions. The first related to the move of the Foreign Ministry and the second to the general question of Jerusalem and its internationalization. Whereas the two governments appeared to be in agreement on the subject of internationalization, the US public seemed aware only of the conflict on the move of the Foreign Ministry. A recent statement by Catholic interests favoring regional internationalization had failed to take into account the change in the US Government view.

A third topic related to the agitation of the Israeli public because of United States proposals to supply arms to the Arab nations. The Ambassador referred to the passionate feeling in Israel on this subject. The situation on Israel's borders is tense, and Arab leaders are not talking or thinking peace. It was incomprehensible to the Israeli public that the US should furnish arms to such dictators as Naguib and Shishakli. Such action was not in the US tradition. The Ambassador thought in this case that we should err on the side of caution and abandon proposals to provide the Arabs with military assistance.

Other issues seemed minor in comparison. The Ambassador hoped that we would not continue to be so rigid in our restrictions of contacts with the Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem and would follow the action of other countries in this regard. He referred again to the unfortunate linking of release of Mutual Security funds with political issues between Israel and the Arab states, and pointed out that both countries were in the long run governed not by individuals but by public opinion. In conclusion he felt that the relations between Israel and the United States were basically on a sound foundation of public understanding.

The Secretary regretted that time did not permit his making a response to this statement of Ambassador Eban's since another engagement was pressing on his time. He said he hoped to see Mr. Eban next week for a further talk and he would make a full reply at that time. He observed that the Arabs with whom he had discussed general subjects at the United Nations had told him that they hoped for better relations with the new Administration but that it appeared that the United States was continuing to favor Israel. Mr. Eban replied that this was proof of the failure of our policy of friendship with the Arab world.

As Mr. Eban took his departure, the Secretary restated his opinion that we should withhold release of MSA funds until the issue of the Jordan waters had been further clarified.[2]

362. Embassy comments on Embassy telegrams 355[2] and 356.[3]

[Here follows detailed comment on numbered points 7 (a) through (e) of Bennike's decision of September 23 and Sharett's reply of September 24.]

It will be seen from Tekoah's (Embassy telegram 309)[4] and Sharett's (Embassy telegram 356) presentation of Israel's position that if problem is to be settled on basis of weighting of legal claims and counterclaims, decision will be long drawn out and outcome uncertain. There are, however, two preliminary and possibly more fundamental questions: (1) Why Israel Government, contrary to its previous plans, chose to raise the question in this sudden and exacerbating form and (2) whether Israel Government is going to work with, and abide by decisions of, United Nations machinery.

While pattern of Israel Government actions is not perhaps beyond dispute, it would seem to be emerging. Since visit of Secretary to this area for purpose of determining how United States can help in bringing about relaxation of tension, there has been: (1) Israel Government resort to reprisals contrary to request of United States Government, (2) sudden week-end move of Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem contrary to request of majority of countries having missions here, (3) impatience with United States grant-in-aid objectives (Embassy telegram 1965), [5] (4) efforts by Israel Government to thwart United States plans to remedy free world security vacuum in area, (5) action in violation demilitarized zone agreements on Egyptian border (Embassy telegram 342) [6] and (6) sudden decision to commence construction on Banat Yaacov Dam with resulting flare-up of Arab resentment at time United States Government about to make suggestions for regional plan of development of water resources. While motives of these actions is matter for conjecture (Embassy telegrams 120, [6] 215 [6]) it is clear their result is to maintain relations between Israel and Arab neighbors in state of increased tension that renders more difficult the efforts by United States Government to help in solving area problems and to improve security of free world along this important segment of Soviet periphery.

Embassy's analysis of effect of withholding first quarter allotment of grant-in-aid (Department telegram 226) [7] as follows. Israel Government has funds on hand to pay debts maturing in October and probably also in November. Payments must immediately be made however, on petroleum ($3 million) and ship load of wheat scheduled for sailing week of October 5 ($1 million). Balance of allotment also urgently needed as stated in joint Embassy–TCA telegram 295. [8] If grant-in-aid not available further borrowings will, of course, be necessary, increasing debt load early in 1954 which, under section 105, could not be paid from delayed release of first quarter allotment. Since effect of holding allotment is thus more than mere delay, it should serve to make Israel Government aware of importance of early solution to Banat Yaacov. If Israel Government should refuse cooperation in efforts bring about early relaxation of tension resulting from construction there would be increased debt pressures with resultingly greater possibility of default early in 1954.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, September 26, 1953—6 p. m.

366. Called this afternoon on Foreign Minister at his invitation his residence Tel Aviv. He made following points:

(1) Whereas in past with reference to drainage scheme United Nations at no time expressed opposition to scheme itself, Bennike decision does.

(2) In past requests to interrupt work had always been for definite period rather than indefinitely as in present instance.

(3) While Bennike's letter does not explicitly refer to agreement with Syria it is implied. Decisions of chairman UNTSO with regard to stoppage or commencement of work have never been contingent in past on obtaining Syrian agreement. Inasmuch as Syrians continue to pursue policy of economic warfare, compliance means agreeing to "death warrant for any development in demilitarized zone". As analogy Sharett referred to request by mandatory power in 1936 for temporary suspension of immigration. It was even harder in that case for Jews to refuse request as it meant loss of lives, he said, but they felt it essential do so because compliance would have destroyed position in international law.

Foreign Minister went on to say that fortunately there were features in both letters (Embassy telegrams 355, 356) [2] which mitigated seriousness of situation. Referred specifically to fact that Bennike's text does not explicitly state "agreement with Syria"; to Israel's position that request cease work was not ultimatum since no date given; and to fact that while his own letter asserts request unjustified, it does not say Israel will not comply. Suggested that if it were possible make clear that United Nations not questioning legitimacy of work as such, that stoppage is not for indefinite period, and that work agreement means Israel Government agreement with Bennike or Arab owners of land rather than with Syrians, compromise would be possible. Otherwise he said, Israel Government sees no alternative to submission matter to Security Council.

[1] Repeated to Damascus, London, Paris, Jerusalem, Amman, Beirut, Baghdad, Cairo, and Jidda.

[2] Not printed, but see footnotes 2 and 3, supra.

Foreign Minister said matter was not ordinary difference of opinion over technical aspect of armistice agreement. It involved project which was link in chain of operations vital to Israel's future and agreement to Bennike request in present form would give Syria strangle hold over good part of Israel's economic future. Said further he hoped Syria would not start firing; that Israel feels in matter as if it is fighting for its life. Concluded that any friendly influence which could be brought to bear for constructive compromise would be welcome.

I replied that much thought had been given by United States Government in recent months to ways in which it could use its friendly influence to promote rational plan for water development in region and unfortunate that effort to exercise this influence has to be against background of controversy resulting from sudden beginning of construction. I asked Foreign Minister if he could tell me when decision had been made to commence construction since we had been informed project had not been included in the current year's budget. He said he had been under impression construction scheduled for a date even earlier but he would ask Minister of Agriculture "who may have had his budget difficulties".

I said 2 things clear:

(1) United States interested in promoting most equitable use of area's water and

(2) It will be most difficult for United States to lend friendly influence to this end while one of nations not complying with UN request. With regard to immediate problem arising from Bennike's decision, I suggested possibility of compliance by Israel with Bennike's request with accompanying statement safeguarding Israel's legitimate interest.

When I mentioned Secretary's conversation with Eban (Department telegram 238) [3] as indication problems likely to arise in event non-compliance, Sharett said he had only received telephoned report of Eban cable but said he wished to stress advisability of "not precipitating crisis or semblance of crisis in United States-Israel relations because it can only raise new problems associated with national pride and self esteem. World has learned that national pride often stronger than economic sanctions."

While Foreign Minister appeared interested in possibility of compliance with accompanying statement he saw no possibility now of taking further steps until there is reply from Bennike, but added he would discuss matter with Cabinet tomorrow.

[3] Not printed, but see footnote 2, Document 673.

During discussion Foreign Minister took position Syria had no status in matter and present question in demilitarized zone one between Israel Government and UNTSO. He expressed opinion that problem had been complicated by fact that in a matter between Israel Government and Bennike, latter, unlike Riley, had given his decision to Israel and Syria simultaneously making it impossible for Israel Government to work out solution with Bennike before it became final. I indicated Bennike bound treat both sides to dispute equally and special treatment of one side would have been improper.

British Ambassador told me Sharett had made above points to him earlier in day; that he emphasized importance which British Government attaches to compliance with United Nations machinery.

367. Bennike informed by Consulate General Jerusalem yesterday morning (Deptel 239). [2]

Foreign Minister called me on telephone from Jerusalem last evening; said he had received letter yesterday morning from General Bennike to which he had replied in afternoon and felt hopeful on possibility of "[compromise]". Foreign Minister said Israel press had reports from Washington (Gelblum of Haaretz, according to another source) that Department withholding aid pending compliance by Israel with UNTSO's request. Added that public information United States exercising economic pressure, might make it impossible for Israel to agree to compromise.

[2] Telegram 239 to Tel Aviv, Sept. 26, requested the Embassy in Israel (in reiteration of telegram 95 to Damascus, repeated to Tel Aviv as 204, Sept. 11) to inform Bennike of the Secretary's conversation of Sept. 25 with Eban, indicating the intention of the United States to support decisions of the U.N. Truce Supervision Organization unless and until they were reversed by U.N. authority. The Embassy was instructed not to advise Bennike of specific sanctions such as the withholding of economic aid. (683.84A322/9-2653)

Jerusalem Post this morning says Bennike has accepted invitation to call on Foreign Minister today; that according informed observers government ready continue discussions until mutual agreement reached with UN; that Israel will follow no extreme formula in negotiating.

Comment

1. All evidence (including talk with Foreign Minister) continues to support assumption decision commence Banot Yaacov construction hastily taken around middle of August.

2. It is Embassy's belief decision had following purposes: (a) Create fait accompli on construction; (b) Induce state of mind in Arab Governments that would make impossible approach to water development embodied in TVA study; (c) Raise in UN Israel's right to all water of Jordan as oblique attack on TVA study; and (d) Change Foreign Ministry from position of isolation, in which it had placed itself by move to Jerusalem into center of controversy. Latter two indicated by completeness with which legal position worked out from beginning (Embtel 309)[3] and Foreign Minister's excessive concern over "very existence of state" in a development Israeli Government itself provoked and which month before it had no intention of undertaking at this time.

3. Re publicity, Embassy suggests neither publicly confirming nor scotching reports.

4. It will be recalled move of Foreign Ministry timed immediately after $6,000,000 emergency release on June 22 so no possibility of utilizing latter as restraint as in case of Banot Yaacov construction and release of FY 1954 funds. Embassy-FOA suggest it may be desirable to state to Israeli Government when figure of FY 1954 aid for Israelis discussed that it constitutes present intention subject to modification as circumstances may require and that purchase requests against quarterly allocations will also be subject to circumstances existing at time.

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 29, 1953.

Subject:	1. The Israel–Syria Demilitarized Zone Dispute 2. UN General Assembly Aspects of Tunisia and Morocco
Participants:	Ambassador Zeineddine—Syria Dr. Zakkaria—Syrian Embassy Mr. Hart—NE Ambassador Moose Mr. Harlan Clark—Embassy Damascus NEA—Dr. Howard NE—Douglas Worcester

1. The Israel–Syria Demilitarized Zone Dispute

Ambassador Zeineddine began the discussion by recalling the earlier dispute over drainage of the Huleh marshes, a dispute which culminated in the May 18, 1951 Security Council resolution. He charged that Israel had never complied with the resolution but had continued drainage operations, thereby removing a natural military barrier between Israel and Syria. Moreover, the Israelis were in the habit of conducting operations as if the Demilitarized Zone (and the Jordan River) were Israeli territory instead of territory where sovereignty is in abeyance pending a final peace settlement.

The present dispute, he said, was a natural outgrowth of letting the Israelis get away with things 2½ years ago, but the Syrian Government is disturbed particularly by three aspects of the dam diversion/canal operation below Baanat Yacoub:

a. Syrian information indicates the Israelis do not intend to return diverted water to Lake Tiberias via power installations, but instead will store it for use possibly on the coastal plain in line with the Hays-Lowdermilk plan.

b. Diversion of Jordan waters will leave dry an important system of eight canals in Syrian territory; some of these canals feed the rich Buteiha farms.

c. As a military barrier, the Jordan River will become adjustable to Israeli desires by means of opening or closing the dam spillways.

[1] Also drafted by Harry N. Howard.

Over and above these considerations, however, the Syrian Government regards the fate of General Bennike's September 23rd decision as the touchstone of: applicability of the Armistice Agreement; UN effectiveness in dealing with Israel; and of meaningfulness in the Tripartite Declaration. Therefore, Syria believes support of General Bennike to be vital and is anxious to know the position of the United States.

Mr. Hart explained that only yesterday morning Prime Minister Mardam Bey had received assurances from Chargé d'Affaires Geren in Damascus that the United States stands fully behind the decision of General Bennike. Moreover, on the previous Friday the Secretary had made our position known to the Israeli Ambassador. Ambassador Zeineddine was pleased to learn of our statements, but he wondered what the United States position would be if Bennike's decision were placed before the Security Council. Would the United States still support it?

Mr. Hart replied that the United States is supporting Bennike and will continue to stick by the decision as it now stands. It is too early to tell what may develop, but meanwhile the U.S. hopes that both Israel and Syria will not increase the present tension. Moreover, the Israel Government has not yet categorically refused to comply with the decision, which may be a token for the better.

Ambassador Zeineddine expressed doubt that Israel would comply unless the United States made itself heard, or more importantly, placed some practical restraint upon Israel. Mr. Hart reiterated that the United States position had been put to Israel and had been put emphatically.

Ambassador Zeineddine may or may not have caught the drift; he simply replied that Syria does not want to seek Security Council review but may have to do so as a last resort.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Douglas Worcester of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 29, 1953.

Subject: Discussion on Economic Assistance to Syria

Participants: Ambassador Zeineddine—Syria
Dr. Yassin Zakkaria—Syrian Embassy
Mr. Jernegan—NEA
Mr. Gardiner—NEA
Ambassador Moose—Embassy, Damascus
Mr. Harlan Clark—Embassy, Damascus
Mr. Norman Paul—FOA
Mr. Worcester—NE

Mr. Jernegan stated that at present he was handling discussions for Mr. Byroade on all aspects of aid programs for NEA countries, and he was happy that both Ambassadors Zeineddine and Moose were able to be at this meeting. He recalled the previous discussions which the Syrian Ambassador had had on this subject with Departmental and other agency officials; the purpose of this meeting was to recapitulate and clarify various points, while acquainting the Ambassador with new thoughts developed. Mr. Jernegan proceeded then to elaborate on the following points in an aide-mémoire, a copy of which was to be delivered later to the Syrian Embassy: [1]

1. The United States wants to grant Syria military and economic assistance; moreover, we look to Syria for closer cooperation in fulfilling its refugee agreement with UNRWA. For the present, however, we do not insist that these three aspects—economic, military and refugee—be commingled, but are amenable to treating them separately if Syria so desires.
2. While grant economic aid can be used in many ways, it cannot be substituted for any funds which Syria might find available from the IBRD. However, the U.S. believes that with Syria it can devise arrangements with the IBRD for Syria to marshal available resources from all three in the near future.
3. As for specific economic projects utilizing grant aid, the U.S. understands that Syria has three which stand at the stage for execution: a roads program, construction of Latakia Port, and reclamation of Ghab Swamp. Naturally the U.S. is not endorsing these projects to the exclusion of any others which Syria might have in mind, but believes simply that these are the ones closest to leaving the drafting board.
4. The U.S. understands that the IBRD has been discussing terms under which the foreign exchange costs for these projects might be loaned to Syria; we are prepared to assist Syria by advancing funds to meet some or all of the local costs. Also we are prepared to underwrite completion of worthwhile stages in these projects, although amount of funds which we would commit must depend on technical considerations which the U.S. stands ready to study with Syria and the IBRD. Finally, we want to stress the importance of prompt action in determining those commitments, in view of U.S. budgetary limitations and the U.S. Government's desire to use available funds with reasonable dispatch.

[1] Dated Oct. 1. (783.5 MSP/10-153)

5. In addition to grant economic aid as illustrated in the three projects, the U.S. is willing to provide technical assistance as requested by Syria, and in particular to furnish engineering surveys relative to development of Syrian water resources along the Euphrates and elsewhere.

6. As for the necessary procedures which Syria must undergo to initiate a program of U.S. grant economic and technical assistance:

> a. Syria and the U.S. would have to conclude a standard agreement defining the terms under which the assistance would be forthcoming. This agreement would contain the assurances set out in Section 511 (b) of the Mutual Security Act of 1951, and a copy of 511 (b) would be given the Ambassador at this time for study.
> b. Syria would be expected to continue its negotiations with the IBRD and to accept the guidance of the Bank in establishing Syrian controls for ensuring the proper execution of projects.
> c. Syria would have to agree to embargo shipment of certain materials to countries within the Soviet orbit, since under the provisions of the Battle Act the U.S. cannot supply aid to countries not enforcing such an embargo.

In conclusion Mr. Jernegan reaffirmed the Department's confidence that future support for aid to Syria could be maintained in the U.S. Government. He stressed, however, that support will not be obtainable unless demonstrable progress in projects is made in the near future. The Congress is reasonable and sympathetic, but it expects to "see dirt fly" in the Near East; the Department will lack persuasion if it goes to the Hill next year with only blue prints again as bona fides.

Ambassador Zeineddine thanked Mr. Jernegan for a very clear presentation. He added that he would like clarification of certain points, however. What about the execution of other projects? Could such take place after Syrian submission of cost estimates and project justifications? Syria has many projects in mind, grain elevators being one of the foremost, but Syria cannot afford the money to blue print projects without knowing if funds will be available for the actual construction. Furthermore, negotiations between Syria and the IBRD might not be completed until the middle of 1954.

Mr. Jernegan replied that the U.S. could not commit itself in advance to just any project, but he reiterated that we are ready to contemplate assistance on other projects which are equally as worthwhile as the illustrative three, and which are sufficiently advanced in planning. He indicated that grain elevators could be considered feasible. In reply to the Ambassador's further question on IBRD controls, Mr. Jernegan and Mr. Gardiner said that such controls would of course satisfy the U.S. but should be thought of as a guarantee to Syria that the finished product would meet the requirements.

Ambassador Zeineddine continued to propose projects. There is need in Syria for an agricultural bank; the existing institution advances credit only to established farmers upon the strength of a mortgage. The loans are insufficient for farmers to develop their land by modern methods of conservation and mechanization. A new bank with greater credit facilities could promote good principles of land utilization. Two other advantages would accrue: a progressive, landless element would be enabled to purchase farms, and consequently land reform would be initiated through a procedure which the Ambassador thought was much better than division of existing rights and claims. The latter procedure provokes bitterness and evasion. Therefore, since Syria does not have the capital to create the bank, and since the project cannot be "blueprinted" and is outside the scope of IBRD, could the U.S. earmark a portion of present funds in order to later finance this demonstrably laudable project? Also, could the U.S. earmark funds for Syrian participation in two regional projects—the Mediterranean–Persian Gulf highway, and an Arab Development Bank which could finance revival of the Hejaz Railway and water harnessing on the Euphrates?

Mr. Gardiner asked how ownership of the Arab Bank would be evolved, and how such matters as interest and dividends would be settled, or indeed reconciled with Islamic views.

Ambassador Zeineddine thought the Arab Bank might function as a non-profit juristic person with multi-national directors. Saudi objections to the interest angle could be overcome; "learned opinion" does not forbid rent, but the use of money acquired from money for the purpose of making a further profit. He believed the Iraqis might now go along. Additionally, if Aramco were to advance more money to Saudi Arabia than could be utilized readily, Ibn Saud might be persuaded to deposit such funds in the Arab Bank.

Mr. Jernegan said that the Department was interested in all of the ideas which the Ambassador had presented. At some later date we might be disposed to cooperate toward their fruition. He reiterated that none of them, however, were organized sufficiently to justify the earmarking of U.S. funds. The Arabs have yet to reach agreement on the highway and the Development Bank. As for the Yusuf Pasha Barrage plan, it would take probably two years just to make an engineering survey to determine the feasibility of construction. To repeat—it is vital that Syria utilize the available funds for readied projects. In addition, surveys can go forward on others, and when completed be the basis for project construction requests in the following years.

Ambassador Zeineddine reverted to the agricultural credit bank. He believed its plans would be worked out soon, and with its importance to the overall economic welfare of Syria, why couldn't the U.S. earmark funds to establish it? Also, Syria would like to send a number of students abroad to agricultural schools, preferably here but possibly in Europe as well; could funds be set aside for their expenses? Mr. Jernegan explained that the student question was covered by technical assistance rather than grant aid, and at any rate would involve only a relatively small amount of money. Mr. Gardiner suggested that Syria might get funds for the agricultural credit bank by allocating the equity and the profits which would accrue eventually from the three projects outlined earlier by Mr. Jernegan.

The Ambassador countered that Syria intends to use such profits for projects of social welfare. To Mr. Jernegan's interjection that Syria might be interested in an industrial bank like the one set up by IBRD in Turkey, he replied that apparently the IBRD was not ready to do so. However, he would be happy to discuss an agricultural-industrial bank with FOA officials.

He concluded by saying that it was very important for the U.S. to make the terms of a Syrian agreement as "easy" as possible. President Shishakli is beholden to public opinion. The street element in Syria must not be able to portray the agreement as an instrument of colonization or imperialism. After all, it is the essence which is wanted in the agreement, and not so much the form. For instance, since Syria does not and has no intention of shipping materials to the Soviet bloc, why belabor the point?

Mr. Jernegan expressed his confidence that an agreement could be evolved to the satisfaction of both countries. Possibly the Syrian Government could comply by a simple acknowledgement of the terms of our agreement. Ambassador Zeineddine thanked the group and said that he would forward our views to his Government. He mentioned that he would like to return later in the day and discuss the Israel–Syria controversy and the Tunisia–Morocco question.

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET NIACT CAIRO, September 29, 1953—2 p. m.

379. As we have been reporting recently, Egyptians have been endeavoring to avoid any sort of controversy with Israelis and have been playing down reports of border violations, shooting of Bedouin, et cetera.

This morning Vice President Abd Al Nasir asked to see me to tell me that last night 300 Israeli troops occupied Al Auja in demilitarized zone and immediately began digging trenches, putting up barbed wire, et cetera at a point one kilometer northeast of the "building" at Al Auja. Egyptian liaison officer protested in vain. Israelis retorted that Al Auja is a part of Israel.

I counseled calmness and Nasir said they would be calm but in view of "gravity" of what Israelis have done, and also in view of fact that Egyptians have withdrawn most of their troops from Gaza district, he must immediately send troops to area. I said "do not let them enter demilitarized zone". He said "no at least for the present they will stay on border". "However", he said, "I am feaful of reaction of our public when they hear this and it will be impossible to keep them from hearing it".

I told him that I would communicate on subject immediately with Department.

I should appreciate it if Department would let me have as soon as possible some word to pass back to Nasir.

[3] Ambassador Caffery reported on Sept. 30 that he had transmitted this message to Nasir and the Minister of Foreign Affairs, both of whom expressed satisfaction at the Department's attitude. They affirmed that Egypt was taking the matter up through the U.N. Truce Supervision Organization and that they would refrain from provocation. At the same time, Egyptian forces in the area which were reduced in May were being reinforced. Nasir said he was awaiting further information as a result of the Department's inquiries of Israel and expressed the hope that Egypt's reliance on U.N. action would "result in something more than usual words." I stated stoppage of work only after completion of portion lying in demilitarized zone could not be considered by USG as compliance.

[2] In telegram 256 to Tel Aviv, Oct. 1, the Department stated that the present status of Israel's compliance with Bennike's decision to stop work on the canal project was unclear. The U.S. Government believed the Israeli Government should have stopped work upon receipt of Bennike's decision whether or not an appeal to the Security Council was contemplated. In order to clarify the matter and give maximum support to the U.N. Truce Supervision Organization, the Embassy was instructed to inform the Israeli Government, and the Department would inform Eban, that completion of the Demilitarized Zone portion of the work before stopping would not be considered by the U.S. Government as complying with Bennike's decision. (683.84A322/10–153)

Sharett summarized IG position by saying there are two questions: (1) with respect to land, it is a question of fact as to whether Arab lands in Israel are affected (Embtel 356);[3] (2) with respect to water, there has not as yet been any diversion and will be none until completion of canal, so no complaint can be made on that score at this time. Sharett said portion of project lying within demilitarized zone is major piece of construction and will take many months.

Sharett stated that IG has not stopped work on canal; that complication arose after work had been underway and Bennike did not specify date by which work should be stopped; that IG had offered to satisfy his doubts on factual side; and this discussion still continuing. Sharett said at luncheon with Bennike on Tuesday latter claimed IG had worked on Arab land though admitted it was not now doing so. Sharett suggested they go over pertinent documents together. Bennike replied his men looking into them.

Sharett says if at end of this discussion there is no agreement IG may appeal to Security Council and, if it does, it will then have to decide whether to stop work pending Council consideration.

He went on to say in friendly but vigorous fashion: "Your present policy is blasphemy. Christ himself came to Jerusalem. So did Dulles, a religious man. Other religions, to be sure, have interest in Jerusalem but those who launched them were Jews. Reason given by Western powers for not wanting move of Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem was that it would increase tension. That would mean Arabs would determine Jerusalem policy. Jews have been in Jerusalem for thousands of years and government is thereby right. Government of Israel, not just particular ministries or branches of the government, but government itself, has been in Jerusalem since 1949. Therefore no basis for change in Western powers policy because of move of For-

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart) [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 8, 1953.

Subject: Arab-Israel Relations: A Basic Review by the Secretary.

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Mr. John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State
Mr. Henry A. Byroade, Asst. Secretary, NEA
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

This meeting was continuation of an interview between the Secretary and Ambassador Eban on September 24, at which time the Ambassador raised questions concerning basic United States-Israel relations upon which the Secretary replied that he would have to defer comment until a later date since he was scheduled to attend another meeting.

Ambassador Eban opened the conversation by stating that Israel had made "progress" with Bennike on the Jordan diversion problem. A series of conversations had been held between Bennike and Foreign Minister Sharett and it was understood that the Israel Government was awaiting a reconsideration by Bennike of his decision. Israel had also undertaken to assure adequate water to Arab properties in the demilitarized zone and had given this assurance to Bennike and not to the Syrians since by Israel's interpretation of the Israel-Syrian armistice agreement, Israel owed no responsibility to Syria on this matter. Assistant Secretary Byroade, asking for permission to respond on this point, stated that whatever may be the conflicting interpretations of the armistice agreement, Bennike's position in the matter had been made clear. He had requested that the work stop.

[1] This memorandum was summarized in telegram 276 to Tel Aviv, Oct. 9. (611.84A/10-953)

The Secretary brought the conversation to the topic upon which he had understood that Ambassador Eban wished his reply, namely, an analysis of United States–Israel relations, what difficulties had arisen and how they could be improved. The Secretary reviewed the closeness of United States ties with Israel, which were not limited to the intimate relationship between American Jewry and that state, but which were felt throughout America as the result of the Judeo-Christian civilization which is America's heritage. Throughout the United States, there was also widespread admiration for Israeli energy in tackling the many difficult problems of survival and state-building. Posing the question: "What is our policy for Israel and the rest of the Near East?" the Secretary defined it as centered primarily in the achievement of area peace, particularly peace between Israel and the Arab states. Peace would greatly improve Israel's internal economic situation and reduce its need to divert manpower to military channels and improve its trade. How is peace to be obtained? Certainly not by supporting Israel whether she was right or wrong. There was conviction in the Arab states that America had supported Israel without qualification for some time and, as a result of this conviction, American influence in the Arab states had sharply declined. The Secretary recalled that he had spoken in May to Prime Minister Ben Gurion in this vein. [2] The Prime Minister, in statesmanlike fashion, had responded that it was greatly to Israel's interest that the United States so conduct its affairs in the Near East as to regain its influence among the Arabs. The Secretary could readily understand that Israelis shared the sentiment of an early American patriot [Stephen Decatur], [3] who said: "Our country! In her intercourse with foreign nations, may she always be in the right; but my country, right or wrong". The United States Government, however, had to form its own judgment as to Israel's conduct and, if it was to gain and hold the influence which it requires to promote peace in the area, it must adopt an attitude of reserve toward such Israeli conduct as does not conform to the best international standards. Specifically, the United States Government feels that Israel has been over-aggressive, over-insistent on what it wants and too eager to achieve immediate goals without regard to the impression which it makes on world opinion. The Secretary wished to suggest to Israel that the kind of policy the Unted States Government is pursuing today will also serve the best interest of Israel, as well as the entire area. The Secretary could not set himself up as a judge of Israel. However, United States policy had to be guided by some set of judgments. The fact that it had reached a certain judgment might suggest to Israel that she is over-aggressive and that a more temperate mood on her part would encourage greater moderation in the rest of the Near East and would assist the United States in this policy.

[3] Brackets in the source text.

The Secretary pointed to a talking paper [4] before him and remarked that he had a long list of complaints and incidents to which the Israel Government would, no doubt, in each instance offer what it genuinely considered to be an adequate justification. However, he would not review these at this time. He would simply ask the Israel Government to believe that the United States entertained the friendliest feelings for it but had arrived at the conclusion that what apparently was the inevitable impetuosity of a nation bursting into existence after thousands of years, had generated a momentum which had now carried it too far. However essential such momentum may have been to Israel's creation, the future of Israel depended heavily on the impression its conduct would make on the international community. The current impression, he reiterated, was that of over-aggressiveness. This summarized what he had in mind.

Ambassador Eban expressed gratitude for the sympathetic viewpoint expressed by the Secretary and his relief to learn that nothing of a fundamental character divided Israel and the United States. He had found a deep and widespread sympathy for Israel throughout the United States; a sympathy not limited to American Jewry. If recently he had expressed in a speech in Canada his disquiet regarding American-Israel relations, it was over the impression gaining ground in the United States that friendship between Israel and this country was lessening and that America was turning away from Israel toward the Arabs. Israel did not regard United States friendship with the Arabs as inconsistent with friendship to herself; she heartily approved of economic aid programs to the Arab countries. The Arabs felt otherwise and considered any American friendship for Israel as showing lack of friendship for themselves. Israel hoped that the United States would not go along with this concept. With reference to the Secretary's cited conversation with Ben Gurion, the Ambassador recalled that Ben Gurion had also mentioned to the Secretary that he hoped the United States would not seek Arab friendship through disassociation with Israel or by encouraging the extreme Arab demands on Israel which the United States Government must know could not be carried out and which the American people themselves would not support. Israel hoped the United States Government would make it clear to the Arabs that its friendship for Israel was indestructible. The Ambassador added that Israel was prepared to make some boundary adjustments in a peace settlement with its neighbors although it envisaged no radical changes from the armistice lines which had now constituted the framework of the state for five years. He referred to the recent Syria-Israel border talks and earlier boundary discussions which had come close to success but were always defeated by political unwillingness in the respective Arab capitals to sign anything in the nature of an agreement with Israel. He mentioned Israel's willingness to offer port facilities at Haifa to Jordan so that it would serve the commerce of both countries, as well as Israel's willingness to facilitate communications between Arab states across Israel territory. Israel had been seeking means of satisfying the concern of world religious interests in Jerusalem. As regards refugees, he would like to point out that refugees still remained refugees in the Arab countries but not in Israel. Israel was also ready to pay compensation and was studying this problem. However, would the Arabs agree to accept it?

[4] The talking paper, not printed, was sent to the Secretary by Byroade on Oct. 7. (611.84A/10-753)

Shifting to a new topic, Ambassador Eban referred to the list of incidents and criticisms of Israel to which the Secretary had made reference and stated that the United States Government has really but one criticism and that is of Israel's security policy. It was very difficult, he said, for any country—especially the United States with its lack of experience of invasion and with its long undefended borders—to understand the immediate and acute sense of insecurity of a country where but a few miles separated homes from enemy guns. Israel's losses in her war of 1948 had been severe and were remembered with emotion. They were comparable in Israel to what 600,000 American losses in Korea would have meant here. The Ambassador had noted how much the actual losses of America in Korea had moved the American people. Unfortunately, the Arabs did not simply have a policy of no peace with Israel, they were exerting pressure on every frontier. World opinion, therefore, was not the only consideration in the eyes of those whose responsibility it was to defend Israel's homes. The Ambassador noted that he had informed the Department of State some time ago that Jordan had been found guilty of 150 violations of the border of Israel from July 1952 to July 1953. During the same period Israel had been found guilty of thirty violations. The Israel Government had asked the Department to take this matter up energetically with Jordan but the Department had declined. The Ambassador felt that the ratio of violations had not changed since.

Turning to Egypt the Ambassador mentioned that the Israel Government had made representations in London with respect to the current Anglo-Egyptian talks. The Israel Government hoped that these talks would succeed, but it had two interests in their outcome: (1) it feared that Egypt might inherit a huge base complex which would dangerously shift the balance of power; and (2) it wished to see preserved in any new Anglo-Egyptian agreement the principles of free transit of the Suez Canal which had been internationally accepted. As he understood that the United States was likely to be consulted regarding any Anglo-Egyptian agreement, the Ambassador was bringing these points to the Secretary's attention.

The Secretary thanked the Ambassador. He wished to emphasize that there had not been the slightest change in the feeling of the American Government toward Israel; however, this Administration felt that it could be more effective for peace in the area. The Secretary's policy would be to clean up obstacles which impeded the achievement of peace and he would be greatly disappointed if he did not make considerable progress in that direction in the next year or two. He asked the Ambassador to ask the Israel Government to be tolerant of American policies designed to reach this end since in the long run they would serve Israel's interests, even though at times they were not altogether agreeable. The Ambassador interjected at this point that what he feared most was that the American public and the Israel public were not being made to feel that relations were as close as formerly. The Secretary continued that it would be necessary for the United States Government to generate a desire for peace among the Arabs. Ambassador Eban again interjected that tactically it seemed best at times for Israel not to constantly entreat the Arabs for peace. The Secretary agreed and Mr. Byroade remarked that the United States could be more effective than Israel in speaking to Arab nations on steps to relax tension. Ambassador Eban responded that Israel felt the United States Government could be most effective by urging the two parties to discuss peace with each other, leaving specifics to the negotiators. The Secretary disagreed and stated that such a line by the United States could not be taken at this time. He closed the interview by urging Israel to abide by General Bennike's decision on the Jordan diversion matter and thereby to remove itself from the awkward positon of being in contempt of a United Nations body.

2. Secure agreement Jordan, Israel on plans for internationalization Jerusalem if subsequently decided by Department this should be discussed.

With regard to (1), Johnston is to attempt obtain acceptance to maximum extent feasible of TVA plan, bearing in mind importance of facilitating maximum refugee settlement in shortest possible time, and U.S. wish to assist economic development in region.

With regard to Jerusalem, no action proposed until indications received from Vatican that proposals for functional as opposed to territorial internationalization would receive widespread support in GA.

Johnston's instructions enable him make clear in NE that future level of economic and military aid, including UNRWA contributions, may be partially contingent upon attitudes adopted toward his mission. He is also authorized to bargain in Syria, Lebanon, Jordan, and Israel with funds presently legislated for aid programs. He is accorded freedom use tactics he judges efficacious.

Hammarskjold is considering tactics use in making TVA study public and we believe he proposes discuss U.K., U.S., French Delegations near future, to determine extent proposals will be supported.

The Acting Secretary of State to the Embassy in the United Kingdom [1]

TOP SECRET
PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, October 11, 1953—2:26 p. m.

1929. For Aldrich. Eric Johnston, Chairman International Development Advisory Board, has been appointed by the President as his Special Representative with rank of Ambassador to proceed on a mission designed to remove some of the causes of tension between Israel and her Arab neighbors, particularly Jordan and Syria, paying special attention to adjustments needed to reduce the refugee problem in Jordan. He will take as a point of departure the TVA study made on behalf of the UNRWA, which is now in the hands of the United Nations and which is a competent engineering study of the water problems of the Jordan Valley system.

The problem is of particular urgency now because the TVA study has just been completed and must be made public soon, while the General Assembly is in session, with all the political questions that naturally will arise. In addition, Israel's unilateral action in commencing diversion of water in the Demilitarized Zone below Lake Huleh has increased tensions in the area. The ever present need for resettling the refugees as soon as possible gives added urgency to the mission.

It is obvious that the engineering findings of a unified water resources plan cannot be carried out without political agreement on the part of the riparian states. Particularly this would involve a number of concessions by Israel to permit relinquishment of exclusive territorial control over the outlets to Lake Tiberias (the natural storage reservoir for the Yarmuk), since the maximum opportunity for settlement of Arab refugees by Jordan appears to lie in the East and West Ghor of the lower Jordan Valley.

It is our intention that the principal beneficiaries will be the refugees, although Jordan, Syria and Lebanon would also benefit. Israel will be called upon to make certain sacrifices, but we feel that Israel has responsibilities to the refugees which she herself apparently has never faced, and believes that some concessions on Israel's part are necessary before the Arabs can be induced on their part to take important measures toward refugee resettlement.

We expect to take the line with Israel that the proposals stand on their own as just and that after the long support and assistance given to her by this Government we hope we can expect cooperation and a measure of enlightened self sacrifice in the interests of effecting some reduction of area tensions.

The Secretary of State to the Chairman of the Advisory Board for International Development (Johnston)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, October 13, 1953.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON: With reference to the President's letter of October 7, 1953[1] appointing you his Personal Representative with the personal rank of Ambassador, I am setting forth below the objectives and broad terms of reference of your mission.

You are entrusted with a twofold task:

1. To secure agreement of the states of Lebanon, Syria, Jordan and Israel to the division and use of the waters of the Jordan River Basin;

2. To secure agreement from Jordan and Israel on plans that may be prepared for the internationalization of Jerusalem, if it is

---

[1] President Eisenhower's letter to Eric Johnston of Oct. 7 reads as follows:

"It gives me pleasure to appoint you as my Personal Representative with the personal rank of Ambassador for the purpose of undertaking a mission to resolve certain problems affecting the Near East. I have asked the Secetary of State to provide you with the necessary terms of reference.

"I assure you of my personal interest in the tasks you are about to undertake and of my appreciation of your willingness to accept this difficult and delicate assignment which, in my opinion, is of primary importance to the United States." (Eisenhower Library, White House central files, Confidential file) subsequently decided by the Department that this subject should be discussed.

With respect to your first task, you should endeavor to obtain acceptance, to the maximum extent feasible, of the report entitled "The Unified Development of the Water Resources of the Jordan Valley Region," prepared at the request of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees under the direction of the Tennessee Valley Authority. This report establishes a broad plan for the effective and efficient use of the water resources of the Jordan Valley without considering political factors or attempting to set the system proposed into the national boundaries now prevailing. The Department has full confidence in the engineering conclusions reached in this study.

In making such adjustments as may prove necessary or desirable, you should bear in mind the importance of facilitating the settlement through the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees of a maximum number of refugees in the shortest possible time and also the wish of the United States to assist in the economic development of Israel and the Arab states.

The settlement reached should fall within the following framework:

1. The division of the water of the Jordan River Basin between Israel, Jordan and Syria should conform as closely as possible to the recommendations of the TVA report. As a minimum Jordan should receive a substantially greater volume than she would obtain from the unilateral development of the Yarmuk alone. Israel should renounce all rights to divert for irrigation more than a specified volume of water from the Jordan River and its tributaries.
2. Armistice line adjustments should be effected so that physical control over the main reservoir (Lake Tiberias), the outlets from Lake Tiberias, and the diversion canal from the Yarmuk is not exercised exclusively by Israel. This will probably require Israel to relinquish control of all or of a substanial part of the area bounded by the Jordan River, the Yarmuk River, Lake Tiberias and the proposed Yarmuk diversion canal.
3. The present demilitarized zones in the Jordan Valley should be eliminated.
4. The problem of development of the Litani River should not be considered in the present context. If raised by Israel, you should state that it is not linked to the plan. If absolutely necessary, you may add that in appropriate circumstances the United States would be willing to explore in the future with Lebanon the possibilities of developing the Litani for the benefit of the area as a whole.
5. If you consider this useful, you may state that the United States is prepared to propose the establishment of a United Nations Water Commission or Commissioner to assure that the waters are distributed in accordance with the technical agreements reached.

Within the above terms of reference you are accorded full latitude to advocate variations in the TVA plan, in order to obtain acceptance by the states concerned.

With regard to Jerusalem, you should be guided in general by the paper entitled "Status of Jerusalem and the Holy Places,"[2] which has been made available to you. The objective of the United States is to obtain the agreement of Israel and Jordan to a plan for the functional internationalization of Jerusalem which will also prove acceptable to the Catholic countries, and command the necessary majority in the General Assembly. Within this concept you are accorded full authority to support any reasonable variations in a plan which the Department would furnish you if this issue becomes the subject of negotiations. You should not suggest changes in the present armistice lines since this is not an essential of the plan, and is likely to invite endless complications. If desired by both Israel and Jordan, the United States would welcome rectifications, such as the elimination of the Mount Scopus enclave, which would contribute to stability and reduction of friction.

The timing of discussions of Jerusalem must be carefully coordinated with current efforts to ascertain the positions that interested countries may adopt in the General Assembly. It will probably be desirable to limit any discussions on this subject, in the Near East, to Jordan and Israel, unless the matter is raised by another state.

In the execution of your mission you will receive the full backing of this Government. You are specifically authorized to make clear to the states concerned that the future level of United States economic aid, contributions to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees, and military assistance, is contingent upon the attitudes they adopt towards your mission. The United States will consider the positions taken by the different states as indicative of their intentions toward liquidation of the refugee problem and toward practical steps, as distinct from theoretical expressions of intent, to achieve a peaceful adjustment of the Near East situation. You may assert that the Executive Branch would feel obliged to report in future hearings before the Congress the progress of your mission, and that any modification of special economic aid, United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees contribution, and military assistance plans of the United States Government, will undoubtedly be affected by the cooperation received in this instance. In any discussions which relate to the problem of assistance beyond FY 1954, you will of course bear in mind the annual appropriation nature of the Mutual Security Program, and will make it clear to foreign government officials that any plans for future aid are contingent on Congressional action. At the time of your mission, negotiations will be in progress with states in the area regarding current economic assistance from fiscal 1954 funds. This fact should assist you materially.

[2] Not further identified.

It is doubtful whether the proposal will attract the Syrians if approached as an economic problem alone, and, unless Syria is assured of United States cooperation in the military as well as the economic field, your negotiations in Syria might be without result. While we are not able at this time to offer military assistance to Syria in terms of a concrete figure, a request from the Syrians for military assistance is one which lies within our present legislative authority to meet. If a reasonable program of military assistance to Syria is required to make your negotiations successful, we have no doubt that the funds will be found to carry it out, although these funds will be very limited for an initial program. Military assistance to Syria would be conditional on Syrian assurances that the arms would be used to meet the prime objectives of the U.S. Government—to improve internal stability and to provide for ultimate defense against aggression—and not used to wage aggressive warfare against Syria's neighbors.

The issue of compensation to the Arab refugees is likely to complicate your task, but discussion of this subject may prove unavoidable. If the matter is raised, your are authorized to state that the United States has encouraged Israel's acceptance of the principle of compensation, and that the United States advocates action to pay compensation as soon as a method of payment can be determined which will not seriously dislocate the economies of the states concerned. You may add that the United States is prepared to consider financial measures to help meet the burden of compensation. The funds of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees spent on development projects can partly meet the need for compensation.

You are accorded complete freedom in adopting the tactics and procedures which you judge most efficacious. I assume, however, that you will wish to avail yourself of the knowledge and area experience of our representatives in Washington and in the field. I am asking the Assistant Secretaries for the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs and of the Bureau of United Nations Affairs to cooperate with you in working out the details of the maximum and minimum United States positions on the various issues and to provide you any further assistance and advice which you may require. I am requesting the President to address letters to the heads of states which you will visit advising them of your assignment and I have instructed our missions in the field to cooperate fully with you.

You should keep the Department informed, through the facilities of our Embassies and Consulates, of the progress of your work. All suggestions which you may forward with respect to support for your mission will receive immediate attention and every effort will be made to comply. Close liaison with the Department is especially necessary since the General Assembly is now in session and issues affecting Israel-Arab relations will be debated.

I have asked the Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs to facilitate administrative arrangements, and to provide any staff assistance you may require. A plane will be put at your disposal.

In conclusion, and I wish to assure you of my deep personal interest in the two problems of refugees and Jerusalem, which you are endeavoring to solve. I appreciate the public-spirited manner in which you have undertaken this difficult and delicate assignment, and I wish you all success.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN FOSTER DULLES

MAJOR POINTS OF NEGOTIATION

With Israel:

1. An agreement with the Arabs on water division and acceptance by the Arabs of the principle of refugee resettlement will have broad, long-term effects on Israel's relations with her neighbors, and will constitute achievement by Israel of major political desiderata.

2. Israel must bear a portion of the burden for settlement of the Arab refugees; in this case by sharing available water and by minor territorial adjustments. The most practical, quickest plan for permanent settlement of a large number is that suggested. This will greatly reduce the harassment caused by infiltration of refugees from temporary camps along Israel's borders.

3. Israel has a responsibility to permit the repatriation of a substantial number of Arab refugees, either directly into her territory or indirectly by transferring to her Arab neighbors certain areas which could be used for refugee resettlement. (The latter alternative would be morally and economically the equivalent of repatriation.) Acceptance of Arab refugees by Israel would permit the utilization of UNRWA funds in her territory for development purposes.

4. Israel will obtain immediate, important development assistance in the form of irrigation works financed from United States aid funds. She will have available water in appreciable quantities free from Arab obstructionist tactics. In the long run she could not expect to divert to her own use all the waters of the Jordan and Yarmuk Rivers to which she has physical access.

With the Arabs:

1. The proposals will provide for the settlement of a larger number of refugees in a shorter time than any alternative. The Arabs cannot escape responsibility to their fellow Arabs by failing to cooperate fully in projects designed to resettle refugees.

2. The development work will materially assist the indigenous population, and will permanently strengthen Jordan and Syria.

3. The Arabs will obtain water which, in the absence of an agreement, Israel may preempt.

4. The rectification of the Armistice lines and elimination of the demilitarized zones contemplated will reduce friction, assure the Arabs of access to and use of more water for irrigation than they can otherwise expect, and give them access to Lake Tiberias.

5. In addition to agricultural assistance, Syria and Jordan will obtain electric power developed from the Yarmuk waters.

The Chargé in Jordan (Seelye) to the Department of State [1]

TOP SECRET PRIORITY AMMAN, October 13, 1953—5 p. m.

157. This Jordan's mood on eve of Johnston mission to Near East as it affects mission's primary task in area (Deptel 159): [2]

1. Jordan is disillusioned by seeming US failure to redress US policy imbalance with respect Israel and Arab States 5 months after dramatic visit of Secretary State to area had inspired such high hopes for a bold and impartial US policy. Arrival of second major US mission to area in wake of disillusionment risks serious repercussions adversely affecting US interests if it becomes clear that mission, rather than recouping US losses in area accentuated by non-fulfillment of hopes, offers little better than collaboration with Israel on Jordan–Yarmuk waters, whatever the economic benefits.

2. Jordan, long less xenophobic than its fellow Arab States, shows increasing signs of anti-Americanism. This is proportionate to extent Jordan attributes pro-Israelism to US moves in Near East. Task of Johnston mission is rendered less susceptible of achievement by fact it comes on heels of Israeli diversionary action at Baanat Yaacov (Embtel 152).[3] Mission will be hard put to convince Jordan Government and harder put to convince Jordan molders of public opinion that timing of proposal not further evidence of US subservience to Israel. If mission unable to disabuse Jordan of this belief, and if proposal is made public, there is risk of exacerbating anti-Americanism to point of no return.

3. Jordan Government and public opinion channels are presently dominated by the Palestinian. He is bitter, emotional, and he has not forgotten. An appeal to his economic reason, without in any way attempting to satisfy his psychological (pathological, if you will) complex, risks not only failure, but may prejudice any future US efforts to solve Palestine problem in toto. An appeal to his sense of dramatics (e.g., espousal of his "right to return"), mixed with fair amount of justice (e.g., promise of compensation, territorial rectification of Jordan-Israeli border) has better chance of securing his recognition of economic facts of life. If mission's proposal for joint control of Yarmuk–Jordan waters cannot now be made part of larger, overall political settlement, it would be better for US interests not to broach proposal at all (Embtel 129).[3]

4. Jordan, like all Arab States, is a nation of bargainers, but Jordan is not likely to consider the barter of exclusive control of the Yarmuk waters for future economic aid a bargain. Threat of withholding US economic aid to Jordan is not expected to overcome emotional aversion to doing business with Israel (except on terms of overall political peace settlement involving major Israeli concessions), even if alternative means servere economic dislocations within country. It is peculiar, but nevertheless, fundamental quirk of the Jordanian-Palestinian to prefer hurting himself to helping his opponent. Since Jordan still believes consummation of unilateral Yarmuk–Jordan valley project is tenet of US policy in this area (Embtel 152) and since Jordan believes that it and Syria have exclusive right to Yarmuk River and that it has proportionate right to Jordan River, use of bargaining tactic suggested by Department not only has little chance of success (for reasons already mentioned), but risks severe censure of US ethics with resultant diminution of already low US moral position.

To avoid risks cited in above four paragraphs, it is of utmost importance that Johnston be authorized to offer a more substantial quid pro quo than further economic aid, that he carefully sound out Jordanian attitudes before making any proposals, and that release of TVA study be postponed until completion Johnston mission.

Department of State Position Paper [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] October 15, 1953.
SD/A/C.1/427/Add.1

SUPPLEMENTARY POSITION PAPER TO POSITION PAPER SD/A/C.1/427 September 5, 1953 [2]—PALESTINE REFUGEE PROGRAM

THE PROBLEM

Positions on the following questions with regard to the UNRWA item need to be formulated in the light of developments since the basic paper was prepared:

1. The level of relief expenditures for the fiscal year 1954;
2. The application of Lebanon for membership on the Advisory Committee;
3. Handling of the TVA Report.

This supplementary paper, together with the paper of September 5 should provide the position both for the United States Representative on the Advisory Commission and for the United States Delegation to the General Assembly.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. Seek to hold relief expenditures for the fiscal period ending June 30, 1954, to 23.8 million dollars on the basis of the comments below. (This completes paragraph 2 of SD/A/C.1/427.)

2. The Advisory Commission should be increased in size to make possible the admission of Lebanon and the addition of another contributing government by the Advisory Commission, subject to the considerations mentioned in the discussion below.

3. Seek support of the UK and French Delegations to join with the United States Delegation in a statement asking for full and sympathetic consideration of the TVA desk study by the states concerned.

COMMENTS

1. With regard to the level of the relief budget for fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, the Department has reviewed the proposed budget of $25.6 million submitted by the Acting Director and considers that savings of about $975 thousand can be effected without impairing the welfare of the refugees on the basis of the program recommended by the Director. Such savings would bring relief expenditures to 24.7 million dollars without taking into account the anticipated employment of refugees on projects during this period. It is possible that another $900 thousand could be deducted from the relief budget and transferred to the reintegration program as a result of such employment. It is suggested that as a matter of presentation the maximum relief budget be shown at $24.7 million less an estimated amount of $900 thousand chargeable to the reintegration budget for refugee employment on projects, bringing the net relief figure to $23.8 million. In the event that this position is not reflected in the joint report of the Director and Advisory Commission to the General Assembly the Department will reconsider its position and instruct accordingly.

2. The Lebanese Government on September 24 officially requested the Chairman of the Advisory Committee of UNRWA to support Lebanon for membership on the Advisory Commission in the General Assembly. Under the terms of Resolution 302 (IV), December 8, 1949, establishing UNRWA, provision was made for an Advisory Commission consisting of representatives of France, Turkey, UK and US to which the Commission was empowered to add three additional members from contributing governments. During the past year the Advisory Commission added Syria, Jordan and Egypt to its membership leaving no further vacancies to be filled. The admission of each of these governments was based not only upon their requests for membership but also upon general agreements concluded with UNRWA for reintegration programs within their respective countries. They had also made contributions of varying degrees in cash, kind or services.

In view of the Lebanese request for membership the General Assembly is confronted with the alternative of increasing the size of the Advisory Commission or refusing to do so and thereby excluding the only other country in the area where large numbers of refugees are located. Thus far Lebanon has concluded no agreements with UNRWA looking toward refugee settlement projects in that country. Moreover, its contributions in cash, kind and services have been extremely small. A further consideration is that if Lebanon were admitted without the addition of another country outside of the area the balance on the Commission would be even. It would be desirable to maintain a majority of contributing governments outside the area by making room for an additional member such as Canada or Australia. It is therefore proposed that the Advisory Commission be empowered by the General Assembly to add two countries to its present membership. This will give the Advisory Commission some bargaining power with Lebanon before granting its request and strengthen the position of the major contributing governments in the General Assembly discussions. Such an increase in size will also furnish an appropriate opportunity to review the present system of full-time representation on the Advisory Commission which has involved difficulties in the relationship between the Director and representatives on the Advisory Commission. Unless the Commission meets less frequently than it has in the past, a larger Commission with continuous representation will make the Director's task more difficult than ever. In the discussion on the question of increasing the size of the Commission the Delegation may, in its discretion, indicate the desirability of holding meetings of the Advisory Commission not more than once every three months.

3. It is anticipated that the TVA desk study which is to be released to the Advisory Commission about October 12 will arouse adverse comment by the Arab States and Israel and that it will not have a fair hearing unless its importance is underscored by the Secretary General of the United Nations and by the three major contributing governments represented on the Advisory Commission of UNRWA. It is hoped that the Secretary General can be persuaded to make a statement calling on the governments concerned to give full and sympathetic consideration to this report. If he does so it would be desirable for the UK, France and US Delegations to follow up immediately with a joint statement supporting the request of the Secretary General. In the event that the Secretary General does not agree to make such a statement a tripartite statement by the US, UK and France would still be called for. Such a statement could be quite brief and should follow immediately the Secretary General's statement, if made, and the issuance by the United Nations of a press release summarizing the substance of the report. It might include only the following points:

(1) Commendation of the report as an illuminating and helpful study of a very difficult problem;

(2) Indication of the interest of the major contributors in forwarding programs for the welfare of the refugees which are consonant with the welfare of all peoples dependent upon the waters of the Jordan;

(3) Appeal to the governments in the area concerned to give the report their fullest and sympathetic consideration.

The Chargé in Jordan (Seelye) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY AMMAN, October 15, 1953—5 p. m.

161. Pass Defense. London, Paris for Johnston. Foreign Minister called me urgently to his office at 3 p. m. with following latest details of Israeli armed attack on Jordan villages, Qibya (151-153), [2] Budros (149-152) and Shuqba (153-154) night October 14.

At 2130 hours Israeli force estimated reinforced battalions strength attacked Qibya located over mile inside Jordan, shelling village with mortar and artillery fire for between 3 and 4 hours. Demolition parties then entered village, blew up 39 houses, looted shops. Up to moment 45 Jordanian civilians (great majority of whom women and children) counted dead, 15 wounded. Quantities unused explosives found where attackers had dropped them. To prevent arrival of Arab Legion security troops from 2 neighboring villages, Israelis poured 43 mortar shells into Budros, demolishing several houses, and shelled Shuqba, located 2½ miles inside Jordan. (Embassy military attaché just returned from scene and confirms all above.)

Foreign Minister stated in strong terms he wished me convey to my government fact that HKJ views Israeli attacks with utmost gravity, that HKJ considering involving Anglo-Jordanian treaty, and that strong representations also being made to French. Foreign Minister heatedly termed attacks "acts of butchery which no government can tolerate". Although, he continued, HKJ would continue to exercise utmost restraint inasmuch as "it is Israel's intention to make Jordan retaliate", under such acts of provocation HKJ could not be expected to restrain herself for long. Then, in moment of anger, he said "if one bullet crosses border tonight we will retaliate".

[2] Parenthetical references are to map coordinates.

Foreign Minister asserted three Western powers must "do something drastic". Said Israeli attack may result in panic in area and government cannot continue to face Parliament and people without some measures being taken to alleviate situation (government's present shaky position obliges it adopt firmer stand than would be otherwise necessary). Said HKJ holds Israeli Defense Minister and Prime Minister directly responsible for attacks since Israeli troops maneuvering in that area with their cognizance.

Comment: Never in last year has HKJ appeared so worked up over Israeli cross-border attacks. Falama and Rantis attacks in January, outbreak Jerusalem firing in April, attacks Wadi Fukin, Surif, and Idna in August paled in comparison in terms both casualties inflicted and adverse effect on HKJ. While current Israeli attack believed in part revenge for murder two children allegedly caused by Jordan infiltrators at Tirat Yehuda night October 13, there is obviously no comparison in degree between two acts. Furthermore, HKJ's cooperation with Israelis in tracking down murderers (Embtel 160)[3] sharp contrast to Israeli massacre of 45 Jordanian villagers.

Israeli attack this magnitude could have come at no worse time: It occurs just prior to arrival important US mission to area and caps 3 other recent unprovoked unilateral Israeli moves (transfer Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem, diversion attempt upper Jordan, occupation Auja demilitarized zone). If there existed before remote hope of persuading Jordan to sit down with Israel at present time to discuss mutual water-development problems and internationalization Jerusalem, such a hope has been dashed to smithereens, at least for the foreseeable future.

TOP SECRET PRIORITY PARIS, October 15, 1953—7 p. m.

1491. London for Johnston. I accompanied Ambassador Johnston on a visit to Bidault this afternoon. Johnston outlined the objective of his mission regarding TVA plan, and Bidault said that he was in full accord with our objectives, but that he was glad to see that Johnston was under no illusions as to the difficulties ahead of him in achieving an agreement with all concerned. Bidault also remarked that France continued to have special interests and a traditional connection with Lebanon and Syria, which had in no way been affected by any of the recent speeches by representatives of those two countries in UN.

Johnston also outlined our ideas regarding a settlement for Jerusalem, and said that he felt there was a strong possibility that it might be necessary to settle Jerusalem along general line of 1950 Swedish proposal [2] in order to obtain Israel's agreement to TVA plan. Johnston also told Bidault that we had approached the Vatican on this subject and had just heard that they had rejected our proposition and remained in favor of complete territorial internationalization of Jerusalem. Johnston then said that he hoped that Bidault would use his influence with Vatican to get them to accept something along the lines of Swedish plan which he thought was only solution that would be accepted by both Jordan and Israel.

Bidault had not been briefed on subject of Jerusalem, but he expressed full understanding of our objective and said that he would look into matter further himself, and meanwhile he would explore subject with Vatican, indicating France's interest in arriving at an agreed settlement of this difficult problem.

The Acting United States Representative at the United Nations (Wadsworth) to the President of the Security Council [1]

[New York, October 17, 1953.]

I have the honour on behalf of the Government of the United States, to request you to call an urgent meeting of the Security Council to consider, under "The Palestine question", the matter of the tension between Israel and the neighbouring Arab States with particular reference to recent acts of violence and to compliance with an enforcement of the General Armistice Agreements.

The United States Government believes that prompt consideration of this question by the Security Council is necessary to prevent a possible threat to the security of the area, and in this connexion considers that the Council would, in the first instance, be assisted by a report in person as soon as possible from the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization.

The story also reportedly contained the reaction of some Arab delegation leaders to the effect that Johnston was a "well-known pro-Zionist." The Embassy felt that if the story were not countered, public opinion might be prejudiced against the Johnston mission, thereby creating an obstacle to unbiased consideration of his proposal by the Syrian Government. The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET NIACT TEL AVIV, October 17, 1953—10 p. m.

472. At request Foreign Minister Sharett, met with him at his residence Tel Aviv this afternoon. Referring to Israel–Jordan border situation, he stated following:

Did not wish say word in justification anything which had happened. Wished repeat, however, that the latest incident treated in isolation would distort picture. Latest events must be understood against recent rising tide border lawlessness including thefts, firing at transport, and such incidents as that at Yehud. This situation intolerable, he said. Israel hoped for sign Jordan agreed situation was intolerable and would agree meet with Israel leaders on highest level in order find means reduce border tension.

Of late, Foreign Minister stated, Israel has "met with imputations of very serious design". Had just received report of conversation between Byroade and Nahum Goldmann, according to which Byroade said that underlying rationalization of all that has happened in last few months is "grim design on part of Israel to unleash furies in region by provoking war". Foreign Minister stated he hoped that report was inaccurate since there could be "no more fantastic misreading". [2]

Said it was true Israel does not accept state of economic stagnation and will make use of its sovereignty to explore all possible schemes of development. Has been true Israel not willing cease pursue this course just because part of project is in demilitarized zone. To cease for this reason will not only guarantee stagnation of zone, but prevent other kinds development. To conclude from this, however, that Israel is deliberately bent on "producing first-rate catastrophe in Middle East is too fantastic for words". Foreign Minister said he wished "completely disabuse Assistant Secretary Byroade's honest and clean mind of such pollution which can only affect the attitude of trust and sincerity in Israel–United States relations".

[1] Repeated to London, Amman, and Paris; sent by pouch to the Arab capitals.

[2] In telegram 309 to Tel Aviv, Oct. 19, 7:16 p. m., Byroade advised Russell as follows:

"Statement attributed by Nahum Goldmann to me, urtel 472, was made with introduction 'I cannot believe it could be true, but sometimes I am forced to wonder if underlying rationalization of all that has happened in last few months is grim design on part of Israel to unleash furies in region by provoking war.' Think you handled conversation great skill in spite of propaganda thrown your way about state of my mind." (684A.85/10-1753)

He argued that coincidence of many developments may have produced most unfortunate situation in area, but claimed that United States policy, specifically in its effort to make up to Arab world and show that Israel will not get what it wants, was factor in this development. As illustration, contrasted United States reaction in three different situations as follows:

1. Despite Egyptian defiance of Security Council resolution on Suez, United States has not taken position that American aid to Egypt contingent upon its compliance with the United Nations resolution.
2. In Trieste dispute when Yugoslavia assumed threatening attitude and there were rumors United States would withhold economic aid, United States immediately denied it.
3. In case of Israel's questioning Bennike's right order cessation of work until agreement reached with Syria, United States stopped economic aid and there are reports that Syria informed of that fact.

Foreign Minister stressed view that United States policy as illustrated in above examples "encourages Arab appetites and makes it doubly unnecessary for them to come to agreement with Israel".

In answer to my query as to whether in his opening remarks about not wishing justify anything that had happened he had meant that Israel disavows the Qibya raid, Foreign Minister replied that he could not say before tomorrow's Cabinet meeting that Israel disavowed incident, that what he meant to say was that "it was tragic that things had come to such a pass".

With regard to reported Byroade–Goldmann conversation I replied that I had no information concerning it, but I had never heard of Byroade saying the things Foreign Minister attributed to him. I knew, however, that both Byroade and Secretary felt that since their visit here there had been series of events which have made it more difficult to carry out United States objective of helping reduce tensions in area. I said Secretary's trip indicated that Middle East problems had high priority on his agenda. Fact that Johnston coming into area further confirmed not only United States interest, but fact States has been giving serious study to problems. Against this background such events as sudden move of Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem, refusal comply with Bennike's request and Qibya raid were source of grave concern. Rather than putting Arabs in receptive frame of mind, they have had effect of convincing them Israel attempting make unilateral policy in area by series of faits accompli. I recalled to Foreign Minister that in August (Embassy telegram 249)[3] I had raised question of whether it was Israel's intention to continue pursue reprisals as instrument of national policy; that first reply from Israeli Government had been Qibya reprisal attack last Wednesday.[4] I added that policy of deliberate reprisals involving killing of innocent persons inevitably created revulsion among American people, was violation of every moral standard.

All of these things taken together, I suggested, raised serious question whether Israel's policies are calculated to bring about reduction in area tension. This I said was probably what Byroade had pointed out.

With regard to question of withholding economic aid, I said that release immediately after Israel had rejected United Nations recommendation would have given a most unfortunate impression of endorsing Israeli Government's position.

Foreign Minister interjected that decision on aid had effect of making it much more difficult influence behavior of Arab countries, who were encouraged by it to intensify their activities against Israel.

Gideon Raphael, who was present at meeting, commented that while United States has excellent record with regard compliance United Nations resolutions, its record with regard to noncompliance of member states was not uniform. He cited as examples: (1) Suez resolution; (2) what he described as Syngman Rhee's defiance of will of the United Nations; and (3) the partition resolution. Re latter, said United States had waivered under threat of violence as result of which Arabs launched hostilities in area. Present situation, he said, was similar. At same time, present United States policy has dangerous effects on Israeli population, whose feeling of isolation and lack of friendship tends to lead to despair. Foreign Minister underscored latter stating Israel forsaken by its friends creates "a disastrous mentality".

I pointed out that United States policies, which it was implied were creating feeling of isolation among Israelis, emerged only after Israeli actions I had mentioned. I stressed that the friendship of both the people, and the Government of the United States was as strong as it ever was subject only to questions that have been raised by these actions.

Raphael mentioned that Israel had conclusive reports of Arab Legion troop movements last few days in Irbid and in Jericho regions, I replied that this bears out that such actions as Qibya raid inevitably serve only to heighten tension.

Department of State Press Release [1]

No. 572 WASHINGTON, October 18, 1953.

The United States Government has the deepest sympathy for the families of those who lost their lives in and near Qibya during the recent attack by Israeli forces. The shocking reports which have reached the Department of State of the loss of lives and property involved in this incident convince us that those who are responsible should be brought to account and that effective measures should be taken to prevent such incidents in the future.

The United States Government has been increasingly concerned at the mounting tension along the frontier between Israel and the neighboring Arab states. It is for this reason that it initiated the recommendation and subsequently, in concert with the British and French Governments, decided to request the Security Council to consider, at the earliest possible date, the situation on the frontiers, to include a direct report by General Vagn Bennike, Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization.

The record copy of the telegram indicates that the text of the release was cleared with Under Secretary Smith. (684A.85/10-1853) dent's message regarding visit Eric Johnston. [2] I first expressed my deep sense of shock at outrage at Qibya village and my sympathy for government and people of Jordan at this time. I then told Prime Minister that I had not heard officially from my government as to steps which were to be taken but that I understood from radio news that tripartite powers were presenting case to UN Security Council. Prime Minister then showed me sheaf of telegrams which he said came to him from all over Jordan and rest of Arab world, practically all of which, he said, begged him not to protest to tripartite powers from whom in the future, as in the past, no hope could be expected. They demanded positive action.

I told the Prime Minister I felt reprisals would be most unfortunate and would place Jordan in same light as Israel. He replied that he did not wish to take reprisals, providing something was done to stop Jewish acts of aggression. He then enumerated long list of organized Israeli attacks on Jordan villages and pointed out that protests to Israel by US and others in past has been completely ineffective. He said no Jordan Government could remain in power if no action was taken. If the three powers or Security Council are not prepared to do it, the Jordan Government must. He suggested that at least aid to Israel should be stopped.

Prime Minister then said that he was aware that the US was anxious for peace and stability in Near East. He reminded me of hopes which had been aroused by visits first of Secretary and Mr. Stassen and subsequently of Eric Johnston and several Congressional Committees. Nothing had come of them to date. I then presented him with President's message and said I had great hope for something concrete emerging as result of Mr. Johnston's coming visit. He read President's message with interest and said that his first reaction was that Jordan Government had always cooperated with American Government and its representatives, but, added again "up to now nothing has come of it". It would be far better, he said, for Mr. Johnston's visit to take place in the wake of some concrete evidence that US was prepared to take action against Israeli aggressions. If he comes now, he said, "all he can expect is abuse" He later tempered this remark by saying that the Jordan Government would welcome Mr. Johnston at any time but indicated visit would have little chance of success unless it followed some positive action by US to show its disapproval of Israeli behaviour. He reiterated that protests were not enough. He hoped that it would not be necessary for Jordan itself to take retaliatory measures.

[3] In telegram 171 from Amman, Oct. 18, Lynch reported on a résumé of joint views on the Arab-Israeli situation drafted by the British and French representatives in Amman and himself, in view of the tripartite approach to the Security Council. The résumé recommended, inter alia, that some positive step be urgently taken to reduce dangerous tension, in particular, that the Security Council condemn Israel for the Qibya incident, and for her attitude regarding the waters of the upper Jordan; and that the Security Council threaten Israel with sanctions unless her attitude changed. Failing such Security Council action, the résumé stated that the three Western powers should consider action based on the phrase in the Tripartite Declaration providing for action outside the United Nations. [Extract]

. . . .

Q. Mr. Secretary, has the United States cut off aid to Israel for the time being until that situation out there has quieted down?

A. We are continuing, as I understand it, our so-called technical cooperation aid. As far as the allocation of funds is concerned out of the amount which was made available by the last Mutual Security Act there has been no allocation, as yet, to Israel, and we have deferred making that in view of the problems which exist in that area between the United Nations and Israel.

That deferment of allocation was made at the time of the decision of General Bennike with reference to the water development of the Jordan. It was not based upon the more recent incidents.

Q. Mr. Secretary, has Israel been informed of this decision to defer any allocation?

A. They know they haven't got it.

Q. Can you tell us the sum involved, sir?

A. I beg your pardon.

Q. Some indication of the size of the sum involved?

A. Well, this year, for the first time, the Congress did not itself attempt to make any allocation between Israel and the Arab States. There was a total sum which was set apart for that area, leaving the discretion in the Executive, as to how it should be allocated. I am sorry to say that I can't remember what that total sum was. Does anybody here remember?

Mr. Suydam: In the order of $50,000,000 or $60,000,000.

A. No. it was more than that. I think the total sum was in the neighborhood of $100,000,000, as I recall. I think we asked for a total of $140,000,000—that's my impression—and it was cut down in the authorization or appropriations to somewhere around $100,000,000 as a total sum.

Q. Mr. Secretary, have there been any allocations to the Arab States to that fund?

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Have there been any allocations to the Arab States under that fund?

A. I just don't know. I don't think it has been done in any important way except as it may have been drawn on in the allocation that was made to the Government of Iran, which was announced some time ago. I doubt whether any other allocations have been made, although they may have been.

Q. Mr. Secretary, could you tell us more precisely why the allocation to Israel has been deferred?

A. It was deferred because it seemed to us that the State of Israel should respect General Bennike's decision, and that as long as the State of Israel was acting in defiance of that decision it was questionable at least as to whether we should make the allocation. I might add we recognize that there was a right of appeal from General Bennike's decision to the Security Council, but we felt that pending the exercise of that appeal that it would have been better that the work be suspended unless General Bennike agreed that it could go on without prejudice to the interests which he thought were jeopardized on the part of Syria.

Q. Do you mean, sir, on the hydro-electric project?

A. Well, it is a dam—water diversion project, yes.

Q. Mr. Secretary, does the move by the Israeli Government to transfer its capital to Jerusalem enter into this decision in any way?

A. No, except that it seemed to provide a greater reason for taking seriously this last refusal. There was a certain cumulative effect to it, I suppose.[1]

Q. Thank you, sir.

Memorandum by the Acting Secretary of State to the President[1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, October 21, 1953.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

Attention General Paul T. Carroll

Subject: Withholding Aid to Israel

---

[1] The memorandum was initialed by President Eisenhower.

Attached for your information is a telegram [2] from three members of the Andersen subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee opposing aid to Israel until it complies with UN directives.

In this connection, you may be interested to know that no economic aid funds have been made available to Israel so far during this fiscal year. The first allocation of funds was just being made when word was received that the Israelis were unilaterally diverting the Jordan River in the demilitarized zone at Banat Yaacov. We informed the Israel Ambassador on September 18 that we would not release any funds until the Banat Yaacov matter was clarified, as we did not want our assistance to coincide with an Israeli action which might result in hostilities.

Later, the Chief of Staff of the UN Truce Supervisory Organization requested the Israel Government to cease its work on the diversion of Jordan River waters. Rather than comply, the Israel Government speeded up construction on the diversion dam. We thereupon told the Israelis that we would not feel justified in releasing aid until they had complied with the UN decision, and that cessation of work after completion of the dam would not, in our view, constitute compliance.

The matter has been further complicated by the recent attack by Israeli forces on Jordan frontier villages. In concert with the UK and France, we have taken the question to the Security Council of the United Nations.

We do not plan to authorize release of any economic aid funds to Israel until these issues have been resolved to our satisfaction.

WALTER B. SMITH

[2] The telegram, addressed to the President, was sent as telegram 643 from the Embassy at New Delhi on Oct. 18 at 9 a. m. It reads as follows:

"Our recent on-the-spot investigation of the Arab-Israel situation leads us to the unanimous conclusion that our government should immediately cease all aid to Israel until said state takes appropriate action to comply with United Nations directives and resolutions. We are convinced that continued economic support of Israel in the face of the reported acts of aggression and other flagrant violations of United Nations directives and recommendations has led to serious deterioration of not only Arab-American relations but also our relations with the entire Moslem world. Minutes of the Seventeenth Meeting of the United States Delegation to the Eighth Regular Session of the United Nations General Assembly, New York, October 21, 1953

US/A/M(Chr)/277

Ambassador Lodge opened the meeting and presented Secretary Dulles, who had been in New York to address the Herald Tribune Forum the previous evening. The Secretary, having recently returned from the Tripartite Foreign Ministers Conference in London, took the opportunity to speak about developments there concerning Trieste and Palestine. [Here follow brief remarks concerning Trieste.]

On the Israeli-Arab matter, it was necessary to bring the whole problem to a focus. It had been decided some weeks ago not to proceed with the allocation of FOA funds to Israel since those funds were designed primarily for water resource development. In view of General Bennike's decision to suspend operations of the Banat Yacoub project, it has been deemed inadvisable to release the United States funds to Israel. It had been hoped that Israelis would heed the appeal and suspend their work. Instead, the work was greatly intensified. The Secretary wanted to make clear that the decision to delay the funds took place prior to the Kibya incident.

The Secretary briefly mentioned Suez and reported an agreement had almost been reached there. He felt the talks between the Egyptians and the British ought not to break down: there was slight possibilities at that point that that would happen.

The Secretary stated that he had been following the work of the Delegation with much interest and appreciated the fine way in which the Trieste and Palestine matters had been handled in the Security Council.

1. Palestine Refugees

Mr. Taylor said that the subject for discussion was the Palestine refugee item, which would be presented in two parts by Mr. Barco and Mr. Gardiner. The former would present a summary of the different elements of the Palestine problem as a whole: the latter would present the United States position.

Mr. Barco stated that the most tragic, most urgent and most difficult element in the Palestine question had been the plight of the refugees. Almost one million of them had left their homes as a result of the war and, after the fighting had ceased, had been forced to live under extremely harsh economic conditions. At the close of the war, the United Nations had taken several important decisions. The General Assembly resolved in 1948 that those refugees who desired to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbors should be permitted to do so. Those who did not desire to return were to be compensated. In addition, at the General Assembly in 1948 the Palestine Conciliation Commission (PCC) had been set up to aid the Israelis and Arabs in the negotiation of their differences, and the Arab States and Israel were requested to negotiate either directly or through the Commission. The truce agreements had been expected to give way to peace settlements within six months.

None of the things the United Nations tried to do had been successful. In 1949 the PCC first attempted conciliation. Conferences had been held with the parties both that year and in 1950, and ended in failure. In 1951, at the initiation of the United States, the PCC, assuming the role of mediator, called the parties together and made its own proposals for partial repatriation of the refugees who could be integrated into Israel's economy. Arrangements for the allocation of the Jordan River waters had also been suggested, as had the enlargement of the scope of the Armistice Agreements and compensation by Israel of those who did not want to return to their homes. Those efforts were rejected completely by the Israelis, largely on the ground that the PCC had no authority as mediators to make any proposals. The Arabs refused to consider them because they did not go far enough toward implementation of the General Assembly resolutions.

In 1951 a major effort had thus been made and had failed. Since that time, all efforts had been directed towards matters of lesser importance. During the past year, the PCC had obtained agreement by Israel to release the blocked accounts of the Arab refugees, which were held in banks in that country. The objective was to obtain the release of some five million pounds sterling. Partial success had been achieved through the initial release of one million pounds sterling. The Arabs had not received that effort with all the sympathy it deserved. Since then, however, a number of obstacles had been removed and negotiations were proceeding for the release of the remaining accounts.

Another difficulty not to be overlooked was the fact that the armistice lines were set up on a temporary basis, which fact had created serious problems resulting in continual incidents on the frontiers. The differences on the question of waterways had a definite connection with the armistice lines.

On the basis of a report from Gordon Clapp, the General Assembly established the United Nations Relief and Works Agency

(UNRWA) in 1949. UNRWA had been dealing with the refugee problem since that time. The United States also had given principal attention to refugee matters for the past five years. The fact of greatest political significance had been the underlying problem that neither party had been willing to take steps which would prejudice their political rights. The Arabs should not be condemned for their part in keeping the matter alive. They were very much afraid each stage of the effort would be the last and they could look at past United Nations efforts and find considerable justification for their fears.

Ambassador Lodge asked whether the Arabs wanted the destruction of the Israelis or whether it was felt they wanted to progress from that point. Mr. Barco expressed the opinion that the Arabs would be pleased to see the Israelis go down. The more rational leaders realized however, that Israel was here permanently and that we were going to continue to support that State. It was felt we should give them time and we should solve some of the specific problems.

The Syrian Ambassador had told Ambassador Lodge the Arabs wanted one thing taken up at a time in the Security Council. Mr. Barco agreed that one item at a time should be considered completely.

Mr. Richards asked about the conduct of the Israelis. The Secretary cited their intensification of work on the water diversion project and said they had added crews to work nights.

Upon the temporary absence of Ambassador Lodge and the Secretary, who were summoned from the room, Mrs. Bolton assumed the chair. She called upon Mr. Gardiner to present the second phase of the matter, the United States position.

Mr. Gardiner reported that the United Nations had been caring for more than 800,000 refugees the past year. Those people were existing on 1600 calories per day. That had cost rather less than $24 per refugee per day. That fact would put us in the vulnerable position of having treated the Arabs with less care than we treated prisoners-of-war. They had not been our enemies. It would be difficult to satisfy the Arab delegations that reasonable justice had been done.

That year for the first time the UNRWA Advisory Commission had reached agreement, concurred in by the Department of State, the French and United Kingdom Governments, on a draft resolution (US/A/3622) which provided a relief budget of $24.8 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954. That would include a United States contribution amounting to one-half of the total amount. The previous year the United States contribution had been 70% of the total program. In addition, the resolution provided a budget of $18 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1955, subject to review at the Ninth General Assembly.*

It was pointed out that the reported number of Arab refugees had been excessive and obviously, the figures were padded. On the other hand, the ruin of the Arabs which had been caused in part by the Israelis and partially by the alignment of boundaries had been recognized.

Mr. Gardiner reported that when the lands were divided the Arabs had been given poorer land. Their tourist trade had been interrupted. They had not been compensated for the better land from which they had been removed. No less than 300,000 refugees had been living in Arab territory within sight of the Israeli border. There would always be incursions to which the Israelis would retaliate. There would be no hope of settling the border difficulties unless a solution could be found for the problem of the displaced persons. In dealing with those matters heretofore, we had been too optimistic.

In the course of the previous twelve months substantial program agreements had been signed with three countries, Syria, Egypt and Jordan. There was no immediate cause for concern in Syria where there was no great tension. The 80,000 refugees there were assimilated to a great degree. Once a political settlement was reached with Syria, that country could handle its quota of refugees. The best opportunities for settlement existed on farms. UNRWA could not undertake to make the most of such opportunities at that time and the Syrian government was not prepared to take steps to persuade the refugees to move into more available farm land. Instead, Syria had offered the Agency second or third class land. Some resettlement had taken place, but it had not matched the birthrate.

With regard to Egypt, that Government had felt UNRWA would cease the relief program and leave 200,000 refugees stuck there. For that reason Egypt had come forward and made a public announcement of their cooperation. They wanted to maintain harmony on the matter so that there would be favorable consideration in connection with other important issues, such as the Suez Canal, etc. An agreement had been signed with them for the settlement of 100,000 on the Sinai peninsula. Consideration was being given to a project to siphon the waters of the Nile under the Suez to irrigate that land.

* The negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds was requested to seek contributions required to meet the needs of UNRWA, established at a total of $292.8 millions.

An increase of two additional members to the UNRWA Advisory Commission was also authorized in the draft resolution. [Footnote in the source text.]

In the valley of the Jordan River was the third and best possibility. Concerned with that possibility, the TVA Report had been prepared and issued. Its appearance had caused quite a stir in the press. Referring briefly to the background of the Jordan River problem, Mr. Gardiner stated that the original lines were drawn in 1922. The boundaries had been so set, under the original mandate agreement, as to give the mandatory authority, i.e. the United Kingdom substantial control of the Jordan waters. In view of the increasing problem of border rights, with the Israelis on one side and 470,000 Arab refugees on the other side, there was good reason to question whether it was not time for a new deal. The TVA Report was a plan that could not possibly work unless political adjustments were made to assure Arab states that they could control those waters to be stored in Lake Tiberias.

The Secretary commented that on the basis of his personal observations in the area last May, the feeling was that it was not possible to achieve an overall peace there now. One thing should be dealt with at a time. The most encouraging factor was that the settlement of the waterways situation would help solve the refugee problem. That would provide employment and new land for the Arabs. The birthrate was much in excess of the death rate in the Arab camps. The general living conditions in the Arab states were so bad that they were worse than those of the refugees.

Mrs. Bolton noted that Israel desired to divert waters into the Negev, which action would seemingly be in conflict with the TVA plan. It was pointed out that the TVA plan would be advantageous to Israel in that its provision of 100,000 acres of irrigated land in the area would buy them a section of peace.

Mr. Richards said it seemed that to realize implementation of the TVA plan would mean that Israel would have to give up something, and he doubted that Israel would do so.

The meeting adjourned at 10:12 A.M.

156. Pursuant instructions Deptel 143, October 19 I saw Shishakli at noon today. He at once expressed gratification over Secretary's statement to press concerning deferment further US aid Israel, noting that US action was promoted by Israel flouting UN authority re diversion Jordan River in demilitarized zone. He said action had increased his confidence in US administration and in President Eisenhower and gave him hope for the future.

I conveyed contents reference telegram and expressed firm desire for peaceful settlement. He observed, however, that Israel continues to work on the diversion canal in defiance UNTSO and said if peaceful means fail Syrian Government could not divest itself of responsibility to protect legitimate Syrian interests. While admitting Israel could not completely divert Jordan for some time to come, he asserted that Arab-owned mill and farm called Aalmine had already been deprived of water.

Comment: I have never before seen Shishakli so well disposed toward US. I feel confident he will continue exercise restraining influence while awaiting outcome present UN action.

CONFIDENTIAL
SN/920.(55a) (51)

MEMORANDUM

When he passed through Rome en route to Rio de Janeiro, the Minister of Brazil in Tel Aviv [2] called on Monsignor Tardini in order to inquire about the present opinion of the Holy See on the problem of Jerusalem in the light of recent events.

---

[1] Department of State translation.
[2] José Fabrino de Oliveira Baiao.

2. The Holy See views with extreme anxiety the increasing tension on both sides which characterizes the situation between Israel and Jordan; it is convinced that this atmosphere of hatred can at any moment result in an armed conflict of major proportions. Even if such a conflict should last only twenty-four hours, it is obvious that it would again expose the Holy Places to unforeseen risks of damage and even destruction.

3. To avert that danger, which, if it should materialize, might affect world peace, measures must be taken, and each of the parties concerned should take them in a spirit of understanding in keeping with the circumstances.

4. With that noble purpose, graciously and as proof of its desire for peace, the Holy See, as a provisional measure to remove the imminent danger, would be disposed to accept the demilitarization of the Zone of Jerusalem within a radius of fifty kilometers, which Brazil would be prepared to propose.

5. However, if this provisional measure should in practice achieve the results it was desired to obtain by means of the internationalization of the Zone of Jerusalem, recommended by the United Nations, advocated by the Holy See, and supported by Christians and the intellectual world, there would be no objection to the provisional status becoming in actual fact definitive; to this Monsignor Tardini agreed.

6. In this connection, the Holy See would support Brazil in initiating a movement among the Catholic nations, especially the Latin American nations, for the solution of the problem and consequent safeguarding of the treasure of Christianity situated in the Zone of Jerusalem, including Bethlehem. However, for a movement of such magnitude to obtain the success desired, the support of the United States of America would be imperative.

7. Brazil is therefore keenly interested in learning whether it could count on the support of the United States of America for the immediate demilitarization of the Zone of Jerusalem as a provisional solution of the matter. With regard to a definitive solution, Brazil would suggest two formulas: (a) The calling of a conference of the Catholic countries, as well as the United States of America and the United Kingdom, together with Israel and Jordan, to resolve the problems of the Zone of Jerusalem; (b) the calling of an international conference for the signing of a treaty of peace in the Middle East, modeled specifically after the San Francisco Conference for the signing of the Treaty of Peace with Japan, in which not only the countries directly concerned, Arabs and Jews, but also the Christian nations would participate. In the treaty to be signed at that time a chapter would be included which would guarantee the protection of the Holy Places, not only in the Zone of Jerusalem, but also throughout Palestine.[3]

CONFIDENTIAL BEIRUT, October 22, 1953—7 p. m.

365. Eric Johnston and party arrived this morning by PanAm. Proceeding Amman tomorrow by military plane. At Prime Minister's request, Johnston and I called this morning. Proceeding on basis that preferable open substitutive discussion with Jordan and Israel and subsequently with other Arab States, Johnston sought keep discussion general and create favorable atmosphere, stressing sincerity our interest and especially of President in constructive development in area and our willingness be of assistance provided countries of area willing approach present difficulties realistically and with open mind to do their share in seeking solution problems.

Prime Minister expressed appreciation our interest and admiration for President but repeatedly emphasized that we would be in "psychological error" if we were proceed on assumption that economic assistance could be used cure political ills. Rightly or wrongly, Arabs had a clear impression that our interest in their economic betterment had only materialized in relation our solicitude for the welfare of Israel. If we were really going make progress and become positive factor in stabilization of the area, we must make it clear that we had no such ulterior motive and that our interest in the Arab countries had no other implications whatsoever. If we could adopt and follow such policy, the road to Arab confidence and cooperation was open but not otherwise. Arab States would absolutely have nothing do with our economic program if it aided Israel in the process.

[1] Repeated to Amman, Baghdad, Cairo, Damascus, Jidda, and Tel Aviv.

Prime Minister added that, in stressing foregoing, he wished make entirely clear that we need have no fear Arab aggression against Israel. Such was not their intention and preoccupation with their own affairs would in any event preclude their launching any such adventure. Hence, we could help Arab States with no fear that by so doing we might be contributing to the undoing of Israel.

Johnston thereupon outlined certain basic principles guiding his mission and drew parallel Colorado and Rio Grande Rivers which benefitted Mexico. He stressed impossibility fully developing Jordan River without aiding all four countries involved. However, he suggested he would prefer defer discussion details until his return.

Meeting ended on friendly note.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY AMMAN, October 22, 1953—7 p. m.

190. Johnston mission arrived noon October 22. I accompanied Johnston in call on Prime Minister 4 p. m. primarily to pay respects and arrange future meeting for substantive discussion.

Prime Minister stated that in order facilitate Johnston's work vis-à-vis Jordan Government he wished frankly to make position of Jordan, decided upon after consultations with King and Cabinet, perfectly clear. He then enumerated five points which Jordan Government would not under any circumstances discuss. These, if accepted, would have rendered Johnston visit utterly useless and included flat refusal to discuss any plan for use of Jordan waters other than Bunger scheme for Yarmuk.

Johnston then stated he wished with equal frankness to make position of President of United States perfectly clear and proceeded to point out that President would have to go before Congress to obtain necessary money for any scheme and in order to obtain it scheme must be along economical lines. He, Johnston, came to Jordan with an open mind and he hoped Jordan Government on its part would receive him with open mind. It was hope of President to bring great benefits to area and Jordan would be principal beneficiary. After considerable discussion Prime Minister seemed to agree that it would be mistake for members of his government not to permit Johnston to explain new plan and meeting tentatively arranged for October 24.

As Arabs must realize, US has taken strong line on Qibya incident and by withholding aid to Israel in connection by Banat Yaqub construction has shown its intention back UN by concrete action.

Attitude taken by certain Arab leaders toward Johnston Mission, including credulity given fabrications regarding his Zionist sympathies (facts set forth Deptel 172 [3] and Paris Embtel 8 to Amman), [4] together with tendency adopt unconstructive attitude towards issues before Security Council can only damage Arab position before US and world opinion. 3. Meeting charged with emotion. Major difficulties included: (1) Firm refusal even consider course action involving agreement with Israel in any form; (2) Belief on part Jordanians that US and UNRWA committed build Yarmuk—only project in any event; (3) Foolish but strong hope that HKJ can eventually obtain by prior appropriation even larger volume of upper Jordan water than quantity allocated by TVA report.

I made it as clear as I could that US was uncommitted to finance any construction in Jordan Valley. Pointed out that US experts were convinced that unified development held out most possible advantages for HKJ; also that Burger now supports unified concept. Tactic throughout meeting was to keep Jordan representative away from flat refusal towards which they veered many times. By use very plain talk and all persuasive resources at our command we succeeded in extracting promise that Jordan Government would keep door open, study and consider TVA report, and rediscuss sometime after turn of year. Meeting ended in atmosphere cordiality.

4. I do not for a moment believe that we are out of the woods in HKJ. We can however take certain amount of pride in having kept Jordan Government from having totally and for all time rejecting plan. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade)

RESTRICTED [WASHINGTON,] October 26, 1953.

Subject: Economic Sanctions against Israel and Related Matters Affecting US-Israel Relations.

Participants: Secretary Dulles
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Waller
Senator Irving M. Ives, New York

Representative Jacob Javits, New York
Mr. Maxwell Abbell, President of United Synagogue of America, Chicago
Mr. Matthew Brown, Member of Administrative Committee of American Jewish Committee, Boston
Mrs. Samuel W. Halprin, Vice Chairman of American Zionist Council, N.Y.
Mr. Philip M. Klutznick, President of B'nai B'rith, Park Forest, Ill.
Mr. Louis Lipsky, Chairman of American Zionist Council, New York
Mr. William Rosenwald, Vice President Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, New York
Mr. Bernard H. Trager, Chairman of National Community Relations Advisory Council, Bridgeport, Conn.
Mr. Bernard Katzen, New York

Senator Ives and Representative Javits opened the discussion by stating the concern of the group in that they saw a sharp difference in the treatment accorded Israel and that accorded the Arab states. They stated there was deep-seated concern not only among Americans of the Jewish faith but Americans in general at recent actions which tend to lose Israel's friendship while not really gaining the friendship of the Arab states.

The Secretary thanked the group for having the courtesy to call and develop in some detail his long and close relationship with matters affecting Israel and referred to his religious background which had given him long association with Judaism.

The Secretary explained that we were extremely eager to see peace in the Middle East. He had hoped on assuming office that quick progress could be made in this direction but found out during his trip to the area that this was impossible because passions were too high and US influence in the Arab world was at a minimum. He stated he had found Ben Gurion in a statesmanlike mood and that Ben Gurion had himself stated he hoped our influence could be increased in the Arab states. We have been hoping for a period of relative calm under which to carry out our policy—unfortunately the opposite has occurred.

The Secretary gave the group the substance of his recent talks with Ambassador Eban (which are recorded separately) explaining particularly the sequence of events which resulted in a temporary suspension of US economic aid. He stated that what we were doing was done solely to back the local machinery of the United Nations in a situation which looked as if armed conflict might result had we not acted as we had. He explained briefly the US interests in the area as a whole, touching upon both the strategic value of the area and the petroleum reserves upon which our military planning depends. He stated as Secretary of State he could not ignore such vital factors to our own security.

The members of the group in turn identified their organization and stated their feelings. Points raised include the following: Arab economic blockade with particular reference to the Suez Canal; censuring of Israel not helpful because it would make Arabs more difficult to deal with; the impracticability of Israel being forced to obtain agreement of Syria on the Jordan diversion project; it was unfair to Israel to single out Qibya incident as the Three Powers had done.

The general theme of the above was that it was all right to try to make friends with the Arab states but that it should not be done at the expense of Israel. All expressed their appreciation of the Secretary's personal integrity on this matter and his desire to achieve peace.

Senator Ives asked what action could be taken to remedy the situation. The Secretary then read a statement he had prepared for the Press. The general content of this statement was to state in moderate terms the reasons behind the temporary suspension of funds and to restate the fact that there had been no change in our basic friendship for Israel. The group unanimously urged that no such statement be made. It became apparent that the group was against any statement explaining our actions, if it was at all critical as regards Israel.

Congressman Javits then read a statement which the group planned to release to the Press. The Secretary took strong exception to the statement as drafted as it contained various inaccuracies and distortions. He pointed out that if there was a large measure of misunderstanding on this issue it had been done in part by the Jewish fraternity. He suggested the group might spend some time working with representatives of the Israeli Government to try to change their policy of presenting the world with faits accompli. Cooperation seemed to be a one-way street as far as Israel is concerned. He said that we had been working very hard with the Arabs but no one in the group seemed interested in that.

Senator Ives asked whether it would be possible to issue a statement saying that aid was being withheld to all Near Eastern States. The Secretary refused to consider any such statement. He pointed out, however, that Israel would be the main one to suffer from any such policy.

The Secretary agreed that Mr. Byroade would go through the statement prepared by the group for the purpose of removing inaccuracies. This was done and the group agreed to delete several portions. It was made clear that this cooperation on the text of their statement did not imply that the Department of State agreed with the statements of opinion remaining in the statement.

Q. Mr. Secretary, several visitors talked with you yesterday about the aid to Israel problem. Could you tell us something about those talks and also under what conditions the United States would be prepared to restore full economic aid to Israel?

A. Let me say that your question carries an implication that I would have to correct when you say "restoring full economic aid to Israel." You understand that what has happened was that Congress appropriated a lump sum to be available for this fiscal year ending next June 30 for the area of the Near East and North Africa. So far, except for technical assistance, no grants have been made to anyone out of that fund for economic assistance. Now when you get into the reason why there has been a deferment in this matter, all I can say is that I do not think that I can very properly discuss that this morning because while we are talking here this same subject is being discussed before the Security Council, which is considering the report of General Bennike with reference to the Jordan water diversion, hydro-electric project on which he has asked for a suspension of work by Israel. As long as that is up at the moment for discussion at this very instant, by the Security Council, I think it is obviously inappropriate for me to talk about it in a way which might be misinterpreted as getting into a matter which is in the proper judicial channels.

Q. Mr. Secretary, just to make sure we understood you, you mean that there have been no allocations to the Arab States?

A. That is right. (See P.R. No. 602 attached) [1]

Q. Mr. Secretary, back on Indochina— [2]

A. Excepting, as I said, that the relatively minor technical assistance program is going ahead both in Israel and in the Arab States. That is a type of activity where the word "interruption" could not properly be used because that is a continuing program and that is going on without interruption. There have been no new allocations made out of this fund, either to Israel or any Arab state.

Department of State Press Release

No. 604

WASHINGTON, October 28, 1953.

AID TO ISRAEL

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles issued the following statement today concerning economic aid to Israel:

I have today recommended to President Eisenhower that a grant of economic aid be made to Israel in the sum of approximately $26 million in respect of the first six months of the current fiscal year. This is the amount which previously had been tentatively earmarked for allocation to Israel under the Mutual Security Act of 1953, in agreement with Mr. Stassen, Director of the Foreign Operations Administration.

Definitive action in this matter was deferred because of differences between the State of Israel and the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization relating to a Jordan River water diversion project. This work, recently undertaken by Israel, is in part in the demilitarized zone between Israel and Syria. On September 23, General Vagn Bennike, Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization, requested that Israel should cease work on this project pending some arrangement which would insure its conformity with the Syria-Israel Armistice Agreement. The State of Israel did not meet General Bennike's request. It seemed that, if the United States granted economic aid under these circumstances, it would tend to undermine the authority of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization. That authority is indispensable to the prevention of general hostilities and chaos in the area.

Yesterday, in the United Nations, the spokesman for the Government of Israel, in response to a request from the President of the Security Council, agreed that the work started by Israel in the demilitarized zone would be suspended pending urgent examination of the question by the Council. The Security Council thereupon, by unanimous resolution, [1] took jurisdiction of the matter and confirmed the suspension of work on the project. The spokesman for the Government of Israel also stated to the Council that it was the policy of his Government that it would in the future cooperate with the Council's efforts to reach a solution, taking account of all legitimate interests.

[1] Resolution 100 (1953), supra.

The policy of the United States to support the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in this matter has thus been realized, and the impediment to the present grant of economic aid to Israel has been removed.

Programs for economic aid to other states of the Near East are in an advanced state of formulation, and it is expected that some of them can shortly be announced.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, October 28, 1953—7 p. m.

538. From Johnston. Johnston and I spent hour with Foreign Minister Sharett this morning at his residence Tel Aviv. Tone of discussion was friendly. Johnston sketched background US interest Jordan water plan and stressed US security interest in Middle East.

Essence of Foreign Minister's comment was: (1) Argument for inclusion Litani River in Jordan water plan; (2) Political obstacles arising out of Arab unwillingness negotiate with Israel or participate in joint undertaking with her; and (3) Need for "more than persuasion" by US to compel Arab cooperation.

In reply, Johnston made clear: (1) That for many reasons Litani was outside the scope of present discussions; (2) That present political considerations make demand for direct negotiations untenable and obviate possibility of direct multilateral agreement between parties. As alternative he indicated unilateral declarations by the parties would be satisfactory as sole guarantees of acceptance of the principles contained in the TVA report with international or neutral regulatory authority to control distribution of water within the framework of the plan; (3) Degree of cooperation which US extends to other countries will depend on the degree of cooperation they extend to US.

Foreign Minister raised additional points such as: Defects of TVA plan, waters could be used better elsewhere; the waters of the Jordan could not be taken away from Israel without compensation, et cetera.

Johnston pointed out that waters of the Jordan River rise mainly in Lebanon, Syria and Jordan. Conceivable these countries could prevent this flow into the Jordan. The mere fact that the Jordan River flowed for a short distance through Israel did not give it unqualified right to the entire stream. Johnston said no objection to Israel's using her share outside Jordan watershed.

[1] Repeated to Amman, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jidda, Baghdad, and Jerusalem.

Comment: Foreign Minister's objective in discussion appeared to be to accomplish one of two things: Either for the US to compel Arabs to sit down for negotiation with them or to put the blame for failure of plan on Arabs. The possibility that direct multilateral agreement would not be required or that outside body could regulate water distribution seemingly took them completely by surprise.

Scheduled meeting this afternoon was cancelled evidently to give time to consult the Prime Minister and regroup their thinking. Meeting again 10:30 tomorrow morning.

SECRET NIACT WASHINGTON, October 28, 1953—7:32 p. m.

163. Department expects Arab leaders to be disappointed over fact we have released some aid to Israel. We feel it important you be in position give them our thinking which is as follows:

Economic aid contemplated during this fiscal year for Israel computed solely upon basis what US considered essential from strictly economic point of view. US convinced certain amount assistance essential to Israel in order maintain stability inside Israel, absence of which could not be other than disruptive in ME. US was about to advance its first allocation of this fiscal year to Israel when diversion project begun. Our act in withholding aid to Israel was based solely upon our desire back up UN machinery in the field. This drastic action unparalleled in US aid programs considered necessary support authority UN machinery particularly in view dangerous situation Palestine area. Removal of ban had never been tied to conditions other than conformity with UN machinery on this specific point. By the act of Israel yesterday she is now in conformity with UN on this matter. Since Israel now in step present object lesson completed and should have salutary effect. Attachment further conditions not only not warranted but might start chain of precedents calling for interruption US aid in number of parts of world.

[1] Repeated to Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Jidda, Tel Aviv, and Jerusalem.

Some criticism has arisen here that we cut off aid to Israel for UN violation while many other nations are continually in violation UN decisions. The answer to this point is that we were backing the UN machinery in a local situation where it appeared without such backing a real threat to the peace would develop.

FYI If Israel fails implement the promise to cease work or later shows unwilling comply with UN-SC decision on this project, new situation will have been created which we can face on merits at that time.

Secretary today announced programs for economic aid to other states Near East are in advance state formulation and that it is expected some of them can shortly be announced. You should make clear if necessary that economic aid to other states of Near East has not been held up to keep step with suspension grant aid to Israel.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, October 29, 1953—6 p. m.

545. Embtel 538 to Department. [2] Second meeting held at home Foreign Minister in Tel Aviv this morning. Present: Foreign Minister, Minister Finance, Minister Commerce plus Israeli water and agriculture technicians. Russell and Johnston were accompanied by Jones, Barnes, Bergus, Fried, McDaniel and several others USOAI.

Foreign Minister opened meeting by reiterating his understanding that Israel was uncommitted to give clear decision at this time. Johnston confirmed this.

Israel technicians then made lengthy statements on technical aspects of plan. Main criticisms were (1) idea of basin development contained in TVA report too dogmatic—Litani should be included; (2) not always true that gravity flow more economic than pumping; (3) there might be other alternatives to Tiberias as reservoir; (4) Israel's experience showed that southern portion Jordan valley could be irrigated with much less water than TVA report recommends.

Jones replied with able engineering counter arguments pointing up competent judgment behind recommendations of TVA report.

Johnston pointed out US was not wedded to each and every conclusion TVA report. Realized there was additional data available to Israelis on matter which we would be glad to study. We were convinced of soundness of principles behind TVA document, however, and believed acceptances those principles would represent important beginning of solution of other problems including the urgent one or refugees. Pointed out Israel's own political and economic interest in solution refugee problem and raising Arab standard of living. Sharett agreed IG was interested in solving refugee problem and in raising Near East living standards. Stated however there was further but prior premise that Israel must solve own problem production and put more people on land. Israel still only potential refuge for unhappy Jews of several areas including Morocco. He believed three premises could be reconciled.

[1] Repeated to Amman, Beirut, Cairo, and Damascus.

[2] Document 712.

Sharett asked Johnston to convey to President United States the IG view that USG would miss important opportunity if it did not tie in Litani with present plan. IG did not make this sine qua non of cooperation but gave it great weight. Johnston threw as much cold water as he could on this proposal pointing out we would be most fortunate if we were able to reach an understanding on Jordan watershed without going to another watershed. It was most premature from both political and technical viewpoints to give serious consideration to Litani at this time.

Johnston added that United States had most carefully diagnosed the situation and concluded Litani not part of present problem. They would have to respect our judgment on that point.

Foreign Minister concluded by stating there was basic identity of views between IG and US. Certain points for further discussion included (1) total scope of project; (2) certain individual features; (3) type of control authority. As sovereign state Israel would continue certain development works in own territory. (Confirmed "temporary" stoppage of work in demilitarized zone.) While not formally committing IG not to undertake work which would run counter to plan, Sharett said, reality was that all construction planned for the present is consistent with TVA plan.

At Johnston's request Foreign Minister agreed that IG would publish nothing other than its decision to keep open mind and carefully study TVA report and thus obviate possibility devaluing proposals in Arab mind by premature though possibly only partial endorsement.

Comment: General opinion Johnston others present was that results more favorable than expected. The general proposals for technical modifications advanced by IG were not outside realm of feasibility.

The Ambassador in Syria (Moose) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET NIACT DAMASCUS, October 29, 1953—8 p. m.

172. Deptel 163 October 28, 1953. I communicated to President Shishakli orally substance Deptel 163 at 1:30 p. m. October 29. Shishakli appeared pleased USG had seen fit take effective measures support Bennike's ruling and gratified work has stopped. He opined USG able exercise large measure influence over Israeli policy through its grants financial assistance and expressed hope this influence would be used again in future if necessary insure Israeli compliance UN resolutions.

Shishakli then stated he considered recent US action mark friendship for Syria and himself personally and expressed thanks to State Department and Embassy. I replied US action is part general US policy support UN measures and President should not give Embassy too much credit for its hand in matter.

Following important conclusions may be drawn from this episode: (1) Shishakli credits US not UN with stoppage Israeli work. He is exceedingly well-disposed USG whose action he professes believe primarily result his initiative (Embtels 147 October 17 and 156 October 21) though local papers have reported suspension aid to Israel occurred before Shishakli suggested it; (2) Shishakli convinced USG in position secure Israeli compliance on other matters. I therefore believe situation now as propitious as possible for Johnston visit. Shishakli reiterated that he would be pleased see Johnston and consider on basis interests Syria and other nations any project which Johnston might propose. However in order capitalize on current favorable attitude Shishakli, SC should deal effectively with current Syrian complaint (see Embtel 173 October 29). [2]

The Ambassador in Syria (Moose) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET NIACT DAMASCUS, October 29, 1953—9 p. m.

173. Deptel 162 October 28, 1953.[2] It is hoped SC resolution will help allay area tensions. With this in mind Department will note reference "Arab refusal negotiate with Israel" inapplicable here. Syrians have been negotiating with Israelis through MAC machinery since October 9, 1952 in effort remove sources friction arising from creation Demilitarized Zone. Negotiations broken off last May under circumstances casting doubt on Israeli good faith (Embtel 163 October 26 and references therein).[2] Syrians look forward to resolution which will satisfy their complaint and provide basis securing Israeli compliance with existing armistice agreement.

In conversation reported Embtel 172 October 29 Shishakli appeared confident SC would rule against resumption work on Israeli diversion project. He strongly counseled against UNSC insistence on direct negotiations between Israel and Arab states for peace treaties (Embtel 163 October 26), asserting in present circumstances only effect such proposal would be to stir up Arab emotions.

As result USG action and Shishakli reaction thereto, believe prospects here now favorable to begin removing points friction between Syria and Israel eventually perhaps inducing GOS favorably consider regional water development proposals. These prospects will be diminished if SC passes one inclusive resolution re Qibya, Jordan waters, refugees and regional water development. In fact broadening text as suggested Deptel 162 include references refugees and water development will lessen impact here of provisions condemning recent Israeli aggressions and will increase impression UN merely Western tool compel Arabs make peace with Israel.

View foregoing suggest for Department's consideration SC devote separate resolutions to Qibya and Jordan diversion affair and that latter resolution be confined: (1) Support Bennike's decision work can not proceed in absence agreement between Israel and Syria; (2) recommendation parties work through UNTSO for elimination Demilitarized Zone and for other adjustments; and (3) provision for SC review question in 6 months to look into compliance. Privately could then be made clear to parties renewed efforts not required through MAC reach agreement re de facto frontier which would leave way clear for subsequent consideration bilateral or possibly regional water problems. Such treatment would facilitate progress on the more soluble Palestine problems without requiring simultaneous advances on all.

202. Re Palestine in SC, urtel 230, October 29. USUN might at its discretion indicate to Riad following are our views re points raised by him:

1. We believe it is desirable as nearly as possible to avoid any extended consideration of Egypt's connection with matter of compliance with and enforcement of the General Armistice Agreements even though in our opinion Israel's actions at El Auja were provocative and properly condemned by MAC. Any serious discussion of El Auja not only is likely to raise possible complex and unsolved questions like Israel's civilian rights in Demilitarized Zone but most surely would be basis for Israelis raising entire matter of Egypt Suez blockade and its relations to SC resolution of September 1, 1951. We are not now sure that Israeli discussion of blockade can be avoided but we intend to give only passing comment to it if forced to say anything about blockade.
2. In view of fact that certain aspects of El Auja incident are presently before Egyptian-Israeli Special Committee on appeal it would seem best to leave matter there for time being. We do not believe that SC could or should rule on right of Israelis to establish Kibutz in Demilitarized Zone without extensive knowledge at its disposal to effect that Kibutz in fact did violate Demilitarized nature of Zone.
3. We do not now envisage any reference to El Auja in resolution we are presently considering.
4. We can not now make undertaking that we will have prior consultation with Arab delegations on resolution. We do intend however if possible to acquaint them as much in advance as possible of what 3 powers may have agreed upon regarding resolutions to be tabled.

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, October 30, 1953—7:31 p. m.

200. For Lodge from Secretary. Following is our thinking on resolutions on Palestine question. Suggest you consult with British and French and such other delegations (including Arabs and Israel) as you consider advisable and advise Department. Your attention is especially invited to paragraph 3 (e) which will require delicate handling as it is sensitive point.

1. Banat Ya'qub and Qibya items should be dealt with by separate resolutions. (Should you believe procedural and tactical reasons make one resolution preferable, please advise).

2. With regard to Banat Ya'qub resolution should:

(a) Take note of Bennike's letter of September 23, 1953 requesting Israelis to stop work in DZ;
(b) Note his authority under Article 5 of Armistice Agreement and call upon the parties to observe his decisions and requests in the exercise of his authority under the Armistice Agreement;
(c) Declare that it is essential that Israel and Syria observe faithfully their General Armistice Agreement;
(d) Remind parties that interpretation of Agreement rests with Mixed Armistice Commission under Article 7, paragraph 8 of Agreement;
(e) Note that instances affecting DZ have been brought before SC for second time;
(f) Hold that existence of DZ itself constitute lasting basis for dispute between Israel and Syria and thereby is threat to stability of area and accordingly Syria and Israel under Article 8 of their agreement should make mutually satisfactory arrangements for abolition of Zone;
(g) Direct Chief of Staff to report to SC on compliance with resolution.

3. With regard to Qibya SC resolution should:

(a) Declare that reprisal action at Qibya constitutes violation of SC cease-fire resolution of 15 July 1948, Jordan-Israeli General Armistice Agreement and Israel's obligation under Article 2, paragraph 4 of Charter.
(b) Hold that all reprisal actions are to be condemned as being inconsistent with UN Members' obligation under Charter.

---

[1] This telegram was cleared in draft with Secretary Dulles, Under Secretary Smith, Assistant Secretary Murphy, and Legal Adviser Phleger.

(c) Note that there is substantial evidence of infiltration into Israel from Jordan and request Jordan to take any further steps necessary to ensure infiltration is stopped.

(d) Reminder to parties of their obligations under the UN Charter and General Armistice Agreement not to resort to force to settle their disputes

(e) Express the Council's concern at the failure of the parties to achieve progress toward a lasting settlement of the issues outstanding between them by peaceful means.

(f) Direct Chief of Staff to report to SC within given time on compliance given to resolution.

(g) Request Secretary General to furnish such additional personnel and assistance as Bennike may request.

4. With regard Qibya: I would appreciate your views after consultation with British and French on whether SC might hold that Israel should pay reasonable compensation.

5. I do not believe that Truce Supervision Organization can be strengthened by having Committee of Experts sent to area to consult with or assist Bennike. I believe it is important that we not create any new UN body now in connection with Palestine question however temporary its purpose. If it is felt that expert advice is needed you might suggest that Secretary General in conjunction with Bennike might submit a report to SC within stipulated period of time on how if possible TSO could function more effectively.

6. Suggestions for US statement will follow.

SECRET PRIORITY DAMASCUS, November 1, 1953—10 a. m.

176. From Johnston. Moose and I with Bergus, Barnes, Clark had two hour session Shishakli this morning. At conclusion the door remained open, I had assurances Syria would study and consider Jordan Valley plan, and I would be welcome if I returned for further discussions. Shishakli's attitude was as follows:

1. He steadfastly insisted on hinging Syrian acceptance of TVA plan on Israel's "compliance with UN Resolutions". Obviously a large element of political self-protection in this position which might become less categorical later on but I was unable to move him from it despite every possible effort do so.

[1] Repeated to Amman, Beirut, Cairo, and Tel Aviv.

2. He was interested in (a) military aid, (b) our help in liquidating DZ's, (c) other economic aid. He insisted however that these matters were entirely separate from the Jordan Valley development plan. While undoubtedly recognizing our willingness to cooperate in other measures as quid pro quo of Jordan Valley cooperation on his part he refused to accept it as such at this time. He agreed discuss these three matters with Moose however while at same time considering final position on Jordan plan.

3. He had not studied the TVA plan nor had any of his engineers but from what he had seen of it he was not pleased. He feels that it disregards Syria's legitimate rights and took position that Syria had right to half of the waters of the Jordan between Huleh and Tiberas. Also mentioned possibility of diverting Banias before confluence with Jordan. We assured him that reasonable modifications of plan were possible provided they were economic and did not involve the wastage of precious water merely to keep it from someone else who could use it economically.

4. He was not impressed by the suggestion that the TVA plan could be accepted by the several parties through unilateral declarations instead of multi-lateral agreement.

Comment: At least the door is open. Even more than in Jordan I encountered a disposition to premise future action upon the correction of past alleged injustice.

Shishakli wants US economic and military cooperation but seemingly not at the price of having to cooperate with US in any step indicative of rapprochement with Israel. While the political unreality of his position re partition, refugees, and other matters previously covered by UN resolutions may be apparent to us it is also apparent that stern political realities here make it difficult for him to take any other attitude. The crack in the door may be widened but it will take a great deal of persuasion and pressure to do it.

Small benefit in plan to Lebanon did not appear dismay officials but they showed pronounced interest in assistance with other projects. Litani mentioned. General agreement members of my party that attitude here more realistic and favorable than anywhere else.

Prime Minister stressed need for steps to "improve psychological atmosphere." Mentioned possible Israeli territorial concessions to permit refugee resettlement. Stated US economic aid which had hitherto been granted Arabs drop by drop could go far toward creating better atmosphere and should be negotiated without direct reference Arab acceptance TVA proposal. I told him we prepared to give serious consideration any suggestions Government of Lebanon might make.

Naccache and Ammoun of Foreign Office exceptionally forthcoming and receptive. Unnecessity of agreement with Israel and possibility elaborating regulatory authority impressed and interested them particularly.

Nov 2 work was continuing at dam site by at least 25 workers allegedly engaged in repairing leaks in dam. However, outside of Demilitarized Zone tractors and bulldozers were continuing excavation to tie in with DZ. This indicated Israel had every intention resume work in DZ at some future date no matter what decision UN Security Council takes. He cited agreements of 1922, 1923 and 1926 re Jordan river between the UK (for Palestine and Jordan) and France (on behalf Syria). Zeineddine pointed out Ambassador Eban insisting before UN and US public (a) Israel Government not obligated by General Armistice Agreement to make agreement with Syria on Banat Yaqub, (b) Banat Yaqub project not inconsistent with TVA unified plan, (c) authority of TSO chief requires no strengthening. In Zeineddine's view this adds up to future unilateral action by Israel.

Zeineddine stated Syria giving TVA plan serious open minded study from technical standpoint.

With regard US aid to Israel he hopes that US will again stop aid in event Israel fails comply with UN SC decision supporting Bennike.

In response Jernegan's hope Syria would not place itself in position of resisting all development of Jordan Valley, Zeineddine stated that if Banat Yaqub project is killed Syria will not adopt "dog in manger" attitude but prepared study all development plans with open mind.

In response Jernegan's inquiry re Syrian willingness eliminate Israel–Syria DZ, Zeineddine indicated that if Banat Yaqub project killed Syria would be prepared resume MAC discussions with Israel Government looking toward Syrian Armistice border on waterline Jordan River Lake Tiberias.

Comment: Appears Zeineddine is more interested in strategic position of Jordan channel and in preserving Syrian frontage thereon than in economic aspects Israel use Jordan water.

SECRET AMMAN, November 4, 1953—11 a. m.

213. Developments during past few weeks seem to demand careful review of our current policy to make sure that through no ill-advised or precipitate action we make achievement of our objectives in the Middle East impossible.

Resentment in Jordan against US appears stronger today, November 4, [apparent omission] remaining reservoir of goodwill is lower than at any time since the US recognized Israel in 1948. Fact is our prestige here has struck new low.

Increased resentment stems mainly from three developments (Embtel 209) [2] which Jordanians have interpreted to the distinct disadvantage of the US:

(1) Secretary of State's statement indicating US determination to support UN decisions by suspending US economic aid immediately to any Middle East country disturbing peace of area which defies or disobeys UN decisions. Jordanians are invariably omitting reference to qualifying phrase "disturbing peace of area" and believe US policy is now to use threat of economic sanctions as lever to secure acceptance of any UN decision. Because Jordanians are able to cite past evidence of the US having given little more than lip service to UN decisions, this new US policy line appears to them not only inconsistent but, because of its timing, to be aimed more at the Arabs than at Israel.

(2) Alleged US action in Security Council October 29 preventing SC taking steps reprimand Israel for Qibya attack. I do not know what is meant by this allegation unless it refers to possible US efforts broaden scope SC resolution to include general border situation. In any event, Jordanians believe Qibya massacre in itself serious enough to deserve separate treatment.

(3) News reports that US will withhold aid to states not prepared to accept US proposals for unified use of Jordan waters. Jordanians will hotly resent such a threat. Rather than surrendering to threats on matter of cooperation with Israel, they are prepared to continue to live at a level of sub-standard subsistence, as they have for thousands of years.

In view of increased presentiment provoked by recent US course of action, it might be well to review basis US objective in area. Although these objectives are taken from such highly classified documents as recent NSC papers, this is sufficiently self-evident to be printed without damage on front-page of New York Times. Based on the premise that security of US would be endangered if Middle East were to fall under Soviet influence, these objectives are, generally speaking, to obtain:

[2] Not printed.

1. Stable, friendly governments in area capable withstanding Communist-inspired subversion.
2. Settlement major issues between Arab States and Israel with view eventual peace.
3. Change present anti-American trends in Arab world in hope of preventing increased Soviet influence.

Bearing in mind current trends in Jordan which are more and more adverse to position and prestige of west, is US making progress toward achievement of these objectives? I submit that we are not, that we are losing sight of our objectives and that we have reached in our thinking extremely unfortunate stage where, with a seriously dangerous lack of realism, we are prepared to disregard Arab psychology in the interest of what we consider "hard common sense". This road, in my opinion, can only lead to disaster in our relations with the Arabs. For instance if we are to get anywhere we must accept as a reality the fact no Jordanian leader would dare adopt a policy which can be presented by his political opponents as meaning cooperation with Israel. Not only his political future, but his life, would be at stake.

Use of pressure in form of threats to withhold economic aid of our plan for use of Jordan waters is rejected would practically remove all possibility attainment our objectives and play into the hands of the Communists and rabid nationalists of area. Result of such threats will be that we will be told to keep our aid and withdraw Point IV as well. Believe we should stop and think before proceeding any further along such a dangerous path.

I hope you can find time to read the attached paper on "Trends in Israel Policy". I believe this staff paper represents an accurate analysis of the situation. It is interesting to note that the reporting from Israel itself is in balance with the reporting from the Arab states and that both lead to the conclusions in this paper.

I told you this morning there are reports that the Zionists in London were attempting to prevent a UK-Egyptian agreement. If this can be verified it would further support the conclusions of the attached paper.

SECRET [WASHINGTON, undated.]

TRENDS IN ISRAEL POLICY TOWARD THE ARABS

DISCUSSION

Israel publicly insists that her policy is based on a "vision of peace of the Prophets of Israel" and she castigates the Arabs for adamant refusal to negotiate peace. Despite her deeds, which have been such as to preclude a reasonable settlement, Israel has made considerable progress in the propaganda battle to convince the American public of the justice of her case.

Arab unreasonableness is well advertised. Matters in which Israel may be considered at fault are as follows:

(1) Ambassador Eban recently laid blame on Syria for the breakdown of discussions from November 1952 to May 1953 in the Mixed Armistice Commission on elimination of the Demilitarized Zones. Actually, they failed over Israel's demand for complete control of the Jordan River. Regarding these talks, the chief Israel delegate cynically asserted: "We are doing it only to please the Americans" as nothing much can be settled. (Jerusalem's 81, October 21, 1953) [2]

(2) Informal agreement reached in Jordan–Israel talks in August, 1953 through the Mixed Armistice Commission to effect frontier rectifications by reciprocal exchanges to territory was blocked by last minute Israel demands for two additional hills. (Jerusalem's 29, September 2, 1953; 81, October 21, 1953; and 86, October 29, 1953)

(3) Sudden series of border incidents perpetrated by Israel: August 28, 20 Arab refugees killed in the Egyptian occupied Gaza zone; during September Arab bedouins and flocks shot by armed forces in the El Auja Demilitarized Zone; and on the night of October 14/15, attack against the Jordanian village of Qibya. These incidents followed a relatively quiet period. All have been condemned by the Mixed Armistice Commission. General Bennike's report to the Security Council on the border situation makes clear Israel's reliance on the "old law of talon".

Information received by the Embassy at Tel Aviv and the Consulate General at Jerusalem indicates that the Qibya attack may have been a deliberate Israel effort to provoke an engagement with the

[2] None of the telegrams referred to in this paper is printed.

Arab legion. (Tel Aviv's 469, October 17, 1953, Jerusalem's 81, October 21, 1953)

(4) Arrogant and obstructive Israel attitude towards the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization. Failure to heed General Bennike's letter on Banat Ya'qub construction; refusal to cooperate in General Bennike's inspection of Mount Scopus; threat to fire on chairman of Egyptian-Israel Mixed Armistice Commission.

(5) The Banat Ya'qub water diversion project was undertaken suddenly, was accelerated after General Bennike's decision, and does not fit into previously discussed Israel development plans for the current fiscal year. Reports from the field have speculated that it was an Israel attempt to create a situation in which the Arabs would be forced to reject the Tennessee Valley Authority desk study. (Tel Aviv's 557, October 31, 1953) The Israel actions have tended to nullify the Johnston mission. Despite Sharett's promise to consider the Tennessee Valley Authority study, it was vigorously attacked and rejected by Minister without portfolio Lavon on October 31, who described it as "designed to stunt our growth". In the same speech, Lavon asserted that the resumption of United States aid to Israel was due to pressure of American domestic politics. (Tel Aviv's 569, November 3, 1953) The general reaction of Israel's press has been critical and emotional, contending the plan would interfere with Israel's own ideas.

The water resources and development adviser to the United States Operations Mission at Tel Aviv states that the Israel master plan for irrigation will practically eliminate the inflow of water into Lake Tiberias. The salt content of Lake Tiberias will then become so great as to make it unfit for irrigation. He reports that the Israel water resources people "assume that the full right of all the flow entering Lake Tiberias is theirs and also, since they are now using approximately one third of the Yarmuk summer flow, they feel as though a portion of that river's flow belongs to Israel." (Tel Aviv's despatch 366, October 6, 1953)

(6) Recent pronouncements by Israel leaders appear deliberately provocative to the Arabs. In his talk on October 20 regarding the Qibya incident, Ben Gurion stated: "All the responsibility rests on the Jordan Government which for years has tolerated and thereby encouraged acts of murder and pillage against the inhabitants of Israel." On October 25, before the Jerusalem Economic Conference, he dwelt on such themes as readiness to accept two million additional immigrants and re-affirmation of Jerusalem as the Israeli capital, which has provoked strong condemnation from the Arab press.

CONCLUSION

An assessment of Israel's deeds, as distinct from her declarations of intent, leads to the conclusion that her policy is either to: (1) coerce the Arabs into "peace" on Israel's terms (which is an impossibility); or (2) prevent the restoration of stability in the belief that the present unsettled situation in the Near East is in Israel's best interest. Possible reasons for this second objective would be: serve as an excuse for failure to achieve a permanent solution to economic problems; prevent alterations in the military balance by making it difficult for the Western Powers to provide arms to the Arabs; future expansionist plans.

In either case, Israel policy has served to counter United States endeavors to stabilize conditions in the area. Believing implicitly in the justice of their own cause, the Israelis appear unable to show the realism required for a successful adjustment into the Near Eastern environment. In the early days of the state, an almost mystical belief in the Zionist ability to perform "miracles" made the impossible appear readily obtainable. Failure of the expectations aroused, has intensified Israel's latent feeling of frustration and insecurity and induced resort to the heedless and provocative acts recently undertaken. These factors make Israel's unpredictable and uncontrollable dynamism, rather than the static negativism of the Arab states, the major present source of danger in the Near East.

The following are sample recent telegrams bearing on Israel's attitudes:

[Here follows a list of eight documents: The six telegrams and one despatch referred to in the body of the paper, and telegram 213 from Amman, Document 723.]

2052. Department please pass other posts in its discretion. At Foreign Office today Johnston encountered considerably more favorable attitude toward Jordan Valley plan than month ago. In meeting presided by Roger Allen, Assistant Under Secretary, and attended by Embassy representatives, Johnston outlined results his mission.[1]

British appeared impressed by his accomplishments which they described as "remarkable". No decisions reached except that British agreed with Johnston that plan would require further careful study and preparation and undertook do their best support subsequent mission early next year. Only British reservation was fear that laying too much emphasis on necessity of acceptance of plan might "put us in embarrassing position" if opposition of states concerned proved to be insurmountable.

I then took Johnston to see Eden who was most cordial. After Johnston had explained his reception while on the mission, Eden said that he thought that Johnston had done remarkably well to have kept the door open. Johnston explained that he was seeing the press immediately afterwards and at his suggestion Eden wrote out following statement for him to use:

> "Mr. E. Johnston had a talk with Mr. Eden who told him HMG were considering his very interesting report, and hoped to have further discussions upon it at an early date."

CONFIDENTIAL AMMAN, November 11, 1953—11 a. m.

225. Bunger and I summoned in audience by King today, November 10, who wished to discuss Yarmuk and TVA plan. The King first inquired whether there was to be a delay in the development of the Yarmuk as a result of the new so-called broader plan. I replied that United States was now thinking in terms of the plan to which Johnston mission had given its support on recent visit. King then said that there was no possibility now or for years to come of cooperation or collaboration direct or indirect by Jordan with Israel. He reminded us of Israeli attitude as exemplified by organized armed massacres and elimination of whole villages by Israeli troops and pointed out, too, that Israel's attitude was clearly shown by recent Upper Jordan diversion attempt. He asked why could we not go on with the scheme as originally envisaged.

I explained the necessity for the President to go to the Congress to obtain money for the project and I emphasized the necessity to show that the money was to be spent in the most economic manner, that all the waters of the Jordan were to be developed and that the greatest good had to be done for the greatest possible number of persons. I explained that there were elements in the original plan which would be common to the broad scheme and Bunger supported me by pointing out the advantages of unified use of waters.

King then said that situation in his country daily becoming worse and that growth of Communism among all refugees, both in and out of camps and in the villages, was on the increase to most disturbing degree. He was desperately anxious to prevent any blow-up and to hold his people back. He feared he could not long do so if Israeli aggressions continued. Even now by using his influence in restraining manner he was playing with fire. To support any action which could be twisted even into the appearance of cooperation with Israel would mean that he would be swept away and so would the better elements in this country. He felt it of the greatest urgency that something be done at the earliest possible moment to settle refugees but it could not take the form laid down in the desk study. . . .

I pointed out that the engineering survey was still in progress and expressed the hope that the King would not take at this time a completely adamant attitude against the broad scheme. He replied by saying that it was a waste of time not to state his position now. It was then explained to him that the engineering survey must be completed before any kind of plan was adopted and I urged that at least he not close the door any more at this time than had already been done by his government. I asked him at least to wait until he saw what the results of the engineering survey were. Bunger pointed out that certain aspects of the work which would be common to any plan which might be adopted could be begun within comparatively few months. The King expressed the view that the beginning of such work would in some measure relieve existing tensions. He made it clear, however, throughout the interview which lasted one hour that the plan as presented in the TVA desk study was not acceptable to Jordan.

Comment: It was apparent to me that this summons by the King was for the purpose of conveying the final considered opinion of the King and his government on the TVA plan. In order fully to appreciate views set forth by young King in the interview (views enunciated by him with grace, understanding and considerable force), I urge that this telegram be read in conjunction with Embtels 771, 102, 129 and 152.[2]

I think that the time has now come to recognize that, despite the extremely able and persuasive presentation of the TVA plan by Mr. Johnston, the reception accorded him in Jordan was, in fact, the minimum demanded by the requirements of traditional Arab hospitality. I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I did not make it clear to the Department that in my view if the door in Jordan ever was open it is now shut tight.

SECRET
PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, November 14, 1953—1:47 p. m.

227. For Lodge. We do not believe we should modify our plan to table in SC Qibya resolution as now drafted because of Eban's speech of November 12.[1] Furthermore, we hope your remarks in supporting resolution[2] will conform to text sent USUN.[3]

Eban's call for Israel–Jordan talks at UN and emphasis on progress towards peace, while perhaps effective in mustering public support for Israel position, not likely in practice to contribute to improving Near Eastern situation. We see no prospect whatsoever that Jordan, particularly at this time, would consent engage in such talks with Israel. Bennike's reports demonstrated Israel's culpability for Qibya incident and we believe she should be censured for this attack both as deterrent to repetition and as essential move to counter Arab conviction neither UN nor US prepared act against Israel. Reports from field indicate strength of Arab reaction against US stemming from Qibya and Banat Ya'qub incidents and our asserted stalling in UN. We believe action as planned necessary accomplish our present objective of dispelling Arab distrust of our motives as prerequisite to use our influence in guiding them towards eventual settlement. Despite Eban's emphasis on Israel's general desire for "peace", we have no evidence to indicate she prepared follow course which in practice will make settlement possible. We think that following SC action immediate security problem should be met by concrete measures taken on spot, and that step by step approach offers best prospects for eventual over-all settlement.

[1] U.N. doc. S/PV. 637.

[2] The pending draft resolution on the Qibya incident, sponsored by France, the United Kingdom, and the United States, was introduced as S/3139. Department of State documentation concerning drafting changes is largely contained in file 684A.85.

[3] For the text of Ambassador Wadsworth's remarks as delivered in the Security Council on Nov. 20 in support of the draft resolution, see U.N. doc. S/PV.640. For the text of the revised draft resolution as adopted on Nov. 24, see Document 738.

We think it preferable to avoid public comment on Eban proposal. (In any case we should not express our views until after speech by Jordan representative.) If you then believe comment necessary either in your SC statement or talks to press, we suggest following:

> "US welcomes any practical steps which could be taken to improve security situation on borders between Israel and the Arab States. It doubts, however, whether the proposal of the Delegate of Israel represents the best method of accomplishing desired results. US believes discussions on the spot through the established United Nations Truce Supervision Organization machinery are more likely to produce definitive improvements in situation. It might be particularly helpful to explore means of strengthening 'local commanders' agreement'. which, according to the report of Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization to Security Council, has been useful in reducing border incidents."

We think Qibya resolution should be tabled as soon as practicable both to allay charges of procrastination and prevent possible embarrassment to us of having to vote down any unacceptable Arab resolution introduced. Therefore, provided French and UK concurrence obtained, we hope you can table Qibya resolution in concert with other two powers November 17. Since Jordan statement expected November 16 this appears to be earliest date which will permit us maintain position views both sides considered. We hope tripartite agreement on Banat Ya'qub resolution will be possible in time permit its introduction November 18.

In view strong desires Arab delegations we believe it is important that you show interested parties text of Qibya resolution November 16. Agreement of UK and French delegations to this procedure should be obtained.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY TEL AVIV, November 15, 1953—1 p. m.

592. Joint Embassy-USOM. McDaniel and White are meeting with Israel Finance Ministry tomorrow morning (Usfoto 205)[1] and expect to obtain additional information on short term liabilities which will assist in consideration of Sherman request.

While default by Israel Government would have adverse economic and political effects (Embtel 1965, June 26)[2] it is important that we not permit Israel Government use threat of default to justify unwarranted diversion grant-in-aid funds for short term debt purposes. (Embtel 1919, June 16)[2] Experience has shown that Israel Government tends to operate its short term debts at or beyond uppermost manageable limits. Large US cash releases in fiscal year 1952 and 1953 have resulted in only meager improvement relative to magnitude of problem and its recurring character. (Embtel 1567, April 11)[2]

Political considerations inevitably involved in any action taken on Sherman request. US policies to fill free world security vacuum in this area have been based upon belief it is essential to create confidence of Arabs in objectivity and even-handedness of US toward countries in area. Near East trip of Secretary and Stassen, refusal of western powers to accept Israel Government's fait accompli approach to Jerusalem in moving of Foreign Ministry, US backing of UN following Israel Government refusal comply with Bennike request in Banat Yaacov construction, and US participation in general disapprobation of Qibya raid—have gone far to convince both Israel and Arabs of our desire to work equally with both sides in reducing tensions. Israel Government has given numerous indications of its dislike of this policy (Embdes 58, July 14)[2] but it has increasingly come to accept it as fact. It is important that it continue to realize that efforts to thwart such a policy will be in vain. There is possibility that sudden approach in Washington without any indication here of current financial crisis, may be effort, at exact moment Security Council may vote a censure of Israel, to secure an action by us which would be generally regarded as going beyond letter and purport of Mutual Security Act, and which Israel Government could publicize to Arab world as indication ability Israel Government obtain special consideration from US, thus undermining confidence of Arabs in statements by Secretary, Stassen and Johnston. Effect on Israel Government of success in such an effort might be equally unfortunate in that it would weaken our efforts to convince Israel Government it cannot succeed in policy of aggressiveness and disregard of rights and views of other interested peoples. 598. Joint Embassy-USOM. With reference to Usfoto 205[1] and Embassy telegram 592,[2] USOM and Embassy officers met yesterday with Finance Ministry officials and Kollek, Director-General, Prime Minister's office, concerning Israel's short term debt. Despite our efforts to obtain specific data to support deficit estimates Finance Ministry was unable to present precise figures. Although some facets of this problem remain obscure and will be explored in more detail tomorrow when Israel officials will present more precise figures on October–December position, the following is the basic situation as it emerged from yesterday's discussion:

(1) Evidence submitted indicates that unexpected problem did not arise because expenditures have exceeded budget or from failure of most sources of income to equal budgeted amounts.

(2) The immediate situation, although difficult, is not as extreme as is reflected by gross figures submitted in Washington November requirements $18,000,000 and revenues $8.8 million. Actual set requirement new money to meet expenditure-receipt gap during balance of November was given by officials here as 44,000,000. None of these officials indicated that default was planned or necessary in the absence of United States Government's cash relief, although they were careful to point out that November–December situation was more difficult than they had anticipated because of the failure of their October operations to work out as planned. Furthermore, Israel officials made it clear that delay in release of grant-in-aid funds was not a primary factor in November–December payments problem. Finally, one of Israel officials implied that cash release was being pressed by Israel Embassy Washington in order not to let opportunity challenge section 105[3] to go by default.

[3] Reference is presumably to section 105 of the Mutual Security Appropriations Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1954, approved Aug. 7, 1953 (P.L. 218; 67 Stat. 478). Section 105 of the Act reads in part as follows:

"None of the funds provided by this Act nor any of the counterpart funds generated as a result of assistance under this or any other Act shall be used to make payments on account of the principal or interest on any debt of any foreign government or on any loan made to such government by any other foreign government; nor shall any of these funds be expended for any purpose for which funds have been withdrawn by any recipient country to make payment on such debts."

(3) In October unexpected difficulties arose because of a combination of factors, including lower than expected United Jewish Appeal, cash receipts and transfer bulk of this income to repayment United Jewish Appeal bank loans incurred in early part of the year; tightening up of private banking and individual credit sources, perhaps partly as result uncertainties repayment created by suspension United States aid. End result of these October developments was reduction Israel's cash balances in New York banks and increased borrowing on less than 60 day terms which of course aggravates November-December problem.

(4) A further disappointment has resulted from fact that New York banks, whose representatives recently visited Israel, are not prepared to help in meeting December problem as had been hoped.

(5) It would appear that, in absence of United States Government cash release, Israel Government would have to look to following possible sources to meet problem during the balance of the year:

> (a) United Jewish Appeal bank borrowings (this appears a reasonable possibility in view of fact that United Jewish Appeal reduced its indebtedness to New York banks from $17,000,000 end of August to approximately $5,000,000 at end of October);
> (b) Israel Government is working on project through Bank Leumi to obtain through private and unofficial channels dollar credits against future repayment in sterling from citrus export receipts;
> (c) Recourse to private banking and individual sources to refinance less than 60 day credits coming due before end of the year. It is possible that this source may prove more responsive now that some of uncertainties in financial picture have been removed by resumption of United States aid.

The preponderance of the evidence available indicates that the immediate problem is of smaller dimension than set forth by the Israel representatives in Washington and that, in the absence of unforeseen unfavorable developments, the Israel Government should be able to avoid a general default in the near future.

We do not recommend cash release. Situation will, however, require constant review.

Any significant facts emerging from tomorrow's meeting will be cabled.

Report by the President's Special Representative (Johnston) to the President

SECRET [WASHINGTON?,] November 17, 1953.

REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT ON NEAR EAST MISSION

SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS

United States policy toward the Arab-Israel dispute should aim at practical solutions of practical problems. A political settlement is not possible at the present time.

The United Nations report proposing unified development of the resources of the Jordan Valley represents a practical approach to the basic question of the Arab refugees, the potentially explosive problem of rights to the waters of the Jordan, and the tangled boundary situation.

The Jordan Valley project should therefore be pursued as a central element of American policy in the Near East. Decisions with respect to American political support and economic assistance should be conditioned upon the attitude displayed by the states concerned toward the United Nations proposals.

The Jordan Valley program should be pressed through a second visit to the region in the near future.

REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT ON NEAR EAST MISSION

In pursuance of the mission you entrusted to me on October 7, 1953, I have held initial discussions in the Near East with the Governments of Jordan, Israel, Syria, Lebanon and Egypt.

These discussions had a specific objective: to emphasize the importance which the United States attaches to the recent United Nations report, Unified Development of the Water Resources of the Jordan Valley, and to urge the states concerned to consider with an open mind the forward-looking proposals it contains.

They have without exception indicated willingness to do this, and to undertake discussions on a more definitive basis in several months' time.

This understanding was obtained in an atmosphere of extreme tension deriving from certain incidents which had inflamed public opinion to the danger point just prior to my arrival in the area. It would be difficult to imagine circumstances less conducive to favorable reception of the Jordan Valley proposals, and it is my opinion that only the weight of your personal representations prevented their rejection out of hand. As the result of your indication of personal interest, the way is now open for further consideration of the project and, we may hope, for its eventual acceptance.

In the course of my conversations with leaders in the area, I also took the opportunity of exploring present attitudes on certain of the issues now existing between the Arab nations and Israel with a view to determining what steps, if any, might be taken to remove, or at least ameliorate, the tensions between them.

CONCLUSIONS

As a result of these initial conversations I have reached certain conclusions with respect to the Jordan Valley program and the political situation in the region as a whole:

a. The proposed plan for unified development of the resources of the Jordan River valley offers the best available key to solution of the long-standing Arab-Israel impasse. If we grasp the key firmly and turn it carefully, it may open the way to eventual rapprochement between the parties to the Palestine dispute.

In this sense, the Jordan Valley program must be considered as more than an engineering project involving the construction of dams, irrigation ditches and power installations. It should be considered, in political terms, as a means of constructing the foundation on which peace in the area may ultimately be built.

I say this because the program for the Jordan Valley represents a practical approach to certain of the basic problems underlying present frictions and antagonisms in the area.

It offers an equitable means of settling the explosive issue of rights to the waters of the Jordan River and its tributary streams.

It offers a realistic beginning toward a permanent solution of the urgent problem of the Arab refugees.

It offers a sound practical reason for taking immediate steps to eliminate the troublesome demilitarized zones between Israel and Syria, and Israel and Jordan, and to adjust the tangled and unsatisfactory boundary situation in other areas.

It establishes the principle of mutual interest in seeking to resolve the differences between Israel and her Arab neighbors on a practical basis quite outside the context of political claims and without prejudice to ultimate political decisions.

For these reasons, the concept of unified development of the Jordan Valley should be advanced and supported as a central element of United States policy with respect to the countries concerned. American political and economic cooperation with these countries should be determined in the light of their willingness to accept and abide by the principles embodied in the plan.

The United States should take the strong position that the proposals regarding the Jordan Valley represent a constructive effort to remove the waters of the Jordan from the area of controversy. They are fair and equitable to all the states concerned. Technical objections or suggested modifications on the part of any of the interested states will be considered on their merits, but rejection of the program by any state on purely political grounds would compel the United States to reconsider its whole position with respect to economic cooperation with that state.

b. With respect to the Arab-Israel conflict generally, it is clear that we dare not leave the problem to solve itself. The peril of a policy of drift, based on the assumption that time will iron out the difficulties, has been demonstrated by the recent outbreak of serious border incidents, the quarrel over water rights on the upper Jordan, and other events. The situation is, in fact, deteriorating rather than improving, with resultant danger not only to the security of the Near East but of the world.

The impasse can be broken, in my opinion, only by the exertion of strong pressure from the outside, mainly by the United States, Britain, and France, in behalf of measures calculated to remove irritants and promote indirect cooperation between the parties on a practical rather than a political level. In the present climate in the region, there is no possibility whatever of a negotiated settlement. United States policy should therefore contain the following elements:

1) The overriding purpose of the United States in the Near East is to reestablish conditions of peace and stability essential to social and economic progress.

2) The Government of the United States is prepared to cooperate with the Arab countries and with Israel, both directly and through the United Nations, in any measures that contribute to this end.

3) American economic assistance should be conditioned on the willingness of the countries concerned to seek and adopt constructive measures calculated to reduce the area of controversy and eliminate immediate causes of friction.

DISCUSSIONS ON THE JORDAN VALLEY REPORT

In my conversations with the leaders in the region, I expressed the position of the United States in the frankest possible terms and substantially as follows:

One of the most controversial issues between the Arab countries and Israel involves the use of the waters of the River Jordan. Touching upon four sovereign stages, this international river can become either a blessing or a curse for the people of the area. Fairly divided and harnessed for irrigation and power, its waters can bring some two hundred thousand acres of land in the Jordan Valley into productive use and provide an economic base for hundreds of thousands of people. On the other hand, if left open to unilateral appropriation and development, the waters of Jordan can become the cause of further controversy, increased friction, bloodshed, and perhaps even war.

The United Nations report thus offers an opportunity to resolve the provocative and explosive question of water in a rational and equitable manner. It represents an international approach to the solution of what is clearly an international problem. The United States would be prepared to assist in reaching such a solution because of its deep interest in establishing conditions of greater calm.

I did not ask the leaders of the Jordan Valley states to accept the principles set forth in the United Nations report at this time. Obviously, they require a reasonable period in which to consider the proposals from technical and political points of view.

At this stage, therefore, I asked them merely to give the program their serious consideration, keep an open mind, and be prepared for further discussions at a later time.

Attitude of the Arab Countries

As has been expected, the immediate reaction of the governments of Syria, Jordan, and Lebanon to the United Nations report reflected the solidarity of Arab resistance to collaboration with Israel. The leaders of these countries made it clear that they could not and would not consider any plan for the development of the Jordan Valley if it contemplated negotiation or agreement between them and Israel. They reiterated Arab insistence upon implementation of United Nations resolutions regarding the partition of Palestine, the repatriation of refugees, and the internationalization of Jerusalem.

I assured the Arab leaders that acceptance of the principles contained in the United Nations report would not prejudice the ultimate disposition of political issues between their countries and Israel.

Nor would acceptance involve direct negotiation or direct agreement with Israel. I assured them that satisfactory evidence of acceptance could be given in the form of unilateral declarations to be filed severally by the participating states with the Secretary General or some appropriate organ of the United Nations. Such unilateral declarations would be regarded by the United States as solemn guarantees that the Jordan Valley states would individually accept and abide by an equitable division and distribution of water as contemplated in the United Nations report.

Aside from objections based on their fundamental political positions, Jordan, Syria and Lebanon indicated that serious consideration of the Jordan Valley plan on their part would be premised on the assumption that they might in due course suggest modifications of the plan in their own self-interest. I assured them that any suggestions they might wish to make would receive the most careful consideration. The program of development outlined in the report was not to be considered a hard-and-fast take-it-or-leave-it proposition. On the contrary, the United States would be more than willing to entertain suggestions for amendment from the interested states, provided such amendment was compatible with the basic concept of unified Valley development.

Egypt is not directly concerned with the disposition of the waters of the Jordan. Because of the political implications of the plan and Egypt's influential position in the Arab world, I undertook to enlist the support of the Egyptian government for the unified program. I was able to obtain the assurance of the Government of Egypt that it would exert the weight of its influence in support of the project as appropriate opportunities arose.

Attitude of Israel

The position taken by the Government of Israel was essentially receptive to the thesis that the water resources of the Jordan Valley should be developed in accordance with some plan that would be mutually acceptable to the interested states. Israel pointed out, however, that it had prepared extensive plans for the development of all available water resources. It would be necessary to examine the proposed United Nations program to determine how it would affect plans developed unilaterally by the Israel government. It may be expected that Israel will propose modification of the plan as set forth in the United Nations report, but it was indicated that an effort will be made to adjust present Israeli engineering schemes to conform in general with the principles underlying the United Nations proposals.

Attitude of Great Britain and France

The government of France indicated a deep interest in the Jordan Valley proposal and indicated that it would be prepared to assist in gaining acceptance of the project.

The British government, while agreeing that the idea of unified Valley development was sound, preferred, for political reasons of its own, to proceed with caution so far as direct and public support is concerned. It is my opinion that if a favorable attitude toward the plan emerges in the Arab states the British government will be prepared to lend the project its support.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. A second visit to the region should be made by a personal representative of the President shortly after the beginning of 1954, at which time an effort should be made to bring the governments of the states concerned to acceptance of the principles of the United Nations report on the Jordan Valley.

2. United States policy in support of the Jordan Valley plan should be firmed up and followed uniformly by all agencies of the Government and American diplomatic missions in the area. Continuous pressure should be exerted on the Governments of the states concerned.

3. The United States should undertake to gain full acceptance of the plan by Great Britain and France. They should be requested to use their influence in its behalf.

4. Specific proposals should be developed regarding the composition and authority of the neutral water control agency necessitated by the plan as the mechanism for assuring equitable distribution of water.

5. A formula should be developed for the submission of unilateral declarations of acceptance by the Jordan Valley states. This formula should indicate the nature of the declarations, with whom they should be filed, and their status as solemn undertakings.

6. The United States should immediately formulate a firm position with respect to the question of boundaries, and through the mechanism of the Mixed Armistice Commission, or some other appropriate agency, initiate discussions looking to the elimination of the demilitarized zones.

7. Steps should be taken at once to reduce the Jordan Valley plan to specifics in terms of priority of elements, stages of construction, costs, methods of financing. In this connection, the Foreign Operations Administration should instruct its field mission in Jordan to give priority to the development of detailed plans for first-stage construction within the framework of the unified Valley program.

684A.85/11-1853

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs (Waller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 18, 1953.

Subject: Relations Between Israel and Neighboring Arab States

Participants: Brigadier General Moshe Dayan, Deputy Chief of Staff, Israel Defense Forces
Colonel Vivian Herzog, Israel Military Attache
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Waller

Mr. Byroade asked General Dayan to give his impression of Israel's relations with neighboring Arab states and the General said he would be glad to do so country by country. With Egypt, the General said, Israel has only minor troubles, almost all of which concern infiltration. He expressed the opinion that Egypt is not greatly interested in peace with Israel and that an agreement with the British would not necessarily cause the Egyptians to undertake a settlement of the problem of peace with Israel. He pointed out that Egypt has important internal problems and little to gain by peace with Israel. The General said his government is concerned by the possibilities of disorder among the 250,000 people in Gaza and suggested that the erection of some physical or technical obstacles opposite the inhabited areas along the border would go a long way toward controlling the situation. He thought a wire fence, perhaps in an open belt 100 feet or so wide and lighted, or even a minefield, would be effective whereas armed forces alone would not be sufficient to prevent illegal crossings. He believed Egypt would agree to the erection of such obstacles if they could be erected by the United Nations.

Mr. Byroade asked whether, in the General's opinion, failure of the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations would result in guerrilla warfare against the British. If so, whether Egypt's attacks on the British would be a danger to Israel. The General replied that, in the event of an Egyptian agreement with the British, Egypt would not necessarily endeavor to pursue a constructive course towards Israel for the reasons already enumerated.

With regard to Lebanon, the General said there are no questions worth mentioning.

Turning to Syria, there are only two problems, namely, the Demilitarized Zone and water. The most important of the two is water. So far as incidents go, they are fewer even than with Lebanon. When asked about the possibility of eliminating the Demilitarized Zone by negotiation, the General said that the Syrians want the border to be on the east water line of the Jordan River but Israel does not wish Syria to have direct access to the Jordan River. He said the Israel Government had offered Syria land and concessions elsewhere but the Syrians would not accept.

Turning the discussion to the Demilitarized Zone, Mr. Byroade said that Israel's Banat Ya'qub project presents very serious difficulties. He thought the project would change the Demilitarized Zone and wondered why Israel felt Syrian agreement was not needed. He also wondered why the Syrian Government had not objected more strenuously to Israel's claims of sovereignty over the Demilitarized Zone and to Israel's taking over control of it. The General replied that Israel claims sovereignty only over Jewish lands in the Demilitarized Zone and that someone must keep the area alive. There are schools and villages which need many services, including electricity, and Syria has never shown any interest in doing these things.

Mr. Byroade pointed out that if the Jordan River water is taken over by Israel and the Yarmuk River water is taken over by the Kingdom of Jordan neither party would derive as much benefit as from regional development. The General replied that he thought it would be a good solution as each country would get about half the water of the Jordan valley and that it would be better to have projects on a bilateral rather than a regional basis. Mr. Byroade said that our hope is that by regional economic development people in the area will begin to talk with each other and eventually this would lead to better relations for all. He pointed out that it would be very difficult for us to justify large sums of money for uneconomic projects. The General said that Syria's claims of Jordan River water are not valid because Syria cannot use the water. In fact, Israel is the only country in a position to prevent the Jordan River water from being wasted.

General Dayan said that Israel's problems with Egypt, Syria and Lebanon are minor compared with its problems with Jordan. Mr. Byroade agreed that the problem was a big one but said we felt that during the past few months Jordan has been doing an increasingly better job of keeping order. General Dayan expressed a contrary view. He said that there is considerable evidence of Jordan officers and police actually organizing bands to cross into Israel. He then referred to the suggestion he had made with regard to Israel's border with Egypt concerning the erection of physical or technical obstacles. He pointed out that Israel's border with Jordan is wide open and even armed forces cannot prevent crossings. In addition to the construction of obstacles, it would be helpful if some of the refugees could be withdrawn from the border.

Mr. Byroade asked whether, in General Dayan's opinion, the Arab Legion commander had acted in good faith. General Dayan replied that whereas he had never met General Glubb he is of the opinion that General Glubb does not wish a conflict with Israel and he seems to be a straightforward man. General Glubb is in error, however, when he believes that the Arabs only cross the line in order to get to their property or to visit relatives. General Dayan repeated that a large part of the solution would be in the construction of obstacles, the removal of Arab refugees from the frontier areas and a better patrolling of the frontier. He said that if some such action is not taken crossings will continue. He felt that the local commanders' agreement was of limited value and that the Jordanians have not been really cooperative. He said that often when Israel officers informed the Jordanians of the location of stolen property, the Jordanians replied that there was nothing they could do about it. The General then added that "we send over Arabs from Israel to steal the property back again". In concluding, he said that if it should develop that there is no prospect for peace for some time, Israel must make an attempt to seal its borders.

The discussion then turned to Mt. Scopus. Mr. Byroade said he was concerned at Israel's defiance of the United Nations. He mentioned General Bennike's attempt to inspect the installations on Mt. Scopus and the disregard of Bennike's decision regarding the Banat Ya'qub project. He said that we cannot stand idly by and watch the United Nations machinery fall apart. He then said that we will support Israel in things in which we believe Israel to be right and that no matter what the General might hear to the contrary, we have no intention of endeavoring to win the friendship of the Arabs at the expense of Israel.

NE—Mr. Waller

I. Ambassador Eban opened the conversation by saying that his first topic was water. During the five years he has represented his government in the United Nations he has never known the balance of an argument to be so much in one direction, since there appears to be very little support for the Syrian complaint regarding Israel's Jordan River diversion project in the Demilitarized Zone.

He said that Israel does not doubt the authority of the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization to make decisions regarding development in the Demilitarized Zone and to obtain adequate guarantees. All water schemes for Palestine have concluded that without complete control of the Jordan River water there could be no existence for Palestine, a large part of which is now Israel. He recalled that the British refused to accept the mandate for Palestine until full control of the waters was assured. This was accomplished by the Anglo-French agreement of 1922, which Syria has now discovered and seems to advocate, particularly with respect to water rights. He said the Israel Government's position is quite clear, namely, that there shall be no Syrian control of Jordan River waters. He said that the Chief of Staff has full authority to undertake all arrangements for development in the Demilitarized Zone and Israel is willing to embody its guarantees in a legal instrument which Syria could invoke in case of violation.

[1] Drafted also by Ludlow.

Mr. Byroade asked for clarification of what he understood was the Israel position that the Jordan River belongs to Israel to do with as it wishes. The Ambassador replied that the Jordan River does not at any place touch Syrian territory. Mr. Byroade then started to ask a question about Israel exerting sovereignty over the Demilitarized Zone but the Ambassador interrupted to say that Israel does not claim sovereignty over the Demilitarized Zone, although he, Eban, perhaps, unwisely, so claimed in the Huleh dispute before the Security Council in 1951. Israel has, however, insisted on the absence of Syrian sovereignty. He felt that as long as the Demilitarized Zone exists there can be no question of sovereignty. This is the position taken by Dr. Ralph Bunche.

Mr. Byroade asked about Syrian Ambassador Zeineddine's belief that the construction of the canal would change the character of the Demilitarized Zone. Ambassador Eban said there was no basis for the Syrian contention and in any event the Armistice Agreement provides for the development of the Demilitarized Zone as does the Security Council resolution on the Huleh. It is correct, however, the Ambassador said, that no development can legally take place in the Demilitarized Zone that would violate the rights of residents of the Zone. He recalled statements of Dr. Ralph Bunche to the effect that the Demilitarized Zone was established as a legal concept without reference to topography. Its purpose was to keep the troops apart and, in fact, Dr. Bunche was able to obtain the withdrawal of Syrian troops to the old Palestine boundary. Mr. Shiloah, who participated in the negotiation of the Armistice Agreement, said that Israel would never have signed an Armistice Agreement which would have interfered with the development of the Zone.

Ambassador Eban said that the question of military advantage to Israel by the construction work would be laughed out of court because the Jordan River is so narrow in most places that anyone could jump across it. Further, the Unified Development Plan which was the subject of Mr. Eric Johnston's recent visit to the area would make more changes in the Demilitarized Zone than anything Israel contemplates doing.

Mr. Byroade asked whether the Ambassador believed Israel has the right to take all the water of the Jordan and move it to the coastal plain. The Ambassador replied that the question is important but not relevant to the present case. He said that legally Israel would probably have the right to use the water on the coastal plain but politically and morally there would be some question about it. The question would be whether states down the river would suffer by such action. A solution would be to use Lake Tiberias as a reservoir for regional use. Mr. Byroade referred to a pamphlet which he understood had been put out in Jerusalem a week or so ago advocating unilateral use of the Jordan River by Israel. He asked whether Israel's unilateral use of the Jordan River would justify the Kingdom of Jordan using the Yarmuk River on the same basis. The Ambassador replied in the negative because, he explained, Israel borders the Yarmuk and therefore has rights thereto. In the Demilitarized Zone safeguards can be set up by the Chief of Staff to protect Arab landowners and their water rights.

Mr. Byroade asked whether, in the event General Bennike should not be satisfied with Israel's action regarding the diversion project, Israel would return to the procedures provided by the Armistice Agreement. Mr. Shiloah answered by saying that Israel's action would depend upon the nature of General Bennike's decision. If General Bennike should say that Israel is violating the Armistice Agreement Israel would probably appeal to the Security Council but if General Bennike shows a disposition to work out an arrangement for the improvement of the area, Israel will go along. Israel has never given any indication of approval of the idea of limiting the development of the Demilitarized Zone and would not have signed any agreement containing such a provision. Agreements for development of the Zone can only be between the concessionnaires and the Chief of Staff, acting as Chairman of the Mixed Armistice Commission. Mr. Ludlow pointed out that the Israel Government has questioned General Bennike's authority. Ambassador Eban denied this, stating that Israel has questioned the substance of General Bennike's decision. The Israel Government maintains that General Bennike cannot set himself up as a dictator of the Demilitarized Zone and Israel will always object if he goes beyond his authority. Mr. Byroade said that our understanding of the procedure for considering disputes pertaining to the Demilitarized Zone was that matters go to the Chief of Staff, then to the MAC, and then to the Security Council. The Ambassador replied that the Chief of Staff has two duties, one is to be Chairman of the MAC and the other, under Article V, is to look after the interests of local civilians in the Demilitarized Zone (not act as an arbitrator between Israel and Syria). He said that Israel challenged Bennike's authority only when he said that Damascus must agree to projects in the Demilitarized Zone. Israel has never questioned General Bennike's authority in connection with alleged denial or infringement of Arab rights in the Zone.

The Ambassador expressed the hope that there could be consultation between Israel and the United States on the draft resolution on Banat Ya'qub. Mr. Byroade said that drafting negotiations could best be held in New York where we are presently working out details for a resolution with the U.K. and French delegations. Ambassador Eban expressed surprised interest that we were working with these two delegations on the resolution.

The Ambassador said the two principles by which Israel is guided in Jordan River water development are that the Security Council should at the present time reaffirm its decision made in 1951 which denied Syria the right of veto and that the Jordan River is completely non-Syrian.

Mr. Byroade said we do not wish to put anything in the resolution giving Syria the right of veto but we do want to make sure that the armistice machinery does not break down. The Ambassador said that a wording along the lines of Mr. Byroade's statement would not be against Israel's interests. All Israel is looking for is an opportunity to work out matters with General Bennike. He then suggested that Israel's legal experts on water development get together with the Department's legal experts. Mr. Byroade showed interest in the idea but did not give a definite answer.

Mr. Shiloah understood there was apprehension in some quarters that the canal project would interfere with regional water plans. He said that the canal project would not for the next two or three years interfere with any regional plans so that everyone interested has at least that much time to work out such plans. If an agreement cannot be reached on a regional development plan within that time, Israel must proceed with its own plans. He reiterated that Israel agrees to the principle of regional development but that there can be no such development if Syria has a veto. Mr. Byroade said he hoped that a development plan could be worked out in the field that will not be in violation of the Armistice Agreement. In the meantime, he asked, will Israel continue digging the canal in Israel territory? Ambassador Eban said that in the Demilitarized Zone Israel is observing its obligations but in Israel territory it will continue the project. There is no reason why Israel should stop working in its own territory. He thought there should be no difficulty about this but said that psychologically a great deal depends on the mood of General Bennike when he returns to the field. An attitude of conflict would not be helpful. He found Mr. Byroade's suggestion good that Israel should avoid a "demonstrative show of machines" and would pass the suggestion along to his government.

The Ambassador said he was seeking an interview with Mr. Eric Johnston for later in the week with the intention of presenting him with a technical analysis of the Unified Development Plan as prepared by three American experts (Hays, Savage, Goldman?). He will make copies available to the Department after he sees Mr. Johnston.

II. The Ambassador referred to the present draft resolution pertaining to Israel–Jordan relations, including the Qibya incident, and said his government believes that the resolution as presently drafted will make peace impossible for a long time to come. He said the use of the words "strong censure" was without precedent in UN history even in events of far greater severity. He believed the sponsors of the resolution have lost their sense of proportion. He also objected to the "lightness and gentility" with which Jordan's incursions into Israel are treated in the draft resolution. He said the language virtually approves Jordan's failure to control its border and does not provide any warning note from the Jordanian point of view. Mr. Byroade called attention to the fact that the only operative provision of the resolution is to call on General Bennike to report to the Security Council again within 90 days. This can only apply to Jordan since the Qibya incident is behind. This 90 day period should serve both parties as a time within which to demonstrate their desires to settle some of their differences. Mr. Shiloah saw no basis for such an idea. The Ambassador continued by saying that General Bennike's report calls attention to the fact that Jordan's lack of control over its own nationals is the real cause of the trouble and yet the draft resolution ignores this. Next, the Israel Government believes it is shortsighted to omit any reference to the pursuit of peace by the two parties. This omission is particularly important because the Arabs are beginning to adopt the concept of a negotiated peace and the absence of some reference to peace would be a real set back. The Ambassador noted that Jordan had rejected Israel's suggestion of high level talks in New York and said that so far as Israel is concerned it is quite prepared to hold such talks anywhere, perhaps Jerusalem as Dr. Haikal had suggested. Both Ambassador Eban and Mr. Shiloah expressed fervent hopes that in our speech before the Security Council we would vote favorably and endorse Israel's proposal. Lastly, if the draft resolution is passed Israel must call attention to the fact that the Security Council has done nothing regarding the security problem and must then decide whether to endeavor to keep the Council in session or come to the Council again later regarding the general security of the area.

Mr. Byroade said we have been attempting to do for the area what we believe is right. We are not against peace and he doubted whether the Arabs would be able to read anything to the contrary in our actions. He hoped the Israel Government would act in a way that it believes best for the area in the long run rather than for some temporary gain. We have already done a great deal with the Arab states and we plan to talk very seriously with the Jordan Government. He believed that General Bennike's report, 90 days hence, could show considerable improvement in the situation.

In reply to Ambassador Eban's direct question as to the U.S. attitude regarding direct Israel–Jordan negotiations, Mr. Byroade replied that we are for talks in the area when we think there is some chance of success. We think that an approach through General Bennike or through the Mixed Armistice Commission at present offers the best chance of success.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 20, 1953.

Subject: Financial Aid to Israel

Discussion:

Israeli officials here are pressing Mr. Stassen to make available to Israel $20 million in cash from the allotment of $26 million recently decided upon for the first half of the current fiscal year. We have received two important telegrams from Tel Aviv on this subject, No. 592 of November 15, [2] and No. 598 of November 17 [3] (Tabs B and C). The message of November 18 contains a firm recommendation from the Embassy against a release of cash, which it regards as unnecessary, and a significant statement that an Israeli official has implied that the cash release was being pressed in Washington in order not to let the opportunity to challenge Section 105 of the 1953 Appropriations Act go by default. This section was inserted during the Hearings before the Senate Appropriations Committee, and the record of the hearings indicates that its authors, concerned with past cash releases to Israel, considered it necessary to prevent such releases in the future.

Recommendation:

(a) That you sign the attached draft letter to Mr. Stassen (Tab A); [4] or, alternatively,

(b) That you advise Mr. Stassen verbally that the Department is opposed to the release of cash to Israel in view of the information in recent cables from Tel Aviv and the legislative history of the Appropriations Act.

[4] Not printed; the Secretary signed a letter to Stassen on Nov. 21 which reads as follows:

"I understand that the Israeli Embassy has approached you for a cash release in the amount of $20 million on the grounds that these funds are required to meet pressing obligations of Israel and that the alternative to an acquiescence in this request is default by Israel.

"I am inclined to share the joint opinion of the Embassy and Operations Mission at Tel Aviv expressed in messages No. 592 of November 15 and No. 598 of November 17." (884A.00 TA/11-1553)

The Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations [1]

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, November 20, 1953—8:02 p. m.

249. Ambassador Zeineddine of Syria called at Department today to discuss elements Banat Yacov situation. He emphasized essence of Syrian attitude is that provisions Armistice Agreement re demilitarized zone must be fully upheld but that once this had been accomplished by appropriate SC action Syria would be entirely disposed to consider agreements which would permit equitable development Jordan River resources. Said Syria had no intention blocking projects merely for sake of blocking. All Syria asked was that she be accorded full status due her under Armistice Agreement and right to participate in decisions affecting demilitarized zone and established Syrian rights (such as Buteina Farm) outside zone but affected by actions inside zone.

[1] Repeated to Damascus; sent by air pouch to Tel Aviv, Baghdad, Amman, Beirut, Cairo, Jidda, and Jerusalem.

When Department suggested that too much emphasis on "military advantage" aspect of DZ disputes could logically prevent any development of upper Jordan, since any project would be likely to alter flow of water in river, Ambassador insisted Syria would not approach matter from that angle once her rights under Armistice Agreement had been upheld and recognized. Would be entirely willing approach projects with open mind and seek agreement with all interested parties. Pointed out Syria had been willing since 1949 discuss water problems with Israelis but had gotten nowhere. Claimed he spoke with full knowledge of and in agreement with Shishakli's own views this subject.

Zeineddine urged following points be incorporated resolution to be adopted by Security Council re Banat Yacov:

(1) Bennike's authority to supervise DZ under Article 5 of Armistice Agreement should be upheld.

(2) Phraseology should make clear Syria's right to concur or dissent in actions which might change character of zone.

(3) Bennike should be given authority, although perhaps in general language, to restore DZ to status quo prevailing before Banat Yacov diversion work begun in early September. (He explained this might mean destruction of diversion dam and possibly filling in of part or all of canal.)

(4) Some warning of possible sanctions should be inserted in case Israel refused observe Council decision.

Re (1) Department officers said we substantially in agreement. Re (2) we expressed concern that this might involve Council in improper interpretation Armistice Agreement or even lay it open to charge of trying to modify agreement itself. Pointed out that agreement calls for interpretation by MAC and that it could only be modified by parties themselves. Zeineddine said all he meant was to exert pressure on Israel forcing it to go to MAC when contemplating DZ action, which Israel has steadfastly refused to do despite Armistice Agreement provisions. Said he would suggest phraseology for study by USUN.

Re (3) we indicated grave public relations difficulties in any action which appeared to call for destruction of completed work, pointing out this would be taken as indication Syria determined in advance to reject any agreement. He argued present state of affairs would permit Israel complete DZ construction in matter of few days if it should again decide to defy Bennike decision and UN and Syria would again be presented with fait accompli. Pointed out if Council upholds Bennike this means his decision should have been observed from beginning and that all work done even before his decision was improper. In such case court of law would order physical situation restored to status quo ante. He did not insist however that Council should specifically direct this restoration but merely make clear that Bennike had authority to order it if he saw fit.

Re (4) we said Department would prefer assume both parties would observe Council decision and treat any failure comply as separate question to be examined if and when it arose. Ambassador commented he thought some warning justified by past history Palestine case and said he intended take this point up in Council.

There was no discussion re possible elimination demilitarized zones. We made clear to Ambassador any discussion of phraseology of resolution would have to be with USUN and that we were continuing to work on this question jointly with British and French. He commented he had had some discussion of his ideas with British and French delegations and believed any objections more likely to come from US than from them.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] November 20, 1953.

Subject: Syrian Attitude Toward Palestine Question

Participants: Dr. Farid Zeineddine, Ambassador of Syria
NEA—Mr. Jernegan
NE—Mr. Hart
NEA—Mr. Gardiner

The Ambassador called at his request to discuss the Banat Yacov dispute. Most of the substance of the conversation was reported in the Department's telegram No. 249 of November 20, 1953 to the USUN, repeated to the Arab Capitals and Tel Aviv. [1] The following additional points were made:

1. Ambassador Zeineddine said that Syria was anxious to achieve a modus vivendi with Israel so that it could devote its attention to other matters. Syria was, he said, "fed up" with the frontier quarrels. The Syrian Government was the only Arab regime which would dare to attempt an arrangement with Israel, because it was the only one fully trusted by its own people. The Jordanian Government, for example, could not possibly make such a move in the face of the attitude of the Jordanian people.

2. The Ambassador considered the Banat Yacov question far more important than the Qibya affair, despite the emotions which the latter had aroused. In response to my question, he said he was not sure whether Jordan Minister Haikal would agree on this but he believed his other Arab colleagues felt as he did.

3. Syria admitted that its interest in the Jordan River was less important than the interest of Jordan. From the Arab point of view, he would rate her relative interests as follows: (a) those of the Arab Refugees, who were after all Palestinians and entitled to benefit from the River which ran through their own country; (b) the interest of Jordan as the State which could best utilize the greater proportion of the waters of the River, and (c) the interests of Syria. He passed lightly over the interests of Israel by implying that it might be entitled to a relatively minor share in the water. As evidence of Syria's willingness to give precedence to the claims of Jordan, he cited the Syria-Jordan Agreement on the Yarmuk, asserting that Syria might have claimed half of the waters of that River for its own use but was willing to let them be applied to the greater need of the refugees and the Jordanians.

4. In connection with the possibility of reaching an agreed settlement of the water controversy, following termination of the present Security Council discussions, the Ambassador suggested that there were various procedures which might be employed, among them: (a) United States "mediation" or "good offices", (b) use of the Palestine Conciliation Commission, and (c) use of the Truce Supervision Organization as an intermediary.

In reply to a question by Mr. Gardiner, the Ambassador remarked that he was looking forward to meeting with Mr. Eric Johnston and Mr. Gardiner in New York on Monday.[2] He intended to be present even if other Arab representatives should decide to stay away.

Resolution 101 (1953), Adopted by the United Nations Security Council on November 24, 1953 [1]

The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the Palestine question, particularly resolutions 54 (1948) of 15 July 1948, 73 (1949) of 11 August 1949 and 93 (1951) of 18 May 1951 concerning methods for maintaining the armistice and resolving disputes through the Mixed Armistice Commissions,

Noting the reports of 27 October 1953 and 9 November 1953 to the Security Council by the Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in Palestine and the statements to the Council by the representatives of Jordan and Israel,

A

1. Finds that the retaliatory action at Qibya taken by armed forces of Israel on 14–15 October 1953 and all such actions constitute a violation of the cease-fire provisions of Security Council resolution 54 (1948) and are inconsistent with the parties' obligations under the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Jordan and the Charter of the United Nations;

2. Expresses the strongest censure of that action, which can only prejudice the chances of that peaceful settlement which both parties, in accordance with the Charter, are bound to seek, and calls upon Israel to take effective measures to prevent all such actions in the future;

B

1. Takes note of the fact that there is substantial evidence of crossing of the demarcation line by unauthorized persons, often resulting in acts of violence, and requests the Government of Jordan to continue and strengthen the measures which it is already taking to prevent such crossings;

2. Recalls to the Governments of Israel and Jordan their obligations under Security Council resolutions and the General Armistice Agreement to prevent all acts of violence on either side of the demarcation line;

3. Calls upon the Governments of Israel and Jordan to ensure the effective co-operation of local security forces;

---

[1] U.N. doc. S/3139/Rev 2; approved at the 642d meeting of the Security Council by 9 votes to none, with two abstentions (Lebanon and the Soviet Union).

C

1. Reaffirms that it is essential, in order to achieve progress by peaceful means towards a lasting settlement of the issues outstanding between them, that the parties abide by their obligations under the General Armistice Agreement and the resolutions of the Security Council;

2. Emphasizes the obligation of the Governments of Israel and Jordan to co-operate fully with the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization;

3. Requests the Secretary-General to consider, with the Chief of Staff, the best ways of strengthening the Truce Supervision Organization and to furnish such additional personnel and assistance as the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization may require for the performance of his duties;

4. Requests the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to report within three months to the Security Council with such recommendations as he may consider appropriate on compliance with and enforcement of the General Armistice Agreements, with particular reference to the provisions of this resolution and taking into account any agreement reached in pursuance of the request by the Government of Israel [2] for the convocation of a conference under Article XII of the General Armistice Agreement between Israel and Jordan.

[2] On Nov. 23, 1953, the Representative of Israel, Eban, addressed a letter to the Secretary-General stating that since his proposal for a meeting between senior political and military representatives of Jordan and Israel had not been accepted by Jordan, he was formally invoking Article XII of the Israel-Jordan General Armistice Agreement, and requesting the Secretary-General to convoke a conference of representatives of the two parties as envisaged in that article. He noted that Article XII also made it obligatory for the parties to participate in such a conference. (U.N. doc. S/3140)

Agreement. Text Israeli communication sent you separately. [2] Secretary General has indicated he believes it mandatory on him convoke conference.

This Israeli move was made without any warning to us and US Government had no hand in instigating it. Israelis confirmed to us that they took decision as a result failure their efforts draw Jordan into general discussions New York.

We have as yet no indication Jordan or other Arab attitude toward proposed conference but assume it likely be adverse. We believe, however, it would be serious mistake for Jordan refuse attend conference as this would be clear refusal implement specific and mandatory obligation laid down Armistice Agreement. Jordan position in UN and with World opinion would be gravely damaged. Terms of Armistice limit conference to "reviewing, revising or suspending" provisions of Armistice, other than Articles 1 and 3. Thus, meeting would not constitute "peace conference". We do not see how US could continue give sympathetic attention Jordan's frontier problems in face her disregard for instrument to which she is partner and which is sole basis of security on border.

We realize any US initiative in connection proposed conference may be interpreted by Arabs as evidence our "complicity" in move to bring about "peace talks". Nevertheless, if conference called we intend support it to extent practicable and hope useful results may materialize. While present time may not be most auspicious moment, no opportunity should be passed by.

Embassy Amman and Missions other Arab capitals should take earliest occasion to convey US views summarized this tel. We hope that if conference is called Jordan will at once indicate willingness attend. (Jordan Minister Haikal has already told Security Council his country willing discuss security problems with Israel through MAC in Jerusalem and Jordan has in past participated in "high level" meetings with Israelis. This is not in fact very different from Article 12 conference since both procedures stem from Armistice Agreement. FYI We have indicated to Israel Ambassador we do not interpret Haikal statement in SC as categoric rejection Israel offer to negotiate.) End FYI. We would also hope Jordan would enter conference with open mind and sincere desire achieve some concrete progress on outstanding security problems. Purely negative attitude would be almost as damaging as refusal to attend.

On Israeli side, we believe there should likewise be sincere desire to accomplish genuine though limited progress. If Israelis attempt use conference merely as means of putting Jordan in bad light by making sweeping proposals, it certain to fail. Embassy Tel Aviv should emphasize following to GOI:

[2] The text of Eban's letter of Nov. 23 to the Secretary-General invoking Article XII of the Israel-Jordan Armistice Agreement (U.N. doc. S/3140) was sent to Amman in telegram 232, Nov. 24, 6:45 p. m. (684A.85/11-2453)

Usefulness Israel suggestion will depend on manner presentation, modesty Israel's objectives, and existing political climate. We hope conference will be productive concrete results and we will use our influence to that end, to extent practicable. It would be unwise for Israel to exert pressure which would embarrass Government of Jordan with its own people and force it into intransigent position. We believe Israel's best course is to strive only for limited, and therefore possibly attainable, objectives.

All addressees please urgently report local reaction to Israeli proposal.

I replied US agreed moment not propitious, but US consistent in desiring support UN machinery established handle problems Palestine. For this reason US Government had supported UNTSO in Jordan diversion dispute and would similarly support UN Secretary General should he call conference as provided under Jordan-Israel Armistice Agreement. The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194 (III) of 11 December 1948, 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949, 393 (V) of 2 December 1950, 513 (VI) of 26 January 1952 and 614 (VII) of 6 November 1952,

Having examined the report [2] of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East and the special report [3] of the Director and the Advisory Commission of that Agency,

Noting that programme agreements envisaging the commitment of approximately $120 million have been signed by UNRWA with the governments of several Near Eastern countries, pursuant to the plan endorsed by the General Assembly in resolution 513 (VI), but that expectations as regards the execution of the projects programme have not been realized,

Noting also that the situation of the refugees continues to be a matter of grave concern,

1. Decides, without prejudice to the provisions of paragraph 11 of resolution 194 (III), or to the provisions of paragraph 4 of resolution 393 (V), that the mandate of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East shall be extended until 30 June 1955, and that its programme shall be again subject to review at the ninth session of the General Assembly;

2. Authorizes the Agency to adopt a budget for relief amounting to $24.8 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1954, subject to such adjustments as may be attributable to refugee employment on projects, or as may be necesary to maintain adequate standards, and to adopt a provisional budget for relief of $18 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1955;

The General Assembly,

Having noted that the present membership of the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, established pursuant to paragraph 8 of General Assembly resolution 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949, is composed of representatives of Egypt, France, Jordan, Syria, Turkey, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America,

Noting further that it is in the general interest that other contributing countries join the Advisory Commission,

Authorizes the Advisory Commission to increase its membership by not more than two additional members.

261. For Lodge from Secretary. Following is revised text Banat Ya'qub Resolution for discussion with French and British. I prefer this version to British draft (Usun 275). [2] Provision for abolition of demilitarized zones has been dropped and I have added section pointing way towards solution problem in order to give resolution necessary positive character. Clause at end of paragraph 3 reading "in the zone so long as an agreement is not arranged" dropped because essential requirement is that parties satisfy Chairman of MAC not that they reach agreement between themselves.

"The Security Council,

Recalling its previous resolutions on the Palestine question, particularly those of 15 July 1948, 11 August 1949, and 18 May 1951 concerning methods for maintaining the armistice and resolving disputes through the Mixed Armistice Commission;

Taking into consideration the statements of the representatives of Syria and Israel and the reports of the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization on the Syrian complaint (S/——):

Notes that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization requested the Government of Israel on 23 September 1953 to ensure that the authority which started work in the Demilitarized Zone on 2 September 1953 was instructed to cease working.

Recalls its resolution of October 27, 1953 taking note of the statement by the representative of the Government of Israel that the work started by Israel in the Demilitarized Zone would be suspended pending urgent examination of the question by the Council and further recalls that the representative of Israel said that it was the policy of the Government of Israel to cooperate with the Council's efforts to reach a solution.

Notes that Article 5 of the General Armistice Agreement between Syria and Israel gives to the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization, as Chairman of the Syrian-Israeli Mixed Armistice Commission, responsibility for the general supervision of the Demilitarized Zone;

Calls upon the parties to comply with his decisions and requests, past and future, in the exercise of his authority under the Armistice Agreement;

Requests and authorizes the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to explore possibilities of reconciling the rights and interests involved in this dispute and to take such steps as he may deem appropriate to effect a reconciliation.

Reminds the parties that under Article 7, paragraph 8 of the Armistice Agreement where the interpretation of the meaning of a particular provision of the agreement other than the preamble and Articles 1 and 2 is at issue, the Mixed Armistice Commission's interpretation shall prevail;

Directs the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to report to the Security Council within 90 days on the effect given to this resolution.

Requests the Secretary General to make available to the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization such expert assistance as he may request including water experts if desired."

Last section intended to meet French desire for water experts (Deptel 239).[3] Proposed French wording reported today by USUN appears to be most undesirable in that not only does it reflect on Bennike's capacity and judgment on matter but also may open up for discussion at Bennike's level the entire question of Jordan Valley Unified Development Plan.

Hope early accord can be reached with French and British on Resolution as both sides making attempt consult here in Washington on text. Believe this best done in New York and urge that schedule be so arranged to leave ample opportunity for full discussions both sides.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] November 28, 1953.

Subject: Call of Secretary General of Arab League

Participants: Abd al-Khaliq Hassouna, Secretary General of the Arab League
The Secretary
NEA—Henry A. Byroade

The Secretary met with Hassouna at his request on November 24 at 2 o'clock.

Hassouna opened the conversation by expressing his appreciation for the support and leadership which the United States had given in the UN handling of the Qibya incident. He stated that he regretted there was a last-minute amendment to the resolution by the sponsoring powers but on the whole he thought the results were excellent. He stated he knew the personal difficulty experienced by the Secretary in taking such a stand, which only served to increase their appreciation. He regretted that after passage of the resolution, Ambassador Eban had seen fit to repeat Ben Gurion's statement that Qibya was not the result of organized armed action, which was contrary to the fact and served to show the Israeli attitude of defiance.

Hassouna then asked about the Secretary's impressions on the present state of the Egyptian problem. The Secretary replied that the situation in Egypt was one which gave us great concern. He felt that negotiations were in a state of complete suspense at the moment and he rather suspected both sides were waiting the outcome of the Sudanese elections. The Secretary asked Hassouna to be assured that we would do whatever we could to try to produce an agreed solution to the Egyptian problem.

The Secretary then spoke briefly about our policy in the Middle East. He described it as an "American" policy and one which was designed to deal even-handed and with justice to both the Arab States and Israel. He reminded Hassouna of the large element of our population which was Jewish, and that there was a natural and intense interest in America in Israel. He referred to cultural and religious ties between the United States and Israel. He also referred to the ties between the United States and the Arab World and hoped they would come to realize eventually that we were neither for or against Israel, or for or against the Arab States. He stated that he hoped the United States could be of assistance to all parties and referred to the Unified Water Development project as an example of the type of progress we would like to see made. He hoped also that steps could be taken on a local basis to settle specific points of controversy.

The Secretary spoke at length on the attitude of the Arab States towards discussions of peace in the area and referred to the analogy of the East-West situation with the Russians. The Russians stated they wished to have a conference of the major powers to settle East-West tensions. The United States felt that discussions on such a vague basis would be fruitless and perhaps dangerous. The United States, however, feels that it cannot be negative as regards talks with Russia and keeps the invitation open to Russia to talk about specific problems such as Austria, Germany, etc. If the United States took the view of not talking to Russia about anything, we would lose World support. So would the Arab World lose World support if they continued to take the position that they would not talk to Israel about anything.

Hassouna seemed to agree with this line of thought and indicated he would do what he could in the area upon that basic problem. Hassouna stated that if there was any hope of progress between Israel and the Arab States, it would probably come about through a reactivation and strengthening of the PCC. This organ of the UN had in effect ceased to function although it still sat in New York. He believed that organization should be strengthened and it should be sent to the field. He realized the historical reasons why Britain was not a member but believed that she should now be added. He also thought a fifth member, such as Pakistan, should be added. If these steps were taken, he believed it might become a useful media through which the Arabs and Israel could work toward the settlement of specific issues. The Secretary found this approach extremely interesting and promised Hassouna it would receive study.

245. Deptel 231. [2] Reference telegram received here 6 p. m., November 25 and was unable to talk to Foreign Minister until 1 p. m., November 26 when he informed me that Jordan Government had formed Ministerial subcommittee consisting of 6 Cabinet Ministers to study carefully the whole question of the proposed conference between Israel and Jordan under provisions Article 12 General Armistice Agreement. His approach to the problem was extremely negative. He was particularly concerned with the level at which the talks would be held and was obviously fearful that Israel would out-maneuver Jordan in one way or another.

I conveyed Department's views as outlined in reference telegram and pointed out the extremely favorable position Jordan now occupied in world opinion. I told Prime Minister that gracious acceptance by Jordan to attend conference would enable Jordan maintain that position whereas refusal, even if Jordan could find a way to refuse on technical grounds, would destroy advantageous position it now occupied.

I did not convey to Foreign Minister idea contained final sentence third paragraph reference telegram because:

(1) I did not think it would improve what was a perfectly sound case on its own merits; and

(2) I fear that any such statement to Jordan Government at this moment might give offense with no commensurable advantage to United States.

The Director of the Foreign Operations Administration (Stassen) to the Secretary of State

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 30, 1953.

DEAR FOSTER: Supplementing our telephone conversations with reference to the Israel Mutual Security funds for Fiscal Year 1954 and in response to your letter of November 21,[1] this is the situation as I see it.

Largely through a very firm position which we have taken with the Israeli Government, a significant improvement has been made in the finan-cial situation of Israel. The short-term debt for which they sought to obtain a $75,000,000 Export-Import Bank loan (which was declined) has been reduced, and a restricted import policy is being followed. Special resources are being mobilized from private sources and good use is being made of the German reparations payment.

My staff has made a very thorough analysis of the current financial situation and has concluded that a portion of the $26,250,000 aid which has been appropriated, allocated and approved to Israel for the first half of Fiscal Year 1954 is urgently needed to prevent a default in December in their foreign exchange and that, in fact, such a default might occur during this week if resources are not made available.

It is our further judgment that the $20,000,000 requested is not all necessary, but that $9,000,000 is essential and can be made available for commodities eligible for our program during the current fiscal year and delivered since the Appropriation Act was passed. We are, therefore, proceeding on my responsibility in implementation of the Israel aid program and in accordance with procedures under the new law approved by our General Counsel, to release $9,000,000 to them today. None of this money will be used to pay government debts.

It is our view that a default would defeat the very objective of the Mutual Security legislation and that since we are in the last month of the second quarter of the fiscal year, it is entirely right that some of these resources to the extent necessary be used as set forth.

We have taken into account all information furnished by the United States Embassy and Mission at Tel Aviv, and the additional information available in this country where the Israeli short-term obligations in the main exist and where their other resource availability is also principally located. You will recall that the Embassy and Mission in their joint message No. 610 of November 21 emphasized that they believed that Washington must make the final appraisal. [2]

249. Talked with Prime Minister November 29 and set forth at length views expressed Deptel 231. [2] Believe Prime Minister fully appreciates desirability attending conference in conformity Article 12 general armistice agreement. He and his government, however, extremely apprehensive of domestic political implications of any action which might be construed by opponents as cooperation with Israel. They fear not only for tenure of present government but also for their lives.

Prime Minister told me that it was necessary discuss problem with other Arab states. I replied I thought this unnecessary and would cause unfortunate delay in replying Secretary General's communication. British Ambassador tells me he also talked with Prime Minister along same lines as I did and he urged upon Prime Minister necessity for immediate reply.

Government now seeking a formula which will permit them accede Secretary General's request without causing them to be accused of entering upon peace talks with Israel. The phrase "within the framework of the general armistice agreement" is receiving consideration as a part of their reply.

Jordan is determined that talks shall not be on ministerial level and if she accepts will probably insist upon Jerusalem as meeting place. Believe there is fair chance of acceptance by Jordan hedged about with reservations.

The United States Representative at the United Nations (Lodge) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY NEW YORK, December 6, 1953.

283. For the Secretary from Lodge. Re: Palestine in Security Council. Following is revised version of Department's resolution (Department telegram 261, November 27) on Banat Yaacov which I have worked out on the basis of careful study of all relevant papers, including Israeli, Syrian, UK and French drafts:

"The Security Council,

1. Recalling its previous resolutions on the Palestine question and in particular that of 11 August 1949, endorsing the general armistice agreements concluded between Israel and the neighboring Arab states which the Council considered as superseding the truce provided for in the resolutions of 29 May and 15 July 1948; and those of 17 November 1950, 8 May 1951, and 1 May 1951 concerning methods of maintaining the armistice and resolving disputes through the Mixed Armistice Commission;

2. Taking into consideration the statements of the representatives of Syria and Israel and the reports of the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization on the Syrian complaint (S/3108/rev. 1);

3. Notes that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organizations requested the Government of Israel on 23 September 1953 to ensure that the authority which started work in the demilitarized zone on 2 September 1953 be instructed to cease working so long as an agreement was not arranged;

4. Endorses this request;

5. Recalls its resolution of October 27, 1953 taking note of the statement by the representative of the Government of Israel that the work started by Israel in the demilitarized zone would be suspended pending urgent examination of the question by the Council;

6. Declares that in order to promote the return of permanent peace in Palestine, it is essential that the general armistice agreement of July 20, 1949 between Syria and Israel be strictly and faithfully observed by the parties;

7. Reminds the parties that under Article 7, paragraph 8 of the armistice agreement where the interpretation of the meaning of a particular provision of the agreement other than the preamble and Articles 1 and 2 is at issue, the Mixed Armistice Commission's interpretation shall prevail;

8. Notes that Article 5 of the general armistice agreement between Syria and Israel gives to the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization, as chairman of the Syrian-Israeli MAC, responsibility for the general supervision of the demilitarized zone;

9. Calls upon the Chief of Staff to ensure the demilitarized character of the zone;

10. Calls upon the parties to comply with all his decisions and requests, in the exercise of his authority under the armistice agreement;

11. Requests and authorizes the Chief of Staff to explore possibilities of reconciling the interests involved in this dispute including established rights in the demilitarized zone and full satisfaction at all seasons of existing irrigation rights, and to take such steps as he may deem appropriate to effect a reconciliation, having in view the development of the natural resources of the area in a just and orderly manner for the general welfare;

12. Considers that neither party has the right of veto over such reconciliation or development;

13. Directs the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization to report to the Security Council within 90 days on the effect given to this resolution;

14. Requests the Secretary General to place at the disposal of the Chief of Staff of the TSO a sufficient number of experts, in particular hydraulic engineers to supply him on the technical level with the necessary data for a complete appreciation of the project in question and of its effect upon the demilitarized zone."

Paragraph 1 above has been redrafted to include each of the Security Council Resolutions referred to in the Israeli draft (see Usun 243, November 6) and the Syrian draft (see Usun 277, November 30), as well as reference to the fact that the armistice agreements supersede the truce as suggested in the Israeli draft.

Paragraph 2 is the Department's draft unchanged.

Paragraph 3 has been redrafted to take account of British suggestion that the Chief of Staff's request be quoted more fully.

Paragraph 4 was suggested by UK delegation and appears to be desirable.

Paragraph 5 eliminates the last clause of the Department's draft as suggested by UK delegation. It seems unnecessary and has not been suggested by Israel.

Paragraph 6 is taken from the Syrian draft.

Paragraph 7 is the Department's draft unchanged.

Paragraph 8 is likewise.

Paragraph 9 is taken from the Israeli draft and in my opinion covers adequately the Israeli argument on the question of "military advantage."

Paragraph 10 is the Department's draft with the addition of the word "all" before "his decisions" and deletion of "past and future" after "requests." "Past and future" seems superfluous and may, as the British think, raise unnecessary apprehensions in the minds of the Syrians.

Paragraph 11 is redrafted to emphasize the principle of a larger development of the resources of the area for the general welfare and at the same time includes the Israeli point concerning guarantees for land rights and water rights. I feel that in this way it can be made clear that if the Banat Yaacov project should be resumed it must be within the context of larger objectives for the area.

Paragraph 12 is a new paragraph which has been added to cover the Israeli argument that Bennike must understand explicitly our view on Syria's right of veto. It is equally applicable to Israeli veto over larger development schemes.

Paragraph 13 is the Department's draft unchanged.

Paragraph 14 is the revised French draft which seems to be useful way of providing Bennike with necessary help to avoid his prejudicing Johnston's plans. The French seem insistent upon it, and Eban appears not to object to it.

It would be desirable to have early meetings with the UK and French delegations. I would appreciate Department's comments.

The Acting Secretary of State to the United States Mission at the United Nations

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, December 8, 1953—5:26 p. m.

281. Re Palestine in SC. Your draft resolution in urtel 283, December 6 is quite acceptable to us except provisions of paragraphs 1, 11 and 12. We assume that you will find no basic conflict between your draft and our suggestions re UK and French amendments contained in Deptel 278 of December 5.[1] With specific reference to paragraphs indicated the following are our comments:

Paragraph 1: We prefer our first preambular paragraph which does not raise matter of General Armistice Agreements "superseding the truce". Resolution cited does have this language but objective of Israelis in desiring this wording is, in our opinion, that of having Council appear to endorse position which Eban has given before Council in attempting to refute Bennike's decision on military advantage to Israel in diversion project. It is of course Israel's right to attempt to persuade Bennike to revise his decision on this point but if Council recalls this particular provision to notable exclusion of a number of other provisions in other resolutions cited, undue weight is given to this point and will probably be persuasive to Bennike as to what is Council's intent. Proper procedure for

[1] Not printed.

Israel in challenging Bennike's decision on military advantage question is to resort to MAC and to obtain an interpretation from MAC as to whether or not Bennike in fact has the authority make decision on matter of military advantage. It is precisely the question this authority which Israelis are raising before Council and which Council should not attempt influence. We would prefer see reference to November 17, 1950 resolution omitted since it does not relate to Syria.

Paragraph 11: If the objective of this paragraph is the same as was ours in paragraph 7, namely to move the Chief of Staff forward toward reconciliation of the rights and interests without necessarily precipitating an early decision on recommencement of the Israeli diversion operation, we feel that our language which is less specific provides basis for slower action on Bennike's part. If, however, you feel that it is essential to be as specific as you propose, we urge you delete word "established" before words "rights in Demilitarized Zone". If "established" is left in Israelis will be quick to allege to Bennike that only established rights in Demilitarized Zone are Israel's as a result of grant given to Palestine Electric Corporation. It is undoubtedly difficult for Arab residents in Demilitarized Zone to document and establish their rights as effectively as Israelis. We believe that in interests of tranquillity in Zone every opportunity should be given to these Arab residents to present their cases as to their rights. Further we strongly urge that phrase "having in view the development of the natural resources of the area in a just and orderly manner for the general welfare" should be deleted.

We understand your objective to avoid any actions which would prejudice chances of success of Unified Plan for Jordan Valley Development. We concur in this objective but fear such a broad directive would create more difficulties than it avoided. It would ask Bennike to take into consideration factors and a project which are outside his presently conceived authority and would make him a further party to be dealt with in any future negotiations on the Unified Plan. It would probably also cause both Israel and the Arab States to believe that we are using this resolution as a means of imposing the Unified Plan. Both Johnston and our field posts have recommended against such a tactic as likely to be counter productive. As we see it, the essential thing at this stage is to get parties immediately concerned (Syria and Israel) back into proper channels for settling their specific differences and to reaffirm Bennike's existing authority, particularly in the Demilitarized Zone.

We are unhappy enough over suggested wording of French amendment but that wording limits Bennike's technical advice to the effect of the diversion project in the Demilitarized Zone itself.

As we read your wording, Bennike would have to take into consideration the political, economic and hydrological problems of the entire Jordan Valley area. While we do not question that the Council has the authority to direct him to consider these matters if it so desires, we believe in balance it is undesirable for him be asked to take step now.

Paragraph 12: We urge the deletion of this paragraph. It is fact, and is proper to hold, that neither party has a right of veto over actions in Demilitarized Zone or in matters of interpretation of the General Armistice Agreement. Since in any of these matters Bennike has the deciding vote it can not be held that either party has a veto. We believe it unwise and unnecessary for Council take cognizance of alleged voting rights which in fact do not exist. Our draft clearly indicates Bennike is deciding factor in Syria-Israeli disputes. This particularly evident if we accept UK wording on Israel's containing suspension of project unless authorized to contrary by COS. Further advantage of deletion would be that it avoids taking flat position against Syrian claim their consent is essential. If we must have Council take cognizance of this Israeli allegation wouldn't it be better to discuss it in our statement before Council?

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY NEW YORK, December 9, 1953—2 p. m.

285. For the Secretary from Lodge. Re: Palestine in SC. This refers to telegram 281 [1] regarding Palestine.

Believe it is utterly vital that nothing that the US does on this question should allow any ground for the contention that this administration is moving away from minimum positions taken by the preceding administration. What we do in the future should and will be different, but we must not do anything which looks like trying to turn back the clock.

In this spirit I point out that the previous administration is clearly on record as favoring general development of the area which I have tried to cover in my paragraph 11 in language which is taken directly from statements made here by the US on the Huleh question, May 18, 1951.

[1] Supra.

The previous administration also made it very clear that they considered that this matter should be viewed on the basis of civilian and peaceful development and not on the basis of military advantage and that the word "demilitarization" was intended to cover troops and not topographic and other features. It was for these reasons I included reference to the truce superseding the armistice in paragraph 1, and demilitarization in paragraph 9.

I also regard these points as vital as regards my paragraph 12. I hope I may have authority to include it in our statement if you do not desire to have it in the resolution, although I believe it is less contentious to include it in the resolution.

I am discussing this with French and British and will let you know their reactions.

Memorandum by the Deputy Director for International Organization Affairs in the Office of United Nations Political and Security Affairs (Popper) to the Secretary of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 10, 1953.

Subject: Status Report on Banat Yakov

1. Status of Department Draft

On December 4 you approved a draft resolution on this problem, which USUN communicated to the British and French Delegations for their views (Tab A). [2] The principle underlying this draft is that the Security Council should pronounce itself in support of the authority of General Bennike, without entering into the merits of the dispute, and should return the problem to him and to the parties for settlement. The British desired amendment of the paragraph calling upon the parties to comply with Bennike's decisions (paragraph 6) so as to call upon Israel to continue the suspension of the work unless General Bennike authorized its resumption. We told Ambassador Lodge this concept could be added to the resolution but must not replace our paragraph 6. The French accepted our draft with the provision that their paragraph calling for a Commission of water experts to assist Bennike should be added. This point has now been reduced to manageable proportions and incorporated in our draft.

[1] Sent through the Executive Secretariat. A note by O'Connor on the source text indicates that the memorandum was seen by the Secretary on Dec. 10.

[2] The tabs herein mentioned do not accompany the source text. Tab A was presumably the draft resolution contained in telegram 261 to New York, Document 743.

2. Position of the Parties

Israel maintains that the Security Council should clearly indicate that it approves of the Banat Yakov project; that the Council should make clear to Bennike that he should reach agreement with Israel without the necessity of Syrian concurrence; and that the Council should indicate the type of agreement with regard to civilian rights into which Israel should enter with Bennike.

The Syrians propose that the Security Council recognize that the project constitutes a military advantage for Israel and could affect the normal civilian life of Arabs depending on the river. It therefore is inconsistent with the objectives of the armistice agreement and the Council should decide that projects of this kind cannot be carried out without prior consent of the other party, i.e., Syria.

3. Ambassador Lodge's Redraft

On December 6 Ambassador Lodge sent you a redraft of the resolution (Tab B),[3] the basic elements of which we found acceptable except for the following:

(a) The Ambassador changed the preamble to state specifically that the Council considers that the general armistice agreement supersedes the truce. Our draft had used more general language which did not mention this point.

(b) Paragraph 11 of Ambassador Lodge's draft suggests that in reconciling the rights and interests of the parties Bennike must take into consideration the over-all development of the natural resources of the entire area.

(c) Paragraph 12 of Lodge's redraft states specifically that neither party has the right of veto in this process. Our draft did not contain this provision.

There are several other differences between Ambassador Lodge's redraft and the Department resolution which do not cause us any difficulty.

4. The Issues Involved

(a) Should the resolution specifically state that the armistice supersedes the truce? The basic question raised here is whether the element of "military advantage" constitutes valid ground for Bennike's decision that the Israelis should stop work. The Israelis maintain that since the general armistice agreement supersedes the truce, General Bennike was acting without authority in deciding that military advantage is a factor in the problem. Our position has consistently been that we must support Bennike's authority, and he has held that military advantage is a factor in the situation. Ambassador Lodge now wants us in effect to go into the merits of the question and to have the Council imply that it is not a factor. This supports the Israeli thesis.

(b) Should the Council require Bennike to take into consideration over-all development of the area? Our position has been that to do this would amount to asking Bennike to take into consideration over-all factors outside his present authority and thereby injecting him into future negotiations on the Johnston unified plan. Both Israel and the Arabs might suspect we would use the resolution to impose the plan on them. Both Johnston and our embassies oppose such a tactic. As we see it, the essential objective is to get Syria and Israel back into proper channels under the armistice agreement for settling their differences and to reaffirm Bennike's existing authority in the demilitarized zone, without raising the question of the connection of this with the unified plan.

(c) Should the Council specifically deny the alleged "veto right" of the parties? We have always held that there is no such right, but to say it specifically in a resolution would violently antagonize the Syrians. If fact, this point is already implicit in the resolution, since Bennike has the deciding voice, and this can be explained in our statement if necessary.

5. Ambassador Lodge's Reaction

The foregoing views were communicated to Ambassador Lodge on December 8 (Tab C). [4] Lodge's rejoinder reached us today (Tab D). [5] He is concerned that we should not appear to be less friendly to the Israelis than the previous administration, using the precedent of the Huleh case which was before the Council in 1951. This case differs in certain respects from the instant case. Ambassador Lodge is particularly concerned that we should stress the desirability of peaceful development of the entire area and should not allow the concept of military advantage to obstruct it. We feel that, as our work on the unified plan indicates, this administration is even more concerned with area development than the previous administration. This point can be made fully clear in our statement. We do not accept the analogy with the Huleh case which involved a conflict of interests entirely within the demilitarized zone and which was settled on a basis of compensation of interests adversely affected. In the Huleh case the question of military advantage was considered a factor and was settled in favor of Israel.

The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices[1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 11, 1953.

CA-3150

Since the passage of the UNGA resolution of November 29, 1947 calling for corpus separatum status for the city of Jerusalem and vicinity, the Vatican has steadfastly adhered to that principle as offering the best protection of the Holy Places. It now appears . . . , that the Vatican may be willing to accept something less than territorial internationalization of Jerusalem.

A copy of a memorandum . . . , is attached. It will be noted that "The Holy See, as a provisional measure to remove the imminent danger (to the Holy Places), would be disposed to accept the demilitarization of the zone of Jerusalem within a radius of fifty kilometers". The provisional nature of the arrangement might be accepted as definitive under certain circumstances (see para 5 of the memorandum). Two formulas are suggested in the memorandum (para 7) but neither appears to contain that degree of practicality necessary to offer some hope of success. Instead, a simpler formula might be for discussions to be held between Jordan and Israel under the provisions of Article VIII of the Jordan-Israel Armistice Agreement, or, possibly, by direct negotiations between Jordan and Israel if the political atmosphere should permit.

Informal discussions with U.S. military officials have revealed that demilitarization of an area within a radius of fifty kilometers of Jerusalem would affect Jordan and Israel equally. As the radius is diminished, the effects of demilitarization tend to favor Israel more than Jordan because of the importance of Jerusalem as a center for Jordan surface communications. However, it would not seem out of the question to find a way around this difficulty, if agreement in principle were reached.

The Department finds demilitarization of the Jerusalem area an interesting idea and would welcome the opinions of addressees regarding the practical possibilities of such an arrangement. The Department has agreed to speak with the Brazilian Ambassador again in the near future and would therefore appreciate having replies from addressee posts as soon as possible.

As of further interest, a copy of a confidential British Foreign Office Aide-Mémoire, dated October 26, 1953, setting forth British views on the Vatican idea, is also attached.[2]

Statement by the United States Representative at the United Nations (Lodge) Before the Security Council on December 16, 1953[1]

The Security Council since October 27 has had under consideration the Syrian complaint on the diversion of the Jordan River. We have heard the representatives of Syria, Israel, Lebanon and Pakistan in a number of important statements. The United States has followed the development of the debate with intense interest. As a result, we have come to the following conclusions:

First, strict compliance with the armistice agreement entered into between Israel and Syria is of vital importance to the peace of the area and this question is intimately involved in the present case.

Second, the primary responsibility of the Security Council in this matter is to uphold that armistice agreement which it endorsed in its resolution of August 11, 1949 as superseding the truce and facilitating the transition to permanent peace. The agent of the Security Council for these purposes is the chief of staff of the truce supervision organization.

[1] The statement was made to introduce the tripartite draft resolution (U.N. doc. S/3151) on behalf of France, the United Kingdom, and the United States. This is a verbatim text as sent to the Department on Dec. 16 in telegram 279 from New York (683.84A322/12-1653); for the text as printed in the Security Council Official Records, see U.N. doc. S/PV.648.

Third, development projects which are consistent with the undertakings of the parties under the armistice agreement and which are in the general interest and do not infringe upon established rights and obligations should be encouraged.

The decision of the chief of staff for the continuance of the diversion of the Jordan river project would be subject to these considerations. The chief of staff, as the authority responsible for the general supervision of the demilitarized zone, is the proper authority to determine whether the project now in question meets these conditions. Any unilateral action, from whatever side, which is not consistent with this authority of the chief of staff threatens the effective operation and enforcement of the armistice agreement. Similarly, no government should, in our opinion, exercise a veto power over legitimate projects in the demilitarized zone.

On the basis of these conclusions, the United States has joined with France and the United Kingdom in submitting for the consideration of the Council, the draft resolution [2] which has been circulated. This resolution makes clear in our opinion:

(a) That the chief of staff of the truce supervision organization, as chairman of the Syrian-Israel mixed armistice commission, is the responsible authority with respect to questions affecting the demilitarized zone under Article 5 of the armistice agreement;

(b) That the issues raised by the Jordan River diversion project should be judged by the chief of staff in accordance with his authority under the armistice agreement, and

(c) That in these and other questions concerning the status of the demilitarized zone an important consideration should be the just and orderly development of the natural resources affected, with due regard for the general welfare and the interests of the parties and individuals concerned.

To these ends, Mr. President, we hope that the Governments of Israel and Syria will cooperate fully with the chief of staff and that they will mutually benefit from his decisions. In the opinion of the United States, the draft resolution represents the proper line of action for the Security Council to take in this case.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 19, 1953.

Subject: Banat Ya'qub Resolution

Participants: The Secretary
Dr. Charles Malik—Lebanese Ambassador
Mr. Byroade—NEA

Dr. Charles Malik of Lebanon called upon the Secretary at 10:00 A. M. December 19th to discuss the situation in the United Nations re the Banat Ya'qub case.[1]

Dr. Malik in his presentation stressed the depressed and discouraged state of mind of Arab Delegations over the manner in which the Resolution on the above subject had been handled. He felt that the Arab reaction was that their work had been in vain and that their suggested amendments had not been seriously considered. There was a feeling that in any issue involving Israel justice or truth did not prevail but that the Three Powers tried to come up with solutions which would take a political balance between the views of the Israeli and the Arabs. He made the case that all the Three Powers had to do was to support the Bennike position, which in his opinion made quite clear that Syrian agreement must be obtained for the project in question. He stated that issues greater than the Canal project were involved and this was a fight by the Arab world to insure that the status of the Demilitarized Zone, as defined under the Armistice Agreements, could not be altered without Syrian consent.

Malik stated that the most disturbing factor to him was that he believed Russia might veto the present Three Power Resolution. He could not prove this but it seemed to him so logical that the Russians would capitalize upon Arab unhappiness with this Resolution to cast a veto and thus enhance their prestige in the Middle East. He felt this extremely dangerous and hoped we could make sufficient changes in our Resolution to forestall such a possibility.

The Secretary replied that he had come to the conclusion it was impossible to win the friendship of either side in matters of dispute between Israel and the Arab States. We are bound by a policy in which we endeavor to do what we think is just and right in such cases. This only incurs the wrath of both sides. He reluctantly concluded that we could only win the friendship of either side if we deliberately devised policies to "hurt" the other side.

[1] Lebanon submitted a draft resolution (U.N. doc. S/3152) in the Security Council on Dec. 17 as an alternative to the tripartite draft resolution (S/PV.649).

The Secretary stated that he had spent considerable time on this matter and that our draft had not been devised on a political basis. He stated that he had asked Mr. Phleger, who had great experience in legal matters involving riparian rights, to advise him on this matter. Mr. Phleger had taken the thesis, in which the Secretary concurred, that corresponds to American procedures on matters of this type. We do not believe in this country that one riparian interest can veto the use of water but that water should be useable to all in a just and fair way. When one considers the question of an Arab veto, in view of the past history in the area, he was afraid we would have to conclude that that veto would not be used in a constructive manner but used simply to hurt Israel if opportunities afforded.

The Secretary concluded that a far easier course for him to take would be bow to political pressures in this country and to agree with the segment of our people who thought that Arab friendship is impossible and therefore we might as well at least have the friendship of Israel. He had no idea of following such a course but would continue to do what he thought was right regardless of the pressures involved.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 23, 1953.

Subject: 1. The Banat Ya'qub Project.
2. The Secretary General's Summons to Jordan to meet with Israel under Article 12 of the General Armistice Agreement.
3. Egyptian Suez Canal Blockade Against Israel.

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Mr. Henry A. Byroade, Assistant Secretary, NEA
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

1. Ambassador Eban expressed his appreciation for the helpful attitude shown by Ambassador Lodge and USUN in connection with the Tripartite Resolution. While Israel had not gained all she hoped for under that resolution, she recognized that the resolution constituted an appropriate position for the three powers to take and hoped that they would now stand firm and resist pressures for changes of substance. Postponement of a vote at the next meeting of the Security Council seemed desirable in view of the unlikelihood of passage during 1953. Eban felt that such postponement could not validly be considered as an improper maneuver since the current composition of the Security Council gave a lop-sided weight to the Syrian position by insuring Syria of two sure votes (Lebanon's and Pakistan's) in addition to the Russians'. Pakistan's attitude was hardly representative of a British Commonwealth viewpoint on Arab-Israel problems. As for the position of the Soviet Union, he had discussed the question of a possible Soviet veto with Mr. Tsarapkin, who seemed astonished that Israel should believe that the USSR would exercise a veto on such a matter as this. He had been assured by Tsarapkin that the Soviet practice was to exercise the veto only where direct Soviet interests were in play. Eban therefore discounted the probability of a Soviet veto.

Mr. Byroade commented that the Department might have to give some further consideration to the phraseology of paragraph 11 of the Tripartite Resolution [1] which had evoked dissatisfaction on both sides at various times and the drafting of which could bear improvement.

2. Ambassador Eban raised the question of Jordan's obligation to respond favorably to the summons of the Secretary General of the UN to a meeting with Israel under Article 12 of the Israel–Jordan General Armistice Agreement. He hoped that the U.S. Government would support the Secretary General in these summons. Mr. Byroade replied that the U.S. Government had already indicated to Jordan and to other Arab states its belief that Jordan was obligated legally to accept the summons and that she would place herself in a most unfortunate position if she refused.

3. Ambassador Eban referred to the recent extension of Egyptian regulations calling for blockade of Israel. Israel was not so much concerned over the extension itself which now covered foodstuffs and virtually every other category of supplies to Israel, as over the fact that the blockade existed at all. Egyptian blockade practices

[1] The eleventh paragraph (numbered paragraph 9) of the joint draft resolution introduced on Dec. 16 reads as follows:

"Requests and authorizes the Chief of Staff to explore possibilities of reconciling the interests involved in this dispute including rights in the demilitarized zone and full satisfaction of existing irrigation rights at all seasons, and to take such steps as he may deem appropriate to effect a reconciliation, having in view the development of the natural resources affected in a just and orderly manner for the general welfare." (U.N. doc. S/3151) had been condemned by the Acting Mediator in 1949; by the UN Chief of Staff in 1951; by the Mixed Armistice Commission in 1951; and by the Security Council itself in September 1951. Israel now seeks international action against this long-standing abuse of law and hopes for U.S. Government support. Contrary to statements which had been bruited about Washington, Israel was not working against an Anglo-Egyptian Agreement. Israel favored such an agreement but felt that she had a right to assure herself that if it did occur, Israel's vital interests would not be adversely affected by a shift of power following British withdrawal of troops and that Israel would be protected from further Egyptian blockade in violation of the International Convention of 1888 respecting freedom of transit of the Suez Canal. Mr. Byroade replied that the Department was concerned over stories which had issued from London concerning British Zionist pressure on Parliament against an Anglo-Egyptian base agreement and the withdrawal of British troops from Egypt. Mr. Byroade did not imply that Israel was implicated in this effort but he had it direct from a British Zionist source that British Zionists had actively sought to have the UK withdraw from the negotiations with Egypt. Minister Shiloah deprecated the validity of this information. He felt sure that British Zionists had not made an effort to defeat the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations. Mr. Byroade reiterated his belief which he had previously expressed that this was a poor time to summon Egypt before the bar of world opinion. The U.S. had made repeated diplomatic representations to Egypt regarding the blockade and we would continue to do so. We felt, however, that tactically, a UN debate on this subject would injure the chances for an Anglo-Egyptian agreement and he hoped Israel would see the problem in this light.

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, December 26, 1953—5:04 p. m.
PRIORITY

304. Re Palestine in SC (your telegram 313).[1] Zeineddine (Syria) called at his request this morning and gave us detailed review of Arab position. He prefers no resolution to tripartite resolution in present form. He asserts our resolution cannot be passed because it will not receive seven votes and even if after January first there should be required majority in new SC Soviets still will veto.

---

We are concerned at propaganda advantage which would accrue to Soviets if they should use their veto on behalf of Arabs. Now that Zeineddine has taken initiative and approached us indicating clearly continuing desire reach agreement with us suggest you consider following possible modifications which we developed in light of Zeineddine's principal criticisms of tripartite resolution.

1. As you know Zeineddine's main concern is failure of tripartite resolution to make clear in paragraph 11 that Syrian agreement is necessary for continuation of Israeli project. To make this clear he proposes that we insert after "to explore" the following: "with full regard of rights, obligations and consent of parties." In the alternative he suggests after "the interests" in second line paragraph 11 insertion "of the parties to the dispute on the basis of mutual agreement." While he recognizes Bennike has authority reconcile rights of individuals within DZ without consent of Syria he claims agreement by Syria is necessary in reconciliation of rights and interest of Syria. He claims that Article 11 adds new authority to Bennike particularly in view last clause directing him to have in view development of natural resources and general welfare. He was most emphatic in his opposition to this last clause as going beyond SC function as organ for peace and security.

In light of above suggest you explore possibility redraft Article 11 as follows: "Requests and authorizes Chief of Staff to explore possibilities of reconciling the interests involved in this dispute including rights in the DZ and full satisfaction of existing irrigation rights at all seasons, and to take such steps as he may deem appropriate to effect a reconciliation, it being understood that in seeking such reconciliation Chief of Staff may not without the consent of the parties exceed the authority accorded to him by the terms of the General Armistice Agreement."

This text in our view is not contrary to our position that we shall not accept amendments which would modify basis of tripartite resolution. It does not require Syria's agreement to steps taken by Bennike under his GAA authority unless he himself decides such agreement is necessary. We are of course not certain that this amendment would satisfy the Arabs.

2. Zeineddine strongly opposes paragraph 13 in present form and believes it should merely ask SYG to provide additional personnel. If Arabs agree on acceptable version of paragraph 11 and paragraph 13 becomes only point of disagreement you may wish raise this point again with the French with view to developing some language more acceptable to the Arabs.

3. Zeineddine again emphasized need for Israel cooperation in MAC consideration of problems arising in DZ. We might meet his point by adding to present paragraph 7 a clause calling on both parties to cooperate with MAC.

Department made clear to Zeineddine we could not give him any assurances on specific amendments but assured him we shall consider his views. He understood specific language would have to be discussed in New York.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] December 28, 1953.

Subject: Tripartite Draft Resolution on the Palestine Question (Banat Ya'qub Water Diversion).

Participants: Dr. Farid Zeineddine, Ambassador of Syria
Dr. Charles Malik, Ambassador of Lebanon
John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State
Mr. John D. Jernegan, Deputy Assistant Secretary, NEA
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

Ambassador Zeineddine outlined to the Secretary the Syrian position regarding the Tripartite Resolution on Banat Ya'qub with particular reference to paragraph 11. He stated that while Syria recognized that the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization possessed certain powers of his own accorded to him by the Armistice Agreement, these did not extend to the machinery of conciliation or "reconciliation". Paragraph 11 seemed to give to General Bennike duties of an undefined scope which more properly belonged to the Palestine Conciliation Commission. Ambassador Zeineddine wished to make it clear that Syrian consent was required where Syrian rights were involved and the resolution should not contain language which might give Israel the excuse to concert with Bennike on Syria's rights without Syria's consent. The Demilitarized Zone was an area in which each side had reserved its rights and where neither side had rights of sovereignty. Syria was much disturbed by Israel's policy, carried on since 1951, of encroaching on the Zone first by sending in Israeli police to control it, and finally by diverting water and simultaneously asserting that Israel was sovereign in the Zone and that Syria had no rights whatever in it. Actually certain Syrian rights to draw on Jordan water for use even outside the Zone had been recognized for a long time. On the other hand no use of Jordan water beyond the Zone on the west bank had existed before the Banat Ya'qub diversion. Syria desired to have explicit language reaffirming the necessity of Syrian consent in matters involving Syria's rights. Furthermore, the Tripartite draft resolution in its present form stood no chance of adoption in the Security Council due to the threat of Russian veto even in the unlikely eventuality that it obtained seven votes.

The Secretary gave a general summary of American courses of action on Arab-Israel relations taken during 1953. United States Government actions by now should have proven to the Arabs that the United States Government was not acting with pro-Zionist bias, even though it did not respond to all Arab desires. The U.S. Government was seeking just solutions, not measures to please either side. The Tripartite draft was a case in point. The Secretary had never discussed this resolution with the Israeli Ambassador. In fact, his only previous discussion of it with a foreign representative was with Dr. Malik a few days ago. The United States was not prepared to see inserted in this resolution a change which would give Syria the right to veto any and all developmental action in this area of the Jordan Valley, any more than it would agree to unilateral seizure of water by either side. History showed that while Arabs and Israelis might talk together constructively at technical levels, the moment discussions reached a policy level, pressures on the Arab Governments forced them to take a public stand against any agreement which would permit benefit to Israel regardless of accompanying benefit to the Arab States. Consequently, he feared that a veto power would be used by Syria to block any constructive work.

Zeineddine interjected that his government would be quite happy over any use of the Jordan waters which would benefit the Arab refugees and it would not stand in the way of projects directed to this end. Syria had no intention of exercising a "veto" but simply desired to be assured that where her rights were in question, her consent would be required and not waived by others. Her main concern was that the Armistice Agreement should not be weakened. He had a few "slight changes" in the resolution to suggest and had already communicated these to Mr. Jernegan on December 26.

The Secretary read aloud the provisions of new Article 14 of the Tripartite Resolution (S/3151/Revision 1, December 21, 1953)[1] which he personally had drafted to meet what he understood to be the principal concern of Ambassador Zeineddine. He would be willing to discuss with Mr. Jernegan any further points which the Ambassador had raised with Mr. Jernegan, but made no commitment to change the draft resolution.

The Ambassador in Jordan (Mallory) to the Department of State

SECRET AMMAN, December 31, 1953.
No. 232

Subject: Comment on Vatican Attitude Toward Internationalization of Jerusalem

The Embassy has read with a great deal of interest the Department's Instruction No. CA–3150 of December 11, 1953, and its enclosures with regard to the views of the Holy See in connection with a possible demilitarization of a zone within a radius of 50 kilometers from Jerusalem. This suggestion has apparently been put forth by the Holy See as a provisional measure to remove "imminent danger" to the holy places.

However desirable the proposal may seem it appears to the Embassy that it is divorced from the realities of the existing political situation. There has been no lessening of the tensions which exist between Jordan and Israel over the past several years. On the contrary, owing to the Qibya incident and to other incidents well known to the Department bitterness against Israel in this country has reached greater proportions than ever before. It is believed to be unlikely that Jordan would consider the demilitarized zone proposal.

The Embassy notes that informal discussions with U.S. military officials indicate that demilitarization of the area recommended would affect Jordan and Israel equally. Without presuming to question the professional views of the U.S. military, the Embassy ventures to doubt that either the Government of Jordan or the Arab Legion would see the matter in that light. It seems possible to the Embassy that Jordan would feel that the superior road system, particularly the subsidiary road system, of Israel would place that country in a militarily favorable position in the event of the outbreak of hostilities between the two countries. A circle with a 50 kilometer radius drawn from Jerusalem would appear to take in the heartland of Jordan. It would include Nablus to the north, Hebron to the south, and would take in practically all of southwest Jordan. This seems rather a large proportion of Jordan. Israel too would be precluded from maintaining military installations in many of its most important areas.

The formulas advanced by Brazil for the definitive settlement of the question of the zone of Jerusalem and of peace between Jordan and Israel seem to the Embassy equally unrealistic at this time. The Embassy does not consider that it would be possible now or in the foreseeable future to establish Jerusalem and its environs as a true international zone without a resort to force of arms. Insofar as a peace treaty is concerned the views not only of Jordan but of the other Arab States have been made clear so often and so recently that comment hardly seems necessary.

CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, January 2, 1954.

496. In informal conversation with Israeli Minister Shiloah today, Department Officer suggested that it would be well for Israel to avoid drastic action in response to anticipated Jordanian rejection of proposed Article 12 talks. [2] Suggested Israel might be well advised to accept "alternative" of discussions in MAC under Article 11. Department expressed thought that important thing is to make contact and at least open possibility of concrete progress rather than simply to score legal debating point against Jordan for violating Article 12 provisions. Pointed out our understanding that Arabs had made considerable effort to avoid being completely negative in reply to Secretary General's communication which Department felt was encouraging sign.

Shiloah said his Government had reached no decision on how to treat negative answer but he personally thought that it impossible to agree that talks under Article 11 could replace Article 12 meeting or to acquiesce in Jordan violation of AA by refusal to abide by Article 12. Considered this would undermine whole structure of Armistice Agreements with other Arab States as well as with Jordan and could even have repercussions in other areas by weakening respect for international engagements. Pointed out US has recently been emphasizing importance of maintaining Armistice Agreements in connection with Qibya and Banat Ya'qub and should not take different attitude this case.

[1] Repeated to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jidda, and Jerusalem.
[2] See footnote 2, Document 738.

Agreeing it probably unwise for Israel to take precipitate action, Shiloah promised to convey our tentative thoughts to Jerusalem. (It was made clear our suggestions did not represent firm US position.) He thought however proper course for Israel would be to continue efforts to bring about Article 12 meeting. One possible means he mentioned would be for Secretary General to convoke such meeting under his authority conferred by Armistice Agreement without regard to Jordanian response to his initial inquiry.

In course conversation, Shiloah expressed strong hope we would not inform Arabs that we had made any suggestion to Israel re possible acquiesence in Jordanian position.

He raised again question of Egyptian blockade of shipments to Israel through Suez contrary to terms Security Council resolution and argued it inconsistent for US to ignore this while censuring Israel for violations of Armistice Agreements. Insisted Israel would sooner or later have to bring this question to a head, either through new Security Council appeal or possibly by requesting direct talks with Egypt under provisions of Armistice Agreement. He was told we saw no advantage in forcing this issue.

Editorial Note

On January 4, 1954, the Palestine Conciliation Commission submitted its thirteenth progress report to the General Assembly, covering the period from November 28, 1952 to December 31, 1953. The Commission stated that since the General Assembly had not taken any new decisions with regard to its work, the Commission considered that it was still guided by Resolution 512 (VI) adopted by the General Assembly on January 26, 1952. The Commission stated that because it had failed to obtain results by the procedures available to it, and because of the unchanged attitude of the parties, it had for the present decided to continue meeting at United Nations Headquarters in New York, where it would pursue its efforts to solve the questions of compensation for the Palestine refugees and the release of Arab refugee bank accounts in Israel. (U.N. doc. A/2629)

268. In discussing Israeli diversion project today, Ambassador Zeineddine forcefully presented Syrian arguments against three-power resolution as tabled. Declared Arab delegations regarded SC action on this question more important than that on Qibya massacre because tripartite draft attempts to alter terms of armistice agreement and vote will provide indication of future Western attitude.

Describing Russian motives as different from those of Arabs, Zeineddine professed reluctance utilize Russian aid. Nevertheless he asserted USSR would vote with Arabs "on this and other Paletine questions" and predicted disregard for Syrian "rights" under armistice agreement would lead to defeat of tripartite draft either by majority vote or by Russian veto. He states Arabs considered Russian veto with its dangerous and unpredictable consequences preferable to adoption tripartite text.

Shishakli's absence (Embtel 265, January 9) [2] has prevented Zeineddine from seeing him but Zeineddine expects discuss his proposed changes in draft resolution with the Syrian President shortly and hopes obtain official approval.

The Consul at Jerusalem (Tyler) to the Department of State

SECRET JERUSALEM, January 11, 1954.
No. 129

Ref: Dept's CA-3150 December 11, 1953

Subject: Internationalization of Jerusalem

Summary

General Dayan, Chief of Staff, Israel Defense Forces, has informed me that subject to the definition of demilitarization of Jerusalem, he believed Israel would not only consider it favorably but had already discussed it. The Vatican retreat, if true, is most startling of revised thinking on this problem. Jordan has taken a far more open stand against internationalization; Colonel Eddy, former American Minister to Saudi Arabia has changed his mind and is now against internationalization as is the majority of the Palestine Refugee Political Committee under the chairmanship of Dr. Izzat Tanncus in Beirut. One obstacle to settlement of the issue is Israel's defiant move of her Foreign Office (Con despatch 10, July 14, 1953).[1] If the problem is settled by keeping the city divided as now Israel will again be boosted in her self-righteousness and Arabs will have another reason to deplore United Nations and Western inability to make Israel conform to any standards other than Israel's own desires.

1) On a visit to Jerusalem January 2 General Dayan and his wife and three children paid us a visit. Knowing how much Mrs. Dayan loves Jerusalem I asked the General privately whether there would ever be any possibility of moving the General Staff of the Israel Defense Forces to the city. I recalled that the number of troops in both sides of Jerusalem was limited by the Armistice Agreement with Jordan and wondered if complete demilitarization took place whether that would improve the chances of his coming here to live. Dayan replied that depending on the definition of demilitarization he felt Israel would agree to it and in fact had already been discussed.

> "If you ever tell anyone that the Chief of Staff, whose job it is to defend Israel and its government, ever suggested the demilitarization of the capital, I'll deny it," he warned me smiling.

[1] Not printed.

I have no idea how Jordan would take such a proposal. Guessing, however, from the increased preparations the Arab Legion has taken in Jerusalem and especially around Mount Scopus, I doubt Jordan would be willing to trust Israel promises of demilitarization.

2) On November 7, 1953, Monsignor MacMahon called on me in my office. No hint of the Vatican proposal of demilitarization seems to have come to him, or if it had I obtained the impression that Monsignor MacMahon would stoutly maintain his stand for a corpus separatum. The same is true of all the Roman Catholic clergy I know here with the possible exception of His Paternity, the Custos of the Holy Places (Franciscan Order). He paid a New Year's call on me on January 4 and brought up the question of the internationalization of Jerusalem. I said I did not know what the future would be nor of any plans being made but it appeared that the present division of the city would continue for a long time. He agreed.

3) Jordan, apparently, is returning to her original stand of unconditionally opposing internationalization. When the Jordan Prime Minister returned from the Arab League Political Committee meeting in Cairo last September he told an AP correspondent that Jordan continues as before to oppose vigorously the internationalization of Jerusalem.

> "Events have shown that the Arab States must hasten to change their attitude on this question and to work together to preserve the Arabism of the Holy City," he added (Amman Joint Weeka No. 2 September 16, 1953).[2]

This is in contrast to former Prime Minister Abdul Huda's statement in the earlier part of the year that while Jordan did not favor the internationalization of Jerusalem it would take no steps without consultation with the Arab League.

4) Another change of opinion which may be noted for the record is that of Colonel William A. Eddy, former American Minister to Saudi Arabia, and well known for his espousal of the Arab cause. Writing from Beirut, where he is political advisor to Tap Line, in a latter dated August 5, 1953 to the Honorable Adlai Stevenson, Colonel Eddy states:

> "As you will see from the enclosed, I no longer believe any useful purpose can be served by attempts to internationalize Jerusalem. To that extent, the pamphlet I gave you in Beirut is out of date. Too much milk-toast has floated under the bridges of the UN for the Arabs to have any confidence in a UN Commission ruling Jerusalem."

[2] Not printed.

5) The enclosure to which he refers reports the majority opinion of the Palestine Refugee Political Committee under the chairmanship of Izzat Tannous as believing that the interest of Jerusalem is no longer "either possible or desirable." (See enclosure No. 1) [3]

6) The Islamic Congress for the Palestine Question (Contel 98, Dec. 8 and Con despatch 112, Dec. 11, 1953) [4] which recently met in Jerusalem also denounced the internationalization of the city. Officially the reason given (page 3 reference despatch and resolution No. 6) was that the internationalization of Jerusalem was "a conspiracy against the Moslem world". Fear of the city becoming wholly Jewish was also one of the reasons behind this resolution, however, with perhaps a certain amount of pressure from the Jordan delegation.

Comment:

The above shows the trend of opinion away from internationalization. But whatever solution is finally made of the problem it appears to me essential for the preservation of the Holy Places and for a sense of security among Christians regarding the safe-guarding of those Holy Places, to have Jerusalem demilitarized. The present seems an appropriate time to initiate discussions. The UN resolution is still on the books and in spite of the Arab economic blockade of Israel, Jordan keeps Mandelbaum Gate open for the passage of pilgrims to the Holy Places and the passage of United Nations personnel in the area as well as members of the Consular Corps in deference to that resolution. But Jordan's hardening attitude may mean an attempt on her part to have the Arab States acquiesce in her sovereignty over the Arab half of Jerusalem and perhaps a closing of Mandelbaum Gate, the only entry into Israel by land for persons without diplomatic passports. Thus discussions on demilitarization or Christian interests in Jerusalem would have to be taken with two states insisting on their sovereignty over the two parts of Jerusalem and more difficult than is now the case when theoretically and legally (though not actually) Jerusalem is an international city.

If Jordan would agree to demilitarization it is almost certain the discussions and agreement would have to be made without any publicity. Therefore Israel should be warned in advance that she must keep knowledge of any preliminary talks or negotiations secret and resist the temptation of trumpeting abroad her willingness to demilitarize her own capital and blaming Jordan as usual for blocking every effort toward peace.

CONFIDENTIAL
PRIORITY

WASHINGTON, January 11, 1954—6:31 p. m.

281. FYI. Re Embtel 264 Jan 9 [2] Department and USUN are considering several possible revisions paragraphs 5, 9, 11 and 13 including those suggested by Zeineddine to USUN New York on Dec 29. Revisions he proposed to USUN were substantially same as those he proposed to Department Jan 4 except for slight difference in wording of 11. Our hope is that Zeineddine and Malik can be induced favor or at least not oppose resolution if it is modified; and that if Malik votes affirmatively or abstains it will greatly reduce likelihood of Soviet veto. Since if decision is taken to make changes they will have to be negotiated by USUN and UK and French delegations and used in bargaining with Malik and Zeineddine, it is essential that Zeineddine not be informed details our present thinking except in its discretion by USUN after his return New York. End FYI.

2. In reply his query (Embtel 264) you may inform Zeineddine that due Tripartite sponsorship resolution we cannot at this time say more than that US has his proposals under consideration.

3. If you see no objection please approach Shishakli earliest opportunity and emphasize that it is in best interest Syria, US and all concerned that some workable resolution be passed at early date; and stress danger that if resolution in some form is not soon passed Israelis may take unilateral action which could have gravest consequences. Inform Shishakli we hope he will instruct Zeineddine to take moderate line and to encourage Malik to vote for or at least abstain on a resolution containing at least minimum essentials.

If Shishakli brings up "Russian aid" theme along lines your tel 268 Jan 9, you may in your discretion stress our belief that Syrian encouragement of Soviet veto could have unfortunate consequences for Syria. Though Soviet veto under these circumstances may appear to uphold Syria's position this may well assure that no resolution will be passed. In this case it is almost certain Israelis will start work on project again, a development which would be highly damaging to interests of all concerned.

Zeineddine added that GOS desired find agreed resolution and would suggest other "basis for agreement" if his current proposals unacceptable tripartite powers. Syrian President made following points: (1) Government of Syria desires SC resolution on diversion project; (2) sole Syrian aim is to protect its rights in Jordan waters and Zeineddine suggestions drafted this aim in view; (3) professed inability understand how US Government could approve text so detrimental Syrian interests, emphasizing Government of Syria could not accept less than explicit recognition rights; (4) if justice not obtainable, Syria could as last resort rely upon Russian veto.

I stated Department aware this possibility and emphasized views paragraph 3(b) Deptel 281. or eye operation (see Embtel 265 January 9).[2] He spoke without emotion but was unyielding throughout.

Queried at outset re Syrian engineering study Banias diversion possibilities (Embtel 245, December 17),[3] Shishakli stated completed report now being examined by Syrian authorities. Despite earlier promise furnish copy promptly he said Secretary General Public Works now in Cairo and could not give Embassy text until his return "in week or so".

When informed relationship between US economic aid and GOS attitude unified plan (Deptel 259 December 18)[4] Shishakli reiterated Syrian inability participate in plan until existing UN resolutions re Palestine made effective (cf Embtel 245). Declared USG increasing area tensions by pressing for plan and persistence in this policy would more than offset any good done by economic aid.

I asked whether Shishakli desired reduce regional tensions. President said yes, but proper approach was for USG eliminate cause tension, namely US aid Israel. He denied aid and unified plan advantageous Syria, asserting Israel principal beneficiary plan, with Syria receiving virtually nothing. Furthermore "tying" aid to plan seemed to him show present administration just as subject Jewish influence as its predecessor.

Comment: Embassy believes Shishakli's attitude represents considered policy partially worked out in long conversation with Zeineddine January 10 (Embtel 271 January 12). That Syrian President ready see Ambassador Johnston again is possibly favorable factor. Shishakli's reason for delay in supplying copy Banias engineering study is not convincing.

[3] In telegram 245 from Damascus, Dec. 17, Ambassador Moose reported on a conversation of Dec. 12 with Shishikli, in which he informed the Syrian President that the Department hoped Syria would not take a rigid position with respect to the reuse of Banias waters in Syria. Shishikli noted that the TVA plan had both political and technical aspects, declaring that an arrangement between Israel and the riparian Arab states was implicit in the proposals even if an international agency acted as an intermediary. These states, he said, could not undertake such an arrangement with Israel until existing U.N. resolutions with respect to Israel were carried out. (783.5 MSP/12-1753)

[4] Telegram 259 to Damascus, a joint State–FOA message dated Dec. 18, stated in part as follows:

The telegram then stated that it was essential that the Syrian Government not be informed of this position at this time. (783.5 MSP/12-1853)

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Palestine-Israel-Jordan Affairs (Waller)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 15, 1954.

Subject: Israel-Arab Relations, including: the Egyptian blockade, the Israel-Jordan Armistice, the Banat Ya'qub project, the Arab League, and arms supplies for the Near East.

Participants: The Secretary
Ambassador Abba Eban of Israel
Minister Reuven Shiloah of Israel
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Waller

Ambassador Eban reviewed Egyptian activities during the past few years to maintain and intensify the blockade against shipping to and from Israel. Egypt's denial of Suez Canal transit facilities is costing Israel annually an amount equivalent to US aid. Each time Israel has sought political action through the SC the US has said the time was inopportune. He has now been authorized to bring the matter again to the SC at a suitable time. His present thinking is to do so in February after the Banat Ya'qub resolution has been passed and the SC agenda is less crowded. He said the British Government believes conclusion of an Anglo-Egyptian agreement on Suez would help the Egyptian Government initiate peace talks with Israel. Pending such an agreement Israel wants the SC to order Egypt to abolish the restrictive regulations. Egyptian compliance with the SC resolution would strengthen the armistice machinery.

The Ambassador said Israel's most pressing concern with Jordan is for a conference as required by Article XII of the Armistice Agreement. Israel is not trying to drag Jordan into peace discussions. On the contrary, Israel wants to limit the conference to the terms of the Armistice Agreement and has asked the UNSYG to reassure the Jordanians on this score. It is basically a question of Jordan honoring its signature.

The Ambassador said he was disquieted by Syrian reaction to the compromise text of the Banat Ya'qub resolution, since the Jordan River flows some 60 miles in Israel but not one inch in Syria. Israel is not enthusiastic about the resolution but recognizes it does give Israel an opportunity to present its case to the Chief of Staff. In a recent conversation, Vyshinsky strongly denied he supports the Syrian viewpoint. His objection to paragraph 11 of the draft resolution is that it does not deal specifically with the canal project. Vishinsky looks upon the present draft resolution as a means of imposing the "Johnston Plan"—an American plot—on the area. Vishinsky did not indicate if he would veto the present text but did say that if the resolution should specifically mention the canal project he could more easily approve it.

The Ambassador reviewed recent actions and statements by members of the Arab League, such as the statement of King Saud of Saudi Arabia that Israel should be wiped out, and said everything indicates the Arab states are tired of the armistice arrangements and wish to find ways to attack Israel. They consider the Qibya debate supported their viewpoint when, in fact, the resolution was in support of the armistice machinery. The Ambassador advocated "strong words to the Arab states", initially by diplomatic means but subsequently by some public statement to make the US position clear.

The Ambassador stated that any decision regarding arms supplies for the Arabs would only intensify their intransigence. There should be no differentiation between countries contiguous and noncontiguous to Israel, since the latter countries, notably Saudi Arabia and Iraq, have been as hostile toward Israel as neighboring countries. He referred to Iraq as one of the spearheads of anti-Israel activity. His government's view is that now is not a good time to provide arms to the Arab states.

The Secretary said, in reply, that while the Ambassador had raised many questions he would be unable to respond to all of them. However, the Ambassador's understanding is correct that the US interprets each event on its merits. As examples, he said he has recently told some Arab representatives that no one has the right to waste water in an area where water is so precious. Also he has opposed giving Syria a veto power in the canal construction project since it is apparent that Syria would only use the veto power negatively. He believed US policies are clear and would be surprised if any responsible Arab misunderstood them. He was aware that the US has seldom, if ever, been more unpopular with both the Arab states and Israel. Only small quantities of arms are to be supplied the Arabs and then only after adequate safeguards not to increase the danger to Israel. He was inclined to share the Ambassador's dim view of recent developments in the Near East but did not feel so frustrated that he would give up hope for peace. He was glad to have Ambassador Eban's views.

Mr. Byroade said a request has been sent our Embassy at Jidda for the text of King Saud's reported remarks about Israel which, if true, would be deplorable. Also the US feels strongly that Jordan should accept its obligation under Article XII and have so informed the Arab governments. He understood UNSYG Hammerskjold plans to proceed to Jerusalem and convoke the conference himself.

The Secretary said that he has hoped for the past year to get Egypt to undertake peace negotiations with Israel. The best line seems to be to wait for the Anglo-Egyptian agreement to be concluded and then bring all possible pressure to bear on Egypt to make peace. Ambassador Eban said Israel would welcome an Anglo-Egyptian settlement and his government has expressed its sympathy with Egyptian national aspirations. Also, Israel would like any Anglo-Egyptian agreement to include a firm Egyptian commitment on free passage of shipping through the Suez Canal. One reason Israel might ask SC consideration of Suez Canal restrictions is that the discussions might extend to general peace talks. The Secretary referred to his understanding that some of Israel's friends were working against an Anglo-Egyptian agreement believing an agreement would give Egypt military advantage over Israel. He said there was nothing in the agreement whereby Egypt would inherit the British installations in the Canal Zone. That question might arise after seven years when. and if, British troops should all be withdrawn from the Canal Zone.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs (Burdett)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] January 28, 1954.

Subject: Israel Complaint to the Security Council over Egyptian Restrictions on Movements of Ships Through the Suez Canal.[1]

---

[1] In a letter of Jan. 28 to the Security Council, the Israeli Representative requested that the Council urgently consider Israel's complaint against Egypt concerning (a) Egyptian enforcement of restrictions on the passage of ships trading with Israel through the Suez Canal, and (b) Egyptian interference with shipping procedures to the Israeli port of Elath on the Gulf of Aqaba. (U.N. doc. S/3168) In an explanatory memorandum of Jan. 29, Eban reviewed the subject of shipping through the Suez Canal since the Security Council had last considered the subject in 1951, and stated that Egypt's practices toward shipments destined for Israel had continued despite the Council's injunction, and that the list of contraband had recently been extended by Egypt to include food and other commodities. The Egyptian Government, the memorandum stated, had thereby defied the Security Council, the United Nations Charter, and the Egypt-Israel General Armistice Agreement. (U.N. doc. S/3168/Add.1)

In a letter of Feb. 3, Egypt requested the Security Council urgently to consider its complaint against Israel concerning violations in the Demilitarized Zone of the General Armistice Agreement between Egypt and Israel. The letter stated that these violations included the entry of Israeli armed forces into the Demilitarized Zone, at-

Participants: Mr. Anwar Niazi, First Secretary of the Egyptian
Embassy
NE—Mr. Hart
NE—Mr. Burdett

At the request of the Egyptian representative to the United Nations, Mr. Niazi called to ascertain the United States position on Israel's reported intention of raising in the Security Council the question of Egyptian interference with shipping through the Suez Canal. Mr. Hart explained the United States position as follows:

1. The United States has repeatedly urged Israel to postpone introducing this question in the Security Council.
2. In July 1953, the Embassy in Cairo inquired whether the Egyptian Government had extended the blockade of Israel to include food and other items. Such an extension was denied by the Foreign Office. In September 1953, Ambassador Caffery suggested that Egypt might wish to release the ship, Parnons, seized in transit to Israel. He stated that this would indicate an intention to relax the blockade and might prevent introduction of the question in the Security Council. The Ambassador indicated the United States would be forced to oppose Egypt in the Council. The Parnon was subsequently released.
3. Egypt might wish to consider carefully the effects upon its international position of failure to comply with the Security Council resolution of September 1, 1951. By yielding to pressure from the Arab League to tighten the economic blockade, Egypt is damaging its own standing in this country.
4. Egyptian actions place its friends in a difficult position. The United States does not see how it will be able to avoid taking a stand against Egypt in Security Council discussions of the subject. This is required by its firm policy of supporting the United Nations.
5. The best way out of the present situation would be for Egypt to take some concrete step evidencing an intention to abandon interference with traffic through the Suez Canal. This might prevent Security Council action against Egypt.

The gist of Mr. Niazi's lengthy remarks was a plea for further United States action vis-à-vis Israel to secure a further delay in introducing the matter in the Security Council. He pointed out the great disadvantages of raising the matter at this particular time. In reply, Mr. Hart emphasized the previous efforts of the United States and asserted that he had no hope that Israel could be pre-tacks on Bedouins inhabiting the area, and the establishment of Israeli settlements in the Demilitarized Zone. These acts, the letter stated, were in violation of the General Armistice Agreement and were in defiance of the Security Council Resolution of Nov. 17, 1950. (U.N. doc. S/3171)

The Security Council on Feb. 4, 1954 included in its agenda the Israeli complaint of Jan. 28 and the Egyptian complaint of Feb. 3; these items were discussed at Security Council meetings 657 to 664, from Feb. 4 to Mar. 29. (U.N. docs. S/PV.657-664) vailed upon not to take this step. He again suggested that Egypt take some action relaxing the blockade. Mr. Niazi felt that there was little chance of his government making such a move.

The New Zealand draft resolution was put to the vote on Mar. 29, and received 8 votes in favor (including the United States) and 2 against (Lebanon and the Soviet Union), with 1 abstention (China). CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY AMMAN, March 18, 1954—4 p. m.

361. Re Deptel 365,[2] see Embtel 360.[3] Today Foreign Minister spoke to me re statements by Israeli Minister Defense Lavon and Chief of Staff Dayan on March 16 and questioned Israeli intentions. I believe Jordan clearly recognizes Israel has superior military forces. This renders any aggression by Jordan forces extremely unlikely. In event another Qibya incident retaliatory action might be forced upon Jordan by local political situation resulting from aroused public opinion. At present time, above, coupled with moderating influence of Glubb as C in C leads conclusion Israeli fears and claims groundless. Jordan particularly apprehensive Israeli action at this time because fear unstable political situation Arab world will be considered suitable moment by Israel for long contemplated aggression, presenting Israel opportunity place blame on Arabs as irresponsible. Moreover Jordan has little confidence effective Arab support.

There is no local evidence of Israel military build-up on Jordan border but local authoritative opinion is concerned over increasing border tension and increasing Israeli claims of alleged border violations. Latest Israeli claim re bus ambush adds to preoccupations.

950. For Defense and USCINCEUR. Reference Deptel 654. [2] Embassy knows of no indications of aggressive intent such as call up of reserves or large-scale troop movements (Embtel 943). [3] Rotation of infantry battalions in Jerusalem corridor and Beitnabale area past week does not appear to have special significance.

On other hand, ambush of Israel bus in eastern Negev (Embtel 946) [3] brings series of recent Arab-Israel inflammatory incidents to acute point with responsibility divided and cause and effect difficult assess.

On one side have been: Arab infiltration and marauding and occasional murders; occasional firing and throwing of missiles by Arabs from wall of old city Jerusalem; Syrian firing upon Israel boats in Lake Tiberias; recent movement of Syrian and Lebanese troops toward border (Damascus 398); [3] and ambush of Negev bus (likely to be especially bitter to IDF Chief of Staff Dayan since number of passengers were returning from leave where Dayan two days before had made speech saying "regime which builds policy on economic stranglehold of Israel, claims to be at war with her and sets itself goal of severing Negev from Israel is in for a downfall"). This is against background of prospective relinquishment of Suez case to Egypt and US program of providing arms to Arab States as part of area security program, both of which have raised fear on part of Israelis of overconfidence by Arabs with mounting pressures and attacks upon Israel.

On other hand, have been: Israel's activities in various demilitarized zones, unnecessarily harsh ambushing of Arabs crossing borders with non-aggressive intent; indications of Israel aggressive intent in press commentary time of Egyptian and Syrian political crises; use of landbased artillery for first time in firing upon Syrian villages on eastern shore of Lake Tiberias; reported killing of Jordanian shepherds at Yruod (Amman telegram 359).[3]

Present situation contains makings of renewed outbreak of armed warfare between Israel and Arab States and is developing against background of Jordanian unwillingness (supported by Arab League) meet with Israel under Article XII Armistice Agreement despite request by UNSYG.

(1) Tripartite powers call on both Israel and Arab countries refrain from any military activities which would increase tension and take all possible measures prevent further violations of border; and (2) tripartite powers publicly urge Jordan comply with SYG's request attend Article XII or similar meeting as step toward dealing with situation which increasingly threatens security of all.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY BEIRUT, March 19, 1954—5 p. m.

771. Foreign Minister Naccache and Director General Ammoun told me today they deeply disturbed over incidents on Syria and Jordan frontiers past few days. They understand certain Israeli officials are urging immediate action, and they fear Israel will resort to speedy retaliatory raids into Arab territory, scoring several fait accompli before big powers or UN exercise restraint. Accordingly, they ask us, as they have already asked the British, to urge self-control on Government of Israel.

As far as Israeli-Lebanese frontier is concerned, situation remains relatively quiet (Deptel 1045, March 17) [2] Lebanese military and Foreign Office sources understand Israelis are engaging in "routine maneuvers" near border and Lebanese have stationed additional detachments of observers to keep eye on situation (see Embdes 576, March 16). [3] In addition, one small company been assigned as protection to coast road north of Ras Nakoura.

As Department aware, there no disposition nor ability here to pick fight with Israelis. On contrary, both on Arab boycott and Ras Nakoura traffic, there have been definite signs within past fort-night that Lebanese basically would like to soften existing conditions. GOL has even sought to keep out of press inflammatory remarks attributed to Israeli officials such as Dayan's alleged Reserve Officers Day statement that war with Arabs is "inevitable" which carried in AFP story with Defense Minister's comments against Iraqi alignment with Turks and Pakistanis.

954. Re Embtel 951. [2] Bendor, head US division Foreign Ministry, last evening at dinner Tel Aviv, made following comments which he said could be regarded in nature of official statement: Israel public shocked and bitter at Negev bus ambush. Too early to tell what direction reaction will take. Israeli Government and public fundamentally divided between policy of forcefully demonstrating Israel strength and determination at this time and policy of restraint enunciated by Sharett in speech three days ago (Embtel 944).[2] Reaction of world opinion, UN, Western powers and particularly US to latest outrage and international measures flowing therefrom could be determining factor. (Unofficially Bendor said Sharett's position with public and even within own party also likely to be determined thereby.)

Bendor said great importance therefore will attach to whether US expresses its strong abhorrence of bus ambush episode and is active in securing Security Council resolution of severe condemnation.

I expressed to Bendor my concern over mounting tension and increasing tempo and seriousness of recent episodes. I said it might be necessary to choose between statements and resolutions of abhorrence and condemnation on one hand or on other hand utilizing Jordan's possible need rectify impairment moral position by urging Jordan agree to meeting on border problem with Israel under Article 12 or possibly (to enable Jordan to save face in light of recent rejection of meeting) under some other terms of reference. indicated some interest in this but suggested that even in pursuance of latter course there should be some indication of censure.

There is no doubt that bus massacre has greatly shocked Israel public and that they regard it as much more than another incident.

Bus ambush will undoubtedly be exploited by Lavon-Dayan element (undoubtedly in close touch with Ben Gurion) to create support for present show of strength by Israel. It is not clear what form this would take although it might include greater use of reprisals, increased Israel activity in demilitarized zones as Banat Yaacov and El Auja, more drastic treatment of infiltrators, firmer retaliation to firing from Syrian positions on Lake Tiberias and by Arabs from old city Jerusalem walls, and exploitation of instability in Arab countries as indicated in press comment at time of Syrian and Egyptian political crises.

Embassy believes desire of Sharett group for proof that his policy of moderation is correct might be met by action of kind indicated last paragraph Embtel 950,[3] provided démarche to Jordon proves successful in bringing about negotiations at early date.

It can be anticipated that over longer period similar argument may be advanced by Sharett group to obtain western powers support for Israel's position on such questions as Egyptian blockade, Arab economic boycott, status of Jerusalem as Israel capital and arms aid to Arabs. Embassy does not believe UN or western powers should capitulate to Israel position on all these issues as price for maintaining Sharett position in government but does believe action of kind suggested last paragraph Embtel 950, might serve present purpose strengthening Sharett element which we regard as desirable.

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] March 23, 1954.

Subject: Jordan's Fear of Israeli Retaliatory Action

Participants: Mr. Abdul Monem Rifa'i, Ambassador of Jordan
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Dorsey

Ambassador Rifa'i called at 6:30 P. M. today to see Mr. Byroade on urgent business. He said he had received a telegram from his Government that Israeli Delegation had walked out of the Mixed Armistice Commission when it had failed to reach a decision to condemn Jordan for the Attack on the Israeli bus at Scorpion Pass. He translated his telegram, which stated that the Israeli Delegates were violent in their expressions and described the situation as extremely serious. Ambassador Rifa'i said that the past pattern of events indicated that such an outcome of affairs was usually followed by serious retaliatory measures. His Government had therefore requested him to approach the Department to indicate to the Israeli Ambassador its serious concern and its hope that Israel would act with the utmost restraint and caution.

Mr. Byroade said that he had already taken such action in conversation with Minister Shiloah within the past hour. He added that we would watch the situation with greatest care and reiterated the hope expressed by the Secretary in the morning that the Jordanians should also be patient and calm in the present period of tension, doing everything possible to prevent any incident developing into anything serious.

Mr. Rifa'i said the Jordanian Government felt in no way responsible for the massacre. It had taken every possible measure to reduce border tensions and would continue to do so as it would to insure all possible restraint on the part of the people. He expressed deep appreciation for the action taken by Mr. Byroade.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Lebanon-Syria Affairs (Allen)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] March 24, 1954.

Subject. Israeli-Arab Tension and U.S. "Support" of Israel

Participants: Seven Arab Chiefs of Mission:
Ambassador Malik—Lebanon
Ambassador Shabandar—Iraq
Ambassador Al-Faqih—Saudi Arabia
Chargé d'Affaires Zabarah—Yemen
Ambassador Zeineddine—Syria
Ambassador Rifai—Jordan
Chargé d'Affaires Labban—Egypt
The Secretary
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Allen

Ambassador Malik acted as spokesman for the Arab group. He said all were calling on instructions of their governments to call to the attention of the Secretary the mounting tension in the Near East "caused by Israel"; to express their belief that underlying Israel's "aggressive actions" over the past few months was the intention to provoke one or another of the Arab countries to react in such a way as to give Israel an excuse for a large-scale military attack; and to inform the U.S. Government that in the event of an Israeli attack on any Arab country, all would instantaneously give full military support to the attacked country, as they were bound to do under the Arab Collective Security Pact.

Ambassador Malik listed as examples of Israel's aggressiveness the Qibya incident; the al-Auja incident (on the Israel-Egyptian border last fall); Israel's attempt to divert the Jordan at Banat Ya'qub; Israel's attempt to "force" Jordan to attend a "peace conference" with Israel (under Article 12 of the Armistice Agreement); the constant pressure exerted by Israel to prevent economic and military aid going to the Arab countries; recent Israeli troop movements; recent belligerent speeches of the Israel Minister of Defense and Chief of Staff; and the violent Israel reaction to the regrettable "bus" incident in the Negev. He stated that these Israeli actions have created a most dangerous atmosphere of tension.

Ambassador Malik said that the Arab representatives were approaching the United States for two reasons: because of the interest they know the United States, as a member of the UN, has in maintaining peace and security in the Near East; and because of the special position of Israel in relation to the United States. Without the U.S. there would be no Israel. The U.S., which has for years given large-scale aid and support to Israel is indirectly responsible for putting Israel in a "moral and material" position to follow aggressive policies against the Arabs. U.S. support and aid, both governmental and private, has the effect of enabling Israel to flout the decisions of the UN; and to strengthen its position in the border area which the UN did not assign to Israel. U.S. aid, despite the known intention of the present Administration to be impartial, encourages Israel aggressiveness against the Arabs.

The Secretary replied that our view of Israel's actions and estimate of Israel's intention is not as alarming as that presented by Ambassador Malik. He said there have been disturbing incidents of course, but as we see it they do not add up to as ominous a picture as Ambassador Malik portrayed. Our estimate is that responsible Israelis, including the Government, want peace and security and normal relations with the Arabs. Although we do give economic support to Israel, we do not feel we can use our aid as a lever to force the recipients to do everything we want. In the case of Israel as in that of other countries, we do not assume that we can dictate policy merely because there is a degree of economic dependence on us.

Referring to the disparity in economic aid as between Israelis and Arabs, the Secretary explained that this is in no sense due to partiality on our part. Mr. Byroade emphasized that this was the first year we had embarked on an economic aid program for the Arab countries, and a slow start in the first year was inevitable, as had also been the case in Greece and Turkey, for example.

Referring to the present tension in the Near East and the Arabs' fear that Israel might take aggressive action, the Secretary stressed his hope that both parties would be patient and calm in the present period of tension and that neither would allow any incident to develop into something serious.

Mr. Byroade emphasized that according to our information the Israelis appeared to be just as worried as the Arabs. They are nervous about what they regard as the provocative attacks of the Arabs, and are very worried about the U.S. program of making arms available to certain Arab states. The Secretary stated that if Israel did, as the Arabs fear, attack one of the Arab states, the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950 would come into play and the United States, along with the U.K. and France, would take appropriate action.[1]

Memorandum of Conversation, by Robert L. Burns of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

LIMITED OFFICIAL USE [WASHINGTON,] March 25, 1954.

Subject: Israel Requests U.S. Action to Reduce Israel-Arab Tension

Participants: Ambassador Eban of Israel
Mr. Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Secretary Dulles
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Burns

The Secretary expressed his personal regret over the Negev bus attack which the Ambassador acknowledged with appreciation.

The Ambassador said his government feels the present state of Israel-Arab relations warrants the attention of the Western powers. He referred to his January 15 call on the Secretary when he had described indications that the Arabs were not interested in maintaining the armistice. The symptoms have since been intensified: the Egyptian UN delegate's statement that regardless of SC action Egypt will continue the blockade; the 3rd Jordan refusal to attend an Article 12 meeting; Syria's "dead hand" on the Banat Ya'qub project; Iraq's detention of three Israelis.

Against this background is the Scorpion Pass incident and Israel's belief that Jordanians committed the crime. The Jordan Government is guilty since the attack originated from its territory. Israel had expected the MAC to say something about the incident; the prolonged MAC discussions had merely increased tension. The MAC can exist and function without Israel attendance; Israel does not wish to attend as things stand now. Since neither the MAC nor the SC has anything to say and the UNSYG has said he can pursue Article 12 no further, the SC should review the armistice and its state of disrepair at the request of the three Western powers. The Israel Government therefore formally requests that the U.S. join in bringing the matter before the SC. The discussions should not dwell upon the past but the future; reaffirm that Article 12 is part of the General Armistice Agreement; seek better measures to prevent infiltration; see if the armistice machinery is not too legalistic. In addition, in view of the critical state of affairs, Israel formally requests that the U.S. abstain from arming the Arab states; such action would be explosive and have a maddening effect on Israel opinion.

The Ambassador said Israel had never been sure how to fit the Tripartite Declaration into its security picture. In contrast to most countries Israel has no alliances, only recourse to the SC. What does the Declaration mean? Israel does not think U.S. troops will come in the event of an attack. Forceful changes of borders are forbidden, but what about blockades, boycotts, etc.? The three powers should express opposition to such hostility.

Regarding the bus tragedy the Secretary said while he was quite able to understand the Israel people's assumption that Jordan was responsible, he was unable to understand the Israel Government's readiness to hold Jordan at fault in the absence of a formal finding of guilt. There was no justification for criticism against the MAC Chairman. He hoped Israel would not withdraw from the MAC; the machinery has value which would be diminished by Israel's non-participation.

The Secretary referred to the recent call of the Arab Ambassadors, who had alleged Israel preparations for expansion and asked for U.S. restraining influence. He had tried to persuade the representatives that their fears were unjustified.

The Secretary said he was perplexed over what to do about the tense situation; events could snowball; the armistice could collapse. He felt the situation was worse now than a year ago. He did not know whether the measures the Israel Government suggested would help. He was certain Israel's withdrawal from the MAC would not. He understood Jordan's refusal to attend meetings under Article 12 was based on a suspicion of Israel's motives. The Ambassador said his government had specified no conditions. Mr. Byroade said we feel the UNSYG will still try for a meeting if it can be disassociated from the bus incident. The Ambassador and Mr. Shiloah stated their understanding that the UNSYG had given up his mission.

The Secretary said the first step in regard to Israel's request for three power action would be a discussion between the powers and not SC consideration. In the absence of an evidentiary report from the MAC he could not see how the Council could deal with this matter except in a very general way. It could deplore the incident and call on all concerned to try and apprehend the culprits. He did not see how the SC could take action against individuals or states without further evidence in the matter.

Mr. Byroade said public statements and the bus incident have increased fears but we do not have information indicating a general deterioration in the area. The Ambassador then listed infiltration, murders and robberies in Israel since last October. Mr. Byroade said our records indicate the only increased activity is in Israel patrol forays and the loss of Jordanian lives.

The Secretary said we would give the entire question our serious consideration but could not contemplate SC action until we had talked with the U.K. and France.[1]

Memorandum of Conversation, by Robert L. Burns of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

LIMITED OFFICIAL USE [WASHINGTON,] March 31, 1954.

Subject: Israel–Jordan Armistice Situation

Participants: Ambassador Rifa'i of Jordan
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Burns

The Ambassador said he had intended to call on the Secretary but after further consideration and discussions with his Arab colleagues had decided to call on Mr. Byroade, perhaps seeing the Secretary at a later date.

The Ambassador referred to the recent call of the Arab Ambassadors on the Secretary and said the fears then expressed over possible aggression by Israel were borne out at Nahhalin. [1] The Jordan Government considers the situation even more dangerous than heretofore, with tension at a peak. The Arab Legion could have but did not reciprocate the attack. However, Jordan expects the United States, as a signatory of the Tripartite Declaration, to do something about the matter. Jordan feels the United States responsible for the situation which has developed or at least for any future developments which may occur if some action is not taken. Jordan and its Arab friends are considering bringing the Nahhalin attack before the Security Council. Maybe other powers will bring the general armistice situation to the Council. Mr. Byroade said regardless of how discussion originated in the Council, it would be impossible to limit debate to one of the several aspects of the situation.

In response to Mr. Byroade's query whether the Ambasador thought Council discussion might relieve the dangerous tension, the Ambassador said in the event of SC consideration the Arabs would ask for Qibya-like sanctions against Israel for Nahhalin; Israel has withdrawn from the MAC and allowed its forces to commit further aggression. Mr. Byroade reiterated there was no way to isolate Nahhalin from several other questions: Article XII; the bus attack; individual infiltration; etc. We have been talking with the UK about the problem. Some act of diplomacy is needed to ease the situation.

[1] On Mar. 30, the Jordanian Foreign Minister charged in a cable to the U.N. Secretary-General that Israeli armed forces had on Mar. 28 attacked the village of Nahalin, killing 9 persons and wounding 14 civilians. (U.N. doc. S/3192) On Apr. 1, the Representatives of Lebanon requested on behalf of Jordan the inclusion of the item on the Security Council's agenda for urgent consideration. (S/3195) On Apr. 5, Israel asked for urgent consideration of four complaints that Jordan had repudiated its obligations under the Israel–Jordan Armistice Agreement, particularly by staging an attack on a bus at Scorpion Pass on Mar. 17. (S/3196 and Add.1; S/3200) The subject was discussed at Security Council meetings 665 to 671, from Apr. 8 to May 12. (S/PV.665-671) On June 19, the Chief of Staff of the Truce Supervision Organization submitted to the Secretary-General two reports concerning the Nahalin and Scorpion Pass incidents. (S/3251 and S/3252)

Mr. Byroade did not share the Ambassador's view that an effort by the U.S. or SC to "cool down" Israel would bring quiet to the area; lots of problems would be left unattended, especially the primary problem of the Near East today: public opinion. Prime Minister Sharett is trying to play a moderating role, and an attempt to limit SC discussion to Nahhalin and avoid Article XII, etc. would further excite the Israel people. One reason the Israel public is so excited is because of the U.S.; the Israelis think we have turned against them. Some background on this: the U.S. looks at its own security with an East-West point of view; it sees the lack of strength in the Middle East, contends that something must be done to stabilize the area and begins to take some action toward this end; this process started about three years ago, and it is a recognition of this evolution of American policy which has caused tension in Israel. There are people there who think we will do anything to gain Arab friendship. We hope that in a few years we will arrive at a situation wherein neither side will fear us. At this point the Israelis are really scared when they hear we may supply arms to some of the Arab states.

Mr. Byroade said the present Arab policy of maintaining a delicate balance between peace and war in the area is extremely dangerous; in time the world will say the Arabs' refusal to talk and improve local conditions cannot be condoned. In the present instance it therefore does not seem in the long range interests of the Arabs to restrict SC discussion to the Nahhalin incident.

The Ambassador listed the withholding of U.S. aid to Israel over Banat Ya'qub, SC condemnation of Israel for Qibya, failure of the MAC to find Jordan guilty in the bus incident, and said the Arabs expect some action in the case of Nahhalin. All that is desired is tranquillity; the Arabs are not even asking for implementation of UN resolutions. Unless the West acts, the Arabs may feel compelled to take action which would force the West to rectify the unsatisfactory state of affairs. Will the three powers bring Nahhalin to the SC if the Arabs do not? Mr. Byroade said we were presently considering the matter. He believed the USSR's vetoes in the Council are something more than friendly acts toward the Arabs; they are attempts to frustrate any move toward stability in the Near East. Some way should be found to bring Israel back to the MAC and have Israel–Jordan talks on ways to make the UN machinery more effective.

The Ambassador said the Arabs feel Nahhalin must be brought to the Council but have not yet made a firm decision in the matter. If the Arabs do not bring it, will it be brought by others? Mr. Byroade said his guess was it would be.

(The Ambassador, in referring to Arab apprehensions that expanded discussions will result if Nahhalin is raised in the Security Council, mentioned the Arabs' "new Russian friend".)

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State [1]

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 7, 1954.

Subject: Representation to Israel on Arab-Israel Border Incidents.

I believe the Arab-Israel border situation has deteriorated to a point where immediate action is necessary to forestall the real danger of an outbreak of general fighting. The UNTSO alone appears no longer capable of coping with the problem and it is too risky to await the outcome of prolonged debate in the Security Council, even if constructive results emerge in the fact of Soviet obstructionism.

Our reports indicate Israel has embarked on a deliberate policy of fomenting border disturbances (Tab A). [2] She appears to have reached the conclusion that the existing situation is intolerable, and appears prepared to risk open warfare. Her objectives apparently are to bring about, through the use of force, a revision of the armistice machinery and permanent arrangements with the Arab states.

The best way of arresting the present trend is to make abundantly clear to Israel our conviction that her policy of force will not pay, and that we will not condone it.

Recommendations:

1. That the Secretary call in Eban and discuss with him bluntly our concern over Israel's present policies, making the following points:

(a) Our assessment is that Israel bears heavy responsibility for the deterioration of the border situation. As stated in the past we deplore particularly her policy of retaliation. Our information does not confirm Israel's assertions that the Arab states are pursuing a deliberate aggressive policy.

(b) We are amazed at Israel's attitude toward the UNTSO, upon which peace in the first instance depends. Her position is not justifed by the facts.

(c) We are forced to believe that Israel's present policies, especially her deliberate use of force, will lead to increased disorders and may result in open warfare, which can only harm the best interests of the U.S. and Israel.

(d) We earnestly counsel Israel to undertake a general reevaluation of her present course and to cooperate in working out peacefully permanent arrangements.

(e) Persistence by Israel in her present policies will result in damage to Israel-US relations and may force us into a position of open opposition to Israel.

2. That the Secretary sign the attached telegram (Tab B)[3] informing the British and the French that we intend to make representations to Israel and suggesting that the three powers immediately send parallel notes to Israel based on the Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950 warning her of their concern over the border situation and asking her to take all measures in her power to restore stability on the border.

EVIDENCE OF ISRAEL'S AGGRESSIVE POLICY

1. General Bennike's October 27 report to the Security Council, his replies November 9 to questions from SC members, and his March 1 report to the SC indicate Israel has failed to live up to its declared desire for a peaceful border. In a letter March 29 to the UNSYG, Ambassador Eban strongly criticized Bennike's March 1 report which stated, in part, "An increase in the number of [Israel] complaints does not . . . suffice to indicate a deterioration in the local situation on the border. It may indicate an intensification of the cold war between the central authorities. . . . There have been other periods of psychological warfare".[5] As Bennike has said: "respect for the armistice agreements must come from the parties themselves".

2. Substantial guilt for the critical state of affairs is attributable to Israel, . . . (Enclosure 1).[6] The British have received a report that the Israel Cabinet March 28 approved a policy of retaliatory action for border killings (Enclosure 2).[7]

3. When the Israel-Jordan MAC failed March 23 to condemn Jordan for the Negev bus ambush, the Israel delegation walked out, having unsuccessfully pressured MAC Chairman Hutchison with threats before the meeting. Israel failed to heed Hutchison's subsequent request for cooperation in identifying the killers which you endorsed in your March 25 conversation with Eban. Prime Minister Sharett stated to parliament March 24 that the MAC "has failed to carry out its responsibilities and betrayed our confidence . . . has betrayed its primary duty". (Enclosure 3)[8] (We have information which should not be revealed to Eban that Bedouin brigands from Egyptian territory committed the bus murders.)

4. The Israel-Jordan MAC condemned Israel for an organized military attack March 29 on the Jordan village of Nahhalin. Sharett made statements justifying the attack and saying it was a "local affair". (Enclosures 4[9] and 5[10])

5. The Israel-Egyptian MAC condemned Israel for two attacks April 2 by "military or para-military forces" in Egyptian controlled territory (Enclosure 6).[11]

6. We have reports of two organized attacks by Israel forces April 6/7 on the Jordan village of Husan. Our Ambassador in Amman feels immediate action is desirable to cause Israel to desist from aggressive border actions and cooperate through the MAC and the local commanders' agreement (Enclosure 7).[12]

7. Eban is now engaged in an active press campaign to convince the US public that the Arab states are embarked on an organized campaign of aggression against Israel. His contentions are not borne out by the facts. While the serious problem posed for Israel by Arab infiltration should not be minimized, we have no information from our representatives or the UN indicating that these activities are instigated by the Arab governments. On the contrary, Jordan has taken energetic measures to curb infiltration. In contrast, the Israel Government has deliberately directed—as a matter of policy—attacks by military units against the Arabs.

The Ambassador in Iraq (Berry) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL BAGHDAD, April 9, 1954—1 p. m.

605. Prime Minister Jamali, when I called on him today at his request, said he wished to voice his serious concern over developments regarding Palestine. Recent attacks by Israel on Jordan, the latest of which had been the April 6 attack on the Jordan border, had convinced the Arab states that Israel was determined to provoke trouble. Lebanon, on behalf of Jordan, had, therefore, placed the April 6 attack before the SC. He had heard that Israel had also taken the bus attack to SC. He had a report from Iraq Embassy Washington that it was the intention of the Western powers to deal with the whole Palestine situation as one package, but he wished to tell me it could not be dealt with in this manner. Each incident had to be dealt with on its own merits—Qibya, the bus attack, Nahhalin, and now the recent border attacks. He wanted me to know that should the Western powers attempt to deal at UN with the present situation as a package the Arab states were determined to walk out. This action had been approved at Cairo AL meeting by the Arab states, which had also agreed to urge US, in light of recent events, to withhold aid from Israel (Embtel 581 [586], April 2); [2] had reviewed their arms potential in view of possible arms embargo; and had voiced, at Egyptian instigation, opposition to any Arab state unilaterally joining Turkish-Pakistan pact.

Prime Minister said he also wanted me to know that Jordan had asked for military assistance. He thought, however, that Brigadier Daghistani, who had been sent to Amman with a small staff, had convinced Jordan that this was undesirable at this time. Tension remained high, nevertheless, along all of the Israeli-Jordan border.

Prime Minister then said that, in the circumstances, he requested me to urge the US Government:

(1) Not to take steps which would further separate US and Arab states. Pressure on the Arabs again to make peace at this moment would most certainly alienate the Arabs;

(2) Not to condone Israeli aggression. Cutting off financial aid to Israel whose strength and ability to attack the Arabs was derived from American aid, would certainly be an effective means of showing US displeasure.

Israel, he said, should remain calm and contain themselves. He could assure me that no Arab state would touch Israel unless it continued its aggression. He realized that Israel was trying to provoke the Arab states. There was a limit, however, to which the Arab governments could resist popular pressure. Iraq itself had no interest in a fight with Israel. Iraq wanted to repair the damage of the flood and to get on with its own development.

I replied that I understood his concern and that I would convey it and his requests to the Department. I thought, however, that the proposed action of Arab states regarding UN was not in their best interests. It would most certainly alienate public opinion in the US. USSR had walked out of SC and Israel out of MAC and had achieved nothing. He said that if the Arabs walked out it would be a public manifestation of their conviction that justice could not be found at UN and from Western powers. He also wanted me to understand that if the other Arab states walked out Iraq would be obliged to act with them.

Doctor Jamali, although obviously concerned, was calm and moderate throughout our conversation. I believe he is convinced that Israel is spoiling for a fight and that it is trying to provoke the Arabs to retaliation. He is seeking to restrain the Arab states in their own best interest. He believes the problem is greater than can be encompassed within the restricted horizons of the Middle East; therefore, in the interest of peace and stability, he is endeavoring to obtain a fair hearing from UN and the Western powers.

Memorandum by the Secretary of State to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] April 10, 1954.

Re: The Attached Memorandum on Representation to Israel [1]

I am not following the recommendations you make at the present time because I feel that to read the riot act to the Israeli Ambassador at this stage would produce no useful results. I agree with your premise that the Israelis have embarked on a deliberate policy of making things worse in the hope that by so doing they may force us to force peace on the Arabs. But until we are in a position of offering them some better alternative than that, I do not feel that merely to upbraid them is going to be very productive. We may and should protest. But not deliver any ultimatum.

The basic fact of the matter is that the Arabs do not want peace and will not negotiate in any way for any sort of a settlement, even when obligated by the Armistice. The only argument which we have to make when we ask the Israelis to remain calm and peaceful is that in some way which has never been clear to me we may in the course of a few years win sufficient confidence from the Arabs to persuade them to negotiate for peace. I can scarcely blame the Israeli for thinking this is wishful thinking.

I feel that it is now essential for us to develop some new approach in this area. I am afraid that this is not a matter which I can give much personal attention to until after I have returned from Geneva, but I think it is a matter which should be given urgent attention by our Policy Planning Staff and very possibly by the NSC itself, and there should be private talks with the UK and perhaps France.

Rod O'Connor tells me that Churchill has sent Sharett a personal message urging upon him restraint and asking that they rejoin the Mixed Armistice Commission. I would have no objection to having a similar message sent from me, or possibly even from the Following text suggested for consideration by Secretary on arrival London:

"Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

"I am much concerned at the recent aggravation of the border situation between Israel and her Arab neighbors. Without attempting to assess blame, I think I should tell you of my strong feeling that the interests of peace in the Near East and Israel's own interests call for the greatest restraint at this moment. I earnestly hope your Government will take all measures in its power to prevent further disturbances on the border.

"I also believe it important that Israel promptly resume participation in the Israel–Jordan Mixed Armistice Commission. I believe firmly that all parties should cooperate fully with the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization in an effort to work out peacefully the differences which are constantly arising. Since complaints from both sides are currently before the United Nations Security Council, it would seem especially appropriate for Israel at this moment to demonstrate her good will and desire to cooperate by resuming relations with one of the most important United Nations organisms concerned with this situation. Sincerely, John Foster Dulles."

SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, April 10, 1954—3 p. m.

1040. British Ambassador here told me this morning that United Kingdom Ambassador Amman had recommended to London that efforts should be made, as means of reducing Israel–Jordan tensions, to obtain reinstitution operations under local commanders agreements, which are still legally in existence, but which have been nullified by withdrawal Israelis.

British Ambassador here subsequently received instructions authorizing him to approach Israeli Government in his discretion and after consultation with his American and French colleagues. He has replied to Foreign Office that he concurred desirability reinstitution agreements, but that little purpose would be served by approach here which would have to be limited to formal note delivered liaison office, Tel Aviv. He has suggested alternatively that representations could be made most effectively by Foreign Office calling in Israel Ambassador in London.

I told British Ambassador that at my home Wednesday evening, Hart had made to Eytan and Dayan (as well as to Raphael, Louri, Herzog, Shiloah in Jerusalem Thursday) an impressive case for reinstitution local commanders operations based on his survey border trouble spots and conversations Jordanian and Arab Legion officers. Dayan had reported that Israel had been disappointed results local commander approach, in part because Jordanians never informed Israel of action taken or punishment given in specific infiltration cases. Dayan also mentioned Israel willingness negotiate some border rectification in Jordan's favor in return for concessions to Israel, such as (1) solution to Scopus problem, (2) availability Jordan sweetwater for Israel Dead Sea Potash Works.

Shiloah last night expressed to us his view that local commanders arrangements useful only in implementation of basic understandings which, in initial instance, would have to be reached at higher level and on broader basis.

The comments of Dayan and Shiloah, coupled with recent governmental statements and press commentaries, lead us to conclusion that Israeli Government is hopeful that current border tensions and incidents will lead to a series of bilateral talks with neighboring countries which, while falling short of full peace negotiations, will permit discussions and possible solutions to problems beyond the scope of localized border control measures.

[1] Repeated priority to Amman, Jerusalem, London, and Paris.

Nevertheless, Hart and I concur in the desirability of the reinstitution of the local commanders agreements and recommend that the Department make a strong recommendation to the Israel Embassy in Washington parallel to the one which we assume the British will be making in London. In making such recommendation, Department may wish to emphasize its belief, based on careful study, its own and other qualified observers, that local commanders agreement Jordan side would be supervised Arab Legion, but should be conducted police officers both sides and that Legion concurs fully and even urges close working police contacts.

Although civilian arms taken up by Egyptians some time ago (even using trick to get maximum number disclosed) Palestinians will always find arms for reprisals. Riad recommended to previous and present Governor Gaza that arms should be given to responsible civilian heads for self-defense with severe restriction against offensive use but recommendation not accepted to date. TOP SECRET NIACT LONDON, April 13, 1954—1 a. m.

Secto 4. For Acting Secretary from the Secretary. In morning meeting April 12 with Eden we discussed at length Israeli-Arab situation. Kirkpatrick, Roger Allen and Shuckburgh present. Ambassador Aldrich, Butterworth and Merchant with me.

Eden said King of Jordan angry at British over his recent statement in Commons to which he had refused to add new gloss.

I said that I was deeply disturbed over situation in Middle East and that I feared Israel may calculate that matters cannot improve until they become worse. Conditions under the armistice are unsatisfactory with Israel treated as an enemy, blockaded, etc. I said that inference could be drawn from Israeli acts that they were prepared to reopen war in order to create situation from which peace settlement rather than armistice would follow. The Arabs for their part, I said, were fearful of a new attack. A new factor in situation was weight now being thrown behind Arabs by Soviets as witnessed to by their recent vetoes. All of this meant that the area with its immense oil reserves were in increasing jeopardy. I concluded by saying that these events were not likely to happen in near future. It was entirely possible that in year or two they would come to pass and that it was difficult to know with certainty the proper course of action for us to follow. I expressed doubt that by US following more balanced policy in area, we could count on so increasing our influence with Arab states as to promote stability and harmonious relations.

Eden said that he agreed entirely with our analysis as well as my apprehensions and that he likewise was puzzled as to policy to pursue. He said that UK had tried to get Jordan and Israel together on border problems but that Jordan had refused. He believes that USSR now will veto any such talks within the UN, although Allen expressed doubt on this score. Allen noted that Prime Minister of Jordan had recently told UK Ambassador that he would not personally object to meeting on frontier problems with the Secretary General in small subcommittee of the Security Council.

I said that it was my understanding Arabs would not agree to any agenda for such a meeting and that all they were interested in was securing another resolution of censure for Israel.

Allen suggested (and Eden agreed) that only current course was to nibble at edges of problem seeking first frontier control. He felt we should continue to try to get them together under the aegis of UN. Failing that, we might attempt procedure now being used with Trieste under which two of us presumably the French would talk first to one side and then the other in effort to narrow area disagreement and find solution acceptable to both parties.

I pointed out physical as well as political difficulties of effective border control and emphasized importance of restoration cooperation between both police forces which I had urged on my trip last May.

The matter was left that we agreed our estimates of the situation and its seriousness were substantially identical but that I had not committed the US to any particular proposal or course of action. Eden said that UK would attempt to put their suggestions for moving forward on frontier problem in concrete form and then instruct their Embassy to discuss it with Department.

1309. My comments on two points in Department's telegram 1274 [2] are following:

1. Prospects for getting parties together through UN at SC or GA level to discuss general settlement are dim at this time. This leaves UNTSO and MACs as only UN bodies where there is hope of getting parties together and nibbling at problem of improved frontier control (only subject now open for discussion).

2. From discussions with Egyptian authorities and some of MAC chairmen following specific measures should help improve border situation and machinery:

(a) Considerable expansion UN observers corps.

(b) UN translators to conduct interrogations.

(c) More thorough briefing of UN personnel before they assume duties as observers or MAC chairmen.

(d) Pressure on parties to create and observe network of local commanders and police agreements.

Even-handed treatment of incidents will do more than anything to assure Arab cooperation. Key element such treatment involves differentiating between individual acts and those instigated or obviously condoned by governments. UN originated publicity would appear best means maintain this distinction.

Raphael and Tekoah of Foreign Ministry yesterday said Israel delegation consisting of Tekoah and Divon of Foreign Ministry and Colonel Harkabi and Lt. Colonel Shalev of IDF would be prepared meet Colonel Riad at either Beersheba or Gaza on April 19 on agenda "cessation of all acts of hostility and in particular of violations of border security". I said I feared delegation of that size and agenda of that scope would kill prospects of meeting of kind Shiloah, Hart and I had proposed. They agreed discuss matter with Sharett and last evening said IG willing have Tekoah representing Foreign Ministry and Shalev representing military meet with Riad without formal agenda but with purpose of (1) "telling Riad of IG's anxieties re border situation and hearing from Riad what Egypt willing to do about it" and (2) discussing later meeting of plenipotentiaries on over all peace.

Re latter, they said IG had, immediately prior discussion between Shiloah, Hart and myself, made direct contact with Egypt concerning possibilities such meeting. I said re (1) I thought meeting would be more fruitful if it took form of mutual discussion of common problem and (2) proposal would of course require full consideration at highest level Egyptian Government and too great emphasis on it might result in wrecking informal exploratory meeting on border problems which Shiloah, Hart and I had discussed. Said I appreciated Sharett's agreement to such ambitious meeting and would forward IG's suggestions.

Russell expressed the hope to Lourie that the Israeli Government would not attempt to "place too heavy a load on this fragile craft on its first voyage." (684A.85/4-1554)

The Consul at Jerusalem (Tyler) to the Department of State [1]

TOP SECRET PRIORITY JERUSALEM, April 17, 1954—2 p. m.

160. Department telegram 90 to Jerusalem. [2] Israel has made much of Jordan refusal to meet under Article 12 and might be made to see some inconsistency in her own refusal to return and cooperate with MAC if formally requested to do so by Secretary General UN. Also there are some indications Israel may wish to be forced take this action (Contel 152) [3] and possibly it might strengthen Sharett's position. If Israel does return easy to call meeting with Bennike as chairman to discuss improvements border machinery. This would be victory for Jordan and unfortunate in view Jordan obstinacy to honor her signature on Article 12, but Arab ability to commit suicide over some fancied point of honor one of realities of situation. However, Israel not blameless in refusing to honor UN resolutions.

Present situation more serious, but not essentially dissimilar to that existing 1953. Israel requested "high level" talks with Jordan in January 1953 (Contels 90 and 96 January 29 and February 5, 1953) [4] and as a far too frequent indication of her manner of bringing the parties together, Israel immediately undertook brutal raids on Falama and Rantis and later occupied Arab college in Government house grounds. Naturally Jordan could not "meet" under these circumstances. High level talks finally took place June 29 (Contel 1, July 1, 1953). [5] No mention then made of Article 12 and to suggest similar talks now to Jordan would probably fail as only subterfuge, still suggestion might be made to Jordan as a compromise between their refusal to meet under Article 12 and Israel insistence MAC incompetent to correct situation.

Also in January 1953 Israel broke off local commanders meetings and only special request of Secretary Dulles to Ben Gurion caused Israel to reinstate them. To save face Israel pretended certain new regulations were agreed upon (Contel 166, May 29, 1953).[3]

ConGen has always maintained MAC an excellent institution given sincerity both parties, and local commanders meetings best means yet devised to curb infiltration. But Israel has found weak and false reasons for denouncing them in past and refusing to agree to improvement in rules of procedure (Contels 84, January 21 and 165, May 29, 1953).[5] I feel strongly that we should confront Israel with known facts of her statements calling for easing of border tension as contrasted with her hostile acts of reprisal raids and sabotaging local commanders agreements and rules of MAC procedure which is best method of "nibbling" at border control. Furthermore, Israel makes frequent claims she "knows how to treat Arabs" and therefore, well aware to call for meeting under Article 12 would only irritate Jordan and while giving Israel propaganda advantage it was not in interest of peace or easing border tension. There is also enormous difference between individual acts of infiltrators and group reprisals officially undertaken or condoned by governments. Jordan does punish known infiltrators; Israel never punishes those guilty of reprisal raids. ConGen and UNTSO here in agreement Jordan making sincere effort curb infiltration (Consulate's despatch 160, February 22, 1954 and Amman telegram 394, April 1, 1954).[5] Nor in three years I have been here have I ever had any reasons to suspect infiltration sponsored by Jordan Government. UN states lack of pattern infiltration points to individual or small gang activity. It naturally serves Israel's purpose to claim Jordan Government behind it and Israel must make such claim in order to justify her official reprisal raids.

Entrance Russia into Middle East politics makes Israel's game extremely dangerous and Israel must be made to see danger not only to her own existence but to world and return to MAC and make sincere efforts at working level to ease border tension. Israel once claimed she would be satisfied with partition. Now she has more territory than partition gave her but she does not seem to be satisfied with it leading to possible conclusion that she wants peace but only on her own terms. The patience that caused her to wait 2000 years for Israel to exist must be used if she wants peace. There is no easy way and Israel must begin by being fair to the Arabs within her own borders as well as with those just outside. Otherwise confidence will never be established and peace will never come. To reopen war in hopes of forcing peace seems suicidal. Even if Israel won now forty million Arabs would remember and in end Israel would cease to exist. Sentimental appreciation of Israel's plight should not allow us to overlook determination this people who killed their own in blowing up King David Hotel and sunk the Patriau in Haifa harbor in 1940 resulting in the drowning of over 250 Jews. It may be asked if qualities which led to Maccabeeian and Bar Kochba revolts two thousand and more years ago and finished in destruction of Israel still exist in Jews today. . . .

Above reflections not anti-Israel but from belief Israelis not only key to peace in area but by patience and justice a possible leader of a democratic Middle East. If Israel from her sense of chosen destiny, arrogance and terrible subjectivity (Con despatch 135 January 16, 1954)[6] cannot be made to realize the consequences of her acts she may perish and not impossibly the world with her. She must be patient and know that we will support her if she does and that because we disapprove certain of her acts does not mean we are deserting her. But there is a limit.

ConGen fully supports specific recommendations Commander Hutchison to improve border machinery (Con despatch 163 February 26, 1954).[6]

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

TOP SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, April 17, 1954—3 p. m.

1072. Israel-Arab border problem (Department's telegram 717)[2] stems in part from presence of several hundred thousand Arab refugees along border with juxtaposition Arab poverty and Israel's comparative wealth; in part from feelings of Arab elements that infiltration is effective adjunct to Arab economic boycott; and in part from Israeli Government's excessive harshness in attempting deal with infiltrators, which increases dimensions of problem, and policy of refusing participate in partial measures in its attempt secure full peace agreements. To extent first is cause, it can be dealt with only by resettlement of refugees. Second can be effectively dealt with only by convincing Arab leaders that prolongation of infiltration is against their interests. Third by insistence to Israeli Government of folly of its policies.

Concrete reality toward which all efforts must be directed, through Security Council or otherwise, is meetings between Israel and representatives of respective Arab countries with desire on both sides to make progress on infiltration problem. Israel–Jordan meeting should: (a) be of such a nature and in such context as to provide least embarrassment on part of Jordanian Government towards its public and toward other Arab states, (b) provide greatest assurance to Jordan that it will have support of other powers and UN Secretary General in a last solution and will not be in danger of loss of position through superior maneuvering by Israel.

[1] Transmitted in two sections; repeated to Amman, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, London, and Paris.

[2] Printed as telegram 407 to Amman, Document 796.

Embassy believes approach by tripartite powers and Secretary General of UN to Jordan, Egypt and Syria would be likely to be more effective than initial Security Council action, since it would provide less publicity and greater opportunity of flexibility in formulating arrangements, of speaking frankly to governments concerned, and of finding face-saving formula for Arabs. It would minimize danger of Soviet maneuvering to get into the picture. Also it would be easier to try Security Council if direct conversations failed than vice versa.

Tripartite powers and UN Secretary General might say to Arab Governments: Present situation involves real danger of outbreak of hostilities which would inevitably result in death and hardship to large number of Jordan population as well as political chaos and vacuum which must concern entire free world.

Israel Government might be told: Israel's insistence on attempting coerce Arab Governments and peoples into immediate and complete peace and Israeli Government's refusal to cooperate in numerous measures which have been suggested for achieving progressive tranquillity as step to definitive peace has been a cause of present threatening situation. Other powers willing to do whatever possible to bring about improvement, but this will be possible only if Israel: (a) whole-heartedly cooperates in measures that will progressively restore tranquillity but may fall short of complete peace; (b) shows more perception of legitimate concern of Arabs and other powers over such policies as reprisal raids and unlimited immigration into Israel and IG unilateral and fait accompli approach on such problems as Jerusalem and Banat Yaacov; and (c) ceases attempting to make it appear to Arabs at all times that IG is in drivers seat and is calling terms.

Embassy suggests as specific measures:

(a) Resumption full participation in MACS by all parties: (b) reactivation of local commander agreements Jordan–Israel border with similar arrangements other borders; (c) completion of clear and continuous marking of boundary lines with deterrent fencing where infiltration most serious; (d) establishment of survey groups for each boundary with chairmen designated by UNSYG and representation both parties to study and make recommendations measures designed to reduce border incidents; (e) establishment procedures of appeal by either party to local commander agreements to MAC, chief of UNTSO, and possibly UNSYG, in cases where it is claimed other party not implementing agreements in good faith; (f) strengthening of UNTSO by staff which could cooperate with police of both sides in implementing local commander agreements.

Embassy also suggests reaffirmation, strengthening and spelling out of tripartite guarantee of present Israel–Arab border. It would help relieve border tension by lessening sense of need of military measures by respective countries along border which sometimes leads to exchange of fire like that recently on Israel–Syrian border. It would also lessen IG compulsion take measures to counteract Israel public's nervousness resulting from hostile declarations of Arab leaders and prospective change in balance military power in area from Egyptian control Suez base and US program of arms aid.

TOP SECRET AMMAN, April 17, 1954—5 p. m.

429. Reference Department telegram 407.[2] Viewed from Amman, there are only two avenues for easing Israeli-Jordan tensions. First is deep changes which may occur as result Turkey, Pakistan Agreement, especially if Iraq, and possibly others join. However, local deterioration too rapid permit waiting upon evolution regional improvements. Second is bringing such strong pressure on both countries as cause some cooperation. Since matter already in United Nations Security Council, its consideration there must presumably be completed. However, this means, unreinforced by concurrent Anglo-American action, can, on one hand, result in little progress, and on other, almost certain engender increasing Jordan reliance on Russia and weakening position of West.

In spite of mutual hatred and internal dissensions, strong and wise leadership in Israel and Jordan might lead to composure differences, viz. Smyrna massacres and subsequent composure by 1931. Domestic tensions within two countries appear poorly bridled. Jordan Government of past year has maintained itself by acceding to every pressure and stoking the fires of intransigence. Prime Minister has been all things to all men. Respecting Israel, he has not had the guts to say anything more than that he will "never, never, never discuss peace with Israel".

During past year xenophobic nationalists, both right and left, as well as such presently Communist lining [leaning?] groups as Bath, have not been countered and are fast rising in influence. Certainly situation is being nicely created for Soviets to fish in troubled waters.

It is my conviction that outside pressures must be exerted on leadership these countries in order to give them the backbone to accept measures that will ease tensions. Effectively these must originate largely in United Kingdom and United States, and I recommend that because of unequal influence, pressure on Jordan should be primarily by United Kingdom, and on Israel primarily by United States. In eyes of Jordan and Arab world, evidence of use pressure here would need be accompanied by similar evidence pressures on Israel.

Regarding question one, reference telegram, Embassy uninformed steps taken or progress made United Nations approach, but if advanced, then proposed rapporteur technique outlined Department telegram April 9 [3] appears most desirable course. As mentioned, use United Nations machinery alone will not be effective, unless governments concerned can be led or forced compose matters.

Reference [question] two, most urgent requirement regarding UNTSO border machinery is not its improvement, but its use. Israel appears the offender this regard (communications Jerusalem Consul General). Embassy believes Jordan, Israel local commander and MAC meetings must be instituted and made function. Number of observers should be increased as per Bennike request.

In any meetings beyond UNTSO machinery in which Jordan may be asked to participate fears may be partially quited by indication of agenda. By such an agenda, Jordanian Government can establish that it is not entering meeting to negotiate peace settlement with Israel.

The Ambassador in Lebanon (Hare) to the Department of State [1]

TOP SECRET PRIORITY BEIRUT, April 18, 1954—11 a. m.

874. Despite some recent alarmist rumors situation along Lebanese-Israel frontier continues reasonably stable. However, repeated incidents along Israel's other frontiers have caused Lebanese Government grave concern and give evidence, as noted by Secretary, that Israelis deliberately engaging series of military, quasi-military and political actions aimed at keeping frontiers in turmoil and so depreciating value of UNTSO machinery that UN and great powers will feel impelled seek some new arrangement more to Israel's advantage. This situation leads me venture following comments in reply Deptel 1160, April 15: [2]

(1) Our declared policy of impartiality is sound but in existing circumstances it would be inconsistent with sound political judgment to interpret impartiality in terms of holding both sides equally responsible. The fact is that Israel has gotten out of line and real impartiality requires getting her renew play according to rules. After all, a referee does not cease being impartial when he penalizes an offending team.

(2) As regards direct talks, this too is a sound objective provided that circumstances are reasonably favorable but unfortunately such is not the case now nor can it be foreseen in the near future. To begin with, it would seem that Israel is in fact not so much attacking the Arab States as the UN armistice machinery itself. Secondly, it is not believed that any Arab government could, even if it would, accede to Western pressures, no matter how strong, to engage in direct conversations as matters now stand. Thirdly, even if by some miracle talks should take place now, it is difficult to believe that results would be productive in view present emotional intensity and domestic situations in countries concerned.

(3) While reiterating endorsement principles of impartiality and encouraging direct talks as feasible, it would respectfully suggest that progress toward solution of Palestine problem may have been retarded rather than stimulated in past by argument that Arab-Israel problem is "theirs" not "ours". This is not fact. Israel came into being as result action by the international community and it will take further action by the international community to settle her as peaceful Near Eastern state. To be sure the Arab States and Israel have an important share of responsibility but it is only partial. Furthermore, regardless of responsibility, the task would be beyond Arab-Israeli capacities in any event. We should not postulate the unrealistic nor ask the impossible.

(4) It would follow from foregoing that unless and until we and our major allies, working both within and outside the UN, can come forward with substantial plans which could be made basis for effective General Assembly action, it is pointless to seek maintain policy of seeking "peace" in some other way. Meanwhile, might it not be more realistic and productive to acknowledge that all we are seeking for time being is a modus vivendi, which might even take form of genuinely respected armed truce. If all of us, that is Arabs, Israelis and international community, could reconcile ourselves to this idea, I believe that there would be better prospects of working gradually toward final peace.

(5) While the American Government should be prepared to play vigorous role, it is essential that there should be full cooperation by others, especially our major allies. Unfortunately such cooperation has not always been up to desired level with result that we sometimes find ourselves in unnecessarily exposed position.

(6) As regards means for strengthening present truce machinery, Lebanese-Israeli MAC has had so few problems and worked so well that we have had little first-hand experience on which to base specific suggestions other than to endorse helpful ideas in Cairo's 1309, April 16,[3] and to inquire whether any new thinking may possibly have been developed regarding an "international police force" to overcome well-known objections raised when idea was originally considered.

To summarize, we agree that Palestine crisis indeed serious but that hope for improvement at this stage does not lie in encouraging direct negotiations but rather in recognizing that international community bears important responsibility and in being prepared to face Near Eastern cold war for some time in anticipation that eventual peace will come either by some new and basic UN action or by piecemeal adjustment and the passage of time. Meanwhile, UN supervisory machinery should be strengthened and its authority imposed with rigid impartiality.

TOP SECRET PRIORITY BAGHDAD, April 18, 1954—11 a. m.

623. Regarding Deptel 574, April 15.[2] As seen from Baghdad Mr. Eden's suggested course of action to "nibble at edges of problem seeking first frontier control" is most feasible approach. At local level without benefit of wide publicity we can make progress even on Palestine problem whereas when issues are spotlighted both sides take inflexible positions.

Unfortunately, Iraqis are convinced that actions looking toward getting the Arabs and Israelis together in UN at high level is Zionist inspired to meet Israeli needs. Unfortunately, too, the greater the pressure to bring about such a meeting the greater resistance set up.

As for getting parties together through other means, Embassy suggests that failure to act through UN would convince Arabs that western powers share Arabs lack of confidence in UN and therefore by-pass it when it does not serve their interests. Embassy not in position to comment fruitfully on (2) since it has had no direct experience with these problems.

1953 were suspended last May and have not resumed due Banat Yaacov controversy. Informal talks might be renewed as result request MAC chairman that parties discuss ways improving border situation along lines paragraph 2 below. Request could be supported as necessary by three powers;

(2) Specific improvements in armistice agreements and machinery, which would facilitate subsequent more general discussions, might include: (1) renegotiating armistice demarcation line in order remove such anomalies as separation certain Syrians from traditional watering and fishing locations; (2) replacement Syro-Israeli demilitarized zones, which never intended as final solution border problems, with line perhaps through Huleh and Tiberias and Jordan River (efforts parties informally negotiate such arrangement suspended in May 1953);

(3) Assignment politico-legal officers to each MAC under Vigier's general direction;

(4) Employment UN translators.

While special committee might be formed to pursue foregoing, believe existing machinery can handle problems if given effective UN and tripartite support. New body might draw Arab fire as western ruse "force" peace talks.

Foregoing is submitted in response to Department's invitation. Embassy does not believe, however, that solution of Palestine problem depends on better procedures. Of greater importance are basic attitudes of Near East governments which include (a) Israeli "tough" policy toward its Arab neighbors, (b) Arabs lack of confidence in policy of UN and western powers, and (c) emotional spite of Arabs which renders them unable to regard relationship with Israel rationally.

If UN and western powers prevail on Israel to act in accordance with professed Israeli desire to have peace with neighboring Arab states, such action will eliminate point (a) above, will prepare way for elimination points (b) and (c) and be real contribution toward improvement immediate situation and toward eventual achievement of peace in Near East. Only Communists are likely to profit if effective measures are not taken or are long delayed.

This Embassy sees no quick, easy or dramatic solution; and any measure which attracts widespread publicity is more likely to hamper than to help.

TOP SECRET [WASHINGTON?,] April 21, 1954.

MEMORANDUM OF CONFERENCE WITH PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, AUGUSTA, GA., APRIL 19, 1954

We discussed the Arab-Israeli tension and the matter of military aid to Iraq. I gave the President our State Department estimate of the present situation, and the danger that the Israeli might be deliberately trying to break the armistice open on the theory that that was the only way to get a better arrangement. I also referred to the Arab fear of increased Jewish immigration and consequent inevitable expansion. The President agreed that we should continue our present policy of impartiality and should not be deterred by political pressures which might generate in connection with the forthcoming elections. He suggested I should make a speech on this subject when I returned, a speech which he would go over with me in advance. He felt it was all right to conclude the mutual security agreement with Iraq on the condition that the actual aid given should be dependent upon the international situation at the time. He hoped very much that the agreement would in fact lead to identification of agreement with Turkey-Pakistan. I said that I thought the best hope of this was to proceed as we had planned, but I was confident that our action would be met by strong political opposition from elements subject to Zionist influence.

Purpose would be explore possibility tripartite joint approach to Jordan and Israel with view ascertaining their concrete suggestions for improving border machinery and reducing border tensions. Foreign Office hopes Department can send its reaction to suggestion to Paris in advance of proposed discussion between three foreign secretaries.

Foreign Office explains its suggestion based on growing skepticism as to prospects from prompt and effective SC action. British believe approach should first be made to Jordan (in Amman) and then, following receipt HKJ views, to Israel (Foreign Office thinking not definite as to when approach to Israel would be made). Parties would be approached in this order because: (1) UK does not wish close door to possibility of meeting two parties in New York whereas simultaneous approach would imply this abandoned; and (2) UK believes Israel "more out of line" than Jordan as regards present situation, hence approach to Israel would be strengthened if any specific suggestion, e.g., return of Israel to MAC, resulted from approach to Jordan.

The Acting Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices [1]

WASHINGTON, April 28, 1954.

Subject: Discussions With UK on Arab-Israeli Border Situation

The Department initiated on April 26 discussions with representatives of the British Embassy on means to bring about in the short term period improvements in the present situation on the Israel-Jordan border. The British representatives were given a copy of the attached paper which sets forth the rationale for the talks and the possible measures which might be taken. It was made clear to the British that the paper is a working level document and does not represent a firm Department position. The points given under Section III(B) were taken from the useful suggestions received from the Field to which were added thoughts developed in the Department.

The British presented a paper containing suggestions from the Foreign Office based in turn on comments from British posts. Although differing in wording and emphasis, the British proposals correspond to points 2, 4, 6, 7, 10, 11 and 13 of Section III(B) of the enclosure. . . .

The British informed the Department that their suggestions had been made available to the French, who expressed no objection in principle except to the provision for frontier rectification.

The objective of the present discussions is to obtain agreement between the Three Powers on measures which might be taken. Until the course of the discussions in the Security Council becomes clearer, it is not feasible to determine definitely how the proposals could be presented most effectively to the parties. Direct diplomatic action by the Three Powers in Amman-Tel Aviv could complement and support any work of the Security Council.

The Department recognizes that implementation of the various measures may involve a considerable financial outlay which, in turn, would affect the United Nations budget. Therefore, it will be necessary to consider the budgetary situation in determining which measures should be adopted and their order of priority.

Enclosure

Subject: Arab–Israel Border Situation

Problem: To bring about in the short term period improvements in the present dangerous situation on the Israel–Jordan border.

I. Existing Situation

A. Israel apparently has embarked upon a policy of aggravating the border situation in the belief that, at the risk of open warfare, she can force the replacement of the Armistice by a peace settlement. The use of force and retaliatory raids appear to be deliberate Government policy. Although the problem caused for Israel by Arab infiltration should not be minimized, the evidence indicates only individuals or small groups are responsible. Jordan has made a determined effort within its capabilities to stamp out this practice.

B. Israel has been campaigning for a high-level meeting over an extended period. She wishes as broad a discussion as possible, including what would amount to peace talks. However, according to Shiloah, she is prepared to accept a fixed agenda, limited to consideration of measures to improve the operation of the Armistice Agreement. Israel has withdrawn from participation in local commanders' meetings in retaliation for alleged Jordanian failure to curb infiltration.

C. Jordan has refused to attend a high-level meeting or to honor her obligations under Article XII. She apparently feels such talks would lead to discussions of a permanent peace with Israel. In her refusal, she has been supported by the Arab League.

D. USSR and Arab obstructionism has fettered efforts of the Security Council to take effective action on the Palestine questions.

II. Procedures

The problem may be approached through three different mechanisms:

A. Through a procedural Security Council resolution designating a rapporteur and asking him to consider with the parties and UN representatives concerned means to improve the border situation. The US and UK are now supporting Security Council action, although they have differences of opinion over how discussions with the parties should be carried out. The British have favored establishment of a subcommittee.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

B. If efforts in the Security Council prove fruitless, a meeting between Jordan and Israel might be secured through direct diplomatic action by the Western Powers in Amman and Tel Aviv, using the Tripartite Declaration as a point of departure.

C. Endeavor to secure separately Israel's and Jordan's agreement to concrete measures to improve the border situation. The Tripartite Powers would "shuttle" between Amman and Tel Aviv for the purpose. Eden intends to propose this approach to the Secretary in Paris on April 24. We have telegraphed the Secretary that we approve the proposal, but believe the timing of the first approach should be decided after the course of the Security Council discussion becomes clearer.

D. Considering Soviet obstructionism in the Security Council and probable Jordanian refusal to attend a meeting, "C" appears to offer the only prospects.

E. In considering procedure, account should be taken of the following:

1. The Armistice Agreement, which forms the legal basis for the existing situation, may be modified only by the parties. The same is true of the MAC rules of procedure. Thus, agreement between the parties to any changes appears essential.
2. Under existing circumstances, the MACs and UNTSO do not provide an adequate forum to cope with the situation.
3. The UN and particularly the UNTSO should be represented at any meeting in view of its importance in the Palestine problem and the danger to its prestige which would result from exclusion.
4. Jordanian fears of a meeting could be eased by spelling out the agenda in advance, making clear the discussions would be within the context of the armistice agreements and would not involve "peace talks."
5. Because the Arabs become so intractable when in a group, Syrian, Egyptian and Lebanese participation along with Jordan at any meeting should be avoided if possible.

III. Substance

The parties themselves are responsible for enforcement of the Armistice and, therefore, for preventing border incidents. The UNTSO has no enforcement authority; its role is to observe and report. Consequently, the essential ingredient is cooperation between the parties and a desire by the parties that the frontier should remain quiet. (The importance of this point is stressed by all comments from the Field.)

Two possibilities may be considered:

A. Assumption by the UN or the Western Powers of direct responsibility for border security, involving, in effect, discarding as unworkable enforcement by the parties of the Armistice Agreement.

1. The course would involve a heavy commitment, including willingness to use force to prevent violation of the frontier. The force could take the form of troops provided by the UN or Western Powers.

2. The procedure would be warranted only if the conclusion is reached that cooperation between the parties cannot be induced and, therefore, that no amount of tinkering will render the Armistice Agreement workable.

3. The present situation does not appear to demand such drastic measures. They would be required at the end of any outbreak of open fighting.

B. Revamping and strengthening the armistice agreements in letter and in spirit. The essential prerequisite is cooperation by the parties between themselves and with the UNTSO. Assuming this cooperation, the following measures could be considered:

1. Appointment of a new Chief of Staff, preferably a figure of world stature (for example, General Bradley or General Van Fleet), whom the parties would be forced to respect. The timing and manner of any change would be of the utmost importance to avoid damage to our relations with the Arabs, who regard General Bennike as their friend. The approval of the Secretary General of the United Nations would be required, and General Bennike's retirement would have to be presented as voluntary.

Appointment of higher-ranking officers of outstanding ability as chairmen of the MACs.

2. Increase number of observers, recruiting with special attention to quality and impartiality. The period of service of the observers, except for the Chief of Staff and MAC chairmen, could be shortened since old timers appear to develop localitis. If the term of service is relatively short, the observers could be expected to live in frontier villages near the usual trouble spots. At present the tendency of the observers is to live on the Arab side of the lines. They should be required to divide their time between the two sides and should be provided an increased cost-of-living allowance to meet the higher costs on the Israel side.

3. Assignment on a consultation basis of experts from the United States-Mexican border service and of special police officers. Such officials might be expected to have worth-while suggestions for controlling infiltration and investigating crimes. The British military and colonial services might provide officers with similar experience.

4. Assignment of United Nations translators, and politico-legal advisers to each MAC.

5. Recognition in practice by the parties that the observers have freedom of movement and investigation, including the unquestioned right to cross the frontiers at any point the observers deem advisable.

6. Adoption of new rules of procedure in the MACs. An objective would be to speed up the process of investigation and of handling of complaints in the MAC. Specifically, the chairman should be permitted to introduce resolutions and to initiate investigation.

7. Prompt and continuing publicity by the United Nations of MAC decisions and of conditions on the border and responsibility therefore.

8. Improved equipment for the observers. This might include assignment of helicopters, which might have special moral effect on would-be infiltrators and could patrol the lengthy frontier. Assignment of tracking dogs directly to the UNTSO. Improved radio communication.

9. Acceptance by the parties of their obligation to attend MAC and other meetings called by appropriate United Nations officials.

10. Clear delineation of the demarcation line by United Nations surveyors, followed by the erection of physical barriers at points of greatest friction. Jordanian apprehensions that demarcation would imply acceptance of permanent frontiers for Israel could be minimized by a statement similar to that contained in the Armistice Agreement—the boundaries delineated are without prejudice to the rights, claims and positions of either party hereto in the ultimate peaceful settlement of the Palestine question (Article II).

11. Notification to the MAC by both parties of the punishment given persons accused and convicted of infiltration or other individual violations of the Armistice. Such sentences need not be published. The procedure could serve to reassure Israel, particularly, that Jordan is making sincere efforts to stop infiltration.

12. Issuance of passes for the movement of Arabs from the Gaza Strip to Jordan under United Nations supervision. The movement could take place in convoys along specified routes. At the present, a relatively large-scale illegal movement takes place between these two points. Legalization of this traffic, which generally may be innocent in motive, should serve to reduce incidents.

13. Reinstatement of the local commanders' agreements. The persons concerned with armistice enforcement, including General Riley and General Bennike, attach first importance to cooperation on the local level. Police officials should be used and a premium attached to maintaining the quietest sector. (Reports from the Field attached first importance to the local commanders' and similar agreements.)

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL CAIRO, April 28, 1954—11 a. m.

1359. Re urtel 85. [2] Egypt lodged complaints April 25 and 26 and requested emergency meeting MAC re Israeli fire across demarcation line at Egyptian posts with heavy weapons on those days.

Egyptian Government decision re informal meeting with Israelis given Embassy office by Riad last night is:

1. Two emergency meetings requested by Egypt must be held before any informal meeting can take place.
2. After MAC meetings Gohar (not Riad) being authorized meet Shalev informally any time.
3. Riad cannot meet with Israelis under pressure such as recent incidents but only after lapse of time during which quiet maintained in Area.

Riad unaware any incident April 24. He said on April 25 Israelis opened fire across DZ with automatic weapons. Egypt replied. Then Israelis started fire with heavy weapons against five Egyptian posts. UN observer obtained cessation Israeli fire on twenty-fifth by appeal higher Israeli military authority. Fact that heavy weapon fire resumed twenty-sixth can only mean according to Riad that use of such fire is Israeli Government policy designed achieve political objective. Only sheer luck there were no Egyptian casualties.

"If use heavy weapons is official Israeli policy" Riad said, "What is the use of our meeting with them?" "What could we say?" "Can we change orders of Israeli Government to its responsible officers to use artillery?"

Egyptians believe Israeli proposal for meeting outlined in reftel designed by-pass UN machinery and that reference to "latest developments" reveals reasons behind latest incidents involving use heavy weapons. [3]

Eytan replied that the proposed meeting had been so downgraded from the Israeli Government's original concept and would be so nearly like a regular Mixed Armistice Commission meeting, that Israel was not disposed to press the matter. However, if Gohar wanted to make a specific proposal for a meeting, Shalev would be prepared to attend. The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, April 29, 1954—6 p. m.

1140. I saw Eytan, Director General Foreign Ministry, at King David Hotel, Jerusalem yesterday at his invitation. He said Sharett had asked him to say IG convinced United States program of arms aid to Iraq will encourage Arab bellicosity. IG realizes United States does not intend have arms used against Israel but that is intention of Iraq as shown by recent statements of its leaders. IG not sure of United States strategy but clear to IG what we are in fact doing is building fragile crust of area defense over rotten center (Israel-Arab tension) and that crust must collapse. By giving arms we are putting off day when Arabs will be willing to make settlements; are, indeed, putting premium on intransigeance since Arabs see they can get arms even if they maintain war-like position toward Israel. This step by United States moreover, puts regional cooperation (e.g., water schemes) in different light and interposes obstacles to IG participation, since IG's desire to cooperate was based on present relative strengths. Does not necessarily mean complete change but must be much heart-searching. Eytan said he had seen reports United States economic aid agreement with Jordan had been drafted to leave out condition of no economic discrimination and Jamali had announced arms were being furnished without conditions attached. IG would be greatly interested to know nature of conditions, if any, under which Iraq is to receive arms.

I told Eytan I understood Israel's concern but was convinced that realistic appraisal of all factors would lead to conclusion United States program was in Israel's interest. I pointed out United States had been concerned over dangers which area faced ever since emergence post-war Soviet expansionist policies; that every effort had been made to evolve plan based on cooperation of all countries in area and many approaches toward this end were considered; that with passage of larger part of decade danger was becoming more apparent and imminent and possibility of Arab-Israel cooperation no greater; continued existence of free way of life, in which Israel has as great a stake as any, requires that whatever steps are possible be taken at this time. I said Turkish-Pakistan agreement had been a most favorable development; that while Iraq, to our common distress, had refused up to present time to move in direction of peace with Israel, at same time it was genuinely and intelligently concerned over dangers from north and prepared to take steps to promote security against them; that in our view it was best to take advantage this latter fact while continuing to do everything possible to promote Israel-Arab peace along whole broad front; that we are convinced it might well prove suicidal for all of us to permit lack of success to date in this latter effort to stand in way of opportunities which are presented to deal with Communist threats in area which have in recent months been increasingly apparent to all and increasingly concrete. I said that no one can minimize unhappiness of present Israel-Arab border situation but at its worst it was preferable to area becoming another Korea or Indochina. I said that as against dangers which Israel feared from program of United States cooperation with Arabs were: (a) United Nations which has established special machinery to deal with problem and which can be strengthened and improved; (b) Tripartite Declaration; (d) United States economic aid to Israel which has accounted for one-third of Israel's imports during last three years, has amounted to approximately $200 per capita as contrasted to approximately $1 per capita to Arab countries, is largest per capita of economic aid to any country and has given Israel very substantial security against Arab economic warfares; and (d) integral provisions which Congress has placed in arms aid legislation and which State Department and other United States agencies have executed with great care to prevent arms being used in way that would negative [negate] purposes of program. I said I would query Department on specific nature of guarantees and would report to Eytan any information which I could. I said that, to paraphrase Holmes, if I were Israel, arms to Iraq would give me pause but, having paused, I would pass on to cooperative policy in dealing with area's problems.

684A.86/5-454 Despatch

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State

SECRET CAIRO, May 4, 1954.

No. 2613

Ref: Dept's CA 6175 of April 28, 1954.

Subject: Comments re Measures To Improve Arab-Israeli Border Situations

The following comments are numbered to correspond with the suggested measures listed under section III (B) of the reference instruction.

1. While General Bennike may be considered by the Arabs to be their friend, Colonel Riad has commented to the reporting officer on several occasions recently that "Bennike never talks". Riad was referring specifically to General Bennike's recent visit to Cairo with Colonel Hommel to discuss the March 25 and April 4 incidents in the Gaza Strip and the General's attendance as an observer at the Egyptian-Israeli MAC meetings of April 29. Riad appeared to be disappointed at the General's lack of initiative and forcefulness.

Not only should higher ranking officers of outstanding ability be appointed as Chairman of the MAC's but they should (a) serve for a period of two or three months at UNTSO headquarters in Jerusalem and even have some brief practical experience in the field as observers before assuming the chairmanships and (b) serve for a longer period as chairman. The latter point is assuming increasing importance as the Arab and Israeli members of the MAC's gain experience and become increasingly adept at parliamentary maneuvering.

2. While it is true that old-timers occasionally develop localitis, it is perhaps equally true that short-timers do not have a chance to master the tricks of the trade. It might be risky to shorten the terms of service of observers unless at the same time they are provided with the protection against bamboozlement which UN translators and politico-legal advisers would provide. It should also be noted that the observers provided by other UN members frequently serve for much longer periods than those provided by the US. Perhaps the answer is to decrease the number of US observers.

3. The question of the assignment of expert consultants should be examined closely before being put forward. In the case of experts from the US-Mexican Border Service, hostile critics could make some very crude remarks about their effectiveness in controlling illegal immigration from Mexico while in the case of the British the Egyptians might well take a dim view of their assignment to the Egyptian-Israeli area, at least before an Anglo-Egyptian settlement.

4. Here again the question of assigning politico-legal advisers to each MAC could raise some difficult political questions, particularly if the individuals concerned were great power nationals.

5. Freedom of movement for observers involves the settlement of various other issues such, for example, as the status of the various parties in the demilitarized zones.

6. Improved rules of procedure would be desirable but a great deal could be accomplished under the existing rules if the chairman were better grounded in the subtleties of parliamentary procedure and could thus guide the proceedings with authority.

7. As far as the Arabs are concerned prompt and continuing publicity not only of MAC decisions but of the factual background leading to such decisions would do more than anything to increase the understanding of the UNTSO machinery. It is assumed that such publicity would emanate from UNTSO headquarters in Jerusalem and that the pertinent documentation would be made available on a worldwide basis through UN channels.

8. In the field of equipment there might also be considered floodlights for critical sectors and electrified fences.

9. Publicity regarding incidents and the facts behind MAC decisions would do much to destroy the political and propaganda benefits which the parties now believe are to be derived from the boycotting of meetings.

10. It is doubtful that a mere statement of intent would change the Arab position concerning the definite marking of the demarcation lines. The refugees, in particular, would put little faith in any such statement.

11. In appropriate cases information on punishment of individual violators of the armistice might well be a function of the UN publicity activities envisaged under paragraph seven.

12. The past system might also be extended to permit land transit between Egypt and Jordan.

13. The Egyptian authorities attach great importance to local agreements since the police have generally known their opposite numbers for a considerable period of time and are able to settle many minor incidents which would otherwise clutter up the agenda of the MACs. Reinstatement of local agreements, moreover, would eliminate much of the present competition to see which side can pile up the greatest number of complaints in the MACs.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 5, 1954.

Subject: Israel Protest Against Certain Passages of Mr. Byroade's Address of May 1;[1] Inquiry regarding Istanbul Conference of American NEA Chiefs of Mission; Inquiry Concerning Possible U.S. Arms Aid to Arab States other than Iraq; Inquiry Concerning U.S. Official Representation in Jerusalem at President Ben Zvie's Reception on National Day.

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Mr. Henry A. Byroade, Asst. Secretary, NEA
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

1. Ambassador Eban stated that on instructions of his government, he wished to express to Mr. Byroade, and later to express to the Secretary of State, the deep concern with which Israel had reacted to Mr. Byroade's May 1 speech [entitled "Facing Realities in Arab-Israel Dispute"].[2] The speech had, in fact, created "a storm of feeling" according to a telegram which the Ambassador had just received from Prime Minister Sharett. The Cabinet had met on the subject of this speech on Sunday and had concluded that it must be regarded as an official statement of United States policy. During the course of the coming week it appeared inevitable that there would be a parliamentary debate on the implications of this and other recent utterances by high officials of the U.S. Government on the subject of U.S.-Israel relations.

Ambassador Eban stated that his government considered the passage on immigration to have the most fundamental and far-reaching implications since it struck at the very basis of Israel's philosophy of existence. Furthermore, the fact that such an intimate discussion of Israel-American relations should have been delivered before a body such as the American Council for Judaism was considered to be particularly unfortunate since the Ambassador knew of no other organization in the United States which dedicated itself against Israel's existence. The main points which concerned Israel so deeply centered around the implication that Israel should change its philosophy and Statutes from the concept that its doors were always open to immigration of Jews from anywhere in the world. This concept could never be changed by any Israel Government and an attack upon it could never accomplish a useful purpose but, on the contrary, was bound to create not only the deepest concern in Israel but also intransigence based on increasing sense of triumph throughout the Arab world. Israel did not believe that Arab fear of her expansion was a basic cause of tension, since there was no early prospect for any large-scale immigration from the Iron Curtain area or elsewhere. Therefore raising this question at this time seemed completely unnecessary since it was based upon an unlikely hypothesis. Israel could hardly understand U.S. objections to her immigration policy since both Israel and the U.S. were countries which had come into existence entirely through a process of immigration. Israel had always felt that it had the blessing of the American people for its immigration policy. As for emigration from the Soviet Union, Israel would continue to hope and pray for such a movement although it realized that the prospects for it were not bright. Should such a movement occur it would have the most profound effects, creating a messianic, irresistible fervor among World Jewry; Israel could not believe that the resulting increase in her population from between one and two million to between three and four million to be a valid cause of alarm by Arab countries.

[2] Brackets in the source text.

Israel was also disturbed at the implications of Mr. Byroade's Dayton, Ohio speech of April 9th, [3] now confirmed by his May 1 address, which seemed to question the right of Israel to appeal to World Jewry in all countries for assistance and support.

The Ambassador expressed concern over the fact that during the past year high officials of the U.S. Government had seen fit to criticize almost every important phase of Israel's actions in the public forum. If the purpose of these statements was to create a better feeling toward America by the Arabs, he felt obliged to express the view that the actual result would be to increase Arab determination to press forward in its intrasigent attitude toward Israel. In this connection, Israel felt that the passage in Mr. Byroade's speech asserting there was no early possibility for peace between Israel and the Arab states was unfortunate since it would vindicate Arab insistence on a policy of "no peace". It would be better not to discard publicly the principle of final peace even though it was clear—and Israel concurred in the U.S. estimate on this point—that early conclusion of peace was not foreseeable.

Israel also regretted the passage on compensation since it implied that the Israel Government intended no action in this regard.

[3] For the text of Byroade's speech before the Dayton World Affairs Council on Apr. 9, see Department of State Bulletin, Apr. 26, 1954, p. 628.

Minister Shiloah entered the conversation to state that Mr. Byroade's speech implied that the U.S. Government had sought through diplomatic channels over a long period of time to obtain constructive steps by Israel and had been met with persistent refusal, with the result that finally it felt constrained to air the matter in public. Actually, Israel had initiated dozens of moves of a conciliatory nature toward the Arabs. It had for instance, suggested non-aggression pacts and these had been rejected. Ambassador Eban pointed out that the Israel Government had taken a policy decision to pay compensation before the German Restitution Agreement was concluded.

Mr. Byroade replied that he regretted very much that the Israel Government seemed to have ignored the principal point in the passage of his speech to which it took strongest exception, namely that there was a real fear of Israeli expansion. He disagreed with Ambassador Eban's statement that this was not fundamental in the generation of tensions between Israel and her neighbors. Mr. Byroade was convinced, on the basis of unanimous advice from Chiefs of Mission in the Near East over a long period of time and from his own observations, that this fear was real and dangerous. He regretted that the Israel Government had mistakenly interpreted his speech as proposing a specific line of action to remedy this fear, such as changing Israel's statutes. He had proposed no specific line of action and would not presume to do so. He had posed the problem and stated that wise statesmanship could find a way to relieve it. The American people had a right to be informed of the fundamental causes of tension in the Middle East which affected their security, and this was certainly one of them. He could not understand how the Israel Government could regard discussion of it as an "unjustified interference in the internal affairs of Israel, which are her own concern, and hers only, and a matter of her own sovereign judgment". At present, the U.S. Government with Britain and France, with greatly extended commitments elsewhere, were facing this problem alone. They needed the help of Israel itself.

Ambassador Eban insisted that the implications of the speech to most readers would be that Israel should change her laws and her basic concept of return. Since the matter had been aired publicly in this fashion, Israel would be forced to give her own public reply which could only be that the principle of return was unchangeable.

Mr. Byroade replied that he would regret seeing this done since it might well increase in America an impression of cleavage between American and Israeli viewpoints regarding the nature of tensions in the Near East and their possible remedies. He had regretted being obliged to use the American Council for Judaism as a forum for this speech for one reason: that as a result, Israel might not take his views seriously. However, he had been forced to make certain points as the result of Israeli criticism of his Dayton speech. Now he was disappointed to see that the Israeli press made no mention of such balancing provisions of his latest address as that which warned the Arabs that they may as well know now that the United States cannot accept as a price for their friendship the abandonment of pursuit of better relations between them and Israel. Nor had the Israeli press or Government mentioned his remarks on Arab negativism concerning which sharp criticism had already been noted in the Arab press. Ambassador Eban responded that the strong emotion aroused in Israel by the already discussed passage of Mr. Byroade's speech had apparently obscured these items.

2. Ambassador Eban inquired whether any matters of policy regarding Israel would be considered at the forthcoming Istanbul Conference.[4] Mr. Byroade replied that this conference was supposed to be an annual affair of our Middle East Ambassadors but had been omitted last year due to the Secretary's and Mr. Byroade's tour in the area. Its purpose was to permit intimate discussion of U.S. problems with the objective of sharing opinions and impressions on policy matters.

3. Ambassador Eban inquired whether there was any truth in the unpleasant rumor that the U.S. Government might be considering the extension of arms aid to Arab states other than Iraq. Mr. Byroade replied that while he could give no assurances regarding the future there were no policy discussions on the point proceeding at this time. This was one matter that might be considered at Istanbul.

4. Ambassador Eban indicated that most Chiefs of Mission at Tel Aviv were apparently planning to attend the President's reception at Jerusalem on Israel's National Day. The Israel Government had the impression that the U.S. would send representatives but not the Acting Chief of Mission. If this was so, he regretted that the U.S. Government should take a position conspicuously behind others in this aspect of the Jerusalem problem. Mr. Byroade replied that he would have to consult his staff on this matter, since he was not fully informed on the status of our plans.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State

[WASHINGTON,] May 5, 1954.

Knowing your schedule is so crowded with other things, I still recommend you read the attached speech of mine (Tab A), [1] delivered on May 1st, at your earliest convenience.

Needless to say, it was a cause of concern to me that it was not possible for me to go over the text with you personally. The Israeli press had so greatly distorted my Dayton speech [2] that I felt impelled to set the records straight even though I knew an attempt to do that would, itself, be criticized. I also felt that this situation is becoming so serious that the American people have a right to know some of the things that are behind the daily headlines of raids and border frictions.

The Israeli press has ignored everything constructive in the speech and concentrated in a bitter attack on what I said about immigration into Israel. Not a single paper there has quoted me correctly on this subject. They have officially protested to our Government amid considerable publicity. The attached article (Tab B) [3] in the New York Times is one example. I discussed with Murphy the fact that some response was necessary and the attached (Tab C) [4] was handed out today. This format was used as I saw no reason to attempt involving you in this matter on your first day back from Geneva.

I feel the points in the attached speech needed to be said but do not believe we can evaluate the results for perhaps a month or two. In this period of aroused comment, I think you should weigh carefully whether another speech on this subject should be made by you as suggested by the President. Such a speech could be highly beneficial here at home. My own speeches have caused, however, a minor sensation in the Middle East out of all proportion to my rank or significance. These speeches have been debated by Parliaments and Cabinets of almost every country amid great publicity. I should like to think about it some more but it may be that the traffic would not bear another speech in the immediate future regardless of its contents.

[4] Tab C was Department of State Press Release 231, May 5, not printed, describing Eban's call on Byroade that day.

I am going to furnish you a brief synopsis of the reactions in the area to my two speeches. If you do decide to speak this will allow you to chart with precision the effects of what you will say. It is impossible to make a speech on this subject without severe criticism regardless of the care used in wording because of the delicate innuendos surrounding each aspect of the problem. It is partly for this reason that I felt it well to have someone of lesser rank than yourself talk first about some of the fundamentals of the Arab-Israeli problem.[5]

4987. With Eden's approval, Foreign Office has instructed Washington and Paris to propose to US and French Governments that approach be made to Jordan in near future along lines mentioned Embtel 4636, April 21. In spite of possibility French support may not be forthcoming, British are hopeful that it will and in any event think US and UK should approach HKJ. Doke, newly appointed British Ambassador, arrives Amman early next week and will discuss proposal with his American and French colleagues as soon as possible (we suggested Mallory may be absent at Istanbul conference, to which Foreign Office replied matter could await Mallory's return).

Foreign Office believes no indication should be given to Israelis, or anyone else, including UN, at this time that HKJ being approached but in accordance with so-called "Trieste procedure" idea would be for three powers next talk Israelis, assuming approach to Jordan fruitful. Basis of approach would be suggestions for improving armistice machinery substantially along lines Section III B of enclosure to Department's CA-6175, April 28, with exception of item 1 (new chief of staff) which British do not favor raising at present.

The Acting Consul at Jerusalem (Williams) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET JERUSALEM, May 10, 1954—8 p. m.

170. Re Department's CA-6175 April 28 discussions with UK about Israel-Jordan border situation, Consulate General desires make following comment on points listed under Section III (B):

a. Points 2, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, and 13 are believed to be important, feasible and should prove very useful. No comment.

b. With reference to point 1, it is believed that the removal of General Bennike (who only arrived in August 1953) at any time in the near future, no matter how explained, would be considered by Arabs as evidence of Jewish (Zionist) pressure and by Israelis as diplomatic victory. Consulate General questions whether automatic respect for UNTSO Chief of Staff could be expected, even for figure of world renown. Past prestige hardly sufficient to forestall attacks on individual's impartiality when one side or other takes exception to an unfavorable decision. There is advantage to US in not having chief of staff a national due to tendency both aids blame adverse decisions on great power interference. Appointment higher-ranking officers as chairmen MACs need be no higher than ranking observer; character, ability, last training (especially legal or judicial), courage and stamina are important attributes. A tour of duty as an observer is useful to any MAC chairman.

c. Consulate General believes both Israelis and Jordanians might resent being advised how to control infiltration and crimes on administrative level by foreigners unfamiliar with area, language, or problem. (Item 3) Both sides consider themselves adept at police investigation. Integration at local commander level seems more important. Jordanian police are part of Arab Legion and police commanders are primarily legion officers some of whom already have British police training. British technicians might prove unacceptable to Israelis view Jordan-UK treaty relationship.

[1] Repeated to London and Paris.

d. Under Item 6 chairman should also have authority to refuse to entertain complaints he feels are appropriate concern local commanders thus elevating importance local commander meetings and stopping MAC agency from becoming clogged.

e. If the problems involved in obtaining Jordan acceptance to a delineation of implication attaching that it is a permanent frontier with Israel could be solved, the British proposal that "minor rectifications of the armistice line to reunite villages and farms with their lands and water supplies" should be made an integral part of Item 10.

f. As much of the traffic mentioned in Item 12 is contraband Consulate General doubts the real effectiveness of the convoys proposed and questions the statement that this illegal traffic "generally may be innocent in motive". On other hand, such convoys, if established, would be impressive evidence of UN interest.

The Chargé in Jordan (Geren) to the Department of State

SECRET AMMAN, May 10, 1954.

No. 385

Ref: CA-6175 of April 28, 1954

Subject: Comment on Measures to Improve Arab-Israeli Border Situation

The following comments, numbered to correspond with the suggested measures listed under Section III B, are submitted in response to the communication cited above which was received on May 8.

1. The Embassy believes it would not be wise to appoint a new chief of staff at the present time. Any American who held this position would have the disadvantage among the Arabs of their recollection of what they considered as General Riley's favoritism to the Israelis. Furthermore, reputations earned in the US or in the West generally are not automatically recognized in the Near East. The fact that a general is world famous does not "force" an Arab to respect him. While the relationship between the officer and the effectiveness of the office is not denied, the Embassy believes it more important to reassert rights and powers of the UNTSO machinery than it is to replace the present incumbent.

There is no objection to the appointment of higher ranking officers to the MAC and observer corps but a comment affecting chairmen is included in 6. below.

2. The Embassy believes that the period of service of observers should not be reduced. Inexperience in an observer is even more dangerous than localitis.

3. Assignment of experts from the US–Mexico border service does not impress the Embassy as a good idea. The border situation between Israel and the Arab states presents few parallels with the US-Mexican border. Specialization to the Arab-Israeli border troubles comes only with on-the-job training.

4. The Embassy approves the assignment of translators and political legal advisers.

5. The recognition in practice between parties that the observers have freedom of movement and investigation is fundamental to the effectiveness of the UNTSO. The most flagrant violations of this right seem to arise in the DZ's and on Mount Scopus. The Embassy impression is that Israel more frequently violates this right than do the Arab states.

6. The adoption of new rules of procedure in the MAC's is also fundamental. The chairman should have the right to introduce resolutions and to initiate investigation. In addition, the Embassy suggests the following changed constitution of the MAC's in keeping with suggestions made by Commander Hutchinson: Instead of the several Mixed Armistice Commissions, each with a chairman, it is proposed that there be named a senior UN observer for each of the combinations, Israeli-Lebanon, Israeli-Syrian, Israeli-Jordan, and Israeli-Egypt. This senior observer, together with the observers assigned to him and the principal delegates from the two parties, would constitute a committee to deal with all but the major complaints. The Embassy appreciates the necessity of defining what is a "major" complaint but believes this can be done realistically. This group would save the log jam of little complaints which now collect and would also prevent the parties, principally the Israelis, from piling up their complaints for their statistical effect. The major complaints would be heard by a supreme Mixed Armistice Commission which would, like the present commissions, be composed of representatives of the two parties and a chairman from the UNTSO as the presiding officer. This chairman would be either the Chief of Staff of UNTSO or any one of the senior observers. Together these five would constitute a kind of supreme court bench from which a chairman might be drawn. The chairman in any major case would not be announced in advance. The effects of such an arrangement would be that the parties could not bring pressures to bear on a committee chairman prior to his hearing of a major case. This would eliminate some of the victimizing by pressure to which Colonel De Ridder and more recently Commander Hutchinson have been subject. Moreover, the group of five possible chairmen would be stronger than any one of them alone. The chairman would be selected only after a group discussion including the five in which they consulted specifically on the case in hand. The combined wisdom of the group could save mistakes of the kind made by the present chairmen acting singly. An example of such a mistake has been submitted by Embassy Damascus in the case of the right of Syrians to water their herds on the eastern shore of Lake Tiberias.

7. Prompt and continuing publicity is desirable. Releases should be fuller in background than those now made and should emanate officially from the UN so that newspapers all over the world may have the official story. In particular, releases should not be confined to MAC decision but should include the findings as they are made.

8. Increased equipment for observers seems indicated. Helicopters may be useful but identification, which is often the core of the problem, will not always be facilitated by helicopters.

9. The parties should accept their obligation to attend MAC and other meetings considered appropriate by UN officers and this should begin at the bottom and go up. That is, the local commanders meetings should be faithfully attended, Israel should rejoin the Jordan-Israeli MAC and from there the pressure should be exerted on Jordan to attend any other meetings which may be necessary. In fact, the Mixed Armistice Commissions when reconstituted along the lines advocated in 6. above may well be the long-sought device to bring Israel and Jordan together for higher level talks than they have yet experienced in the MAC. With the Chief of Staff, UNTSO, as the chairman in the most important cases, then the level of Jordanian-Israeli representation could be raised. This raising of the level of representation together with the right of the chairman to introduce resolutions and embark on investigations might well result in bringing the parties together at a high level to discuss the reduction of border tension.

10. The demarcation line should be delineated and this should be the work of UN engineers throughout, never the work of the parties. As noted in the airgram cited as reference, the Jordanians will need to be assured and reassured that final boundary determinations will come only with a peace settlement.

11. The Embassy sees no realistic means of making sure that the parties actually punish infiltrators even though they were persuaded to indicate that they planned to punish them. Furthermore, it would seem that Israel could hardly punish its armed forces for raids carried out presumably under orders from senior commanders. Jordan has offered evidence of its efforts to stop infiltration. General Glubb recently told Ambassador Mallory that the jails in Jordan hold a large number of infiltrators and would-be infiltrators who have been apprehended, and that the present effort represents the limit of Jordan capabilities in this regard.

12. The issuance of passes for the movement of Arabs from the Gaza strip to Jordan and as proposed in Cairo's 2613 of May 4 land transit between Egypt and Jordan is definitely desirable.

13. The Embassy heartily advocates reinstitution of local commanders agreements.

A basic weakness of the MAC, as in any UN machinery, is the lack of teeth to enforce decisions. If the Tripartite powers would follow up every MAC decision by bringing immediate pressure to bear on the offending state, there would be greater respect for such decisions. The Tripartite démarches and in particular the suspension of aid to Israel by the US in the Baanat Yacov case is an illustration of the effectiveness—and difficulty—of Tripartite teeth for UNTSO's decisions. Perhaps nothing so dramatic as the suspension of aid could be found for all of the "major" cases. Nevertheless, it is imperative to bring such pressures as will compel respect for the decisions.[3] acceptance by Jordan of measures for reenforcing GAA and UNTSO, that US, UK and France informally approach Jordan Government near future without awaiting final Security Council action. Approach would take form discussion with Jordanians of "measures" 2-13 of reference airgram to elicit Jordanians' support and seek their views.

2. We are informing British Embassy Department agrees their suggested approach to Jordanians but believes measures to improve border situation can best be developed, and coordinated in Security Council, under UK aegis; and that we therefore urge they agree that Dixon take rapporteur role (under our proposed Tripartite UN Resolution) at least during remainder his SC Presidency. We convinced importance this coordination since "measures" in our view likely to be substance of rapporteur's efforts and report to SC. Our intention is not to hamper UN consideration border problem but rather facilitate constructive action by seeking Jordanian and thereafter Israel concurrence in measures which we anticipate will in due course be proposed by rapporteur. (We do not anticipate that rapporteur would propose such of the measures as would be most effective if carried out without publicity.)

3. In Department's (and UK) view approach should be made to Jordan first because prior acceptance suggestions by Israel would probably cause Jordan refuse consideration, whereas reverse is not necessarily the case. Department also concurs UK view no indication should be given to Israelis, or UN, that Jordan being approached, since news leak might preclude Jordanian acceptance suggestions.

4. Since formal three Power approach might attract public notice, Department believes it best have UK Ambassador speak to Jordanians in name three Powers, with US and French Missions informally confirming that UK Ambassador is acting for them. Alternatively, dinner might be arranged with three Ambassadors present at which Prime Minister could be informed of three Power's tentative proposals. Approach in either case would involve discussing with Jordanians "measures" 2-13 set forth CA-6175, and attempting elicit their views and support. UK may discuss feasibility these suggestions with Glubb before approaching Government.

5. Approach to Israelis should follow soon as possible after eliciting Jordanian views.

6. French have expressed reservations re advisability proposed direct approach. Department informing French Embassy we would prefer have them join us in proposed action but feel situation requires we go ahead with UK in any event.

7. Any conversations with UN on measures affecting assistance to UNTSO should await outcome talks with Jordan and Israel.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 12, 1954.

Subject: Developing Seriousness of Arab–Israel Tensions.

Participants: Mr. Jacob Blaustein, President of the American Jewish Committee
John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State
Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

Mr. Blaustein introduced himself to the Secretary as a non-Zionist who has helped Israel, President of the American Jewish Committee and head of Amoco (oil company). He wished the Secretary to know that he had had a talk with the President and that it was the President's suggestion that he call on the Secretary. Normally, he would not have requested such an interview without first consulting Mr. Byroade, now at Istanbul. He had been a strong supporter of the Administration's policy in the Near East but he wished to express his apprehension that the "impartial policy" was going a little far in certain respects. The Secretary had himself sought peace between Israel and the Arab states during his last year's visit to the Near East and had discovered that this could not be brought about at that time. However, he hoped that the U.S. Government would not play down the concept of peace but unremittingly seek it by every means, since he felt that the tensions between Israel and the Arab states were now greater than ever before. He did not agree with the Israel reaction to Mr. Byroade's recent speeches and had so informed the Israel Embassy. The Israelis were prone to find fault with an entire address which contained five good points but also one which they did not like. Nevertheless, Mr. Blaustein was concerned that our arms aid to Iraq, plus the tenor of recent statements by the Administration, were giving rise to a cocksureness and intransigence among the Arab countries. He felt that he knew the Arabs well enough to be sure that you could not afford to give them too much encouragement. Arms to Iraq, he felt sure, would encourage Arab intransigence and it was more likely that these arms would be used against Israel, or even ultimately against the United States, than that they would be used in effective defense against a Soviet threat. Furthermore, this policy was making Sharett's position very difficult with his own people and government. Sharett was a moderate and we needed "to hold his hand".

The Secretary replied that we were not yet fully committed to furnish specific weapons to Iraq. A military team would have to pass on Iraqi requirements and we would have plenty of time to take "second looks" at the situation as we went along. There was more in this Iraq picture than met the eye. Leading Mr. Blaustein to the illuminated globe in his office, the Secretary set forth his concept of defense of the "northern tier", into which he hoped Iraq would some day fit. This was for Mr. Blaustein's information and not to be repeated. He realized that Mr. Sharett was in a difficult position because the United States could not furnish him the information required to enable him to make a satisfactory explanation of this concept to the Israeli people. However, the concept was definitely in Israel's interest as well as in the interest of the United States. In developing Middle East defense and reducing tensions between Israel and the Arab states, we might follow "the Trieste formula" of talking individually and secretly to both sides in order to find the bases for some settlement. Mr. Byroade was now in Istanbul obtaining impressions from our Chiefs of Mission in the area regarding the inner currents of political feeling and he was looking forward to hearing his report.

Mr. Blaustein emphasized his high respect for Mr. Byroade, whom he regarded as scrupulously honest and extremely diligent in attempting to find a solution for the Arab-Israel quarrel. However, everyone could make mistakes and he again implored the Secretary to send no arms to Iraq. The Secretary again responded that we were not yet fully committed and could take repeated looks at the situation as we went along.

Note: Following the meeting, Mr. Blaustein indicated his desire to confer with Mr. Byroade as soon as possible after the latter's return from Istanbul in order to exchange views respecting Arab-Israel tensions.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] May 13, 1954.

Subject: American-Israel Relations.

Participants: Ambassador Abba Eban of Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Mr. John Foster Dulles, Secretary of State
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

Ambassador Eban expressed his appreciation that the Secretary had spared time from very critical world problems such as Indo-China to receive him. However, because the general international situation was so serious, it seemed particularly desirable that "unnecessary quarrels" be avoided. In this connection there was a cloud over United States-Israel relations which had resulted from two main developments: (1) certain policy statements by the U.S. Government and (2) the security situation in the Near East as it relates to Israel. The Ambassador did not wish to bring personalities into this question as he had already made known the views of his government to Mr. Byroade. First among the policy statements was that given at Dayton, Ohio [Mr. Byroade's speech of April 9, 1954 before the Dayton World Affairs Council].[1] While this address achieved a certain balance in distributing blame for current Near Eastern tensions between the Arab states and Israel, certain phrases reverberated unfortunately in Israel, such as that which asked Israel to cease "behaving like a conqueror". Diplomatic tradition, for good reason, had made the avoidance of such phrases desirable. At the same time, the address did not advise the Arabs to avoid raiding Israel. More important in this address was the first negative reference by the U.S. Government to relations between Israel and those people throughtout the rest of the world who shared her traditions. This reference wounded the feelings of millions outside Israel and hundreds of thousands within that country. A fabric of innumerable relationships has been woven by history between Jews around the world and the concept of Zion, now finally rendered tangible by the re-creation of Israel. The Ambassador felt therefore that this negative reference showed a certain lack of scholarship and of sensitivity. In any case, the Israel press had expressed a disquieting reaction using such phrases as: "U.S. Threatens Israel". The Secretary might well reply that these were not mature interpretations of what had been said—that they were distortions. If he were to say this, the Ambassador would agree. Nevertheless, these distortions were a political fact which invited concern.

[1] Brackets throughout this document appear in the source text.

The second policy statement to which the Ambassador referred was the speech made at Philadelphia [by Byroade on May 1, 1954 before the American Council for Judaism] where the platform was certainly not one on which a discussion of American friendship for Israel was congenial. The same themes of the Dayton speech were pursued, but Israel's objections to this address were more substantive:

(1) The speech, in making reference to the impossibility of early peace between Israel and her neighbors, would have the effect of convincing the Arabs that their vehement rejection of peace was now winning acceptance. Israel hoped that we would not abandon the peace slogan because of the obstacles which existed in the path of peace.

(2) The address referred to the matter of compensation and non-aggression pacts in a manner which gave a false impression of Israel's intentions. Israel had long since made a known decision to offer compensation without calling for concessions from the Arab side and she had repeatedly offered non-aggression pacts which had been rejected.

(3) More important, this speech for the first time made a reference to Israel's laws on immigration. This reference created an emotional outburst in Israel which can only be understood if one remembers the Jewish wartime experience with the British Mandate. When the Nazi holocaust against Jewry was in progress, the Jews had "no key to a door" which they could open for their people. This caused their break with the Mandate Government. Today, however, immigration was not an actual problem and it seemed entirely unnecessary to raise a theoretical issue. Israel had obtained 400,000 people from behind the Iron Curtain, a unique transfer of people from Communism to the free world and therefore a real achievement. If the Iron Curtain should open to permit the exit of the remainder of Eastern European Jewry, the movement of these people toward Israel would be greeted with messianic fervor. The Middle East would be better off as a result, for these people would be true anti-Communists. Such immigration would therefore be not a disaster but a blessing. However, it did not seem likely that it would take place.

In general, Israel was confronted by this situation: she cherished the United States as the sheet anchor of her very life, yet she had heard herself discussed publicly in such a critical vein on several occasions that it appeared that Israel could do nothing right in American eyes. The corrections which the Department furnished after the second policy address [Press Release No. 231 of May 5, 1954] had not been sufficient to overcome an unfortunate public impression in Israel.

The second main factor which cast a cloud over U.S.–Israel relations was the publication of a military aid agreement between the United States and Iraq which, coming at a time when Arab hostility to Israel was at its height, served to confirm the impression which the Ambassador had just discussed. Here was an agreement which created a more intimate relationship between Iraq and the United States than that which existed between Israel and the United States. The result of all of these factors was not healthy for U.S.–Israel relations and had generated a feeling within Israel of extreme isolation. This feeling of isolation tended to give strength to those who believed in measures of self-reliance rather than reliance on international friendships and rendered difficult the general acceptance of moderate counsels. As the Ambassador hoped and believed that Israeli public impressions of America's attitude were distorted, he wished to pose the question whether anything could be done to correct them.

The Secretary replied that it was clear that the Israeli press, as the Ambassador had remarked, had drawn other interpretations than those which had been intended. He had himself experienced a similar occurrence yesterday when the French press misinterpreted a remark which he had made by headlines such as: "U.S. Abandons Indo-China". The press always seemed to seek out the most disturbing elements of a public address and feature them. On the other hand, in our form of representative government, it was at times necessary to speak frankly in order to explain things to one's own people. The Ambassador must know, and his Government must know, that there was no weakening in the historic friendship between Israel and the United States. There might be suitable occasions to again speak publicly on this matter. However, this was a sensitive topic and likely to be distorted, it might not lend itself well to further public discussion at this time. As in the case of American relations with many countries, it was frequently desirable that misapprehensions be removed regarding U.S. intentions and purposes. The necessity of removing such misapprehensions sometimes created a real problem in our relations. The present incident, which unfortunately touched Israel most closely, was part of the fabric of recent developments which made the conduct of the unruffled relations a difficult task.

With respect to the U.S. Military Agreement with Iraq, the Secretary could only say that it was his belief that when the final chapter to this topic was written, it would be found to be in the best interest of Israel. He would not undertake to explain why this was so, but requested the Government of Israel to accept it on faith. He did not, of course, criticize the Israel public for misinterpreting this important step. He wished to assure the Ambassador, however, that he had looked into this situation personally and closely and that he was satisfied that at the worst it would not hurt, and, at the best, it might help Israel's relations with her neighbors.

Referring to the Ambassador's comment regarding peace as an objective, the Secretary had not abandoned efforts to work out a formula for peace and agreed with the Ambassador that such efforts should continue. If, as the Ambassador said, sober counsels in Israel were to prevail and Israel had some thoughts along this line, he would be glad to receive them. He was considering "the Trieste method" as a means of making progress in this dispute. The "Trieste Method" consisted of independent exploration on each side of a controversy where emotion between the disputants seemed to rule out direct talks. The Secretary wished the Ambassador to be assured that his concern over Indo-China did not rule out his readiness to talk with him regarding any practical methods of relaxing tensions.

Ambassador Eban replied that he would report the Secretary's comments to his Government. He wished to leave with the Secretary only one final thought, which was that since the unfortunate impressions to which he made reference were public impressions, it would be desirable to do something publicly to give a reassurance. The Secretary responded that he did not exclude that possibility.

Ambassador Eban referred to Israel's efforts in the UN toward peace which had been frustrated most recently by Jordan's refusal to give necessary assurances of willingness to settle matters by peaceful means. The Secretary asked whether the Ambassador felt the Arab countries were being much encouraged by the Soviet veto. Ambassador Eban replied that they seemed to be encouraged in the belief that they could use the United Nations as a platform to abuse Israel. During the past year and a quarter the United States had been giving attention to greater friendship with the Arab states in the hope that they would prove more responsive to its views. The results were disappointing, as the Arab countries were not more responsive to U.S. views but less so, particularly as compared with their attitude in 1950 and 1951. Psychologically, they had retreated. Israel would exercise its ingenuity in procedures but feared that the Arabs would not agree to confer with her under any circumstances. Israel did not wish to obstruct the possibility of talks by being too formal, by insisting on a discussion of peace terms. It was prepared to undertake discussions on interim and partial settlement of specific problems. As regards arms aid to Iraq the Ambassador assured the Secretary that Israel never believed that the United States intended to increase hostility in the Near East by such a measure. "We believe", he said, "in the good will of the donor but question the good will of the recipient."

The Secretary replied that Iraq had received no arms as yet and that he was watching this situation very carefully.

Note: As Ambassador Eban, Minister Shiloah and Mr. Hart were approaching the Reception Room after leaving the Secretary's Office, the Ambassador noted a few newsmen waiting for him. Turning to Mr. Hart, he said: "These fellows always create a problem for me; do you think it would in order if I were to state that it would be wrong to assume that there had been any diminution in friendship between Israel and the United States?" Mr. Hart replied that such a statement on its own was certainly true and would be quite proper to give out; it was possible, of course, that the reporters might seek to draw inferences of a more specific nature. The Ambassador rejoined that he would not elaborate on such a statement nor go into details.

Paper Approved by the Chiefs of Mission Conference at Istanbul, May 11-14, 1954 [1]

TOP SECRET

ISTANBUL, May 14, 1954.

CONFERENCE CONCLUSIONS ON THE DANGER OF ARAB-ISRAELI TENSIONS AND RECOMMENDED LINE OF US ACTION

1. The Conference received with concern reports from the chiefs of mission in the Arab states and Israel regarding increasing tension on the Arab-Israel frontiers and the danger that the Soviet Union might be able to turn this situation to its advantage. Generally speaking it was agreed that, although the Soviet Union has been stepping up its activity in the Near East and making noticeable progress, the United States has been keeping pace except in Jordan and Syria by following a vigorous policy of its own. However, this situation could be changed radically and suddenly if a point were reached where the Soviet Union should seek to profit by a deterioration in the Arab-Israel difficulty by coming out openly as the champion of the Arabs. Means should therefore be found to alleviate existing tension, not only because of the seriousness of the problem per se, but also in order to preclude the danger of loss of the Near East by the West.

2. In examining the nature of present intensified difficulties on the Arab-Israel frontier, the Conference noted that there is, on the Arab side, a persistence of small scale but irritating troubles resulting from the acts of individuals and small groups acting on their own responsibility, and, on the part of the Israel Government, a deliberate policy of reprisals. Apparently impatient at the failure of their efforts to bring about a favorable settlement with neighboring Arab states (and imbued with a spirit of the end justifying the means), an increasing number of Israelis appear to have concluded that matters would have to be made worse before they become better and to have adopted policies in accord with that conclusion. Furthermore, there is always the danger that present tactics could develop more seriously than intended and that more extreme elements might come into power. In that event, the Near East would be thrown into turmoil to the detriment of vital American interests, i.e., political, strategic, oil.

3. A clear-cut peace between the Arab states and Israel would be in the American interest and it should continue to be our ultimate objective. The Conference believed that it would be unrealistic to base our policy on hope of the realization of such a peace settlement in the early future and that the most practical approach would be to seek progress under a modus vivendi. It is not a question of one side desiring peace and the other harboring hostile designs but rather a matter of presently irreconcilable basic attitudes.

4. Since early peace is not to be foreseen, the Conference turned its attention to means which might be taken to alleviate present tensions. In the first place it was their view that strong measures should be taken to strengthen the machinery for the enforcement of the armistice agreements and note was taken of certain details in this connection which are currently under discussion. However, the Conference found that such measures, necessary as they might be, would fall short of meeting the basic difficulty and that, if danger was to be obviated, the American Government should take additional measures commensurate in scope and firmness with the seriousness of the problem.

5. Turning to such additional measures the Conference recommended that, in order (a) to deter Israel from embarking upon aggression as a preventive measure while she still has military superiority, (b) to allay the fears of Israel with respect to the possibility of Arab aggression following a program of arms aid to the Arab countries, and (c) to deter the Arab countries from giving serious consideration to aggressive actions against Israel following the receipt of arms, the United States in conjunction with Britain (and possibly France) should consider the development of plans along the following lines:

(1) Discontinuance governmental aid to the aggressor state.

(2) Placing an embargo on trade between the United States and the aggressor state.

(3) Preventing the transfer of funds from any source in the United States to the aggressor state directly or indirectly.

(4) Recommending to other countries similar measures pursuant to a UN decision or the Tripartite Declaration.

(5) Establishing a naval blockade of the aggressor state by the US, the UK and France.

(6) The use by the three powers of armed forces, pursuant to the Tripartite Declaration of May, 1950, to effect a restoration of the present armistice lines in the event of successful aggression before action of the three powers could have its effect.

The orders and extent to which the above actions would be taken would depend upon the nature of the aggression and the urgency of the situation.

Upon determination of the steps which the United States would be prepared to take, alone or with the British and possibly French, consideration should be given to the desirability of making such decisions public either in whole or in part, bearing in mind that much of the effectiveness of such decisions as a deterrent would probably depend on the extent to which we would be prepared to declare ourselves openly.

6. The Conference recognized that these recommendations are of such scope and importance that they would require highest level clearance and also nation-wide support.

7. The Conference also recognized the importance of reaching understanding and working in collaboration with the British in the implementation of such a policy. However, they foresaw little hope of effective help by the French although the association of the French in the Tripartite Declaration might make necessary their being assigned some nominal role.

8. The Conference was conscious of the fact that their recommendations were addressed only to a part of the Arab-Israeli question, i.e., toward the lessening and warding off of dangerous tensions, and that final solution would require solutions of such problems as refugees, compensation, frontiers, water and Jerusalem. It also concluded that, although the parties must play an important role in seeking such solutions, the full task was beyond their power of negotiation and that the US Government, in association with other powers, would have to assume responsibility for developing solutions and for enforcing their implementation. Regarding immigration, the Conference endorsed the reference thereto in Assistant Secretary Byroade's recent speech in Philadelphia but agreed with him that we should allow this matter to rest for the time being.

9. The Conference perceived that, in addition to the legal basis and political practicability of their recommendations, there were complications of an unusual nature which might result in putting the recommendations into effect. For instance: It seemed likely that Syria would oppose the use of French troops in Syria even in aid against Israeli aggression. There would be a question whether the forces of a state against which aggression had been committed should be considered as allies. There would also be a question whether, upon our interception in behalf of a victim of aggression, others might decide to participate, ostensibly in collaboration but possibly to serve their own special ends.

10. The Conference endorsed actions by the US Government during the past year in implementing the policy of impartial friendship to all states of the area. The Conference believed that this policy was correct and could see no satisfactory alternative to meet the dangers in the Middle East. The Conference believed that this policy should be pursued, bearing in mind that in its implementation care must be taken so that unfounded fears of Israel would not result in rash action on their part.

Such calls might be interpreted by the Jordanian Government as belying any assurance that it was being consulted first. Therefore, unless action had already been taken, the Embassy was instructed to take no initiative toward such calls until it had received final instructions following the completion of the démarche in Amman. On June 16, following the completion of the initial démarche in Amman, the Embassy was authorized to proceed to establish a working relationship with the Israeli Foreign Ministry in accordance with points one and two of the Department's telegram 792 of May 14. A courtesy call by Russell on the Prime Minister at Jerusalem would fulfill point three of telegram 792; this in turn was to pave the way for informal social contact with the Prime Minister. Russell was instructed to refrain from attending social functions at Jerusalem, but subordinate officers or service attachés might be permitted to attend at the Embassy's discretion. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Politico-Economic Adviser in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Gardiner)

CONFIDENTIAL [NEW YORK,] June 2, 1954.

Subject: Jordan Valley Developments

Participants: At the Office of the Secretary General of the UN:
The Secretary General of the United Nations
Mr. Andrew Cordier
Assistant Secretary Byroade
Ambassador Wadsworth
Ambassador Johnston

Mr. Gardiner, State
Mr. Barnes, FOA

Mr. Johnston in opening the meeting suggested, if it were possible to obtain agreement in principle to the Unified Plan, that the subject be turned over to the United Nations for further detailed negotiations, and hoped that the Secretary General would agree to this course. Mr. Johnston defined "agreement in principle" to mean statements by the countries concerned that the water from the Jordan River should be shared by the countries through which it flows, on an equitable basis. The United States and Mr. Johnston would continue to be prepared to do all that could be done to further this project. Mr. Johnston also hoped that progress would result from the Cairo and Tel Aviv talks.

The Secretary General personally stated that a direct reply was difficult, as the United States appeared to be making a new tactical approach. The basic concern of the United Nations at this time arises over the issues involving the dispute over the diversion at Jisr Banat Yaqub. This faces the UN with certain political as well as practical problems. The Secretary General considered that an agreement of this kind mentioned by Mr. Johnston could be rated to the issues involving Jisr Banat Yaqub, and considered that Mr. Johnston's proposals might ease the situation rather than confuse it. The Secretary General, however, was skeptical of the possibility of any considerable achievement at this time, particularly as the ideas of the Arabs were so negative.

In response, Mr. Johnston reaffirmed that there was more optimism in U.S. circles, as there seemed to be a basis for negotiations, and both sides, Israel and Arab, had indicated the desire to explore possibilities.

The Secretary General replied that his pessimism ran into the UN role as a whole in the area, rather than to manipulating the TVA plan. On the point of bringing such an issue to the UN, the Secretary General had no objection, but said that he must add a note of pessimism in view of the nature of U.S.-Soviet relations in the Security Council and General Assembly. On the other hand, he saw no other agency available to tackle the problem of the Jordan waters, agreed that the solution must be an international one, and, while skeptical of the ability of the UN to follow it through, considered the UN the only possible agency to get any result.

At the Secretary General's request, Mr. Cordier stated that he thought the analysis of the Secretary General was correct, and that the problem was to find a basis for an appeal to the consciences of the states concerned without exacerbating present political tensions. Mr. Cordier asked about the attitude of the Israelis.

In response to this inquiry, Mr. Johnston referred to a recent conversation he had had with Ambassador Eban. The Israelis advised him that they were proposing an alternative plan based on the combining of Jordan and Litani waters. When Mr. Johnston advised Mr. Eban that we could not consider such a proposal, Mr. Eban stated that Israel might be prepared to modify this position.

Mr. Byroade then stated that he shared Mr. Hammarskjold's concern about unfortunate international politics in UN discussions relating to the Arab-Israeli problem. This was a source of great worry to him. However Mr. Byroade felt that if Mr. Johnston could convince both parties to request UN supervision of Jordan waters, a great advance might be made. This would help the UN solve the problem at Jisr Banat Yaqub as well as at Adasiya.

The Secretary General agreed with Mr. Byroade. No sound solution for the Jisr Banat Yaqub issue could be found unless it fell within the framework of general proposals acceptable to all concerned.

Mr. Byroade remarked that Jisr Banat Yaqub was something like the Saar. The problem could not be solved except in a broader context.

The Secretary General went on to state that he saw no contradiction between Mr. Johnston's proposed approach and the various concerns of the UN; insofar as Jisr Banat Yaqub is concerned, the UN has a plan in mind; as far as Israel is concerned, the only factors holding back the Israelis from further work in the demilitarized zone are the temporary promises given to Mr. Johnston and to the UN. The Israelis are prepared to continue their activity as soon as the time is ripe. On the other hand, the Arabs had reacted most violently on June 1 when the Secretary General presented them with a note of the Banat Yaqub issue (which presumably contained a statement of terms on which the Israelis might continue with their diversion plan at this point). This reaction made it clear to the Secretary General how intense Arab feelings still were. However, he felt that after the talks in Cairo it might be possible to proceed to discussions on Jisr Banat Yaqub provided certain UN guarantees regarding the operation of the diversion were given. His recent difficulties with Israel had led him to make a sober appraisal of the risks involved. As far as the Arabs are concerned, it is going to be very difficult to handle them, as their gains from the development at Adasiya did not appear sufficient to save their loss of face over Jisr Banat Yaqub.

The Secretary General then asked Mr. Johnston how he thought Jisr Banat Yaqub might be handled if the Cairo conference were successful.

In response, Mr. Johnston thought that the issue might fade in the background and that the Israelis might agree to abandon the irrigation aspect of Jisr Banat Yaqub in view of the fact that they prefer the high-level canal as proposed in the Unified Plan.

Mr. Byroade thought that the Israelis would not abandon Jisr Banat Yaqub and that if agreement were reached on the proposals in Cairo, and Israel accepted the Jisr Banat Yaqub diversion in lieu of the high-level canal, the Jisr Banat Yaqub project might go ahead.

At this point, Mr. Barnes observed that Mr. Johnston had asked Mr. Eban which alternative Israel preferred. The Israelis had indicated that they would like to have the high-level canal for irrigation, reserving the Jisr Banat Yaqub diversion for power.

The Secretary General observed that the canal now being dug was too big for power alone. Mr. Byroade observed that the problems facing the U.S. and the UN were much the same, as if the Israelis start work again on the diversion in the demilitarized zone both the U.S. and the UN would be forced to take a public stand again.

The Secretary General then spoke about the military implications of the Jisr Banat Yaqub canal. He had believed that it might serve as a protection for Israeli's flank in the event of warfare in the north, and he asked Mr. Byroade whether we had any considered views on this issue. Mr. Byroade stated that we had not made a precise military appraisal.

Mr. Johnston then stated that he felt it was important to note the changing attitude on the part of the Israelis regarding Jisr Banat Yaqub, which should be carefully evaluated. He also felt that the Arab position of outright opposition might change. Mr. Byroade noted that the favorable Arab reaction to the Unified Plan is putting Israel in a difficult position and that if the Cairo meeting results in an agreement, the position of Jisr Banat Yaqub would be facilitated.

The Secretary General agreed with Mr. Byroade, and noted that at least until the conclusion of Mr. Johnston's talks in Israel this issue would probably not arise again in the UN. The idea of international supervision would provide a new medium for a settlement, and he would like to give as much support as possible to means of providing such supervision.

At this point Mr. Johnston asked the Secretary General whether he would attach a UN observer for the talks in Cairo. Mr. Hammarskjold was hesitant on this point as there seemed to be no practical basis for discussions of the immediate issue facing the UN, that of the Jisr Banat Yaqub dispute.

Mr. Gardiner suggested that what was required was not an officer especially qualified to consider the current dispute, but one who could help establish a constitution for a UN control body.

Mr. Hammarskjold observed that this was a new field for the UN and that the Secretariat had not given much thought to it yet. On the other hand, he quite agreed that if the basic idea were accepted, and led to a request of the Secretary General, he would be very interested. However, discussion of the details of such an authority would be very time-consuming, and as far as the Cairo meeting was concerned, he felt that its central theme should be international control and that details should be left to later.

Mr. Byroade hoped we were in a stage of transition so that the UN could take a leading role in these matters. This idea appealed to the Secretary General. He stated that Mr. Carver should be available at Cairo to consult with Johnston, but not to take part in formal talks with the Arabs.

Mr. Byroade indicated that Mr. Carver expected to be present, and suggested that it might be helpful if UNRWA's legal adviser, Lalive, were also present.

Mr. Johnston, in summarizing the position, thought the situation was very clear. The Cairo meeting he considered as a transition leading to the time when the UN could take the project over, with full backing from the U.S.

The Secretary General fully agreed on the need to get the parties together somehow. He did not wish to endorse the TVA plan in detail, and furthermore it was necessary for him to avoid as much as possible confusing Near East politics with the politics of the cold war. The Soviet propaganda, which the Soviets were beginning to believe themselves, had tacked the label of "U.S. imperialism" on the TVA Plan. It was therefore advantageous to keep the UN uncommitted on the details of its implementation.

Mr. Johnston suggested that a further meeting might be held in New York on June 10, prior to the departure of his mission for Cairo. The Secretary General agreed that this might be helpful and undertook to reserve time on that day. He hoped that Mr. Byroade would attend this meeting as well.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 3, 1954.

Subject: Israel request to purchase American jet aircraft.

Some time ago the Israelis approached me with a request that we allow them to make a commercial purchase of 24 F-86 jet fighters. The only act required by the United States Government would be to grant export licenses.

The Israelis explained their desire to purchase these aircraft as part of a modernization of equipment scheme for their airforce. They propose to dispose of 80 obsolete aircraft presently being maintained. In view of budget restrictions they envisaged actually receiving the 24 new aircraft over an extended period of time.

In response to my query they stated the transaction would be of a secret military character and they could guarantee that no initial publicity would result.

My first reaction to this proposition was that we should give our approval. I have been in fact searching for some way to reassure the Israelis and was therefore tempted to go ahead. I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that I cannot conscientiously recommend such a course to you, as I believe it clearly against United States over-all interests in the Middle East. This I believe to be true for the following reasons:

(a) Grant of permission to Israel to purchase American jets at this time might seriously compromise the possibilities of ultimately achieving the political objectives of our Iraq program, i.e. Iraqi participation in Middle East defense and the break up of the negativism of the Arab League.

(b) I do not trust the Israelis as regards publicity and it would appear to the area that Israel by different methods was going to receive more potent weapons than we planned to give Iraq under our new agreement.

(c) The United States contemplates no jet aircraft in its military assistance to the Middle East. If we should change our mind in this regard the Israel request should, of course, be reconsidered.

(d) Even with the disposal of obsolete aircraft in greater numbers, 24 F-86's would materially increase Israel's potential. Israel's present airforce capability probably exceeds the capabilities of all the Arab states put together.

(e) At the recent conference of Ambassadors at Istanbul, our feeling was confirmed that the real danger today lies in some foolish move on the part of Israel. The Ambassadors saw no evidence whatsoever that an Arab move was in the cards.

(f) The Israel military authorities have maintained and to some extent increased a deliberate policy of retaliation which is not overruled by the civil government.

I transmitted the Israeli request to the Pentagon where it is still under discussion. My letter of transmittal indicated that the State Department would probably desire to comply with the Israeli request for political reasons. Conversation with officials at the Pentagon however indicates that they are quite opposed. The military objection is in fact more political than military. They feel that this move would react against us in the Middle East and specifically they feel it may affect the matter of present and prospective base rights in the area, including Saudi Arabia and Libya. They will probably leave a loop-hole in their reply to us however so that we can overrule them on political grounds if we feel it necessary to do so. Unfortunately I have concluded that our own political evaluation, except of course from the viewpoint of Israel itself, coincides with rather than differs from the military point of view.

In view of the above I request that I be authorized to inform the Israel Ambassador that the United States cannot grant approval to this request at this time. They will thereupon purchase jets elsewhere, probably from the Swedes or the British. Our refusal will not mean, therefore, that Israel will be denied these weapons, but it will mean that the United States will not suffer throughout the Middle East from this sale.

If you agree with the above I will try to find other ways of satisfying, to some extent, the feeling of the Israelis that we do not wish to work with them on military matters. They have asked for certain less dangerous weapons which I believe we can go ahead with. When General Dayan visits here in the near future we will try to see that he does not leave with the impression that we are uninterested in their military capabilities on the side of the West, etc. [1]

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] June 8, 1954.

Subject: Israeli matters

Participants: Ambassador Eban
Minister Shiloah
Mr. Byroade—NEA

I called upon the Ambassador and Mr. Shiloah at the Ambassador's residence at 5:00 P. M. on June 8th. His request to see me was based upon the desire to know more about our policy thinking in view of the Istanbul Conference.

I explained to Eban rather fully the feeling of the conference on defense matters as reported in the Istanbul paper. The Ambassador seemed somewhat reassured by my remarks as it indicated that we do not plan to grant armed assistance indiscriminately to Arab States regardless of their intentions upon joining a defense organization in the Middle East. I explained that Egypt was of course an exception as we were publicly committed at the highest level to give Egypt some assistance subsequent to their agreement with the British.

The Ambassador stated that he had spoken to Prime Minister Menderes about these problems during the latter's recent visit here. What Menderes had told him fitted closely with my remarks and he assumed therefore that the US and Turkey were in close agreement on these matters. The Prime Minister had indicated to Eban that it was not Turkey's intention to ignore the defense potential of Israel when that could be arranged. It was only a tactical matter of the moment which led them to believe any open participation by Israel would be a mistake. Eban asked if this reflected our views. I stated that it did.

Turning to the Arab-Israeli problem, I indicated our concern at the situation along the border and told Eban that we and the British, and perhaps the French, were going to endeavor to do what we could with the parties concerned outside the United Nations. Certain discussions with Jordan on technical matters as to how to improve the actual border situation had already taken place and Israel would probably be contacted in the near future. Eban stated that the British Ambassador had informed him of this fact. I declined to respond to Eban's request for any details as to our talks with Jordan.

Eban stated that Menderes had also stated that Turkey was considering joining in the tripartite declaration at the invitation of the United States. Eban apparently felt that a development in this regard was imminent and seemed pleased at the thought that Turkey might join in a guarantee of the status quo. I told Eban that the invitation had not come from us but that Turkey had in fact expressed a willingness to join in such a move. This was under consideration but no positive steps had been taken as yet.

Ambassador Eban asked what our reaction was to the purchase by Israel of 24 F-86 jet aircraft. I informed him that we had made a decision as a Government that it would not be possible for us to accede to this request at this time. The Ambassador stated that they did not wish to make such a huge outlay of money for aircraft that were already partially obsolete, such as British Meteors or Swedish aircraft. Would we therefore object if they purchased the aircraft through Canada with Canadian export licenses? I replied that these particular aircraft were made by an American subsidiary and I would assume the export licenses would have to be from the United States. Eban stated he did not believe this to be the case but that he knew the Canadian Government would request the views of the US. He did not wish, therefore, to approach the Canadian Government without knowing our views. I told him I would look into the matter and let him know.

Mr. Shiloah then raised the question of guarantees on the Suez Canal and the possible activation of the Suez Base to be used against Israel if the British pull their forces out of Egypt. I told him the agreement between the UK and Egypt was a technical one with the exception of a possible short preamble which already included a reference to the Suez Canal. I stated I would be strongly opposed to any attempt to inject new issues into that agreement itself at this time. If the Israelis had specified suggestions as to how their concern could be handled outside of the agreement itself, I would be glad to study them. Mr. Shiloah said they did have such specific suggestions, which they had already passed to the British and that he would like to discuss them with me next week. I agreed to set up a time.

Ambassador Eban then referred to their disappointment over the low level of our illustrative aid presented to Congress for the next fiscal year. He stated that he agreed that economic progress had been made in Israel but thought they could prove upon economic grounds the wisdom of continuing the aid at least at the same level for the next fiscal year. I told Eban that we had arrived at our illustrative figure solely upon economic grounds and not political. I stated in general our desire to get away from what now appears to be the policy of equality of assistance to Israel on the one hand and the rest of the Middle East on the other, but that our decision had not been based upon this political viewpoint. He stated he and his economic people wished to make a presentation to Stassen to attempt to justify more assistance next year on economic grounds. I stated we would be interested in hearing such a presentation.

Written reply to follow soon. Duke's telegram, being pouched Washington and Paris, shows HKJ agrees to five of proposed measures, believes three others more properly come within competence UN and rejects two. Items rejected are demarcation of boundary (including physical barriers) and passes for Arabs crossing from Gaza strip to Jordan territory.

Foreign Office instructing British Embassies Washington and Paris propose three governments now approach IG re measures agreed by HKJ and only these, and ask for IG comment and suggestions. Foreign Office does not favor telling Israelis about measures rejected by Jordanians. British will await HKJ written reply before deciding whether urge reconsideration rejected items but Foreign Office believes such reconsideration, especially of border demarcation, unlikely.

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State [1]

SECRET CAIRO, June 17, 1954—1 p. m.

1564. From Johnston.

1. Discussions with Arab committee which started June 13, recessed evening June 16, with confidential agreement they be resumed in Cairo June 24, upon my return from Tel Aviv. Atmosphere has been most cordial throughout. Talks opened with review by Arabs and presentation of Arab plan. I replied by indicating areas of agreement, disagreement and uncertainty between Arab and unified plans. Remaining sessions devoted efforts reconcile two plans.

2. Final session consideration was given to four crucial points in attempt achieve agreement in principle.

a. Allocation of water. It was generally agreed that the quantities of water allocated to the four riparian states would approximate those indicated in unified plan. Adjustments will be made to meet needs of Lebanon on Hasbani and of Syria at Banias, Boteiha, and Yarmuk Plateau as indicated in Arab plan.

b. Use of water outside of watershed. I sought Arab agreement in principle to proposition that once allocations of water had been made, they could be used in places and for purposes determined by the states to which allotted. I insisted that unless I could assure Israel that she would get as much water as provided in the unified plan, and that she could then use it on coastal plain or elsewhere, there was no hope at all of Israel agreement. Consequences would be perilous to all concerned. Arabs continue officially to adhere firmly to position that water must be used in the basin with no export to other areas. Their overt postures could not appear more intransigent. We have had private indications from committee members and top Egyptians, however, that Arabs might give ground on this point if Israel accepts other elements of unified development proposals. There is evidence Arabs feel necessity remain tough on this point now in order enhance their bargaining position vis-à-vis Israel.

c. Storage on Yarmuk. Committee pressed for maximum storage on Yarmuk with only flood waters going into Tiberias. Stated such storage on Yarmuk was essential HKJ security since otherwise with major storage in Tiberias, HKJ in position where Israel could at anytime destroy HKJ crops by denying Tiberias water for relatively brief period. After thorough discussion this point we reached tentative understanding that provision would be made to store sufficient water on Yarmuk to meet HKJ's desires for emergency irrigation supply. Decision as to location and magnitude of such storage must await engineering determination. We indicated we would think along lines of providing sufficient Yarmuk storage to irrigate lower valley for two to three-week period should emergency arise and Tiberias water denied to HKJ.

d. International supervision. Early in meetings, after Arabs had indicated they would accept some degree of international supervision, we presented them with copies of draft declaration along lines that contained in Department's briefing paper. This provoked immediate and decidedly negative reaction. Arabs took this as indicating US withdrawing from negotiations and turning project over to UN. Arabs made abundantly plain they had more confidence in motives and integrity of US than in UN which had proved sore disappointment. After discussion tentative understanding reached that as soon as principles and essential elements of a valley development program had been agreed upon with US, the riparian states would take measures, through UN, to establish an international control authority to supervise execution and operation of valley program. In other words Arabs do not wish approach UN until effective agreement has been reached under US aegis.

3. Comment: I leave Cairo much encouraged at prospect obtaining Arab cooperation in integrated valley development. Role of Egyptians in providing effective, sympathetic, and constructive leadership has been most valuable and obviously based on sincere desire be helpful to US in this matter. Now appears unnecessary and undesirable conduct negotiations with Arabs except in Cairo. Expression of committee's confidence in US in view of past public and press statements also helpful sign.[2]

CAFFERY

[2] Ambassador Caffery reported in telegram 1565, June 17, as follows:

"Embtel 1564, June 17 from Johnston failed to include reference made by Arabs to their strong desire that his own leadership in Jordan Valley negotiations continue. This expression is genuine." (120.280/6-1754)

Assistant Secretary Byroade sent a copy of telegram 1565 as an attachment to a memorandum to Secretary Dulles of June 19 which reads:

"Eric Johnston's discussions with the Arab Committee in Cairo went well, and he is now in Tel Aviv. He expects to return to Cairo for further talks with the Arabs after his meeting with the Israelis.

"The meeting with the Arabs appears to have been quite successful. The one point that surprised me was Arab concern that the US might withdraw from the negotiations and turn the matter over for further follow up to the Secretary General of the United Nations. They agreed that this was desirable at a later date when an international control authority should be set up but wished the US to carry the ball until that time.

"The above was a surprise to me as well as the attached cable, which I think you will find interesting." (120.280/6-1754)

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Dorsey)[1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] June 17, 1954.

Subject: (1) Statements of U.S. Policy in the Near East, (2) The Tripartite Declaration, and (3) Israeli Purchase of Jets

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Mr. Meier Sherman, Director, Israel Government Economic Services in U.S.
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Dorsey

I. Following his request that the present rate of aid be maintained during F. Y. 1955, Ambassador Eban asked that Mr. Byroade consider the grave implications of repeated statements to the effect that population pressures will bring about an expansion of Israeli territory. He said that it has been said that responsible Israeli leaders claim the population should increase to four million within the next several years. Although Mr. Byroade in his Philadelphia speech had mentioned Arab fears of an expansion of Israeli territory, he had also said that in his opinion this fear was not realistic. Too many others, he added, emphasized the Arab fears without Mr. Byroade's important qualification and referred specifically to Mr. Gardiner's testimony before the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

Ambassador Eban emphasized that these official statements implied a lack of trust in Israel's commitment to the "boundaries" set forth in the Armistice Agreement. This lack of trust is grotesque, he said, when Israel is willing to sign a peace treaty tomorrow and the Arabs are not. They, on the contrary, have a serious desire to reduce the size of Israel. The Ambassador went on to say that the claim that Israel cannot expand to two or three million persons within its present territory shows a lack of knowledge of the rudimentaries of economics. The extensive, empty regions of the country and potential greater per capita production make practical Israel's ability to support the larger population. Israel, after all, is in no way as densely populated as Denmark and Belgium. "To invite the Arabs to fear Israel is to invite them to hate Israel," he said.

[1] Drafted also by Assistant Secretary Byroade.

Mr. Byroade replied that he had no regrets with regard to his own statement, which he had listed both Israeli intentions and the facts as he knew them as reasons why he did not believe Arab fears were justified. As to the other statements, he would take steps to see that nothing was said on this subject in the future without his personal clearance.

Ambassador Eban said that he hoped Mr. Byroade would find it possible to say that Israel's population density is not a serious problem and that the U.S. believes Israel is sincere in its intention to maintain the integrity of the frontier as an international demarcation line. He also felt that in any future statements of U.S. policy before Committees of the Congress that balance will be maintained so that it will not appear that as far as the U.S. is concerned Israel must make all the efforts toward peace while nothing is required of the Arabs.

II. Mr. Eban then stated that there had been recent indications in the press that this Government might be giving consideration to a reaffirmation and strengthening of the Tripartite Declaration. He said that he would like to present his own thinking on the matter which could be considered as authentic, subject of course to Cabinet discussion and findings. Mr. Byroade replied that there had been no discussions of the matter other than those in Ankara which he had mentioned both to Ambassador Eban and to the British. He did not know where the original press story from Ankara originated. He did, however, find the idea of reaffirmation and strengthening attractive and had hoped that Ambassador Eban would have a similar reaction.

Ambassador Eban then stated that there were two alternative possibilities: 1) to restate the Tripartite Declaration as is, and 2) to go beyond it and indicate that armed force would be used in support of the Declaration. These, he said, are two very different matters. As for the first, he doubted that reiteration strengthened the original Declaration. Actually, a repetition probably weakened it somewhat. Moreover, if the U.S. considered reaffirmation as a balance against arming the Arab States, Israel would have to reject the concept. "Arms for the Arabs and assurances for Israel" hardly result in a decent equilibrium. The second alternative, on the other hand, is a revolutionary step which he felt could not be effective if it were done unilaterally without consultation with the interested parties. Furthermore, he pointed out, a treaty is involved—the Charter of the UN. Under that treaty intervention is subject to two conditions: first, the invitation of the country which has been attacked, and secondly, the request of the UN under the enforcement provisions of the Charter. The Secretary of State recently gave these conditions as a basis for intervention in Indo-China and in the Ambassador's opinion they certainly presented far broader implications.

He believed that the Israeli reaction to such a proposal would be positive, but only within the proper framework. If you are thinking of a security guarantee, he said, you are thinking about a treaty and the international judicial repercussions must be fully considered. Mr. Byroade then said that we had never had any idea of ignoring the UN and he had only recently discussed the importance of maintaining peace in the area with the Secretary General. Ambassador Eban commented that he was sure that the goal of a security guarantee was a good one, but how to do it presented a dilemma. Mr. Byroade asked whether Mr. Eban envisaged some sort of document, to which Ambassador Eban replied that some sort of instrument between the guarantors and other directly interested parties was essential. Mr. Byroade stated that he was sure that the U.S. would have no trouble arriving at such an instrument with Israel. How to attain it with the other interested parties presented greater difficulties. His own thought was that the document must be something which would be approved by Congress. Mr. Eban then stated that he had heard of another possibility—the specific mention of the use of economic measures alone. He said that the very exclusion of any reference to force might give the impression that the guarantors were not willing to go so far as to use force.

Mr. Byroade then assured the Ambassador that we were not about to take any action without talking to the Israel Government and he urged him to give further thought to the matter and to give him the benefit of any ideas which he might have.

III. The Ambassador then indicated to Mr. Byroade that his Government had located a Canadian manufacturer of the jet airplanes which they wished to purchase in Canada and then the Canadian Government was expected to make no objection to the sale. Since the U.S. would not make the sale itself, would it obstruct any action by Canada? Mr. Byroade stated that if Canada and Israel could make a deal it is a matter of their concern—he felt that he must avoid any positive acts by this Government. If Canada informs us that they are manufacturing the jet planes, he would be disposed not to reply to their letter. Mr. Byroade added that basically he felt this was an excessive expenditure for military materiel—a point of view with which Israel disagreed. If Israel can make the expenditure without positive action by this Government, that is Israel's business. Ambassador Eban pointed out that aircraft did not last forever and that if replacements must be made, Israel wished to make them the most effective possible. Mr. Byroade commented that he believed the planes in which Israel was interested were also manufactured under license in Australia and perhaps other Commonwealth countries. Mr. Shiloah then asked whether our refusal to make planes available to Israel applied only to jets. Mr. Byroade replied that this whole conversation applied only to the present issue of F–86 jets.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Israeli Prime Minister (Sharett) [1]

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

The Government of the United States of America, sharing with the Government of Israel a grave concern over the state of frontier tension in the area, has sought to devise, in concert with the Governments of the United Kingdom and of France, proposals of appropriate steps to contribute to a reduction of this tension. Pursuant to instructions received from the Department of State, the Embassy transmits to the Government of Israel for its consideration the following suggestions of possible practical measures for reducing frontier incidents:

1. The acceptance by the parties to the Armistice Agreements of their obligations to attend meetings of the Mixed Armistice Commissions, and the resumption of the operation of Local Commanders Agreements.
2. The amendment of rules of procedure of the Mixed Armistice Commissions to enable the chairman to propose resolutions instead of merely rubber-stamping those of one side or the other.
3. The appointment to the staff of the Mixed Armistice Commission of United Nations translators and politico-legal advisers.
4. Publicity by the United Nations for Mixed Armistice Commission decisions and border conditions and the responsibility therefor.
5. An increase in the number of United Nations observers, who should be stationed on both sides of the border instead of mostly on the Arab side as at present.

---

[1] Copy transmitted to the Department in despatch 987 from Tel Aviv, June 21. The aide-mémoire was drafted by the Embassy pursuant to instructions sent in telegram 862 to Tel Aviv, June 17. The telegram included a list of points to be included in the formal démarche, and the Embassy was given discretion as to the manner of presentation. The Embassy was to point out that an identical list of measures had been presented at Amman, but was not to indicate which measures the Jordanian Government had rejected or accepted. The Embassy was also instructed to consult with the British and French Missions in Israel regarding the démarche. (684A.85322/6–1754)

Russell delivered the aide-mémoire to the Prime Minister in Jerusalem on the morning of June 20. (Telegram 189 from Jerusalem, June 20, 4 p. m.; 684A.85/6–2054)

6. Observers to enjoy freedom of movement and investigation at all points of the border.

7. Additional equipment for observers, such as tracking dogs, helicopters and improved radio communications.

8. Each party to inform the Mixed Armistice Commission of the punishment of persons convicted of infiltration or other violations of the armistice.

9. Demarcation of the border by United Nations observers (without prejuduce to political rights and claims of either side), this if possible to follow frontier rectifications, and the erection of physical barriers at the most important points.

10. A system of passes for the movement of Arabs from the Gaza Strip to Jordan under United Nations supervision. (A good deal of such traffic is innocent in motive and its regularization should serve to reduce incidents.)

11. Any other preventive measures, whether by the parties or the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization.

The foregoing suggestions have been presented to the Government of the Hashemite Kingdom of The Jordan.

The Department of State hopes that the Government of Israel, whose views and recommendations regarding possible measures are earnestly sought, will give serious consideration to these suggestions which have been formulated out of a sincere desire to see constructive and feasible steps taken to reduce border tension.

[2] Telegram 190 from the Consulate General at Jerusalem, June 20, contained a further report by Chargé Russell on his meeting that morning with Sharett at which he delivered the aide-mémoire on border measures (supra). The Prime Minister stated that the killing of two Israeli patrol guards the morning before and the fatal wounding of a third was only the culmination of a series of reckless and provocative firings by Jordanian border patrols upon Israeli patrols during the past few weeks. The Prime Minister asked that the United States exert its influence with the Jordanian Government to bring about their cessation. (684A.85/6-2054)

1. Recent decisions of MAC, body in whose impartiality we have full confidence, do not support Sharett's charges against HKJ. We do not feel able to make approach to Jordan requested by Sharett when Israel refuses to participate in work of MAC, organization specifically constituted to cope with border problems and when recent activities of Israel's armed forces resemble to unfortunate extent those for which Israel censured by SC on November 24.

2. Treatment accorded UN observers investigating Wadi Fukin clash can only raise questions re Israel's intentions and responsibility for incident. We unable to perceive justification for what appears to be deliberate effort by Israel discredit UNTSO personnel and machinery. Stability and security on border depends primarily on this organization and SC resolution of November 24 specifically called on Israel and Jordan to "cooperate fully with chief of staff of TSO".

3. Measures listed in aide-mémoire of June 20 [19] designed accomplish improvement in border situation which Sharett desires. We hope that steps indicated together with return of Israel to Israel-Jordan MAC and genuine effort to cooperate by all concerned will succeed in reversing present deplorable trend.[3]

Full meetings held afternoons June 20 and 21. Smaller meetings Johnston and myself with Prime Minister, Finance Minister and one or two advisers held on June 22 and 23. Johnston, Gardiner, Ludlow, and Jones departed this morning for Cairo. Barnes, Trozeg, and Colburn remaining here for couple of days for further discussions technical problems.

Israeli position appeared to move nearer to unified plan and early insistence on Litani inclusion was dropped in latter stages of discussion. Agreement failed primarily over Israeli refusal accept division of waters based on principle valley land use. Latter part of discussion centered mostly around US proposal of (a) acceptance of general principle of allocation based on valley land use with agreement that final specific allocation would be made by neutral expert or experts based on further studies, accompanied by (b) immediate temporary allocations to various countries in rough proportions of unified plan to permit progress on construction.

Israeli Government evidenced desire not to be in position of definite turn-down of Johnston proposals but unwillingness accept magnitude limitation by Israeli Government of Jordan waters implicit in (a) above. It was agreed proposals would continue to be given consideration with view to later resumption of conversations. Johnston making more complete report.

It called upon the United States as a signatory of the Tripartite Declaration to adopt "quick, firm, and effective measures" to compel Israeli respect for armistice agreements and the Tripartite Declaration. (684A.85/7–654)

1. Deep US concern over entire border situation shown by proposals advanced together with UK and France on May 22.

2. We particularly disturbed over firing in Jerusalem both because of exceptionally serious nature and possible damage Holy Places. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Egypt and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan Affairs (Burdett)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] July 16, 1954.

Subject: Israel

Participants: Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
General Moshe Dayan, Chief of Staff, Israel Defense Forces
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister of Israel
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Burdett

Mr. Byroade welcomed General Dayan to the United States and inquired whether he had any special points to raise. The General replied that he had come for a tour of military establishments and not to discuss political matters.

Mr. Byroade presented an outline of present United States thinking towards Middle Eastern problems, and expressed hope that Israel would feel able to cooperate with the United States in working towards long term solutions. He mentioned particularly: the increasing communist danger to the area, not through open attack, but through subversion, which almost succeeded in Iran; the concept of the "northern tier"; the growing reaction in Congress to what appeared to be Israel efforts to obstruct the creation of defensive strength in the area; the small quantity of arms going to Iraq, which, as the General knew, could not affect Iraq's military potential for a considerable period; the United States conviction that Iraq would not use the weapons for aggressive purposes; the necessity for the United States to increase its influence in the Arab states as a prerequisite to encouraging arrangements between them and Israel; the belief that Egypt afforded the best prospects of leading the way towards some sort of an arrangement with Israel; United States opposition to, and the harmful effects of, Israel's policy of force; the setbacks to prospects for area stability resulting from Qibya; the United States apprehension that Israel at any time might launch a major attack; the deplorable Israeli campaign against the UNTSO, stressing the unfavorable effect in the United States.

The principal points made by General Dayan were as follows:

1. The United States appeared to be seeking the goodwill of the Arabs at the expense of Israel. The Israel public was worried, not by the positive United States attitude towards the Arabs, but by the negative attitude towards Israel. The United States seemed intent on making Israel weak while making the Arabs strong. An example is United States support for a Jordan River Development Plan which would have the effect of depriving Israel of water which would not benefit the Arabs but merely go to waste in the Dead Sea.

2. Israel did not anticipate an armed attack by the Arab countries in the immediate future but was concerned over this possibility in five to ten years time. United States arms shipments to Iraq were bad principally because of their psychological effect in the absence of similar shipments to Israel.

3. The situation on the border has shown definite improvement since Qibya. Only after Qibya did the Jordanians take effective measures to curb infiltration. (The General inferred that the improvement is a result of the Israel policy of force.) The Egyptian border now gives greater concern than the Jordanian. The replacement of Egyptian troops by trained Palestinian refugees has contributed to insecurity.

4. The General inquired if Israel would be required to pay for the improvement of United States relations with Egypt by giving up a corridor through the Negev. (Mr. Byroade expressed astonishment at the suggestion.) General Dayan stated that he felt that Egypt should eventually relinquish the Gaza Strip and absorb the refugees since the Strip would always be a cause of friction.

Ambassador Eban mentioned the British statement warning Israel against an attack on Jordan, and stated that no similar firm guarantees which could command public confidence were available to Israel. The Ambassador indicated Israel would welcome a guarantee which could be relied upon. General Dayan expressed concurrence. Mr. Byroade stated that the United States is determined to prevent any Arab effort to eliminate Israel and that he was certain the United States would employ troops if necessary. He added that the question of a guarantee was still under study.

Ambassador Eban asserted that he felt Prime Minister Sharett agreed with the view that Egypt offered the best propsects for some arrangement with the Arab states. However, he thought that a Suez Base agreement, which did not take into account Israel's interests, would produce an even stronger reaction in Israel than the United States arms agreement with Iraq. The Ambassador said that Israel already had advanced suggestions to the United Kingdom regarding how the effect of the Suez Base agreement on Israel could be minimized. He expressed a desire to discuss this in the near future with the United States. Mr. Byroade voiced concern over a possible outcry in Israel and the hope that Israel would not react in a manner prejudicing the chances of doing business with Egypt. He stated that the United States would be glad to discuss the matter with Israel.

At the conclusion of the conversation, Mr. Byroade stated that he hoped to see General Dayan again after his tour.

[2] Telegram 62 from Tel Aviv, July 16, described a visit to Banat Yaacov by a U.S. Operations Mission water expert, and described factors which might motivate Israel to resume construction in the demilitarized zone. The last paragraph of telegram 61 stated that "on balance, Embassy believes possibility of IG moving to raise issue or ment project in demilitarized zone. We assume you will wish couch approach in terms of effect recommencement work in demilitarized zone on our hopes for success Johnston negotiations. For your guidance however and for use your discretion when and if necessary our views on resumption demilitarized zone work and steps we would have to take if work resumed are as follows:

1. While we feel it in Israel's and the area's best interest not have any work on project going on for time being our major concern is that Israel not attempt recommence any work in demilitarized zone. Israel's good faith in attempting cooperate with Johnston Mission reach Jordan Valley accord can be most clearly demonstrated by indication it does not propose attempt any work in demilitarized zone for some time.

2. Obviously work already done in demilitarized zone is designed for substantial Jordan diversion out of basin as well as for hydroelectric development. Israelis and Arabs both know we maintain country is entitled to divert its allotted waters out of basin if it so desires. We have reason hope Arabs will eventually agree this point but resumption now or in near future would impair or destroy this possibility.

3. Resumption work in demilitarized zone can only be undertaken with permission Chief of Staff of UNTSO or SC or through agreement between Syria and Israel. Recommencing work in absence such permission would be as Israelis know serious blow to Johnston Mission. Accordingly if it were undertaken US could legitimately assume recommencement done in full appreciation consequences. Implicit in such action would be decision by Israel to jeopardize deliberately chances Jordan Valley agreement.

4. While SC's examination Banat Yaacov case not now "urgent" it clear to us purpose October 27 resolution was work in demilitarized zone should be suspended pending SC debate. Since SC still seized with case we believe Israel must consider itself bound by resolution. However even were case no longer before SC work could proceed only with permission Chief of Staff UNTSO. October 27 resolution would require Chief of Staff report unauthorized work recommencement to SC, with certain result of renewed "urgent" examination of case.

5. If work is recommenced in the demilitarized zone without conditions in 3 above being met US will be left no alternative but view Israel as defying SC and Chief of Staff. Accordingly we would be forced take this position publicly in SC support any SC action which enforced its authority and give consideration to other measures.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, July 26, 1954—7 p. m.

91. Deptel 41.[1] Herzog, US Division Foreign Ministry, this morning informed me Prime Minister would like to have informal talk with me Tel Aviv Friday.[2] Assured me nothing would be done re recommencement Banat Yaacov DZ construction prior to then.

If Department approves, I would like to develop following line with Sharett:

As result prospective transfer Suez base to Egypt, US program of arms aid to Iraq, other measures required by security of free world, possibility must be contemplated that relative arms strength of countries in area may change within next decade. Decision of US to strengthen free world position in area is a firm one.

Up to present time, Israel has been able to base its security largely, if not entirely, upon its own Armed Forces. If during next decade it enters period when its security cannot be guaranteed exclusively by its own Armed Forces, it will be in no different situation in this respect than US and all other countries of free world. US security today dependent only in part upon its own military might. Latter has to be supplemented by our reliance upon UN, as in Korea, and upon regional arrangements such as NATO, OAS, San Francisco Treaties, etc.

It would appear that Israel at present time faced with choice of basing its foreign policy upon opposition to measures which must be pursued by free world to prevent Soviet aggression in this area; or upon policy similar to that of US in achieving its security. In pursuance of latter, Israel would base its security in part upon its Armed Forces; in part upon measures designed to strengthen role of UN in this area; in part upon possible new and stronger declaration by tripartite powers conceivably supplemented by Turkey; and in part upon an evolving V-shaped pattern of security for area in which US and other major powers would work on one hand with Arab countries and on the other, as developments made it possible, with Israel (present temper of Arab countries does not permit round-table approach at this time nor even arms programs undertaken simultaneously).

If Israel's policy is confined to one of obstruction, difficult to see how deterioration in US-Israel relations can be prevented. If our efforts mutually concentrated upon second course, no reason why they should not remain close and firm, though Israel would have to understand necessity of our working closely with Arabs and would have to have confidence in US intentions during period pattern was evolving. The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, July 30, 1954—1 p. m.

107. Deptel 862,[2] Jerusalem telegram 151.[3] Embassy has received following note from Foreign Ministry dated July 29, Jerusalem:

"Ministry Foreign Affairs transmits following comments of IG on proposals contained in Embassy's aide-mémoire 19 June:

2. Government of Israel appreciates concern of US Government at security situation in border zones between Israel and Arab States and its attempt, in concert with Governments United Kingdom and France, to devise proposals for reduction of tension.

3. Government of Israel desires to assure US Government that it is ready, as always, to lend most earnest consideration to any suggestion likely to advance cause of peace and reduce tension. From prolonged unhappy experience, it is convinced that root of difficulty—and source of permanent danger—are determination of Arab world to maintain a state of war, and its relentless campaign of economic warfare and hostile propaganda and incitement, breaking out in acts of violence. Under these circumstances, efforts should be directed at removing root of trouble. Parties to armistice agreements must desist from pursuance active hostility and belligerent practices, cooperate genuinely in implementing agreed measures for strengthening border security, and adopt policy of faithful and integral fulfillment all provisions agreements.

4. Government of Israel takes it for granted that US Government continues, as before, to regard scrupulous fulfillment of armistice agreements as indispensable basis, under present conditions, of peace and stability in area. If any new effort aimed at strengthening border security is to succeed, it must be preceded by reaffirmation, on part of states concerned, of their whole-hearted resolve to adhere in future to terms of agreements in their entirety. Israel, for its part, is ready to make such reaffirmation.

5. Any proposal for improvement of inter-state security, based as it must be on armistice system, should in first instance be examined in relation to theory and practice of armistice agreements, which were concluded by direct negotiation and provide for direct contact and consultation as only means ensuring their implementation and, if necessary, their own amendment. US Government is aware that Jordan has failed to honor Article VIII of General Armistice Agreement, that it has repudiated its obligation under Article XII, and that it has, more recently, refused pledge itself to settlement its disputes with Israel by peaceful means, as enjoined by Charter of UN and implicit in General Armistice Agreement. This practice of selective implementation, if acquiesced in internationally, is liable to lead to imitation and inevitably undermines structure and authority of armistice regime in whole area.

6. Since acceptance of some of proposals now put forward would entail amendment or modification of Israel–Jordan General Armistice Agreement, only way of investing them with binding character would be for parties to agree on them in conference. It was, indeed, precisely in order to review operation of agreement that Israel, under Article XII, asked Secretary-General of UN to invite Jordan to a conference—an initiative which failed owing to Jordan's refusal to attend. Israel is bound to ask itself whether it is at all worthwhile to seek new commitments from Jordan while its former pledges are repudiated.

7. Government of Israel, in examining proposals under reference, finds to its disappointment that not many of them are in fact preventive in character. It notes, moreover, that number of proposals imply radical change in status and function of UN machinery. While armistice agreements, and established practice of their implementation, assign to UN observer staff only such tasks as derive from their freely negotiated provisions, some of present proposals would invest this staff with independent authority. Government doubts whether such a reform extremely problematical in itself, can outweigh decisive drawback of introducing an organic change into legal structure of armistice agreements. Recent failures of UN staff to fix responsibility for violations of the peace do not justify assumption that their efficacy would be enhanced by an increase in their numbers or widening of their powers. In any case, detailed consideration of specific proposals could usefully be conducted only between parties directly concerned, who must see themselves jointly responsible for conclusions reached.

8. Government welcomes suggestion that all borders be clearly demarcated. It has itself long advocated this expedient. It assumes that operation will entail liquidation of pockets of no-man's-land which have given rise to so much confusion and avoidable conflict. Government takes it for granted that, helpful as UN observers can be in process, actual fixing of border lines, if it is to be lastingly valid and effective, must rest on agreement between parties.

9. Government likewise endorses suggestion that physical obstacles be erected at suitable points along frontiers to serve as an impediment to unlawful crossings and as points of vantage for their prevention. To enable these obstacles effectively to serve their purpose, parties would have to undertake their erection and the charge of preserving them intact.

10. As for suggestion to permit movement of Arabs from Gaza strip across Israel territory, government is ready to discuss an arrangement, to be put into effect for an experimental period of fixed duration, whereby it would allow groups of Arabs now in Gaza strip and wishing settle in Jordan to cross Israel territory on understanding they go to Jordan for good. Government could not agree to open its territory to free crossings by any number of people on basis permits issued by an outside authority.

11. Government is in no doubt that consultation and discussion between parties to armistice agreements would lead to agreement on additional preventive measures which could be carried into effect by cooperation between them.

12. In conclusion, Government of Israel would restate its conviction that remedy for present situation lies in total fulfillment of armistice agreements, in their letter and spirit. It would be most grateful if US Government could use its influence with Kingdom of Jordan to impress on it imperative necessity of restoring full effective validity of General Armistice Agreement to which it is signatory and of proceeding faithfully to discharge its obligations under it."

108. At meeting with Sharett this morning Hakirya, Tel Aviv, I made points contained Embtels 91 [1] and 95 [2] with qualifications of Deptel 46. [3]

Sharett said: Israel relies exclusively on its arms because it has to, because we are leaving Israel calculatedly in the lurch. US giving arms to Egypt and oral assurances to Israel. US talks about requirements of free world and deals with Arabs as members of it but it treats Israel as though not part of it. Even US requires alliances and pledges to supplement its armed forces—Israel has none. It is in gloomy and unrelieved isolation. Talk of aggression by Israel is insulting. Israel's lack of aggression is result of IG statesmanship; "talk of aggression" by Israel public is result of present US policies.

Sharett said he is making statement to Knesset next week on Suez development; felt our discussion of problem most useful; wishes continue it at early date. [4]

"Sharett said he felt tone of US request was threatening. Johnston, when here, had only asked that construction be deferred during period of his visit to area. Sharett said IG is entitled to resume construction and it must be left to its judgment as to whether and when.

"I told Sharett there was possibility Johnston would be returning on Jordan valley project within two or three months and considerations that made it undesirable resume construction when he was here equally applicable now." (Telegram 109 from Tel Aviv, July 30, 5 p. m.; 683.84A322/7–3054)

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, August 3, 1954—7 p. m.

125. Moshe Keren, former Counselor Israeli Embassy Washington, presently chief editorial writer Haaretz, yesterday in reply my question as to danger of Israel outbreak said he does not believe serious danger of deliberate aggression by Israel. Believes as result present policy impasse between Israeli Government and Western Powers, sense of insecurity, frustration, and ill-will toward major powers, and particularly US likely to increase and foresees continuation present uneasy border relations between Israel and neighbors but, in absence of "a Qibya in reverse", does not believe Israeli Government will resort to outburst".

Keren said Ben Gurion has stated, and Keren believes, he will not return as Prime Minster as long as present party system continues with its innumerable squabbles and ability minority parties to hold up government action, and Keren believes no likelihood of party system change in near future. While Keren bitterly disappointed at Sharett's unwillingness to change "present obstructive and sterile policy toward US" he believes Sharett has broad political support within government and is generally successful in resolving inter-party differences. Keren does not believe Lavon has sufficient backing to take over government.

Israel will undoubtedly continue its policy of reacting in strength to Arab border infringements. There is danger this may lead to Arab counter-reaction which would serve as excuse for Israel attack. IDF and supporting "activist" group have capability of promoting this kind of development and in this way could outmaneuver more moderate Sharett faction. Also, Francis Offner, Israeli Christian Science Monitor correspondent, believes there is element of danger in facet in Israeli character which may lead them, in face of a deteriorating international position, to gamble everything on a dramatic, desperate move to assert dominance even though it may be demonstrably against their best interest.

Embassy comment: Despite negative response to tripartite border proposals (Embtel 107)[1] and to Chargé's suggestions (Embtel 108),[2] Embassy will, if Department approves, emphasize in discussions with Israel Government officials and friends of Israel:

(a) That present Israel Government policy is contraproductive of Israel's avowed long-term objectives;

(b) That there is an alternative cooperative relationship which could assure Israel's security and strengthen its role in free world;

(c) That Israel Government has regularly in past year or two tripped up US in its efforts to deal with area problems and lessen area tensions, notably on Jerusalem problem (by sudden move of Foreign Ministry), obtaining Jordanian cooperation in dealing with border problem (by Qibya), strengthening UN (by withdrawing from Israel–Jordan MAC), developing Jordan Valley plan (by flouting UN on Banat Yaacov), and strengthening area security through obtaining Arab cooperation (by policy of converting isolated border firings into major engagements). During next few months, following Suez agreement and as US program of aid to Egypt is getting underway, also following assumption of responsibilities by new Chief of Staff of UNTSO, we will have best opportunity of obtaining Egypt's cooperation in giving leadership to improvement of relations with Israel. We hope that Israel will consider most carefully whether its response to tripartite proposals, attitude re Banat Yaacov, position re area security, absence from Israel-Jordan MAC, statements of its leaders, its border policies, and other actions are most conducive to the success of our effort, and what courses of action will remain available if this effort fails.[3]

[1] Repeated to London.

(1) Egypt very definitely wants to get along with Israel and knows that one day she will have to face up to peace treaty but time is not ripe yet.

(2) Egyptian authorities will make no declarations attacking Israel. He spoke of recent declarations of himself and Prime Minister making clear that Egypt has no intention of attack Israel (Embassy telegrams 154 and 158).[2]

(3) Egyptians are urging British to go ahead fast as possible with negotiations for final agreement. They suggested that committees report on August 24 and agreement be signed September 1. British agree in principle on moving fast but do not believe final agreement can be reached by September 1.

(4) Egyptian Intelligence Service reports evidence that Israelis preparing incidents designed to upset agreement with British. I asked what evidence and he gave me nothing specific.

(5) He remarked that Egypt has respect for tripartite declaration but would not like to see Turkey in a reaffirmation of it.

(6) The interested Egyptian authorities are now studying the draft cover agreements for economic and military aid. He said he prefers to go very carefully over them with his colleagues in order to make them understand thoroughly all the implications thereof.

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 4, 1954—7:20 p. m.

60. As introduction his remarks to Secretary today reported by separate telegram[2] Eban said Israeli mood of concern and apprehension had been increased by recent conversation Russell with Sharett in which Russell had unexpectedly raised Banat Yaqub question in negative fashion. IG stunned by this unprovoked démarche which seemed indicate US opposed to project itself. Ambassador contrasted this with previous constructive attitude Department and assurances we did not wish to see dead hand laid on utilization Jordan waters. Asserted report by international experts sent out by UN Secretary General had endorsed project with certain safeguards which Israel would be prepared accept. Pointed out Israel had agreed to "temporary stoppage" of work on project at Security Council request but this "temporary stoppage" had now lasted eleven months.

Jernegan who was present said there must have been misunderstanding. Démarche re Banat Yaqub had been made because of report circulated at UN Israel contemplated early resumption work in demilitarized zone and because inquiries made at working level in IG had resulted in non-committal replies. We did not intend oppose project as such but were concerned at political repercussions if work unilaterally resumed without approval UN authorities and in absence overall agreement on Jordan development.

Eban expressed appreciation for clarification but insisted Sharett had obtained different and completely negative impression.

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 4, 1954—7:20 p. m.

61. During call on Secretary August 4 Israeli Ambassador made following points:

1. Suez Base Agreement was of revolutionary importance for Israel as well as Near East as whole and IG felt obliged discuss repercussions with US and UK. Circumstances settlement along with other recent developments had produced mood deep concern and apprehension in Israel.

2. Israel however did not oppose Suez Agreement in principle. Considered it triumph of negotiation and could understand its welcome in Egypt, US and UK. Nevertheless it could have by-products damaging to Israel:

a. On military side fact evacuation of Canal Zone by British removed existing restraint on Egyptian forces and destroyed utility Sinai area as buffer zone between Egypt and Israel. Furthermore inheritance by Egypt of base facilities would increase her military power. This would be accentuated if Egypt received military aid from US. Such aid would be especially disturbing following on heels military aid agreement with Iraq.

b. On political side settlement occurs at time when Egyptians have become more threatening toward Israel and high officials have made statements that settlement freed their hands regarding Israel.

3. Settlement being made without obtaining any assurance Egypt would desist from illegal Suez blockade of Israeli trade.

Most troublesome element is that proposed military aid to Egypt and other US actions favoring Arabs being taken without any compensating move favoring Israel. When US promised arms to Pakistan we offered discuss similar arrangement with India. No such offer being made in present case. Furthermore Israel was totally lacking in any sort of reliable guarantee. Could not take tripartite declaration as adequate because it lacks any specific obligation on parties. Is not binding and is already undermined by change in balance being brought about through military assistance to Iraq and Egypt.

5. If Israel left facing hostile neighbors and US continues present negative attitude Israel likely become nervous embattled armed camp obsessed with military preparedness at expense economic and social progress.

6. Israel thinks it reasonable ask for at least three things:

a) Grant military aid to balance that given Arabs; b) firmer guarantees against aggression; and c) lifting of Suez blockade.

Secretary replied as follows to Eban's remarks:

1. Could understand why Israel might feel disturbed over developments but she should realize that while we trying to help achieve Suez settlement we never intended it to prejudice position of Israel. Situation in Egypt had been alarming, close to war. Its perpetuation would have produced evils in much of world.

2. At first sight certain by-products of settlement might not seem favorable to Israel but anticipated dangers not immediate. British evacuation would take about two years.

3. Israel should be aware of US concern for her future which was such we would not for one moment tolerate action by her neighbors to injure her. According our information Israel today is much stronger than her combined neighbors. We do not intend alter ratio to make them stronger than Israel.

4. US intends stand back of tripartite declaration. We prepared honor it and react under it against aggression. Even though it is not possible commit ourselves in advance to military action without consent of Congress financial and economic measures are within power of Executive. Israel can be confident we would take such measures if necessary and would consider further action. We probably could do no more even if we had treaty with Israel.

5. Basic friendship American people for Israel is well known and unique so far as Near East concerned. Nothing has happened to change that friendship. Israel need not feel alone or abandoned.

6. It is true removal of strains on Arab states may strengthen them but Israel cannot expect us perpetuate those strains just to keep Arabs weak vis-à-vis Israel. Our program of arms for Iraq designed promote situation in area basically favorable to Israel. Secretary emphasized this to Jamali recently. We will carefully examine proposed arms program for Egypt, which is likely to be minor in character and will not shift power balance.

Secretary promised give further study points made by Ambassador and suggested they have another meeting before Eban's departure. (This meeting scheduled August 7.)

In addition to discussion reported Embtel 109, [4] Sharett said he felt US could have made simple request without detailing measures we would take in event of non-compliance. I replied we attached great importance to efforts being made at this time to make progress on some of Israel-Arab problems and felt it most important there be no actions on either side which would have effect of stunning them. I conjectured our disappointment at our lack of success when we made simple request IG not move Foreign Ministry to Jerusalem (Embtel 1399, March 4, 1953) and again, when few weeks before Kibya, we expressed our deep concern at Israel's resumption of reprisal methods (Deptel 154, August 22, 1953) may have led Department to think IG would wish to understand full extent of our hopes for greater success in capitalizing on present opportunity for improving situation.

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Israel [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, August 7, 1954—3:45 p. m.

72. Resumed conversation between Secretary and Israeli Ambassador today (re Deptel 61) [2] covered following ground:

1. Secretary said he had been impressed by Ambassador's statements regarding Israel's isolation. He wondered if it would be any advantage to Israel to have an exchange of notes with US in which we would reiterate our policy, which had been approved by NSC, of being prepared cut off all military or economic assistance to any country in Near East area undertaking aggression and would say that if any military imbalance should develop endangering Israel we would be prepared at least to consider military aid program for her and to seek funds from Congress for that purpose. Eban said he would have to think about this and would wish consult his Government during his forthcoming consultations in Israel. Offhand, he thought such exchange would be helpful provided it contained some concrete assurance that military aid to Arabs would be balanced by military aid to Israel. Ideally, Israel would like have promise aid negotiations would begin simultaneously or nearly so with Egyptian negotiations. Such promise need not be made publicly.

Secretary said he did not exclude possibility asking next Congress for military aid funds for Israel provided by that time we convinced military imbalance was developing. Emphasized he had not had time discuss suggested exchange of notes with President, or military or Congressional leaders. Thought it might be possible include something more than mere restatement generalities regarding our policy.

2. Eban said he had communicated with Sharett and was authorized say it incorrect assume Israel presently equal to Arabs in military equipment. Israel had been very careful avoid letting this be known since it was obviously to its advantage have Arabs believe in Israeli military superiority, and he asked that we keep this information very confidential. Asserted that in aircraft, artillery and tanks, Israel was inferior to Egypt alone. If all Arab States taken together, disparity much greater. For example, Arabs had three times as much artillery. Anything at all given to Egypt would add to already existing imbalance. Ambassador admitted Israel had some advantage in greater efficiency her forces and some psychological advantage in Arab fear of her strength but said this not sufficient protection.

3. Secretary emphasized his personal conviction that policy US following in Near East is to benefit of Israel. He believed policy is being successful in softening Arab attitudes towards Israel. Contrary to Ambassador's statements, he found no evidence of increasing hostility in Egypt. Latest statements by Naser disclaimed hostile intentions. Secretary wanted Israel Government to know US Administration will not consider its Near East policies successful unless they result in Arab–Israel peace. Israelis may disagree with our methods and might prefer that we adopt more direct approach. This would be honest difference of opinion. He hoped, however, Israeli's would accept his statement of our motives and objectives. Eban replied he did not question aim of our policy but only wisdom of certain actions. Did not ask that we change policy but only that we preserve Israel's faith in West by balancing favors to Arabs with acts favorable to Israel.

4. Ambassador raised question of Suez blockade with specific reference to harm done Israel by cutting-off of oil supplies to Haifa refinery. Recalled past arguments that this was academic because Arab producing states would not permit oil to flow to Haifa even if Canal blockade raised. Said this situation altered by signing of Iranian oil agreement. Israel believed Iran would sell oil to her. In this light could not US take this up with Egypt? Need not be connected with Suez Base Agreement and Egyptian action to relax restrictions need not be publicly announced. US should insist on this as condition to starting proposed new economic aid program to Egypt. Would be illogical to launch program to strengthen economy of area while at same time permitting Egypt continue practice which weakened area economy.

Secretary said we might be able do something on this score but could not make it condition to extending economic aid to Egypt. We had promised such aid more than year ago if Suez settlement reached. Could not now go back on that promise.

5. Jernegan observed US Government could find no evidence whatsoever of any intent on part of any Arab State to reopen hostilities with Israel in near future. Said this diminished urgency of any action re military imbalance which Israelis feared. Eban agreed Israelis own estimates showed no early danger of military attack but argued that announcements of military aid to Arabs justified fears for future and created immediate politico-psychological crisis and need for re-assurance.

After leaving Secretary's office, Eban remarked he was encouraged by this conversation.

whereby local authorities on both sides can cooperate to deal informally with problems on the spot and as they arise. Believe following points would help to make such arrangements more effective:

(1) Cooperating authorities should be civilian police rather than military. IG police likely to be less reprisal-minded than IDF and less overbearing in meetings.

(2) On Arab side, local authorities should be given greater authority to deal with specific situations without necessity of referring to higher authority which either results in no action or in delays reducing effectiveness of action.

(3) If inauguration of local arrangements could be tied in with action on tripartite proposals it would give them a context more likely to result in success though they should not be unduly delayed on that account.

(4) Right of either side to ask UNTSO use its influence with other to stop foot-dragging.

And in any event no significant power changes would have taken place during period in which effort being made. On other hand, if this unique opportunity failed due to Israel's obstruction on any one of numerous possible fronts, US public would attribute large share of blame for free world's difficulties in area to her. (My remarks accorded with caution contained in Deptel 77.)

Sharett said line of thought was of greatest interest, expressed appreciation and said he would report conversation to next meeting of Cabinet. He expressed fear, however, that US would become so involved with Egypt that it would after a while be impossible for us to exert any pressure upon Egypt to change its attitudes and policies towards Israel, citing Britain's relationship with Jordan as example; said he felt, therefore, US should announce immediately no US aid of any kind would be forthcoming until Egypt had fully complied with certain specified demands, such as Suez passage. I pointed out that this constituted difference of view only with respect to tactics and manner of approach, that we felt GOE entitled

IG cannot lose if it should cooperate fully by word and deed during next six months (during which, in any event, no significant power changes would be completed) to capitalize on latter. If we succeed, we shall have secured cooperation of leading Arab nation in steps toward peace Israel wants. If Egyptian cooperation not forthcoming it will have been demonstrated that Israel was right that Arabs are unreliable and review of US position will presumably be necessary. If, however, during this critical period Israel continues its policy of obstruction, hinders implementation tripartite proposals, pursues policy of reprisals, recommences construction in Banat Yaacov demilitarized zone, issues statements attacking US and Egypt or attempts unrealistically to insert itself into negotiations, then onus for failure of what may be best opportunity to move toward peace in the area will rest with Israel." (741.5637/8–554) to time in which to take steps to work out a constructive approach and prepare Egyptian public opinion.

Meeting lasted more than an hour and ended with Sharett's expression of greatest appreciation of Secretary's and Chargé's awareness of Israel's situation and sincere desire to help her deal with it, though he feels US overestimates possibility of obtaining Arab cooperation.

203. When approached re substance Department's 240 August 12 Gohar reiterated Egyptian willingness to meet informally with Israelis in order to agree on ways and means to mitigate border tensions and prevent incidents. However, he asserts only way that this can be done with any hope of success is by having meeting between "the men who know" i.e., the senior delegates of each side in the EIMAC. Egyptian-Israeli frontier only fifty kilometers long (Embtel 179, August 7). Egypt would be prepared implement faithfully any understandings reached at such a meeting and he did not preclude possibility of contacts between commanders being agreed upon although on the Egyptian side he did not see how this would be of much use. "Our commanders will do what I say". Gohar reiterated idea that an Egyptian-Israeli police subcommittee of the MAC could achieve more than anything else. He reminded Embassy officer that on May 4, 1952, he had suggested to Israelis at MAC meeting that there should be mixed Egyptian-Israeli border patrols to arrest infiltrators. After first agreeing in principle, Israelis reversed themselves and said their policy was to kill, not arrest, infiltrators.

Gohar said he knew nothing about incident paragraph 1 Tel Aviv's 159, August 13 to Department. [2] Re paragraph 2, he said Israeli patrol crossed line; was warned by machinegun bursts turn back and after doing so mortared Egyptian outpost. No casualties.

Memorandum of Conversation, by Robert L. Burns of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] August 16, 1954.

Subject: Suggested United States Initiative Regarding Suez Blockade and Status of United States–Israel Relations.

Participants: General Smith
Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver
NE—Mr. Burns

Rabbi Silver referred to a previous conversation he had had with Mr. Sherman Adams of the White House wherein he said it was agreed there has been no change in the unsatisfactory state of affairs between Israel and the Arab states and some means should be found to break the log jam presently blocking progress toward a settlement of the problem. There recently have been significant developments in the Near East area, but none of them has altered the Israel-Arab situation. However, it appears that United States-Egyptian military aid negotiations provide an opportunity for the United States to contribute toward a solution of the Israel-Arab problem. The United States should call upon Egypt to lift the Suez blockade of Israel shipping. A break in the Arab economic warfare front against Israel could be the first step in the slow and tedious process of settling Israel-Arab issues.

The Under Secretary said peace in the Near East is a fundamental objective of United States policy. Egypt is believed to afford the best prospects of moving toward a settlement with Israel and Premier Nassir recently has made encouraging statements in this regard. Several Arab states would be quick to follow Egypt's lead. The United States has increasingly made known to Egypt its opposition to the Suez blockade. The United States considers a lifting of the blockade a primary objective in its dealings with Egypt.

Rabbi Silver said United States' agreement to furnish arms to Iraq and the prospect of a similar agreement with Egypt have caused the deepest concern in Israel. He knew these were matters which Ambassador Eban had discussed with the Secretary and the Under Secretary. He said he does not agree with those who claim the present Administration has turned its back on Israel, but there has been a conspicuous lack of friendly statements toward Israel by Department officials coupled with unfortunate speeches which served no constructive purpose either in the United States or in Israel. The present feeling of isolation and fear in Israel, if unrelieved, might make Israel into a military state. If the Department could make some sort of public gesture to encourage the Israelis to feel they can still look upon the United States as a big brother, the present trend in Israel opinion could be checked.

The Under Secretary said the Secretary had been impressed with the concern felt in Israel and was considering possible means whereby that concern might be allayed. The Under Secretary did not feel Israel's fears concerning a military imbalance in the area were warranted, even though collectively the Arabs might have more pieces of military equipment than Israel. Moreover, the stabilizing influence of British troops at Suez will remain for some 20 months. There is no reason why Israel cannot receive the same treatment as regards military aid as other states in the Near East and this is, in fact, under active consideration. *

The Under Secretary concluded that the history and nature of the relationship between the United States and Israel, including the United States' role in the creation of the state, is not one which indicates the United States would sit back and permit Israel to be destroyed; the United States had made this clear many times in many ways.

On leaving, Rabbi Silver said he was very much encouraged as a result of his discussion with the Under Secretary.

* The Under Secretary here was referring to recent statements made to Ambassador Eban by the Secretary that, under certain conditions, the United States would be willing to consider military aid for Israel. [Footnote in the source text.]

cism, however, expressed over prospects of success. In addition to Prime Minister's statement (Embtel 150), Eytan, Rafael, and Herzog last evening all expressed interest.

(2) Eban last evening commented US may have acquired position enabling it exert some influence on Egypt to move toward peace but in the process had lost its ability to influence Israel to cooperate and could only re-acquire it by substantial proof friendship, such as immediate grant of arms aid.

(3) Minister of Defense Lavon at dinner night before last took position US definitely and hopelessly pro-Arab and my suggestion merely effort to give favorable interpretation to anti-Israel policy.

In my discussion with Eytan and Eban I expressed hope Israel would not make any statements which would put Egypt in position, with Egyptian public and Arab world generally, of appearing to submit to Israel "demands" if it should move toward peace. What Egypt might be willing to do on its own, or as result of UN, US, or tripartite suggestions, it might be unable to do under Israel pressure. I said I thought some of Israel's public demands upon Jordan had resulted not only in increased Jordan intransigeance but in inability of Britain, ourselves or even UN to exert helpful and friendly influence upon Jordan. Also said I thought situation was not one that lent itself to formalizing of US position; but was rather one of Israel basing its actions and statements upon criterion of whether it would produce atmosphere most conducive to our efforts to induce Egypt to take gradual steps toward peace. While peace could not be achieved in next six months, it would be shown during that time, by tenor of GOE's public statements and trend of its canal policy, whether it was moving in right direction or not.

I told Eytan and Eban, in reply their question, I was not in position discuss possible reaffirmation and strengthening of tripartite declaration (Deptel 89). [2] I gathered, however, from Eytan that his present position on desirability of such a step is more positive than indicated in his radio talk of July 25 (Embtel 88).[2] He said that Cabinet at its meeting on August 22 would discuss Eban's report of his discussions with Secretary and any further light I might shed on question prior to that meeting would be most useful. (British Ambassador this noon informed me he was thinking seriously of recommending to Foreign Office that Britain enter into "treaty of guarantee" with Israel similar to that which it has with Jordan as means of allaying Israel insecurity.)

Recent discussions Washington and here have had effect, temporarily at least, of creating divided counsels in IG re policy toward

US, in light of previous exclusive concentration on denouncing US policies.

Eytan said he had met with Bennike and Vigier yesterday morning to discuss possible agreement on series of border proposals UNTSO had put forward recently (paragraph 1 Embtel 157)[3] but that meeting came to nothing.

Eban said Dayan was given most courteous reception wherever he went in US; that his trip was from IG point of view most useful and successful. I urged that Dayan upon return make statement to that effect, correcting opposite impression created by local press.[4]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 19, 1954.

Subject: American Jewish concern over recent developments in relation to Israel

Participants: Mr. Phillip Klutznick, President, B'nai B'rith
The Secretary
Mr. Jernegan, NEA

Mr. Klutznick said he sensed a deep concern among American Jews at what seemed to be the unfavorable trend of events with relation to Israel. He felt it his duty to register this concern with the Secretary personally. He did not criticize the Anglo-Egyptian Suez Agreement. In fact he regarded it as one of the outstanding achievements of the Secretary's term in office but he was concerned at its possible repercussions.

The Secretary outlined our policy with regard to the Arab-Israel question, emphasizing our determination not to let Israel be crushed and our belief that the possibilities for an improvement in relations were greater now than they have been in the past. He recalled his recent lengthy conversations with Ambassador Eban as evidence of the attention which he personally was giving to this question. Mr. Jernegan mentioned that both Ambassador Eban and Prime Minister Sharett have expressed themselves as encouraged by those conversations.

Mr. Klutznick said that many people would be greatly reassured to know that the Secretary was in fact giving personal attention to the problem. He asked whether he could let this be publicly known. The Secretary said there would be no objection whatever.

The Ambassador in Lebanon (Hare) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL BEIRUT, August 21, 1954—1 p. m.

171. At risk of seeming to underline the obvious, might I suggest that we are now at a critical point in the development of a policy designed to relieve tension between Israel and the Arab states and to re-establish a relationship with the states of the Near East which will contribute to our mutual security.

For reasons which need not be re-debated, the pendulum of American policy was originally drawn toward Israel, with a resultant deterioration of our relations with the Arab states. Now for a period of a year and a half we have been trying to get the pendulum back to center by an announced policy of impartiality. Step by step and by painstaking efforts this policy has been producing results. Final success is still in the future but we have been on the good road.

Now, just when this policy is beginning to show the desired results, vigorous protest is heard from Israel, whose officials do not hesitate to assert that our policy of impartiality is not that at all, but rather a policy of prejudice against Israel. We know that this is not true; quite to the contrary, we realize that any policy which would swing the pendulum too far the other way and give the Arabs the idea that they had the upper hand would be disastrous for all concerned.

The actual situation in which we find ourselves therefore is that we are being attacked because an honest and fair policy, which is actually in Israel's ultimate interest as well as that of the Arab states, is showing some signs of succeeding.

On the basis of reports from Embassy Tel Aviv and discussions at the Istanbul conference, it is clear that, aside from political maneuvering, there is a certain element of sensitivity and "aloneness" in Israel of which account should be taken. The hope which I would venture to express, however, and which is the basis for this gratuitous message, is that, in endeavoring to meet this situation, we should take care to act within the scope of our established and hitherto successful policy of impartiality and in so doing avoid any acts or statements which would seem to indicate that the motion of the pendulum was again being reversed. The problem is one of confidence as regards both Arabs and Israelis. It would be a tragedy if, in order to meet a transitory manifestation of Israeli emotionalism, we should be placed in the position of losing ground which we have so laboriously won in respect of the Arabs: Particularly since it would appear that we are not, in fact, faced by an immediate crisis requiring hasty action.[2]

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic Missions[1]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, August 21, 1954—4:33 p. m.

108. General developments in Middle East, including Egyptian and Iranian agreements, lead us to hope we may have opportunity establish far better working understanding with area in general, and Arab states in particular. Unfortunately, as other long-standing problems reduced, Arab-Israel dispute looms larger as impediment to constructive efforts in Middle East. We currently searching for ways, in absence of peace which will not be readily forthcoming, to move forward with general strengthening of area and at same time assure that our actions will not precipitate hostilities within area.

If basis for cooperation with Arab states in area defense arrangements can be established as now seems probable, point would be reached eventually where imbalance both in military strength and confidence would exist between Arab states and Israel adverse to latter. This is inevitable if we are to succeed over period of years creating real strength. Limiting our objective to simply balancing Arab strength with Israel strength would mean defeat of overall objective.

Anticipated ultimate results of Suez settlement have intensified apprehensions of Israel as to her own future. We believe some assurance desirable to Israel at this time to (1) deter Israel from rash action on theory that growing Arab strength calls for "preventive" war; (2) relieve Israel feeling isolation; (3) encourage her acquiescence in our policies or at least mitigate extent her opposition. We believe as practical matter such assurances are also necessary to facilitate our ability to continue assist the Arab states. We would also like if possible to embody within assurances to Israel assurances to Arabs against possible Israel aggression.

Subject exhaustively discussed at Istanbul Conference. Answer of conference was public declaration that US would use force if necessary to prevent aggression by either side. You already informed reluctance and constitutional difficulty USG make advance decision re use force.

Request each Ambassador at Istanbul Conference give new thought to accomplishment desired ends. Methods we have thought of here are:

1. Exchange of notes with Israel. Our note would reaffirm friendship for Israel and Arab states and would assert our intention take measures to thwart aggression by either Arab States or Israel and would specify certain of economic sanctions approved by NSC.[2] Recent NSC decision precluding advance promise to use force if necessary may detract considerably from effectiveness of note in providing real reassurance to Israel. Statement would be included, however, that if military build up jeopardized Israel's security US would consider arms aid to Israel.
2. Treaty between Israel and US guaranteeing Israel's security. In addition to US guarantee of Israel's security treaty could contain specific assurance from Israel against any aggression on her part and recognition of US right to act against such aggression. This course would remove dilemma posed by constitutional limitations on President's power by putting issue to Congress. Theoretically, possible negotiate similar treaties with Arab states but aside from Congressional problem might be difficult for Arabs accept. Request your judgment on effect US-Israel treaty on Arab states and on willingness Arabs conclude such treaty with US.

This message designed elicit any general thoughts you may have on subject to assist us in further review here.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, August 22, 1954—2 p. m.

190. Jerusalem Post this morning reports Prime Minister at press meeting yesterday said:

(1) Secretary had shown in talks with Eban he was clearly disposed to reassure Israel but Prime Minister did not consider these assurances met the issue. "With all appreciation of good will in statements we hear from time to time, we shall not regard mere verbal assurances as capable of compensating for fundamental facts likely to affect adversely our position in balance of forces in Middle East."

(2) Asked if British had ever hinted at possibility of bases on Israel territory, Sharett said emphatically, "never".

Embassy comment: Yesterday at lunch, Eban told me he was urging IG adopt a four-point policy toward US:

(1) Continue all-out opposition to US program of arms aid to Arab countries. He said if US proceeded with present plans, he did not see how we could expect other than that Israel would become increasingly uneasy and active and eventually strike out against its enemy-neighbors.

(2) Insist on arms aid for Israel.

(3) Demand US hold up economic aid to Egypt until latter takes concrete steps to carry out its international obligations to Israel.

(4) Endeavor obtain formal agreement between Israel and US whereby US would give guaranteed use military forces if necessary to maintain Israel's border. In reply my query as to what present IG position was on this in view Eytan's statement July 25 (Embtel 88),[1] Eban said he did not believe Eytan had authority to state IG would be uninterested in new border guarantee.

I reiterated my belief US decision to make effort to build up area security was firm, US [garble] for making most of present opportunities for steps toward area peace were particularly keen, and that Israel action designed to thwart either would result in deterioration of Israel's position with US public which, it seemed to me, could only be to Israel's disadvantage.

182. For my general views on Department circular 108, August 21, please see Embtel 171 same date, which sent prior receipt Department's message. Following are supplemental observations of specific points raised:

(1) Agree would be futile to base policy on balancing Israeli and Arab strength. It is inevitable that in due course total military strength of Arab States will, and should, exceed that of Israel if area as whole is going to have degree of strength required for even minimum reinforcement against Soviet penetration. Balancing factor should not be material strength but adoption of policies of restraint by both Arabs and Israelis; gradual development of mutual confidence; and clear indication that US or US in concert with tripartite powers would not permit situation getting out of hand.

---

[1] Transmitted in two sections; repeated to Tel Aviv, Amman, Baghdad, Cairo, Damascus, and Jidda.

(2) Regarding reasons for assurances to Israel cited in third paragraph of Deptel 108, suggest:

(a) It would be illogical to seem to adopt a policy of appeasement of Israel in order to prevent its launching a preventive war. We have steadfastly refused to follow such a policy elsewhere; i.e., the Far East, and no reason seen why we should act otherwise in this case. If we are really convinced that Israelis considering a preventive war, our action should take the form of a warning—not placation. If we are not so convinced, then reason for action removed.

(b) As indicated in Embtel 171, I believe we should sympathetically consider any feeling of isolation in Israel but that, in so doing, we should take care to distinguish between real sentiment and political maneuvering. Moreover, irrational Israeli fears should not impel us to take irrational remedial action.

(c) Re encouraging acquiescence in our policies, this point is hardly appropriate for field comment other than to express hope that we shall not have to jettison good policies in order to gain such acquiescence.

(3) Re two approaches suggested:

(a) Idea of exchange of notes with Israel would bear consideration but discussion in circular 108 itself constitutes illustration of difficulty of determining form such communication might take. If we should desire to talk in terms of sanctions, question of timing is important. As matters stand, only immediate threat would seem to be from Israel side in form possible "preventive war" and, if we regard this situation as sufficiently serious, a warning to Israel in terms of economic sanctions would be justified, accompanied presumably by statement that same would apply to Arabs if they became menacing. However, to announce such policy apropos of nothing in particular could have effect of shooting off blank cartridge and scaring no one. In circumstances it is difficult to see how note to Israel could be framed at this time which would achieve desired result of reassuring Israel and still be in the context of actual events.

(b) As regards possible Israeli-United States treaty I can envisage such a step in existing circumstances only with extreme apprehension. It is obvious that ground has not been prepared for such a move and that it would inevitably be interpreted merely as a device to get us by a moment of temporary embarrassment. Repeatedly we have taken the position that we could not undertake formal security commitments in this area (personally I believe the wisdom of that policy to have been questionable in view of the practical commitments which we have actually assumed; e.g. Greece, Turkey, and Iran). The question, however, is too big and the implications too great to permit of piecemeal and hastily improvised action. If we intend making a policy change, we should restudy our whole relationship with the Near East, not only with the Arabs and Israel, but others as well. Then we must prepare the ground with all concerned. By so doing the conclusion of security treaties with both Israel and the Arab States might work out satisfactorily, but the job should be approached as a whole and adequate time and preparation allowed. A quick decision involving Israel only would certainly present a relations problem with the Arab States of the most difficult and ominous sort. Not infrequently we undertake, and with good reason, to chide the Arabs for being obsessed by the secondary problem of Israel and forgetting the major Soviet threat. Similarly, it is suggested that we should eschew making a policy decision on one aspect of the Near East which could prejudice larger considerations in the area as a whole.

In conclusion, I would venture reiterate recommendation in Embassy telegram 171 that, having adopted the policy of impartiality and having seen it produce results, we should do our best to remain on that good road. In so recommending I realize full well the difficulties currently confronting the Department. On the other hand I also foresee that deviation from that policy for short term reasons would do grievous injury to the prestige and confidence which has been painstakingly built up during the past year and a half.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

SECRET TEL AVIV, August 24, 1954—7 p. m.

196. At luncheon, at his invitation, this noon Jerusalem with Gideon Rafael, adviser to Foreign Ministry on Middle East affairs, he said:

(1) While division of counsel within IG, he feels there is chance of convincing Foreign Policy Committee of Knesset, which is meeting tomorrow to hear him and Eban, that present moment offers opportunity for moving in direction of area peace.

(2) Three times in past year representative of responsible Egyptian official had contacted him and asked that IG use its influence in US to obtain our help in getting Suez base settlement and promise of economic aid to Egypt (6); IG attempted utilize this bargaining position to obtain promise of Egyptian move toward peace; last such meeting took place in Europe in June, but came to nought when base agreement announced.

(3) Program Rafael was urging upon Egyptian representative included: free passage through Suez Canal, cessation official belligerent statements toward Israel, quiet along border, recognition sovereignty and territorial integrity of each country, refraining from instigation of subversive activities within territory of other, periodic secret meetings of representatives both governments to continue discussions of steps leading toward peace.

(4) Feels present moment can only be successfully exploited if US insists upon immediate specific undertaking by Egypt to take such steps; vague conversations, strung out over period of time, will result in US becoming committed to economic aid without any quid pro quo.

(5) IG would place great importance upon any action US could take that would serve to allay feeling of insecurity which is increasingly gripping country and playing into hands of extremists. He stressed "actions not words"; when I queried him on "actions" he said border guarantee would be "action".

(6) There is feeling in some quarters in Israel that US does not really desire peace in area and is content to have present situation continue.

I said only a person of malice could assert US did not put peace at top of its area agenda; only difference between his suggestions and our current thinking is with respect to approach most likely to be effective with Arabs—we do not believe bludgeon approach would be effective but that with emerging good will which has been developed with Arabs during past year, coupled with lively hope on part of some of them of aid to come, we have bargaining position for first time, recent indications of interest of Arabs in aligning themselves with West could mean that period we would have to wait before pressing for peace and broadening area defense plans would be shorter than we had previously thought; most important that Israel allow US, and if possible Egypt, to take initiative and that Egypt not have to be in position of complying with IG demands (most desirable situation of all in fact would be for Fawzi to emerge as candidate for Nobel peace prize—Rafael agreed). I emphasized nothing likely to eventuate unless IG helped in creating most favorable possible circumstances in which effort to be made. Even if effort failed for time being, it would be gainer in its position with US public.[1]

The Ambassador in Jordan (Mallory) to the Department of State [1]

TOP SECRET AMMAN, August 25, 1954—2 p. m.

70. Department circular telegram 108.[2] The possibility of creating strength for area security is still a tender shoot and cannot withstand the chill of what might be interpreted as switchback to pro-Israel policy. We adhere in this connection to the lines of Ambassador Hare's excellent telegram Beirut 171.[3]

As with so many problems here this generally returns to the tensions of the Arab-Israeli borders. If Israel will adopt a policy permitting conditions of peace on the border and come forth with even a minor portion of her obligation to the refugees this would be more effective than a note or even a treaty by US. It is not in US interest to insulate Israel from the necessity of working positively for peaceful border.

In considering assurances to Israel to deter her from rash action it is relevant that Israel uses the big stick method with Arabs. In quieting fears stated by Israeli Government and spokesmen we are not necessarily limited to the carrot approach. It is to be noted that while Israel appeals for assurances she is producing considerable fears among Jordans at present time (Embtel 67).[4]

A basic consideration in the present is not who receives what amounts of arms but whether in reality the existence of Israel is threatened. As the Department points out, it is Israel which now talks of preventive war. Militarily, it appears that the Arabs are not in a position to attack Israel successfully nor foreseeably would they be for years.

With respect to imbalance, arms aid to Israel need not balance aid to Arab states. US needs to preserve its freedom of action in regard to future arms aid to Arab states or Israel. To give a pledge that we will consider arms aid to Israel if military build up by Arabs jeopardizes Israel's security raises the question of who is to judge the jeopardy. The Israelis claim they are jeopardized before we start. US has held that impartiality does not require equality of economic aid and the same is true now of arms aid.

Numbered parts one and two reference telegram. There is real danger in US taking action alone as we could quickly find ourselves being played off against UK which has mutual defense treaty with Jordan. It is very doubtful if US treaties could be arranged with Jordan and Syria and having one with Israel would put the US–UK against one another more surely than the fathers of two belligerent brats. I would suggest that assurances to Israel could best come from UK or at most US–UK jointly.

Re point 1 believe an exchange of notes with Israel and each and all Arab states simultaneously would be least damaging.

On point 2 do not believe a treaty with Arabs possible without wide preparation and one with Israelis alone could prove disastrous.

From this admittedly somewhat isolated part of the world it looks as though we were being pressured by a sales campaign of those who may be captured by their own propaganda.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

TOP SECRET Tel Aviv, August 25, 1954—5 p. m.

201. Department circular telegram 108. [2] Embassy believes achievement of US goals of security and relaxation of tension in area requires some form of assurance to Israel. This need results from:

(1) Fact that plans for defense of free world in area cannot realistically be based on formula of equating Arab and Israel strength;

(2) Israel's vulnerability to sudden attack due to its size, shape and relative manpower; and

(3) Reiterated Arab intention to obliterate State of Israel. Unless Israel has some assurance that arms in hands of Arabs will not endanger her, there will be growth in extremist sentiment here with consequent threat to peace.

Embassy believes, however, there are serious defects in connection with both alternatives mentioned Department circular telegram 108. Exchange of notes which gave no promise of military assistance in event of attack would fail to give necessary senses of security. Also, since area defense program cannot realistically equate Israel and Arab strength, statement that if military build-up jeopardized Israel's security US would consider arms aid to Israel would either imply the impossible or not meet Israel's needs.

[2] Document 867.

On other hand, Embassy believes treaty between Israel and US guaranteeing Israel's security would have following objections:

(1) Israel's avowed "dynamism" and her basic drive toward position of dominance in area would make her a constantly embarrassing treaty partner. In pursuance of this dynamism, Israel has in past resisted relaxation, stability and quiet, preferring, and creating where necessary, tension and instability, counting upon its capacity to capitalize upon them. With special prestige which such treaty would give, Israel would be less inclined to show moderation in its actions and statements. Need for giving Israel sense of basic security should not result in action which would give it attitude non-conducive to equal bargaining with Arabs on conditions of peace.

(2) Treaty would put Israel in special relationship to US, a posture from which US has been trying to disengage itself. Israel has in past regarded herself as having weight of American prestige, resources and influence available to her in achieving her objectives. She would undoubtedly attempt to exploit treaty relationship to work anew toward appearance of such a situation and to make continual further requests for special consideration.

(3) In view of likelihood that definitive peace between Israel and neighbors will take some time, and in view of uneasy state of borders even in absence of aggression, treaty would give rise to continual questions as to whether border incidents constituted aggression and US had, therefore, obligation take action.

(4) Treaty would put US in position of appearing to be partner of a party in a semi-war in which US has in fact no interest other than its termination.

(5) Treaty approach would make it more difficult to integrate similar undertakings by other countries, such as Britain and France and, if it should at any time appear feasible and desirable, Turkey.

(6) While Israel would like to have backing of US, it still has as one of its principal goals release of as many as possible of 4 million Jews behind Iron Curtain and, therefore, cannot be uninhibited in its cooperation with free world (Embassy telegram 93, July 21, 1953, and Embassy telegram 77). [3]

In view of above, Embassy believes possibility should be explored of:

(1) British giving some kind of guarantee to Israel as British Ambassador here has suggested (Embassy telegram 179). [4] Britain already has such a treaty with Jordan and would not thereby be putting herself in special relationship to Israel. Moreover, she has forces based nearby.

---

[3] Neither printed.

[4] Document 863.

(2) Obtaining congressional authority by resolution authorizing President to make unilateral statement that US would use military force under certain circumstances. Such a statement could be in a form to avoid difficulties mentioned above resulting from treaty. Considerations which led NSC to decide against an advance decision to use military force under certain circumstances would appear to be no greater in connection with such a resolution than in connection with a treaty. Greater freedom of action which US would have under unilateral declaration would serve to deter Israel from permitting its dynamism to take form of measures to increase tension.

(3) Taking care of immediate need for reassurance to Israel by stating that executive branch of government intends to ask Congress for resolution of general nature stated above and also intends include Israel in its planning for area security and to grant it arms as soon as development of its arrangements with Arab States permits.

Suggested approach would not satisfy its probable demands (Eban has urged military alliance and Eytan maintains treaty should not only guarantee border but also US assistance in ending other types of aggression such as economic and political) but would meet Israel's reasonable requirements.

205. Embtel 192. [2] I met Dayan and Eytan at reception yesterday and discussed rather fully possibility of establishing contact between Israel representative and those of Egypt and Jordan to deal with day-to-day border problems on local level. While Eytan continued to appear half-hearted, Dayan vigorously plied me with arguments in favor.

Dayan stated, and Eytan agreed, IG would like as soon as possible, without any formal agreement, to institute practice of area commander (battalion or brigade) on each side designating contact spot on his side of border where opposite number or deputy could conveniently and safely come and make telephone call for immediate meeting. Meetings would be completely informal, without bylaws, minutes, or appeal, for purpose of dealing cooperatively to prevent, or to institute any feasible immediate reparative action in connection with, border violations. While IG believes nature of meetings is such that it would be anomalous to have UN representative present, it would have no objection to such presence at first meetings to facilitate inauguration. With respect Egyptian border, locations might be along Gaza road. Similar arrangements might also be established in Jerusalem and in Hebron area although Dayan believe preferable to start with just one or two places to see how it works. He believes name "local commander agreement" is a little formal but willing to accede to it if insisted upon.

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

SECRET NIACT TEL AVIV, August 29, 1954—1 p. m.

209. New York Times correspondent has informed Embassy Eban said following in talk with him Friday: Israel shocked and angered at US policy of winning Arabs by arms while leaving Israel in refrigerator. It is fine if US succeeding with Arabs but it cannot be broker if it has lost Israel. It must now win Israel—by giving arms. US must be able to demonstrate concretely to Israel public that situation has improved. If nothing is done now to back up Dulles' expressions of understanding of Israel's plight, a worse situation than ever will exist in US-Israel relations. Israeli Government sees US getting in same position re Egypt as British have in Jordan, i.e. throwing away its cards, losing its influence, by not demanding quid pro quo in advance. As result of present policy, US is "picking up the check" on both ends: Giving economic aid to Israel to overcome effects of blockade while giving economic aid to Egypt which is carrying out the blockade. Israeli Government not requesting a guarantee of its border but would be interested in seeing what US had to suggest.

Jerusalem Post carries following editorial this morning with internal evidence of Eban authorship: Nothing could be more strange than spate of rumors that flowed last week from Arab capitals (other than Egypt) or from American sources and routed thence to those centers, of moves towards agreement between Israel and Egypt, the suggestions presumably coming from the US. Who is responsible for this war of nerves and what is to be gained by it? It might suit the book of those in the State Department who are intent on arming Egypt and yet welcome the stories of peace moves as a counter-weight to the attempts of the friends of Israel to question the wisdom of arming the Arab states. For here is "evidence" that possibility of peace between Israel and Egypt is now solidifying as result of new atmosphere created by America's pro-Arab policy. This, of course, is a far cry from genuinely influencing Arabs in this direction at present time. Explanation being that to do so would destroy whole effect of attempt to win confidence and good will of Arab world. As for Arabs, rumors for external consumption cost nothing and enable them to pose and strut as moderates being armed to the teeth, with organized opposition to the moves by friends of Israel neutralized by a flow of words. In the long run net result could well be an attempt by Western powers to present Israel with a fait accompli.

Post carries brief front-page item that Eshkol, Minister of Finance, and Dayan, IDF Chief of Staff, had three-hour closed meeting with Ben-Gurion at Beersheba yesterday.

There are many evidences that line authorized by Department (Deptels 77,[1] 109,[2] 111)[3] has influenced a number of IG leaders to reappraise Israel policy of all-out attack on US policies, to consider advisability of seeing what concrete proposals US might make following Secretary's talks with Eban, and to give US chance to capitalize during the next few months on its increasing influence with Arab states in effort bring about amelioration of Arab attitudes toward Israel. First two paragraphs above, together with developments reported Embassy telegram 190, indicate Eban giving support to Lavon and other intransigeants. S. Z. Abramov, President Israel-American Friendship League, who has recently been critical of US, yesterday said he would strongly urge leaders of American Jewry be asked to support those in IG now taking moderate and cooperative position.

Since persons in Foreign Ministry have stated (to New York Times correspondent) that line which Chargé has taken with them is of interest but some question whether it fully represents Department's position, affirmation of this to Israel Embassy might also be useful.

Prime Minister informed me this morning he will see me at noon tomorrow (August 30). This will be immediately prior Knesset debate on Israel-US relations. TOP SECRET DAMASCUS, August 30, 1954—2 p. m.

96. Deptcirtel 108, August 21. USSR threat to area requires US weigh moves here for effect on Soviet position. Evidence Commie activity in Syria multiplying; US–Israel treaty on public exchange notes would undermine US position here and play into Soviet hands. Almost certainly any commitment from US to Israel sufficient to satisfy Israelis would, if known, revive Arab fears of US favoritism toward Israel. As noted Beirut Embtel 171 to Department August 21, Arab fears this score have been diminishing recently as result US actions during last year and half. Should US appear give special attention Israeli security problem, however, opportunity would be presented USSR increase ties with Syria, viz. Soviet vetoes Banat Ya Qub and Suez.

In any case, extent to which Israeli fears justified requires careful examination. In light Israel policy provocation and retaliation (e.g. Amman 67, August 24) [2] and relative military capabilities, Arab fears Israeli aggression seem more realistic than Israeli psychosis re Arabs. See no justification large-scale US assurances to Israel which might lead Tel Aviv continue provocative policy in hope instigating Arab attack.

For foregoing considerations believe treaty method particularly undesirable. Syria unlikely desire similar treaty but would view Israel–US pact as hostile act by US. Secret exchange of notes on other hand might afford possibility satisfying Israel's reasonable requirements.

Following are Embassy specific suggestions:

1. Note should avoid committing US in advance to act automatically but indicate measures, including, NSC economic sanctions, we would take after we determined unprovoked aggression had occurred.

2. Reconsider reference in text military build-up jeopardizing Israel's security (numbered paragraph 1, reference telegram), since basic and should [sic] US contention is that, view tripartite declaration and other considerations. US arms aid Arabs will not place Israel in jeopardy. Present wording appears question this.

Also interested in Israel's efforts to continue secret contacts with Egyptian leaders, especially as we are convinced that first-hand information which IG may gain from situation in Egypt will lead it to understand the basis of US approach which is based on careful and gradual measures as opposed to all-or-nothing, take-it-or-leave-it approach. US attaches greatest importance to timing and tactics in approaching our common objectives of peace and stability in Near East. Any action which interferes with or prevents this approach would inevitably be regarded in US as obstruction of our efforts to build up area security in face of Communist threat. It is our fundamental conviction that American security is deeply involved in current developments in Middle East as well as Israel's. It would be gravest disappointment to American people if Israel were to block our attempts to encourage Near East leaders who are seeking to identify their people's destiny with that of the free world. Present moment offers opportunity such as we have not had before and may not again for some time to work toward both objectives. It is desire of USG to have IG's cooperation in seeing that opportunity is not lost.

Prime Minister said he regarded this as an important and helpful statement; appreciated its tenor and our friendship and effort to understand Israel's position; does not doubt sincerity of US intentions; differs with respect to possible unintended effects of POC; would welcome translation of assurances into concrete facts to offset facts which operate to Israel's detriment. There is no intention on IG's part to obstruct US; what it does it does to preserve Israel's vital interests; with respect to effort we are making with Egyptian leaders, he wishes us luck but has misgivings. He does not make any request that we try to further secret personal contacts between Egypt and Israel but would be interested in anything we can do provided we are satisfied that our intervention would in fact help; present Egyptian Government has been more difficult in this respect than its predecessor. He said he would be especially interested in any information I had with respect to reports of imminent Iraq–Syria merger. I said I had none. Prime Minister said if it is in fact brewing it would be a most serious matter for Israel; to have Iraq on its border would create new geopolitical situation. Said he hopes US will do what it can to keep political entities in area as they are. He said speech he would give to Knesset this afternoon might be regarded by USG as sharp with respect our policies in Egypt but it was result of full cabinet discussion and he would balance those remarks by expression of appreciation for our economic aid to Israel and for Secretary's sympathetic statements. He concluded by saying that he would wish to fully digest my statement.

Embassy comment: It is my impression there is continuing sharp cleavage between Sharett and Lavon on position which IG should take toward US; that Sharett regarded by statement as helpful to his position in cabinet; that his speech to Knesset will represent present resultant of strength of varying views in cabinet.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Israel-Jordan Affairs (Bergus)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] August 31, 1954.

Subject: Review of U.S.-Lebanon Relations

Participants: Dr. Charles Malik, Ambassador of Lebanon
NEA—Mr. Jernegan
NE—Mr. Bergus

Ambassador Malik stated that he was returning to Beirut for consultations on September 2 and planned to remain for about two weeks. He wished to review the current situation before returning so that he would be in a position to discuss matters fully with the Lebanese Government. Firstly, he wondered whether there was anything useful which he might tell President Chamoun with regard to the prospects of an official visit to the United States by the President of Lebanon. The Ambassador hoped that such a visit might be possible for the spring of 1955.

Mr. Jernegan replied that he had no information for the Ambassador at this time on the subject. The matter was still under consideration at the White House and so far as was known the definitive schedule of official visitors for next year had not been drawn up. Mr. Jernegan would look into the matter but he doubted whether he would have any information on the subject prior to the Ambassador's departure.

The Ambassador inquired as to the prospect of FY 1955 special economic aid for Lebanon. Mr. Jernegan reviewed the situation, pointing out the cut which the appropriation for development assistance in the Near East had sustained in the Congress, and outlining the needs in other countries of the area. We had made a start in Lebanon in FY 1954 and the program there would continue. We could not predict the magnitude or character of our FY 1955 program in Lebanon. We understood that the Lebanese Government and the U.S. Operations Mission in Beirut were presently working out projects for presentation to Washington. Once these were presented, a decision would be made as to the nature of our program for the current fiscal year. In all probability, our program for Lebanon would be small for this year. Funds were short and it would take time to build up the programs resulting from the allocations given Lebanon at the close of FY 1954. We wished also to avoid going back to Congress next year with large unobligated balances.

The Ambassador asked for the Department's views on the development of the Litani River. Mr. Malik added that he felt that his government should exhaust all possibilities of raising local capital and obtaining bank loans before approaching any government, U.S., French, or other, for a government loan for this development.

Mr. Jernegan stated that we were encouraged that substantial progress had been made in the Litani survey. It was felt that the initiative was now in Lebanese hands. Lebanon should study the survey report with great care and formulate without undue haste a firm program for development. It was believed that the possibility of obtaining loan capital from the IBRD should be thoroughly examined. In view of the bankability of the project, it was doubtful whether loans from U.S. Government sources could be justified. We would, however, consider sympathetically further requests for technical assistance.

The Ambassador asked as to the prospects for military aid to Lebanon. Mr. Jernegan reviewed the current situation in the light of the concept of the "northern tier" and Egypt's desire to play a more active part in the defense of the Suez Canal. In this field also there was a shortage of funds and it was difficult to finance existing commitments. It appeared that hit or miss programs on an individual country basis were not a good way to utilize funds. It might well be, for example, that Lebanon would attain greater protection against aggression through aid to the "northern tier" than through a small program of U.S. military aid granted directly to Lebanon. There was not much prospect of military aid to Lebanon in FY 1955. We were however giving thought to President Chamoun's suggestion that something in the nature of an infrastructure project—roads, port development, or airport construction—be taken up in Lebanon.

The Ambassador asked about aid to Israel. Mr. Jernegan replied that no firm allocation had been decided upon but the total figure would be less than last year's. Mr. Jernegan, in reply to a question, stated that the Tripartite proposals to Israel and Jordan for measures looking toward a tranquilization of the border had temporarily been halted over the question of whether our proposals would require amendments to the General Armistice Agreement. We believed that practically all of the suggestions did not require such amendment. We were considering with the British and French the next steps to be taken on these proposals. Meanwhile we were working with the parties in an attempt to re-establish the local commanders' meetings along the Jordan and Gaza borders with Israel. The first reaction to these steps had been somewhat encouraging. We had also had occasion recently to restate to the Israel Government our position regarding their resuming work in the demilitarized zone on Banat Ya'qub diversion canal. We had told the Israelis that they were estopped from resuming such activity without permission of the Chief of Staff of the UNTSO. We had also pointed out that the psychological impact of such a resumption would be extremely unfortunate and might well seriously lessen the chances for the acceptance by the riparian states of proposals for an equitable division of the waters of the Jordan Valley.

Ambassador Malik inquired as to the present thinking about the Tripartite Declaration of 1950. Was there a prospect that Turkey would adhere to it? Was the United States considering making a strong restatement of the Declaration?

Mr. Jernegan replied that we had been giving thought to the Declaration but there were no developments worth mentioning. It seemed clear that the Arab states would oppose Turkish adherence to the Pact. A mere restatement of the Declaration seemed to offer little advantage. Both the Secretary and Mr. Eden had taken occasion to reaffirm our support for the Declaration. We were presently considering ways and means of giving greater assurance to both the Arab states and Israel against the possibility of local aggression.

"I have honor refer recent expressions apprehension by Government Israel over security situation in Near East and particularly over efforts by Government United States to develop economic and defensive strength of area as whole against subversion or aggression from without area. Government Israel has voiced concern lest current trends might adversely affect Israel's security position.

In order allay misapprehensions and to correct misinterpretations which have arisen I wish set forth certain established policies of United States Government with respect Near East area.

First, traditional friendship of United States for state of Israel remains firm and has in no way been diminished by its friendship also for the various Arab states.

Second, a definitive and just peace between Israel and Arab states continues to be a major ultimate objective of United States. Present absence of peace perpetuates weakness in area and is therefore no more in interest of United States than in that Israel or Arab states. Practical considerations arising from the divergent basic positions held by states concerned cause United States to believe that a series of adjustments offers best prospects of progress toward peace.

Third, increasingly serious threat posed by Soviet Communist imperialism leads United States to assist immediately efforts of states in area to increase their ability to resist outside attempts at covert or overt aggression. This course of action cannot await solution Arab-Israel differences. In this connection, United States Government does not exclude an eventual program of arms assistance to Israel. United States Government will hope for cooperation of Israel and Arab states in continued efforts to abate causes of Arab-Israel tension, and it will take measures to ensure that armed strength developed for defense of area as a whole is not misused and misdirected toward aggressive purposes within area itself.

Fourth, particular importance is attached by United States to deterring an outbreak of hostilities in area, and to assuring security Israel and of each individual Arab state. This Government stands firmly behind Tripartite Declaration of May 25, 1950 issued in common with Governments United Kingdom and France. Declaration included statement that 'The Three Governments, should they find that any of these states (The Arab States or Israel) was preparing to violate frontiers or armistice lines, would, consistently with their obligations as members of the United Nations, immediately take action, both within and outside the United Nations, to prevent such violation.' United States is confident that states of area, consistent with their obligations under Charter of United Nations or the pertinent armistice agreements, will not resort to force to resolve their differences. Should this confidence prove misplaced and an armed attack occur by an Arab state on Israel or by Israel on an Arab state, United States in accordance with its constitutional processes and Tripartite Declaration will immediately take appropriate action to cut off aid to aggressor and to seek to thwart such aggression.

I trust that this statement of United States policy will meet Israel's desire for assurances that, should she become target of aggression, United States would take appropriate action to protect Israel's security. It is wish of United States to put at rest the spectre of a renewal of intra-area conflict and to facilitate creation of strength against outside aggression in order that every state in Near East without fear may devote its energies to realizing the economic and social advances rightly demanded by its peoples."

Public statements such as PriMin's and Argov's (ur 216) [4] seemed be of nature incite elements in Israel calling for "preventive war". The Ambassador in Jordan (Mallory) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY AMMAN, September 2, 1954—5 p. m.

80. King Hussein summoned me today concerning repeated incursions Israeli Army (Embtel 79). [2] He stated continued restraint by Jordan Government has patently done no good towards achieving peace because Israeli armed forces continue to enter and kill.

Confidence toward constituted authority and policy are being lost. This he mentioned as a problem both of the populace generally and with reference to Arab Legion. The Legion is undoubtedly confident of its ability to reply by raids within Israel and a point of provocation will be reached when it can no longer be restrained. King said that Jordan authorities have been very severe with infiltrators from its side. Here likewise there must be a limit and restraints may have to be slackened if Israelis continue their policy.

He said Israelis continue to ask for peace talks but there is nothing for Jordan to talk about so long as they keep the border in a state of war. He emphasized that military aggressions are the root of the problem and reviewed last night's attacks, with four men killed, three hostages taken, several wounded and an armored personnel carrier blown up.

King ended by saying Jordan would try to continue a proper line of conduct but that if the Israelis continued to demand trouble one of these days Jordan could give them plenty. This plain warning was the first time so frankly stated to me. The King was composed throughout.

I shall be glad when General Glubb returns in two weeks although even his far-sighted moderation now admits that political pressures are building up towards a point where retaliation will be difficult to hold back. A factor not so far mentioned is the more explosive quality of the national guards who are largely Palestinians.

82. ReDepcirtel 125. [2] Department's proposed note to Israel would appear desirable if it will reduce internal and external tensions. May be noted that US places itself in peculiar and possibly propaganda furnishing position of assuring Israel against Arab aggression while calling for no restraint on continued Israeli armed entry and killings in Arab territory. There is no assurance Communists will use it but we hand them a beautiful weapon.

Recommend release note to press on delivery order avoid probably widespread misinterpretation growing out possible hints, leaks or statements in Israeli press. Also recommend deletion sentence re arms assistance of Israel which would undo much of advance we have made with Arabs. It may well be interpreted as a commitment and will likely be so reflected here from Israeli press. Since there are repeated assurances in numbered points 3 and 4 reference telegram mention of arms appears unnecessary unless to show decision has been reached we will arm Israel. [3]

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET PRIORITY TEL AVIV, September 3, 1954—3 p. m.

233. Department circular telegram 125.[1] Embassy believes that in light of considerations set forth by Department and in telegrams from mission, proposed statement is best designed to achieve our objectives, meets Israel's legitimate needs, and will in a helpful measure assuage fears of Israel public. It can be anticipated, on basis of statements made in recent Knesset debates and by IG officials privately, that IG will take position that statement is not satisfactory to them. In Embassy's opinion IG would take such position with respect to any action on our part that did not: (a) Take form of a treaty giving them ability to insist on invocation of clauses of treaty when they deemed it desirable; (b) commit US to automatic and immediate military action on certain contingencies; (c) give IG promise of immediate arms aid in an amount equal to that to be furnished to all Arab States combined; (d) commit US to take action to terminate unfriendly political and economic activities of Arab States directed against Israel; (e) commit US formally to oppose any amalgamation of Arab States; (f) commit US to immediate full IG participation in area defense plan.[2]

Embassy assumes none of these now possible in view of constitutional limitations, military considerations, and our area objectives.

Embassy suggests that: (1) IG be informed of steps simultaneously in Washington and here with oral statement that action goes as far as constitutional limitations permit in commitment to guarantee Israel's borders; that if at any time situation appears to require it, consideration will be given to asking congressional authorization to use force; that USG's desire to give sympathetic attention to Israel's needs would be aided by their constructive cooperation in achieving area goals of security and relaxation of tension; (2) friends of Israel in US be advised informally as soon as possible by Department officers of reasons why this action goes as far as possible, why we believe it is adequate, and of our hopes for Israel's cooperation.

135. While Department is certainly best able judge necessity of giving Israel assurances of type proposed in Department Circular telegram 125,[2] Embassy feels duty to call attention to fact that unilateral declaration to Israel as phrased, together with the inevitable knowledge in Arab States that Israel has succeeded in pressurizing US into issuing such assurances, will negate in Iraq the thoughtful and constructive efforts of past 18 months to restore confidence in US as being as genuinely interested in friendship of 40 million Arabs as of 1 1/2 million Israelis, the gradual realization of which has done much to reverse dangerous trend of Arab world away from US and the West. It may well vitiate long and painful efforts we have made in guiding Iraq toward concept of effective regional defense planning. No amount of secondary phrasing indicating similar concern for Arabs can obscure fact that in Iraqi eyes any such gesture will be regarded as gratuitous and unwarranted assurance to aggressor nation. We do not presume judge correctness of Iraqi (vis-à-vis Israel), but must point out that Iraqi conviction of aggressive Israeli designs in recent frontier incidents with neighboring Arab States is no less real than the alleged Israeli fear of Arab attack which motivates this declaration. Iraqis will find it particularly difficult to understand appearance note at this time in light of:

(1) Fact that most of recent Israel–Jordan border incidents have been of Israeli origin. (Amman to Department 79 September 2.)[3]

(2) No US arms have yet been received in Iraq, which is only country with military assistance agreement. Iraq has issued no threats against Israel and appears to be genuinely oriented towards defense north and northwest. Department may doubt Iraqi undertaking that US arms will be used only in defense of itself and free world but proposed note to Israel would publicly reflect suspicion of Iraq's pledged word and would not fail to cause resentment there.

(3) Iraq has now put forward collective security plan, under Article 51 of UN Charter, with request for US comments and suggestions of modifications to meet US views and containing avowed objective of peace with Israel to which we have not yet given our definite reply. While plan may come to naught, it does provide evidence that some constructive thinking re ultimate peace with Israelis beginning to be manifest.

Embassy fears that impact of unilateral note on Nuri and other responsible Iraqis may, among other things, result immediately in new low in confidence US objectives this area, increase reluctance to adhere to US-sponsored Turkish Pakistan pact, particularly if Turkey associates itself with proposed note, and renew Nuri's interest in his scheme, a multilateral defense system including Pakistan and UK but not Turkey (Embassy telegram 86[4]). It will certainly provide grist for anti-US and neutralist forces against US and all US-sponsored defense arrangements.

Embassy continues believe simple statement best of alternatives if Department of opinion absolutely imperative some action this regard be taken (Embassy telegram 112[4]). Department may wish to consider desirability, as suggested Department Circular telegram 125, of sending simultaneous statement to all Arab States as well as to Israel. In such case, third paragraph might well be modified to read in following sense: "First. Traditional friendship of the US for all states in the area remains firm and has in no way been diminished or modified."

Such expedient should serve to satisfy Israel without alienating confidence of Arabs.

Apparent intention publicize which increases need for balanced treatment leads Embassy suggest following modifications in Department's wording.

a. When speaking "security" avoid listing Israel invariably first; when speaking of "armed attack" avoid listing Arabs invariably first;
b. In third paragraph statement, omit "traditional" since US ties with Arabs antedate creation Israel. Insert "equal" before "friendship" in second line and delete "also";
c. At end fourth paragraph recommend "solutions of particular problems offer best prospect progress toward eventual goal of peace" rather than present wording which overly vague;
d. In paragraph 5, suggest specific reference arms aid to certain Arab States along with statement aid Israel not excluded. Such wording might serve emphasize Israel's legitimate security problem and consequent need some US-Israel exchange.

981. Embassy would urge that proposed statement of U.S. policy re NE area (Dept's Cirtel 125 Sept 1) be discussed with French at same time as with U.K. and Turkey. While unilateral action by U.S. in announcing this policy without previous discussion with French would be unpalatable to them, failure to give them equal opportunity with U.K. and Turkey to comment on statement or make parallel statement or associate themselves with U.S. statement would be omission for which plausible explanation could not easily be found, particularly in view French adherence to Tripartite Declaration referred to in statement.

Rather than separate statements designed for Israel and Arab States respectively where variance or wording would be carefully weighed for significance, Embassy believes single statement designed for both Israel and Arab consumption would be preferable. This would appear require only limited modifications of present draft, i.e. addition of sentence in point 3 to reflect extension of military aid to Arab States and addition of clause in second para of point 4 to express hope that statement will likewise reassure Arabs on U.S. policy in event Israeli aggression.

It is realized infiltrators from Jordan continue constitute serious problem Israel, particularly to inhabitants agricultural settlements close to HKJ-Israel armistice line. At same time it must be said Israel's apparent policy of organized and armed retaliation has not only already been condemned but it has also brought about heightened rather than reduced tensions along armistice line.

It is to interest US as well as peoples of area that there be reduction these tensions and, step-by-step move toward peace between Israel and her neighbors. Peace in NE must be painstakingly built through measures calculated diminish areas conflict and lessen hatreds. Armed retaliatory raids not such measures.

101. Personal for Assistant Secretary Byroade from Ambassador. Re Depcirtels 108 [1] and 125. [2]

1. Many times have I blessed you for telling me on eve my departure for this post nine months ago that I need not crack my brains over Arab-Israeli problem; this was to be a straight bilateral US-Saudi relations job.

At Istanbul, however, I welcomed opportunity associate myself with conference recommendations notably as to reaffirming and strengthening tripartite declaration as deterrent to threatening Israeli expansionism.

That threat seems today even more acute whereas policy you are now considering seems by comparison with that recommended at Istanbul distressingly inadequate; and I feel sure that to Arabs conclusion of treaty with Israel and reaffirmation of traditional friendship for States of area would seem mockery of self-contradiction.

I fear it is not inapposite to recall comment often heard earlier years that road to Palestine disaster was paved with palliatives.

2. I would like proposed restatement of policy much better if following indicated deletions and changes could be made:

Let opening paragraph read simply: "traditional friendship of US for all States of area remains firm."

Let second sentence of second paragraph also read simply: "present absence of peace perpetuates weakness in area:" and I should prefer delete third sentence this paragraph.

In third paragraph delete all of third sentence and first clause of fourth sentence which would then begin: "US Government will take measures to ensure".

In first sentence fourth paragraph delete words "Israel" and "Arab". Begin fourth sentence with "US believes" instead of "US is confident"; and in fifth sentence change "confidence" to "belief".

Finally in same sentence because current threat comes rather from Israel than from any Arab State it would seem well to reverse order of promised armed attacks; and I should prefer to see last two sentences this paragraph set forth as separate final paragraph of statement beginning: "Fifth US believes".

The Chargé in Israel (Russell) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, September 10, 1954—5 p. m.

260. I called today, at his request, on Prime Minister at Hakirya, Tel Aviv. He referred to last three incidents along Israeli-Egyptian border which he said were particularly grave. In first, tractor driver killed, but he attached more importance to the succeeding two incidents of sabotage: First, destruction of bridge; second, dynamiting of water pipe, which had every appearance of military planning (though possibly not of military execution). In case of bridge, no civilians in area and it, therefore, appears to be "naked provocation". In addition, number of infiltrators recently captured who admitted to being spies, which strengthens appearance of military preparation on part of Egypt. Prime Minister said special care is being taken to prevent any immediate and direct reaction to above incidents insofar as lies within power of organized authority. Prime Minister said "Now that US is connected with Egypt," what we say should carry more weight than before. Aid extended to Cairo behaving is one thing, to Cairo not behaving is another.

Prime Minister said he would like to make not a request but a query: Would USG call attention of Egyptian Government to this highly disturbing state of affairs, and publish the fact it has done so?

Prime Minister said theory is germinating in minds of some of people of Israel that recent developments are manifestations of plan to drive Israel into sharp and far-reaching action and thus have Israel appear to world as aggressor, nullifying all of its efforts over past six years to bring about peace. Prime Minister suggested Egyptian Government might be told that this is seen through and that it cannot get away with such a game.

I told Prime Minister I had no evidence that incidents on Egyptian border related to Beit Liqya but I felt area situation had deteriorated as result of it. We had feeling IG had given little cooperation in steps which Secretary and Chargé had informed IG we were giving attention to—to improve prospects of peace and Israel's security. Neither Prime Minister nor Eban had conveyed to Israel public the sentiments which Prime Minister had previously expressed to me; on contrary, attempt made to undermine our position. I said we had received from responsible quarters intelligence to effect Israel would make attack on Jordan during maneuvers; that Embassy had recommended against an approach to IG on ground it was difficult to believe IDF would make attack in midst of extraordinary efforts toward peace we were undertaking; that incidentally Embassy's ability to convey convincing assurances of IG's cooperative intentions had, of course, been impaired. Prime Minister expressed his regret at latter; said he "did not know who was responsible for Beit Liqya". He hinted clearly, without actually saying, that attack carried out by IDF, without his knowledge, in order forestall increase of pro-Herut sentiment following attacks during previous weeks on two Herut settlements.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Israel–Jordan Affairs (Bergus)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] September 15, 1954.

Subject: Israel Proposals for U.S. Measures of Reassurance.

Participants: The Secretary
Mr. Herbert Hoover, Jr.
Ambassador Abba Eban of Israel
Minister Reuven Shiloah of Israel
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Bergus

Ambassador Eban opened the conversation by stating that he had found within the Israel Government and among the public there a sense of "isolation, vulnerability and insecurity". The leaders of the Israel Government had felt unable to attempt to calm public fears inasmuch as they themselves shared these feelings of apprehension. The Israel Government had considered the Secretary's remarks of August 7 and Mr. Eban was now fully authorized to say that his Government felt there were certain measures which the U.S. could take to allay this apprehension.

Total Arab resources of territory, population and natural wealth were infinitely greater than those of Israel. The Israelis had no complaint about this situation with which they would have to learn to live. Added to this, however, were Israel's political disadvantages. Israel's neighbors had the Arab Collective Security Pact, and other security arrangements, some with the U.K. Israel had none of these. It appeared that defense plans were being made in the Near East to the exclusion of Israel. The Israelis were not panic-stricken and felt that if they were attacked by the Arabs they would win. They preferred, however, to avoid hostilities. The Egyptian Prime Minister's recent statement laying claim to the Negev had increased feelings of insecurity. The only bright spot in the picture had been the Secretary's August talks with Mr. Eban. Mr. Eban read an Israel press account of one of his speeches to the Israelis reporting that he was encouraged by the fact that the Secretary was personally interested in Israel's problems. Israel's proposals came under four headings and their general theme was "equality".

1. Balance of Power. Israel desired equality in security relationships in the N.E. as was implied in the Tripartite Declaration of 1950. Specifically, Israel was concerned at the special political and military advantages to Iraq (and potentially Egypt) flowing from the grant military aid agreement with the U.S. Iraq and Egypt would have these advantages in addition to their commitments from the U.K. Israel would have nothing. Israel would like such a relationship with the U.S. even if arms grants under any agreement reached were not of substantial significance. Mr. Eban reminded the Secretary that popular estimates of Israel's great strength as against collective Arab strength were over-flattering. He pointed out that the Arabs, according to Israel's best information, were spending 105 million pounds sterling this year for defense as against Israel's expenditure of less than one-fifth of that sum. Similar ratios existed in such items as jet planes. It was hoped that through a system of U.S. grant military aid agreements with Israel and the Arab states, a rough equality between Israel and the Arab states could be maintained for a period of from one to three years. This would mean a certain abstinence on the part of the U.S. in supplying arms to the Arabs and a certain amount of American assistance to Israel in meeting her military needs.

2. Defensive Alliances. Mr. Eban stated that he had been instructed to call to the Secretary's attention the fact that Israel was the only Near Eastern state which did not have a defensive alliance with anyone. The Israel Government saw no purpose in formally requesting a defensive alliance at this time. The possibility of such an alliance, however, should be borne in mind for consideration as the demographic factors of superiority on the Arab side come more and more into play.

3. Suez Canal Blockade. The Egyptians were now in general displaying a tendency to permit all categories of Israel-bound cargo, except petroleum products, through the Canal, but their spasmodic restrictions resulted in a total effect of discouragement. Egypt's lifting the embargo would demonstrate her belief in freedom of commerce, and her respect for international law. Israel had been given to understand that the U.S. could not condition its economic aid on Egypt's lifting the blockade because of a prior commitment. Israel understood and respected this U.S. commitment. Mr. Eban asked, however, that the U.S. take the line with the Egyptians that the continuation and magnitude of U.S. economic aid would be related to Egypt's attitude on the question of the Suez blockade.

4. Recognition of Arab Collective Security Pact. Israel was making a strong protest to the U.K. for having accorded diplomatic recognition to the ACSP by mentioning it in the "Heads of Agreement" with the Egyptians on the Suez Base. There appeared to be indirect U.S. recognition of the pact as well, inasmuch as the U.S. had endorsed the Anglo-Egyptian agreement. Status and dignity were being given to a pact which was aimed against Israel. It was also made to appear that the West was indifferent to the possibility of an attack on Israel, since such an attack would not automatically reactivate the Base.

The Secretary regretted that the pressure of his time in view of his imminent departure for Europe made it impossible for him to discuss the Ambassador's proposals in detail. He assumed that the Israel Ambassador wished to carry on the discussions and recommended that Mr. Eban continue this exchange of views with Mr. Byroade. The Secretary felt that continuation of these discussions would be useful. He mentioned that he had seen reports whereby Mr. Eban in public speeches in Israel had mentioned the possibility of carrying Israel's case directly to the American people. Statements such as these were not conducive to progress in our efforts to assist Israel.

The Secretary also questioned whether the concept of equality could be the theme for the discussions. For demographic and other reasons already put by Mr. Eban it was obvious that there was no way in which the U.S. could create equality between Israel and the Arab states. Our policy in the area was one of impartiality which was not the same thing as equality.[1]

Particularly disturbing is fact high explosives are somehow getting into Gaza and that groups apparently skilled in demolition work are operating from there. In case of recent Israel attacks Jordan border strong representations made by Department and publicity given.

Accordingly Cairo instructed make following points FonMin:

1. US disturbed outbreak incidents Gaza strip for which Egypt condemned by MAC Cairo's 244 [2] and which could lead increasingly serious situation. We sure Egypt concurs with our view on necessity avoiding embroilment with Israel.
2. We feel withdrawal Palestinian battalion from front line position was useful move and should result in greater stability. However, we hope Egypt will take more energetic action to curb infiltration and prevent unauthorized persons on frontier from obtaining and using explosives or other weapons.

Tel Aviv authorized inform GOI US made representations re murder tractor driver and pipeline case for which Egypt condemned by MAC. Embassy should add we hope Israel also will take constructive preventive action in cooperation with UNTSO especially regular and prompt attendance MAC meetings and participation in work of special committee provided for in Armistice Agreement.

Memorandum by the Deputy Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Dorsey) to the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan)

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] September 20, 1954.

Subject: Status of 11 Proposals for Tranquilization of the Israel-Jordan Border.

NE finds a notable lack of enthusiasm on the part of the French and the British to undertake a further démarche on these proposals.

The French have expressed the view that any further discussions along these lines could best be held between our three delegations to the United Nations and the Secretary-General. They further think that if any more tripartite discussions with the parties should by any chance be indicated, such discussions should be held in Washington, Paris, or London, rather than in Amman and Tel Aviv. The French appear to be staking their all on their efforts to demilitarize Jerusalem.

The British feel that continuing consultation with the Secretary-General on such of the proposals as can be carried out by him (augmentation of MAC staffs, publicity for MAC decisions, increase in number of UN observers, additional equipment for observers, etc.) represents just about all that can be usefully done at this time. The British are impressed by Israel's assurances to them that Israel will return to the Israel–Jordan MAC, once Commander Hutchison has left it. Their inclination appears to be one of letting sleeping dogs lie and hoping that General Burns will be able to improve the situation significantly once Israel has returned to the MAC. The British have also indicated that they would not be interested in an Anglo-American démarche made to the exclusion of the French. This does not, however, rule out the possibility of seeking and obtaining British support to a U.S. move, if one were made.

We feel that the 11 proposals should not be permitted to die, if only for the reason that Israel and Jordan should not be permitted to treat proposals put forth by ourselves, the French, and the British in such a cavalier manner. We are also disturbed at the tendency on the part of the Israelis to resist any activity designed to strengthen the armistice machinery as an infringement of Israel's sovereignty. (This resistance rings hollow in view of the customary Israel position that the armistice is inadequate.) The press campaign against the permanent stationing of UN observers in ticklish areas along the border (which you have noted in Tel Aviv's 268 of September 15)[1] is a case in point.

Given the lack of French and British enthusiasm, it is felt that it would be best not to pursue the matter with them until we have something in the nature of a concrete proposal for a second démarche. We feel that we need field comment and guidance before attempting to draft such a proposal.

Recommendation

That you sign the attached telegram to the field.[2]

291. Deptel 173. [2] In view of (a) new element introduced by reported statement of British Under Secretary Selwyn Lloyd that British willing to offer its good offices to assist in discussions looking toward peace between Israel and Arab states; (b) danger that formal second démarche at this time might take ball away from UNTSO chief of staff, who is showing intelligent initiative; and (c) interrelationship between Israel's attitude toward border and possible border guarantees by US, which are still in process of discussion between IG and Department, Embassy inclined to believe that formal coordinated second démarche in connection with tripartite proposals not desirable at this time.

Embassy suggests, however, that in discussions which Secretary and other officers of Department will be having with Eban (and possibly simultaneously in discussions here with Prime Minister) it might be pointed out that: (1) since our statements of last month to IG (Embtel 212), [3] developments (various statements by Arab leaders, willingness of British to offer offices in discussions, etc.) have strengthened our belief that opportunity exists for constructive measures that would lead in direction of peace and that much will depend upon attitude, statements, and actions of IG (particularly cessation of attacks in force across border by IDF) as to outcome of efforts. (2) UNTSO under General Burns has been moving energetically to implement a number of proposals made in tripartite proposals. A return by Israel to Israel-Jordan MAC at early date would be widely regarded as constructive step. We believe inauguration of visits to key points by UNTSO teams is one of best ways of lessening infiltration and marauding. If such visits are to take place on Jordan side, they must obviously be permitted on Israel side and we hope Israel will see desirability of this and encourage procedure. (3) We also hope that both Israel and Jordan will consider whether they cannot, as a part of the general effort to improve the situation, give their assent to some of remaining tripartite proposals such as amendment of rules permitting chairman to propose resolutions.

It might also be pointed out to IG that actual border situation during past three months does not justify IG's statements that it has worsened as result US and British policies. According to IDF-released figures, during period March 5 to June 3 there were 121 border incidents, with Arab losses of 11 killed, 7 wounded, 22 captured and Israel losses of 18 killed, 15 wounded, 4 captured. Figures for preceding three months similar. During three months June 4 to September 23 were 91 incidents with Arab losses 5 killed, 2 wounded, 47 captured and Israel losses of 11 killed, 43 wounded (Jerusalem incident), and 1 captured. This indicates a continuing serious situation stemming from basic causes which we are attempting to deal with; not recently worsening one as IG has maintained.

CONFIDENTIAL AMMAN, September 24, 1954—4 p. m.

109. While yet no public admissions appears to be increasing realization by responsible leaders in this part Arab world some settlement with Israel should be made. Many private discussions so indicate. Public reaction to statements of possible peace talks, to recent announcement Selwyn Lloyd in London, et cetera are less violent than would have been true six months ago. marche before then and one which followed too closely would be unwise. Both US and Jordan will hold elections soon. General Burns has suggestions to make and according newspapers September 22 Britain good offices are available to facilitate "direct or indirect" talks between parties. Next démarche should be made only after result of General Burns and British approaches known.

Comment: HKJ supports UNTSO machinery and will not go beyond it, if ever, until Israel cooperates in UNTSO. Once Israel back in MAC, next démarche needs present specific objectives and have teeth for enforcement. US aid should figure largely as instrument. Reference telegram full and even increased performance by UNTSO necessary. Any legalistic circumscription by Israel on such grounds as supposed infringement sovereignty defeats our purposes.

Most fruitful course would appear informing Israelis our continued support and friendship will be strictly conditioned upon their achieving requisites peace on border. Once done we can probably later move Arabs to discussions especially through Jordan and Egypt.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY CAIRO, September 28, 1954—4 p. m.

420. Egyptian Minister Foreign Affairs told me few minutes ago he had had somewhat confused notices of a "little incident" at southern mouth of Suez Canal. According to his reports an Israeli boat of about 100 tons, flying Israeli flag, approached southern entrance of Canal and when questioned apparently within Egyptian territorial waters, fired on Egyptians. Thereupon Egyptians had taken boat into custody.

Fawzi indicated that if this is confirmed they will bring it to attention of Security Council but will not press for any action.

He added, "I remind you that for about a year we have been very lenient indeed about shipments for Israel passing through the Canal." [2]

306. Deptel 185. [2] Eytan, Director General Foreign Ministry, this morning, when I met him at Lydda airport at British Ambassador's leave-taking, told me Prime Minister, who is on two weeks unofficial vacation, Embassy had asked him to give me following message:

Prime Minister upset and anxious as result recent border episodes, especially along Gaza Strip. He had hoped, following his last meeting with me (Embtel 260), [3] that US would take energetic action toward Egypt and publicize it. US has in past been expeditious in making public its condemnation of Israel for similar acts and it looks as though US applying double standard. Israel's restraint, instead of having tranquilizing effect, has been rewarded by two extremely serious incidents including killing of two men at Beit Hashikma. As result, atmosphere in that part Israel extremely grim. Sharett says he has taken pains to see that as far as lies within power of Israel Government nothing will be done but doesn't know how long he can maintain restraint in light of new incidents. Would like to feel US would take energetic action and publicize it. That of itself would have tranquilizing effect. Also, situation on Jordan border getting serious again. Three days ago one of most valuable flocks of blooded sheep in country, worth IL75,000, stolen from Kibbutz. Day before yesterday man killed at Bar Ginra in Jerusalem corridor.

I told Eytan: (1) With respect publicity of US position on order [border] incidents we drew distinction between army action such as Beit Liqya and private marauding. (2) Our representatives in Arab countries inclined give authorities greater credit for efforts to prevent infiltration that Israel Government accords them. (3) We believe General Burns efforts establish practice of frequent visits to trouble spots by border teams best available means of reducing very type of incident which concerns Prime Minister and we hope authorities at the southern entrance of the Suez Canal. (U.N. doc. S/3296) In a letter of Sept. 29, Egypt stated that the Bat Galim had approached the harbor of Suez and without provocation had opened fire with small arms on Egyptian fishing boats within territorial waters. Egypt had arrested the crew and ordered an inquiry to determine responsibility for the incident. (U.N. doc. S/3297)

Israel Government will find a way to give its support to Burns' efforts. (4) While border incidents to any degree must be cause of concern to all, IDF figures do not indicate that situation in last few months noticeably worse than average and we have hopes that return of Israel Government representatives to Israel–Jordan MAC, energetic support by Israel government of UNTSO's efforts generally, and further progress in implementing tripartite proposals will result in gradual improvement (Embtel 291).[4]

I also asked Eytan if he could give me some background on line of thought which led to sending of Bat Galim to Suez at this time rather than awaiting efforts to work out improved practices by Egyptian Government in connection Suez passage. Eytan said he had another appointment, would report my remarks to Prime Minister and see me again within next day or two.

451. I fully concur with four points Russell made to Eytan (Tel Aviv telegram 306) [2] re Gaza Strip border situation. Following comments refer to his four points:

1. All incidents of which Israel complains are in category of private marauding. For example, at emergency meeting October 2, Egypt condemned in case of two Israelis killed September 25 (Tel Aviv telegram 298) [3] and Chairman abstained in case of tractor driver shot in hand (Tel Aviv telegram 281) [3] whereas Israel condemned for mortar fire, on September 28, on Egyptian military post.
2. Egypt not only talks about desiring control infiltration but takes helpful unilateral action such as withdrawal Palestinian battalion from front positions and imposition curfew in Strip.
3. Egypt allows UN observers move about freely anywhere in Strip even after curfew and with or without accompanying Egyptians. Only control is requirement permission enter or leave Strip after dark which permission readily and speedily granted.
4. According to her and Embassy's own impression number of incidents along DL recently actually less than average.

Egyptians believe Israelis seeking inflate normal incidents in Gaza area with object discrediting Egypt in connection Suez base settlement and US aid negotiations.

assured USG vessel was unarmed and engaged in no aggressive acts. Dismissed Egypt's allegations of hostile acts as complete fabrication. Stated Egyptian story had been received with "injured skepticism" by majority delegations at UN well as UNSYG and President SC.

Eban recapitulated legal basis 1951 SC resolution calling upon Egypt open Canal to Israel shipping. Stated problem had recently assumed increased importance Israel for two reasons: 1) Economic. Blockade of Canal hurting trade between Israel and countries of Africa and Asia such as Ethiopia, Thailand and Burma with whom Israel had hopes increasing trade. Prevention supply Iranian oil to Israel was costing country $10 to 15 million annually. Israel had been able carry on some trade through Canal by use other flag vessels but this in many cases involved embroilment third country in Israel-Egyptian dispute and it was becoming increasingly difficult find willing third party carriers. 2) Political. IG did not feel UK had been sufficiently vigilant in its efforts preserve freedom of navigation Canal. Israel therefore felt that before Egypt was left by world as undisputed sole possessor Suez Canal area her good intentions should be tested. Eban admitted Bat Galim had been test case and stated test cases were legitimate practice in international law.

Israel had hoped Egypt would have permitted vessel to pass. Israel had given notice to SC in May she would attempt achieve progressive relaxation Egyptian restrictions.

Israel would be taking matter up formally with SC if that body were not "veto-ridden." Israel had not ruled out possibility USSR might even support her at this time. Eban noted that USSR had taken up matter freedom navigation China Sea with SC on Sept. 30. On balance however Israel preferred avoid SC if possible. UNSYG had stated to Eban that because of weakness of SC, good officers were better in this situation. UNSYG plans speak to Egyptian representative in UN on this matter. Israel also requests US seek release vessel from Egyptian authorities. IG is encouraged by fact Egyptian Government has so far not committed itself to non-release of vessel. GOE justified detention on basis alleged shooting incidents. Should these allegations be proved unfounded way would be clear for vessel's release. If UNSYG and US efforts failed IG would have no alternative but approach to SC.

Murphy informed Eban Department would look into matter and informed IG.

fallen into Israel's well set trap through seizure by Egyptian authorities acting without prior top level clearance. Having learned of seizure Salem may have swiftly fabricated story of firing and succeeded reaching US headlines first with this version. NY Times tone skeptical in reporting it. Department wonders whether GOE in pulling forth its version has not seized upon only possible excuse for seizure vessel under self-defense clauses 1888 Convention which would prima facie accord with generally accepted interpretations that convention. Thus GOE not interfering with Canal traffic per se but taking military action against vessel which had first attacked.

If foregoing interpretation approximates truth Department would hope this implies 1) seizure of vessel not supported by Nasir and 2) GOE had not intended continue restrictions on Canal traffic but on contrary quietly drop them.

Department working level has already expressed concern Egyptian Embassy over unfortunate timing this occurrence and has requested details. You are requested informally convey Foreign Minister following reflections: 1) USG realizes all details re this incident not yet fully clarified, 2) meanwhile seizure vessel comes at most inopportune time, 3) USG interested in avoiding further publicity and SC consideration this incident and conceivable situation where USG obliged again take public stand basis SC resolution 1951, 4) USG therefore hopes GOE will find it possible soon release vessel for Suez transit if allegations of shooting prove unfounded.

Unless you see serious objections you should add that US continues believe Egypt's own interests would be best served by allowing unrestricted traffic through Suez. (Any Egyptian action in this regard need not be specifically related to Israel traffic through Canal.) We take this position not only because of our disapproval Egypt's failure comply with SC resolution September 1, 1951 but also because we anticipate there will be continuing unpleasant cases if Egypt detains Israeli ships or cargoes in future. Israel will unquestionably continue make capital of such detentions and USG will be obliged support her right of free transit pursuant to SC resolution and our interpretation self-defense clause 1888 Convention. Result will be harmful a) to US-Egyptian relations, b) to our common efforts reduce Near East tensions and c) to prospects for increased mutually beneficial collaboration between Egypt and

464. Referring to Deptel 541 October 4, Egyptian Ministry Foreign Affairs told me that he appreciates sympathetic manner in which Department is endeavoring to find solution for troublesome Bat Galim case.

It is my impression that Egyptians will not be able to produce convincing evidence that Israel is responsible for death of Egyptian fishermen.

Department's suggestion is probably correct, that GOE seized on aggression story in attempt to justify seizure of ship and divert attention from issue of interference canal traffic.

As I have reported before, Egypt during past year has considerably relaxed controls over Israeli-bound shipping. Furthermore it is a fact that Egyptian authorities, contrary to position of Arab states, up to a few months ago, were talking about possibility of eventual agreement with Israel. However, what Egyptians consider to be recent Israeli aggressive tactics have changed all this. As matters now stand, if publicly pushed into corner Egyptians will, in face of Egyptian and Arab opinion, have no alternative but to reaffirm their previous position with respect to 1951 SC resolution.

[1] Repeated to Tel Aviv, London, Paris, the Arab capitals, and Port Said.

Egyptians could only be induced to lift blockade against Israel in return for some quid pro quo. It is possible Egyptians could be induced to "cooperate" in return for Israel action on compensation of refugees and acceptance of Jordan water development on basis Johnston plan.

As indicated before, Egyptians believe that Israel objectives in this case are those set out in last paragraph Tel Aviv's 311 to Department October 4. [2] That is, (1) create complication final stages Suez base negotiations, (2) embarrass US in its efforts to lead GOE into more constructive position in ME, (3) maintain Arab-Israel tension in effort to compel UN and West to force Arab's meet with Israel.

In replying to my representations Egyptian Ministry Foreign Affairs referred with emphasis to their action taken yesterday lodging complaint with MAC and requesting MAC investigation. He takes stand that all further developments must await outcome of this investigation.

In other words, Egypt is buying time. This is an impossible moment for Egypt to make the slightest friendly gesture toward Israel, in view of what Egyptians term recent Israel provocative actions. Any such gesture now would be seized upon by Moslem brother and Communism opposition to use against him, particularly in face of upcoming final agreement with British US aid question, and approaching opening of universities.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Officer in Charge of Israel-Jordan Affairs (Bergus)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 8, 1954.

Subject: Possible U.S. Measures to Allay Israel's Apprehensions.

Participants: The Secretary of State
The Under Secretary of State
Mr. Abba Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister, Embassy of Israel
NEA—Mr. Byroade
NE—Mr. Bergus

Mr. Eban opened the conversation by stating his feeling that the dangers to Israel which he had discussed in previous talks with the Secretary were drawing nearer. The Anglo-Egyptian agreement was about to be signed, there were prospects of an American military aid agreement with Egypt, and he had reports that the U.S. military aid agreement with Iraq was about to be implemented.

The Secretary informed Mr. Eban that there had been no affirmative developments regarding U.S. military aid to Egypt. The U.S. position in the matter remained unaltered, and Mr. Eban could take negative satisfaction at the fact that there had been no affirmative developments so far. The Secretary had had occasion to speak to Mr. Anthony Eden on the subject of transit rights for Israel shipping through the Suez Canal. Results could not be promised, but the Secretary thought Mr. Eden would keep Israel's problem in mind in the course of negotiations with the Egyptians.

The Secretary asked if it would be helpful if the United States were to reaffirm the Tripartite Declaration of May 1950. Mr. Eban did not feel that repetition would add to the juridical or moral force of the document, which was not, in any case, a security guarantee. The Israel view was that any U.S. document, to be useful, should include acknowledgment of the necessity of maintaining the balance of power in the area, recognition of Israel's place in our defensive plans, and support for Israel's right to use the Suez Canal.

The Secretary read to Mr. Eban the points set forth in the draft aide-mémoire which we might consider presenting to Israel. The draft document had just come to hand and the Secretary wished it understood that his reading of it implied no commitment. The points included: (a) a reaffirmation of traditional U.S. friendship to all the states in the area; (b) the U.S. objective of a definitive and just peace between Israel and the Arab states and our belief that a series of adjustments offered the best prospects of progress toward peace; (c) U.S. determination to strengthen the area to resist Soviet aggression and our equal determination to prevent such additional strength from being used for intra-area aggression; (d) U.S. resolution to take firm measures against any state or states launching aggression in the area.

Mr. Eban stated this document fell short of Israel's needs in that nothing was said about the balance of power nor was Israel mentioned as a subject of security arrangements.

The Secretary stated that it was difficult to find words to express the concept of a balance of power. He had seen a recent evaluation of Israel's military strength vis-à-vis her neighbors and the conclusions of such an evaluation should be very gratifying to Israel. He did not feel that Israel's security was being threatened, nor would it be threatened as a result of U.S. efforts, which would be limited in scope, to strengthen the area. Mr. Eban said that Israel felt she could presently resist Arab attack but that her position now was one of minimum equilibrium which could be easily disrupted. It would be most helpful if what the Secretary had said regarding the magnitude of U.S. military aid could be said publicly to Israel.

Mr. Eban stated he had received reports to the effect that U.S. efforts to bring Egypt and Iraq into satisfactory defense arrangements had been unsuccessful. Mr. Byroade replied that he felt progress was being made. Mr. Byroade continued that for the U.S. to agree to the balance of power would mean that the entire area would have to be kept as weak as one of its states. He felt that the best approach for lasting reassurances to Israel was to chip away at the differences between Israel and her neighbors. For example, arrangements might be made whereby Egypt would relax her blockade of Israel if Israel were to take positive steps on other things—one such example might be compensation of the Arab refugees. Mr. Eban indicated Israel's readiness to take measures looking toward peace. However, Israel could not take effective action along these lines until U.S. assurances of the type he sought were forthcoming. It was not necessary for the U.S. to guarantee a mechanical balance of power. The U.S. should, however, say, formally and publicly, that it does not intend to introduce major changes in the present situation. This would create a profitable atmosphere for further moves toward peace.

The Secretary stated that he would look into the possibilities of recasting some of the language of the draft under discussion. He indicated that he would be out of Washington for a period and suggested that Mr. Eban pursue the matter with the Under Secretary and Mr. Byroade.

The Israeli Ambassador (Eban) to the Secretary of State

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, 8 October 1954.
AE/54/10/9

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The situation is so grave after our conversation today that I take the liberty of addressing my personal reflections to you even before consultation with my Government.

Our talk today was a most serious setback and disappointment. All the positive ideas which you expressed in your previous three conversations have been completely excised from the document which you discussed with me this morning; and my only source of relief was to hear that the draft was as new to you as to me and does not commit your action or decision.

May I summarise the reasons which prompt me to describe this morning's conversation as a sharp change for the worse in the situation which existed until then. On August 4 and August 7 I explained to you the facts and conditions which gave Israel its present sense of isolation and vulnerability. First, there is the implacable hostility of her neighbors; second, there is the enormous preponderance of the Arab States in relation to Israel in area, population and financial resources; third, there is the grave and extraordinary fact that all the security arrangements of the Western Powers in the Middle East have been directed and oriented towards the Arab States and have been based upon Israel's exclusion. Arab States already possess binding defence treaties with Britain; they have been offered a mutual defence association with Turkey and Pakistan; the new Anglo-Egyptian treaty is directed exclusively to the reinforcement of the strongest Arab State and to the defence of other Arab States; and one American military aid agreement has been concluded with Iraq, while another one has been offered to Egypt.

The effect is a disturbance of the balance of strength and the enunciation of Israel's exclusion as the guiding principle of security organization in the Middle East. In these circumstances our people have recently felt a growing alarm at the disadvantage in which they are being placed, as well as a profound sense of astonishment and disappointment at seeing the United States act in the Middle East with the effect of strengthening and encouraging Israel's adversaries, while excluding Israel from any process of parallel reinforcement.

In response to this account you stated that you were impressed by the picture thus drawn of Israel's sense of isolation and vulnerability; that in our situation you yourself would feel insecure and lonely; that if the effects of American policy were inadvertently to create disadvantage for Israel it would be your concern to cancel that disadvantage out; that you would like the Government and people of Israel to have a greater sense of security than they now possess; and that accordingly you would like us to consider whether it would be advantageous for the United States to formulate a Note to the Government of Israel.

Amongst the subjects to be included in such a Note you mentioned particularly:

(a) The resolve of the United States not to put Israel in a disadvantageous position;

(b) Israel's eligibility for a military aid agreement with the United States. Here you stated that you did not exclude asking the Congress for a special provision in this respect; (I later pointed out that the existing legislation would make such eligibility possible);

(c) A more specific guarantee of Israel's security than that contained in the 1950 Declaration; and

(d) Resolute efforts by the United States to bring about the unconditional cessation of the Suez Canal blockade restrictions.

You said that you were thinking of "something more than a restatement of generalities".

After returning from Israel, where I found growing disquiet and concern at the current Western policy of making unilateral security arrangements with the Arab States, with Israel's exclusion, I met you again on September 15. In that meeting I emphasised that the crux of the matter was the need to reassure Israel that the balance was not going to be substantively changed politically or practically in her disfavor.

If the United States Government would accept that principle there were two obvious corollaries. First, could not the United States formally convey to Israel that it was not the American intention to pursue military programs such as would effect a substantive change in the present balance; and second, should not the United States assert, as a matter of simple equality, that whatever military arrangements or relationships were to be offered to the Arab States, would be offered to Israel as well?

Having listened to my analysis you stated that you thought we could make some progress and should negotiate along the lines which you mentioned to me in August.

The news that you were approaching Israel's security problems in a spirit of comprehension and sympathy had meanwhile spread amongst our people. It was a source of gratification and consolation. At the same time it was clear that if this moment were to be lost and to end in disillusionment, while the United States and Britain continued to base their security activities in the Middle East solely upon strengthening the Arab States and entering into agreements with them, then a situation of exceptional gravity would be created. Israel would conclude that her survival and security were in dire peril, and this sense of peril would inspire all her policies.

Against this background you will readily understand the disappointment which came upon me when I heard the terms of a draft which had been submitted to you this morning. That draft bears no relation to the lines of your own thought as you expressed them in previous conversations. There is no talk in the draft of a Note in which the United States would seek to reassure Israel concerning her security. There is no mention of any intention to apply military policies in the Middle East in such a way as not to change the balance of power to Israel's disadvantage. These is no talk of offering Israel inclusion in the military aid program, in which the two strongest Arab States have already been offered participation. There is no talk of any approach to a security guarantee for Israel which would go beyond the existing Declaration of May 1950.

In these circumstances, I must say that the draft submitted to you which I heard this morning would not merely fail to give us any sense of reassurance but would, I fear, have the reverse effect of confirming our worst fears and apprehensions; for the author of the draft does nothing to challenge the implication that the United States will pursue a policy of giving military aid agreements and arms to Arab States alone, while offering nothing politically or militarily to Israel.

I am writing this letter in the earnest hope that it may still be possible for action to be taken which would show respect for the vulnerability and insecurity of a small country whose hostile neighbors are being strengthened and encouraged by the security arrangements of the Western Powers. This would not be the only international occasion on which your personal statesmanship lifted a deadlock onto a new plane of hopeful progress. The feeling that this was to happen here moved me to attempt to persuade my Government and people that you understood our position and desired to alleviate it. You will, therefore, understand how grievously I was affected by hearing a draft which missed the whole spirit and content of your previous analysis. Only a deep concern for the historic relationship of our two countries would have impelled me, amidst your heavy preoccupations, to write to you as frankly as I have here. I hope that you will understand that I do so out of a sense of duty and in deep personal respect.

Yours very sincerely,

ABBA EBAN

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs (Hart)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] October 10, 1954.

Subject: Bat Galim Case.

Participants: General Mahmoud Riad, Head of the Arab Section, Egyptian Foreign Ministry and member of Egyptian Delegation to the General Assembly
Mr. Parker T. Hart, Director, NE

General Riad raised the question of the Bat Galim and asked what I thought of Israel's action in attempting for the first time to send a vessel flying the Israeli flag through the Suez Canal. I replied that Israel had openly stated that this was a test case. "But testing for what?" asked Riad, "Could they possibly imagine that we would permit a vessel flying this flag to transit the canal?" General Riad expressed his view that the Israel Government was attempting to throw a monkey wrench into the final stages of the British-Egyptian negotiations.

While agreeing that this might be one motive for Israel's reaction, I felt more inclined to believe that the Israel Government had sent the Bat Galim in the belief that she would be seized and with the intention of forcing the hand of the United States on a matter of principle involving Suez Canal traffic. I said that Israel had for some time been pushing the U.S. Government to intervene in the Anglo-Egyptian negotiations of the matter of Suez Canal traffic. The U.S. Government had felt, however, that the Egyptian Government was actually dropping restrictions on traffic. I understood that a lot of cargo was being allowed to pass through the Canal to Israel. General Riad replied: "Not a lot, all cargo." He personally had kept an accurate record made of cargo shipment to or from Israel which had transited the Canal during several months. The Egyptian Government had not interfered since all traffic was under non-Israel flag. Egypt, however, could not permit a vessel flying the Israeli flag to enter her territorial waters and would insist on her rights in this respect under Article 10, in view of Arab opinion.

I indicated that the United States was not anxious for the principle of freedom of transit to once again come before the Security Council. However, should the principle again be an issue for Council vote, I could not see how the United States could do otherwise than go right down the line supporting the Convention of 1888 and the Security Council Resolution of 1951. I remarked that this had nothing to do with Zionist pressures in this country but was a position which we and most maritime nations of the world had taken long ago on the meaning of the Convention of 1888. Egypt was therefore likely in such a case to find most of the Western world voting against her.

Riad replied that he understood our position. If Egypt were forced to choose between the approval of the West and the approval of the Arab nations, she would unquestionably choose the latter. However, he felt that there was room for further discusion on an interpretation of the Convention of 1888 and of the Egyptian Armistice Agreement with Israel. He believed that Egypt had good grounds for asserting that Israel flag vessels could not enter her territorial waters. They might carry cargoes of explosives or otherwise endanger Egypt's security. If Egypt were to search such vessels, this would also be protested as interference. How, therefore, was Egypt to protect herself except by exclusion? He wanted my views regarding cargoes of weapons and munitions.

I replied that we were now getting into technicalities which I would have to investigate further before I could reply. However, I wished to reassert my belief that the United States would have to continue its strong stand for freedom of transit if the Bat Galim case became an issue of principle in the Security Council. We would not feel that because Egypt disliked the flag a vessel was flying, she was entitled to forbid her to transit.

The President's Special Representative (Johnston) to the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade)

SECRET WASHINGTON, October 15, 1954.

DEAR MR. BYROADE: Barring unforeseen developments, I am planning to resume negotiations on the Jordan Valley project in the Near East in January and February.

In doing so, it will be essential for me to know how far I may go in making commitments to the four interested states with respect to possible U.S. aid for other development projects outside of the Jordan Valley program itself.

As you will recall, we have on several occasions agreed that in the final stage of negotiation, the persuasive effect of an offer to assist in certain undertakings, not necessarily related to the Jordan Valley, might be decisive.

To be in a position to make any such offer, however, I shall need firm prior assurances of the assent and support of the Executive Branch, not only in terms of policy but in terms of the amounts which might be involved.

In other words, assuming that achievement of our political objectives is sufficiently important to warrant some measure of additional financial aid to the countries concerned, and assuming that an offer of such additional aid may be necessary to conclude the matter successfully, within what financial limits may I negotiate?

Whatever amount may be indicated for this purpose, it should, of course, be in addition to amounts presently contemplated under the regular economic aid program for the region. Funds under that program might conceivably be used to help finance elements of the Jordan Valley project, but there would be little bargaining value in offering aid which the governments concerned are already anticipating.

I might add that the possibility of a change in U.S. economic aid attitudes and mechanisms at the end of fiscal 1955 leads me to feel that some assurance as to my position in this matter is doubly necessary.

I shall therefore appreciate the Department's taking such steps as may be necessary to determine policy and the limits available to me, and provide, on behalf of the Executive Branch as a whole, the assurance I feel to be essential.

Sincerely yours,

ERIC JOHNSTON

The Secretary of State to the Israeli Ambassador (Eban)

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL WASHINGTON, October 18, 1954.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Your letter of October 8, 1954, reached me just prior to my departure from Washington. I returned this morning but, as I told you when we saw each other on October 8, I must leave for Europe tomorrow afternoon where I shall remain until October 24.

I wanted you to know, however, that I have read your letter very carefully and appreciate its frankness. I am keeping this matter under my personal review and look forward to our continuing our talks on Israel's problems. However, as certain of the issues involved have found their way into the press and have become the subject of speculation in political circles in this country on the eve of an election, it is probably best that substantive discussions on these issues be postponed until the general atmosphere is calmer.

Sincerely yours,

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Secretary of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL [WASHINGTON,] October 26, 1954.

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION WITH AMBASSADOR EBAN OF ISRAEL

Mr. Eban called at my request at 4:00 p. m. He came privately through the private elevator and he and I were alone.

I said to the Ambassador that I thought he ought to know that we knew that there were Israeli Embassy activities which seemed clearly to go beyond the bounds of what was proper for a foreign government in that they involved domestic political action. I said that I was confident that his Government would not want to go beyond the bounds of propriety and that I felt confident that once the matter had been brought to his attention, he would take proper steps to correct the situation. I said that I did not want to make any incident of the matter at the present time.

Ambassador Eban said that he would at once look into the situation. It was, he said, difficult to keep everything under control as there was a natural desire on the part of his Government and his Embassy to develop friendships on the part of the American people; that the Arab countries were trying to develop hostility on the part of the American people and that they were inevitably forced into corresponding measures. He repeated, however, that he would at once look into the situation and attempt to control any irregularities that might exist.

The Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the President's Special Representative (Johnston)

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 1, 1954.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: Your letter of October 15, 1954, raises the question of funds required to support your negotiations looking toward agreement on the Jordan Valley problem, and it is very timely to consider this subject as the Mutual Security Program for 1956 must soon be submitted for consideration by the Budget Bureau.

To take the problem as a whole, we have the following line of approach in mind:

Funds for the irrigation program in Jordan where our principal objective will be refugee settlement should be sought in the first instance through the UNRWA channel. Our present thinking is that we should look toward a U.S. contribution to UNRWA for fiscal 1956 of the order of $60 million, which would enable the relief program to be continued and substantial capital to be made available for requirements of irrigation in the Jordan Valley in Jordan and the project in Egypt's Sinai desert. UNRWA may also be required to find funds for the elements in the Jordan Valley program involving irrigation in Lebanon and Syria and this will be taken into account.

It is more difficult for us to justify the prospective power development of the Yarmuk River in terms of refugee settlement, and we would therefore propose that development assistance from Mutual Security funds be sought to finance power installations. Here we consider that it might be possible to justify a sum of the order of $25 million although we recognize that the expenditure of this amount will carry us well beyond fiscal 1956.

We have no established pattern of economic aid beyond technical assistance programs in Lebanon and in Jordan, and we have no programs at all in Syria. As was the case in the 1955 program, we think we are justified in seeking a further allotment of $20 million for these three countries using the same rationale which has served us in the past years, identifying our interest in these countries with the need for solution of the Arab refugee problem with which is linked progress in the Jordan Valley. Your letter suggests that the amounts required for your purpose be an addition to amounts "presently contemplated under the regular economic aid program". You also indicate that what you require would be funds over and beyond what these Governments anticipate. In these Arab states there is no measure of their present anticipation, and it is therefore difficult to determine the total that might be required by you inasmuch as it would apparently be the sum of two elements, one of which at least is an unknown. We consider, however, that if funds of the nature indicated above can be found for the Arab states, your position would be a strong one with the Arabs if you could relate their availability to progress in your negotiations. A provision of assistance for Egypt is also contemplated amounting to $40 million.

In the case of Israel it is easier perhaps to identify Israel's anticipations of United States Government assistance, although a provisional estimate of aid for 1956 has not yet been made. To whatever figure is determined for "the regular program" we propose to add a further $15 million to finance development projects in Israel in 1956 subject to the outcome of your negotiations; and as you have so effectively stated in the past, the attitude of the United States toward aid in future years will no doubt be affected by the position that Israel takes in cooperating with your efforts now.

We shall be interested to know whether this program appeals to you as a satisfactory one to present to the Budget Bureau. Budget Bureau approval would be the most convenient method of obtaining the support within the executive branch which you seek. You will, of course, realize that funds are not customarily voted for the Mutual Security Program by Congress until the summer, and that negotiations which you conduct in the spring cannot receive legislative support unless extraordinary measures are taken with the Congress at an earlier date.

Before you undertake your next visit to the Near East it will be well to consider other than financial inducements which might make it possible to secure a greater degree of acceptance for the Unified Plan, particularly in Israel, and we therefore hope to have a thorough review of all pertinent factors with you prior to your visit; and we agree that we should seek authority for you to offer, on behalf of the executive branch, to seek legislation to provide still further financial support from the United States if such an offer is necessary, in your judgment, to obtain a final agreement on the Jordan.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY A. BYROADE

The Ambassador in Israel (Lawson) to the Department of State[1]

SECRET TEL AVIV, November 3, 1954—9 p. m.

398. Eytan, Director General Foreign Ministry, called last night on Russell, saying he had come on instructions from Sharett, who planned to take up today same problem with new British Ambassador upon latter's call to present copies letter of credence.

Eytan said that IG for some time had followed moderate policy on Egyptian border in pursuance US recommendation that IG follow policy of restraint. Egyptian activites on the border, however, have been increasing in spite of IG moderate attitude and were rising to a "crescendo". These have culminated Monday evening in blowing up two houses belonging to Kurdish Jews. Fortunately, houses at moment were unoccupied. If they had been occupied there would have been large number of casualties and the "fat would have been in the fire". IG is convinced that activities are GOE-inspired and directed because: (1) IG has it indirectly on authority of high Egyptian Government official that GOE believes it can act with impunity along the border; (2) infiltrator recently captured by Israelis proved to be Sudanese, who under interrogation said he and others had been recruited and trained by Egyptian intelligence officers for sabotage activites along the border.

Eytan closed this subject by saying that Sharett wanted us to know that his position (moderation) was becoming very difficult under the circumstances of Egyptian activity on Israel side of the border. Eytan requested that the Department, through American Embassy Cairo, take measures, more forcefully than in the past, to obtain abandonment by GOE of their infiltration practices.

Tekoah, charge armistice affairs Foreign Ministry, elaborated today to Embassy counselor reasons IG conviction recent incidents GOE-inspired and directed. He said conclusion based:

> (a) Planned sabotage character of incidents, i.e., blowing up pipeline three times in six weeks (actually eleven weeks), destruction bridge near Eilath when only Egyptians vicinity were in army camps;
> (b) Reliable evidence provided by number of captured infiltrators in course examination and trial in which they claimed their recruitment, training and supervision was by Egyptian intelligence officers.

Embassy comments: In Embassy's judgment, the character and number of important incidents within IG territory along Gaza border recently makes it improbable, irrespective of which party is more responsible for basic border tension, that IG will long refrain from organized retaliatory action unless there is a marked diminution such activity. Eytan's message from Sharett may be taken as meaning that IDF elements are pressing for greater freedom of action in dealing with Gaza border problem.

Eytan left summary recent incidents Egyptian border which will be transmitted Department. Important incidents listed were those reported Embtels 238, 251, 298 and Weekas 36, 38, and 43. [2]

He will take up the matter with Prime Minister, Ministers of War and Interior to ascertain if there is any truth in the Israeli allegations. He does not believe that they are true. 241. We believe that continued debate in SC of Egyptian restrictions on Suez Canal traffic will only exacerbate situation NE without producing practical results. Israel appears intent on pressing issue in SC and Egypt on resisting pressures from SC.

To break stalemate we believe SC might adopt resolution referring question legality continuing Egyptian restrictions to ICJ thus forestalling further SC debate until opinion rendered on grounds matter sub judice. At same time SC could note Azmi October 14 statement that Egypt "has refrained from any interference with vessels conveying goods to Israel or coming from Israel ports and passing through Suez Canal". Although probably not intended by Azmi to encompass Israel flag ships, policy enunciated if carried out would remove in practice large part of burden of restrictions on Israel. Formal note of policy by SC would tend to insure its implementation and lessen deterrent effect restrictions emphasized by Eban.

Accordingly USUN requested comment on tentative draft resolution given below and discuss matter with UK delegation. We envisage that USUN would subsequently discuss idea with Egyptians in confidence and without showing them resolution. We hope Egypt will feel able concur in suggested procedure. Particularly useful would be statement by Egyptian delegate reaffirming declaration quoted above.

"The Security Council,

Noting its resolution S/2322 of September 1, 1951,

Noting that the Government of Egypt has not revoked decrees imposing certain restrictions upon the passage through the Suez Canal of ships and goods bound to or from Israel,

Noting the statement by the Representative of Egypt in the Security Council that the Government of Egypt "has refrained from any interference with vessels conveying goods to Israel or coming from Israel ports and passing through the Suez Canal,"

Considering that there are involved questions of a legal nature in connection with the determination of privileges of freedom of transit through the Suez Canal,

Considering further the desirability of an adequate consideration of these legal issues and a pronouncement thereon by the International Court of Justice,

Requests the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on the following question:

Is the present legislation and practice of the Government of Egypt with respect to freedom of transit through the Suez Canal consistent with international obligations of the Government of Egypt, taking into account (a) the decisions and recommendation of the United Nations organs on the Palestine and Suez Canal transit questions, (b) the Suez Canal Convention of 1888, and (c) other relevant international agreements and rules of international law."

We now informed Israel intends send additional Israel flag ships to Suez Canal as test cases. If Egypt accepts proposal suggested above, we could urge Israel refrain from further moves until ICJ opinion rendered on grounds new Egyptian policy noted by Security Council largely removes economic burden restrictions on Israel.

US seriously concerned series incidents Gaza area for which Egypt censured by MAC several recent occasions. Israel has claimed to US pattern of incidents implicates GOE and that she amassing "evidence" from apprehended infiltrators. While US does not accept Israel thesis re GOE involvement US does believe GOE responsible for bringing to end incidents instigated by persons from area under Egyptian control. Memorandum of Conversation, by the Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs (Merchant)

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 5, 1954.

Subject: Middle East

Participants: The Secretary
The British Ambassador
Sir Robert Scott
Livingston T. Merchant

In connection with a call on the Secretary on another matter, the British Ambassador said that Sir Anthony Eden was anxious that the Secretary should know of his growing concern over the situation in the Middle East. Sir Anthony is searching for some plan for reconciliation and in this connection has reverted to an earlier thought he had mentioned to the Secretary which would be to attempt for the improvement of Arab-Israeli relations an exercise along the lines which worked successfully in the case of Trieste.

Sir Roger said that Shuckburgh, an Assistant Under Secretary for Middle Eastern Affairs, is now touring the area in search of ideas and Sir Anthony hoped that when Shuckburgh returned to London, the Secretary would send someone over from Washington to talk the situation over. (At this point the Ambassador gave the Secretary the attached aide-mémoire [1] elaborating on this idea.)

The Secretary said that he welcomed these views of Sir Anthony, and that he too was most anxious to tackle this problem of the Middle East which deeply concerned him. With the Egyptian matter now settled [2] it seemed we were in a position to move. Exactly by what measure he was not sure; possibly something might be done by water development in the area. He thought that it might take one or two years to arrive at a comprehensive solution and that it might be desirable to find someone on our side who would devote his entire time to this particular problem. In any event, he generally shared Sir Anthony's view that we should move without further loss of time. In conclusion the Secretary said that we would consider further the general approach suggested by Sir Anthony. (At this point the Ambassador gave the Secretary the attached copy of Sir Anthony's speech on the Middle East in the House of Commons on Nov. 2.[3]

Aide-Mémoire From the British Embassy to the Department of State

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 5, 1954.

ISRAEL AND THE ARAB STATES

Although there has recently been some improvement in the local situation on the borders of Israel and our Agreement with Egypt should have a further stabilising effect, the basic problem of Arab-Israeli relations remains unsolved and without prospect of solution. The Egyptians may not actually be thirsting for another round, and indeed they have assured us that they have no intention of resorting further to force. But they still consider themselves to be at war with Israel. Israeli traffic through the Canal is interfered with and the development of trade is impeded. The refugee situation, in spite of efforts by the United Nations Relief and Works Agency, is getting worse instead of better. There may be no immediate danger of a fresh outbreak of hostilities but if nothing is done to improve matters during the next few months, the danger may well recur. Meanwhile, a sense of insecurity prevails over the whole area and healthy economic development is held up.

It seems to Sir Anthony Eden that the situation offers a challenge to American and British statesmanship and diplomatic skill. The United Nations Truce Supervision Organisation helps to prevent incidents but is not equipped to tackle Arab-Israel differences at their source. He is convinced that unless we jointly develop and apply a positive policy designed to ease these tensions and bring about a lasting settlement, the situation can only be expected to drift from bad to worse. The analogy of Trieste has been much in his mind. In the case of Trieste we set ourselves the objective of reconciling a complicated dispute between two countries with each of whom we had some influence. We appointed a joint Anglo-American team to pursue this objective and after months of patient and discreet work they were successful in bringing the two countries together to the satisfaction of both. The question is whether the same technique could not be applied to relations between Israel and the Arab States.

Sir Anthony Eden realises that the problem may seem even more difficult than was the Trieste problem. A number of countries are concerned and the vital interests of some of them are at stake. But it will be remembered how intractable the Trieste problem used to be considered. Sir Anthony Eden does not propose to suggest now what might be the main elements of a solution of the Arab-Israel dispute. Indeed, it seems to him that the first task ought to be precisely that of working out these elements together. When we have reached agreement on that we could go on to consider the methods to be used.

Mr. Shuckburgh, who is in charge of Middle Eastern Affairs in the Foreign Office, is at present visiting the area, and it is hoped that when he returns to London on December 14, he may have some valuable suggestions to make. Would the Secretary of State consider sending one of his experts from the State Department to London to join forces with Mr. Shuckburgh as soon as he returns and to work out with him the main ingredients of a solution of all these problems for consideration by our two Governments? We could then determine how to proceed with the Arabs and the Israelis with a view to their accepting our solution; it might be necessary at this second stage to retain some form of joint machinery, as in the case of Trieste, to control the whole operation. This could be either in Washington or in London.

We would, of course, have to keep the French generally informed of our plans. But Sir Anthony Eden would hope that we might be able to avoid having them closely associated with us in their detailed discussion and execution.

UNITED NATIONS RELIEF AND WORKS AGENCY FOR PALESTINE (UNRWA): REPORTS OF THE DIRECTOR AND ADVISORY COMMISSION

THE PROBLEM

The Report of the Director[2] and the special joint report of the Director and the Advisory Commission[3] of UNRWA will be before the Ad Hoc Political Committee for debate and will involve the following questions:

1. The extension of the life of UNRWA.
2. Other substantive issues raised in the report and contained in the report's recommendations for a General Assembly resolution including the budget for continued relief and for the reintegration program.
3. The injection into the committee's debate of certain other political issues involved in the Palestine question.

UNITED STATES POSITION

1. The United States will support the continuation of UNRWA for a period of five years as necessary for the welfare of the Arab refugees. This position is consistent with United States objectives in the area, and with the objectives of the Mutual Security Act of 1954 and the explicit positions of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee (See "comment" for citations).

2. With regard to the substantive issues raised in the report, the United States will hold:

a. On compensation or repatriation, the failure to resolve these problems must not be an obstacle to UNRWA's efforts to rehabilitate refugees as promptly as possible.
b. Any redefinition of a refugee eligible for relief will be contingent on the establishment of an effective system for determining the bona fides of relief recipients and the deletion from the registration rolls of persons not entitled to relief.
c. No specific authorization to the Director to employ a portion of rehabilitation funds for general economic development programs of the area governments is desirable or necessary. Rehabilitation funds are to ensure to the extent practicable the settlement of the refugee question and UNRWA already has adequate terms of reference under previous General Assembly resolutions so that funds can be spent in the manner and for purposes designed to achieve the Agency's objective.
d. The budgets for relief and for rehabilitation are approved.

---

[2] The report of the director of UNRWA to the Ninth Session of the General Assembly covered the period from July 1, 1953 to June 30, 1954. (U.N. doc. A/2717)
[3] U.N. doc. A/2717/Add.1.

3. It opposes the injection of any political issues, not raised by the reports but involved in the Palestine question, into the draft resolution of UNRWA. Specifically these issues might relate to duties and functions of the Palestine Conciliation Commission (PCC); the enforcement of previous United Nations resolutions; territorial and boundary adjustments; and the status of Jerusalem. Specific instructions from the Department should be sought by the Delegation should any such issues become the subject of a draft resolution.

4. It will inititate, if necessary, and seek limited co-sponsorship of well-disposed nations for the draft resolution attached.

COMMENT

1. Background

A. There are two aspects of the Arab refugee problem: relief and eventual resettlement. Both the immediate problem of relief and the long-range preparations for the resettlement of the refugees require the continued earnest interest of the United States and the continuance in existence of the UNRWA, the agency presently handling these problems. The question of the agency's continued existence will come before the General Assembly this year. Because the refugee problem has not been solved and no better means of settling it is likely to be found than such an organization as UNRWA, the United States should support the continuation of the agency and its activities. This position is consistent with that set forth in the report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, No. 1799, dated July 13, 1954, on the Mutual Security Act of 1954.

> "Economic and political factors have been the major blocks to a vigorous reintegration program. The economic factors revolve mostly around the poverty and aridity of the area and could be solved in part by the regional development of water resources proposed under the TVA plan. Thus far, political factors have prevented the acceptance of this plan by the nations concerned. The committee cannot express too strongly its deep concern over the political tensions in the Near East, and its conviction that the problem is one for the United Nations. The United States should continue to cooperate with the U.N. in seeking a solution even though some years may be required to find it." (Page 40)

Excerpt from Report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the Mutual Security Act of 1954 (Report No. 1925, Part I).

> "The countries involved are dry and barren and the lack of full cooperation on the part of some of the governments involved, as well as the refugees themselves, has been a contributing factor in the slow progress in this field.
> "Nevertheless, the United States regards the tension in the Near East as of serious concern. It is important to indicate by authorizing funds even before appropriations are to be requested that the United States desires to cooperate in finding a solution to the problem.

"An authorization is made of $30 million for Fiscal Year 1955, but appropriation for this amount is not being sought in this session of Congress. The unobligated Fiscal Year 1954 funds, presently estimated at $29 million is authorized to be reappropriated." (Page 72)

B. The report which will be before the Ad Hoc Committee is not an "agreed" report although drafted by the members of the Advisory Commission and approved by them ad referendum it has been signed by the United States with reservations and has not been signed by Jordan or Syria. The reservations of the United States was contained in a memorandum which was circulated to the members of the Advisory Commission (see attachment). This statement in the memorandum should be part of the United States Representative's speech in the Ad Hoc Committee. Because the report is not agreed to, particularly by two of the Arab members of the Advisory Commission, we may expect that the debate will be far more acrimonious than would have been the case had the report obtained the signatures of all of the members of the Advisory Commission. For a discussion of tactics in debate see Item 2 below.

C. The Advisory Commission's report may be summarized as follows:

1. It indicates dissatisfaction with the small progress which has been made in the settlement of the refugee problem, particularly in the matters of repatriation and compensation. (For your information: It has been long since agreed by Arab Delegations that rehabilitation need not prejudice the other rights of refugees.) It suggests coordination between the Advisory Commission and PCC.
2. It suggests that UNRWA's mandate be continued for another five years. It discusses the fact that while progress has been made on surveys for major projects in connection with the resettlement of refugees the existing economic and political circumstances and the prospects for new projects do not promise an early resettlement of the refugees. It accordingly suggests that while it is important to find new projects the Director should be authorized and given discretion over a portion of the rehabilitation fund for the purpose to permit the Agency to participate in general development programs of the Governments of the area. It goes on to point out that such general development programs will require substantial capital funds in addition to those which could be made available through the Agency. (For your information: Such funds have been available in past years and will be sought again by the Executuve Branch of the government.) It also stresses the importance of the education and vocational training programs as part of the rehabilitation of the Agency.
3. With regard to the relief program it suggests that the definition of a refugee should be revised to include certain refugees not now eligible by the definition. It also points out that a substantial number of children of refugees do not receive rations at the present time and suggests procedures whereby these problems might be handled.

4. While believing that present standards of relief are adequate it suggests that there is a distinct need for supplementing present contributions of clothing with a distribution of cotton cloth particularly for use in making children's garments.

5. It indicates that it believes to be necessary budgetary requirements for the forthcoming year.

D. The Palestine question has many facets of which the refugee problem is only one. Other aspects of the problem include the question of a peace settlement between Israel and the Arab States, the settlement of the question of status of Jerusalem, and the improvement of the general economic and security situation in the area. The unhappy tendency in General Assembly debate on any phase of this problem is for a number of delegations, particularly the Arabs, to make reference to aspects of the problem other than the one technically the subject of discussion. Thus it may be expected that in the forthcoming debate the question of Israel repatriating the Arab refugees, Israel's paying compensation to the refugees, Israel's agreeing to accept the 1947 partitioning resolution as the basis for a political settlement, all will be raised by the Arabs. The Israelis in retort will make proposals for direct negotiations with the Arabs which are quite unacceptable to them. The fact that our new Ambassador to Israel presented his credentials to the Israeli President in Jerusalem will be attacked not only by the Arabs but possibly by a number of the Latin American countries in prejudicing the United Nations position on the internationalization of Jerusalem. With regard to the security situation in the area comments may be forthcoming and our arms aid programs for several of the Arab States may be subject to Israeli attack. The earnest efforts of the United States Delegation should be directed to avoiding acrimonious discussion of these questions which are peripheral to the debate on the Advisory Commission's report. It is our present understanding that the Director of UNRWA, Mr. Harry Labouisse, in his opening statement will urge that the debate be limited to discussion of the report. The United States Delegation should support this position.

E. With regard to the various problems referred to above as likely to arise in debate it is of utmost importance that the United States Delegation bear in mind the importance of avoiding anything in debate or in a resolution arising out of the debate which might prejudice the further negotiations which Ambassador Johnston will be undertaking with the Arab States and Israel commencing in January 1955. It is the Department's view that an international agreement for the mutual development of the Jordan Valley may well be realized as a result of Ambassador Johnston's projected negotiations. Such an agreement on this project would be the most significant step which the states in the area could take toward an eventual settlement of all of the problems involved in the Palestine question. While supporting this and other similar programs the United States Delegation should avoid anything which might prejudice the achievement of such an agreement. However, this does not mean that the Arab Delegations and Israel cannot be dealt with frankly and firmly in any discussions which the United States Delegation may have with them.

2. Tactics

The debate on the Palestine refugee question inevitably is time consuming. This is due to the facts that: (a) there are two consistent Arab trouble makers in any debate on this question, Ahmed Shukairi, Assistant Secretary General of the Arab League and acting head of the Syrian Delegation (in violation of Arab League directives), and Dr. Fadil Al Jamali, head of the Iraqi Delegation; (b) all the Arab Delegations and Israel will insist on long speeches on the subject; (c) there is a general lack of understanding of the problem on the part of many [of] the delegations, but a willingness to appear as mediators in debate, particularly as its temper rises. Dr. Jamali and Mr. Shukairi are old hands at debate on this question and they may be expected to produce several long speeches each on the subject. These speeches will probably be counterproductive to their cause and if allowed to proceed unimpeded will tend to induce a healthy attitude of moderation on the part of other Arab Delegations and an irritated and aloof attitude on the part of other delegations which might normally wish to participate in debate. Accordingly, the United States Delegation should not interfere with Dr. Jamali and Mr. Shukairi's free reign in debate. The United States Delegation should be prepared, after an appropriate time following the speeches of the Arab States and Israel, to deliver a moderate conciliatory but frank discussion of the problem. It should be prepared to initiate, if necessary, the attached draft resolution with appropriate co-sponsors. It should seek to discourage resolutions or amendments to the attached draft resolution which tend to discuss subjects not the subject of debate. It should seek instructions if it becomes necessary to vote on any such resolutions or amendments.

DRAFT RESOLUTION

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 194 (III) of 11 December 1948; 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949; 393 (V) of 2 December 1950; 513 (VI) of 26 January 1952; 614 (VII) of 6 November 1952; and 720 (VIII) of 27 November 1953;

Noting the Special Report of the Director and the Advisory Commission of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East dated 8 October 1954;

Decides to extend the mandate of the Agency for five years ending 30 June 1960;

Requests the Director, in consultation with the Advisory Commission, to continue negotiations with the governments of the host countries with a view to arranging the gradual transfer to them of the administration of relief during the five year period;

Requests the governments of the area to continue to cooperate with the Director in carrying out presently agreed projects and, further, to cooperate in the search for new projects capable of supporting substantial numbers of refugees, and in reaching agreement thereon;

Decides to maintain the rehabilitation fund of $200,000,000, subject to reductions for expenditures already made;

Approves a relief budget of $25.1 million and a rehabilitation budget of $36.2 million for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1955;

Requests the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds after consultation with the Director of UNRWA to seek such funds as may be required by the Agency, from time to time. [4]

637. As I reported in mytel 617, [2] I spoke to Minister Foreign Affairs last Saturday about Tel Aviv's 398. [3] I spoke again to him this morning along lines Deptel 705. [4] Fawzi said that in meantime he had spoken to Prime Minister, Minister Interior, etc. They all agree that every effort should be made to prevent incidents in Gaza area. On one hand they do not deny that there are infiltrations from Gaza side. On other hand they forcefully insist that Israelis are exaggerating their number and importance.

They insist also that for some time they have been taking appropriate measures to control infiltrations. They will redouble their efforts in that direction. They definitely do not want trouble with Israel.

In this connection GOE has always indicated willingness enter into cooperative control arrangements between local police commanders. However, when General Burns recently attempted to call meeting for this purpose, Israelis indicated they were not ready to hold such discussions now (see Embdesps 858, November 5 and 886, November 10). Aide-Mémoire From the Department of State to the British Embassy

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 17, 1954.

The Department of State welcomes the suggestion of Sir Anthony Eden that the United States and United Kingdom renew efforts to develop policies designed to ease Arab-Israel tensions and bring about a lasting settlement. The entire problem, which is giving the Department of State constant concern despite some general improvement of conditions in the area, is under active study here and the Department of State looks forward to a comprehensive discussion with the Foreign Office. The Department of State would prefer to hold the talks immediately after the New Year,[1] which would facilitate completion of its review, and it would be agreeable to sending officers to London for the purpose. The mechanism which should be used to carry out the project could be determined during the consultations in London.

The Department of State does not believe it necessary to advise other countries of the plans at this stage. Eventually, it may prove useful to keep both the French and Turks generally informed, and perhaps to solicit their assistance in connection with certain aspects of the undertaking.

Memorandum by the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Byroade) to the Secretary of State

SECRET WASHINGTON, November 22, 1954.

Subject: The Arab-Israel Problem—Situation Report.

We are giving top priority to the preparation of a suggested across-the-board approach for a settlement of the Palestine question. We are aiming at talks with the British with a view to arriving at an agreed plan of action early in the new year. A firm joint position will not emerge until after the holidays.

As to the current situation in the area, I think we can safely say that things are not as bad as they look. In fact, there is a glimmer of hope here and there in the total picture.

There seems to be a little more calmness of attitude on the part of the Israelis. For one thing, it appears that the Israel Government is embarrassed and abashed at the proportions and nature of the pre-election campaign against our policies. There has been limited public recognition in Israel of the fact that Israel's relations with the U.S. cannot always be determined by efforts made on the American domestic political scene. It is becoming clear that Israel now realizes the necessity of accepting a division of the waters of the Jordan along the lines of the Unified Plan. There has been no large-scale Israel raid into Arab territory since September 3 and the Israel-Jordan frontier has been relatively quiet for over two months.

On the Arab side there is likewise evidence of some improvement. Egypt is cooperating in the project for refugee settlement in Sinai and the Arab states in general continue their support for an equitable division of the waters of the Jordan. The Egyptian Foreign Minister has indicated a desire to re-examine with us some of the basic problems of the area, including Arab-Israel relations. While King Hussein of Jordan reiterated the regular Arab line of "no peace, no negotiations with the Jews" in his speech from the Throne on November 1, he let it be known to the British Ambassador in Amman that he had objected to this but had been "overruled". The King intimated that he might personally have to take in hand the matter of a settlement of this long-outstanding issue. The Jordan Prime Minister has indicated indirectly his feeling that an overall settlement might be worked out, particularly if Egypt were to take the lead. It must be remembered that these Jordan statements were forthcoming in the atmosphere of two months' peace on the border.

There have been dark spots in the picture as well—incidents in Gaza; continued official Israel statements criticizing U.S. policy; talk of a "second round" by the new Syrian Prime Minister, etc. On balance, however, and with full recognition of the urgency of the problem, I think we are in a position where we can give the matter the detailed consideration it requires.

The Secretary of State to Certain Diplomatic and Consular Offices [1]

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, November 22, 1954.

CA-3378. Subject: Arab-Israel Settlement.

The purpose of this instruction is to solicit the assistance of the addressees in working out the elements of a final settlement of the Arab-Israel problem and in determining the most effective tactics to this end, including timing. To serve as a starting point, certain preliminary views developed in NEA are set forth.

It should be made clear at the start that we are under no illusions as to the complexities of the problem the emotions present and the basic conflicts of interest. NIE 36–54 on "Probable Developments in the Arab States" of September 7, 1954 [2] states "Arab leaders are likely to be extremely cautious about offending public feeling on the Israeli question and will probably not be willing for some time to risk negotiation and compromise on the most important issues. . . [3] They will refuse to meet with Israel for the purpose of negotiating outstanding issues unless Israel meets conditions—acceptance of existing UN resolutions as a basis for negotiation—which the Arabs are reasonably sure Israel will never agree to. In dealing with specific problems in Arab-Israeli relations short of a formal peace settlement some Arab leaders have recently appeared less intransigent. . . The Israelis have not, however, shown a like tendency to reasonableness and compromise." However, an ideal time to seek a comprehensive settlement will probably never arrive and the present appears to us as propitious a moment as is likely to occur in the foreseeable future. Also, the attempt at least will stimulate thinking in terms of a settlement, and show how far we may expect to go in the short term. In addition, the elements of a settlement developed may serve as a goal towards which to work.

[1] Sent to Amman, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jidda, Tel Aviv, and Jerusalem; repeated to London and Ankara.

The general objective sought may be described as: To bring about a transition from the present armistice regime governing relations between the Arab states and Israel to formal peace and concurrent agreements on settlements of issues remaining from the Palestine conflict to the maximum extent feasible in a span of two years; the effort to be carried out in a manner not unduly jeopardizing other US area objectives (notably area defense arrangements) and without the employment of unusual measures (i.e., economic sanctions or armed force).

The basic obstacles to be overcome in attaining this objective appear to be:

1. The unwillingness of Israel to accept a status as a finite Middle Eastern state; and the insistence of Israel on a special role as the center of a world-wide "nation" of Jewry. Prime Minister Sharett's speech before the Knesset on November 15, carried in the FBIS of November 16, is of particular interest in this regard.
2. The unwillingness of the Arab states to accept the permanent existence of an Israel, which they fear is intent on expansion.

The specific objectives which we might strive for at an optimum are:

1. Formal peace between Israel on the one hand and Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon on the other. (Settlements involving Syria, Saudi Arabia, Yemen and perhaps Iraq may prove even more difficult to obtain during the two year period.)

---

[2] Not printed.

[3] The ellipses in the quotation appear in the source text.

2. Permanent recognized boundaries for Israel after frontier rectifications.
3. Security on the border and cooperation in control of infiltration.
4. Termination of the Suez Canal blockade and of the Arab secondary boycott.
5. Agreements on repatriation and resettlement of refugees, with some implementation.
6. Agreement on compensation.

. . . .

8. A "Free Port" at Haifa for Jordan and free routes across Israel linking Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon.
9. Agreement on the Unified Development of the Jordan Valley.

We recognize that even if successful, we would be faced still with the implementation of many of the agreements reached, particularly those concerned with the refugees.

Concurrently, we would endeavor to progress on area defense arrangements through a series of bilaterals linking certain Arab states (especially Iraq) to Turkey and Pakistan. Success would contribute to an Arab-Israel settlement by instilling in the Arab states a greater sense of security and by deflecting their concentration on Israel. We would hope to expand the defense arrangements to provide for the effective use of Israel's armed forces. Whether it could be done within the two year period under consideration is questionable.

The prospects for the enterprise will be affected, of course, to a considerable degree by the inducements which may be held out by the US and other cooperating powers, especially the UK and Turkey. Among those which the US might extend are:

1. Continuation of our present policy of impartiality, especially continued refusal to be guided by Israel's unrealistic insistence that she be considered a favored bastion of Western civilization in the Middle East and as the center of world-wide nation of "Jewry."
2. Within the limitations of our constitutional processes, a firm public undertaking, to be given as part of a final settlement, that the US will use force if necessary to prevent alterations by force of the boundaries established and to preserve the security of Israel and the Arab states against each other. (It has not been determined yet whether it would be practical for the US to extend such a guarantee or whether it would be advisable from a world-wide policy point of view.)
3. Grant economic assistance to the Arab states and Israel, expanded in some cases, plus continued aid to the refugees.
4. An enlarged program of grant military assistance to certain Arab states and also military assistance to Israel.

Our tentative thinking is that the best tactics would be a combination of our present step-by-step approach with an across-the-board effort directed originally at securing an Egyptian-Israel agreement and then a Jordan-Israel agreement, utilizing the Trieste technique. The aspects of the Trieste technique which appear pertinent to the present problem are: (1) presentation to the parties by third powers of suggestions for a settlement; (2) no direct meetings between the parties; (3) subsequently efforts by the third powers to reconcile the conflicting positions. We recognize that these tactics run counter to the Israel thesis of direct talks.

We believe the first approach should be made to Egypt because: (a) she is less concerned over Israel and more likely to move; (b) her example, as in the case of Bunche's negotiations of the armistice agreements at Rhodes, would help induce the other Arab states to act; (c) the Suez Base Agreement and our aid programs place the US and UK in a particularly favorable position to influence Egypt; (d) simultaneous approaches to several Arab states would considerably increase the danger of publicity and of the Arabs uniting on an extreme stand.

We recall that the Arab League Council on April 1, 1950 voted to forbid any Arab state from negotiating or concluding a separate peace or a political, military or economic accord with Israel, and to expel any state which did so. The resolution was a product both of the war with Israel and of resentment, particularly Egyptian, at Jordan's plans to annex Eastern Palestine. Some further action of the League may be required before an Egyptian-Israel settlement is finally signed, or Egypt may feel able to ignore the resolution as was done by Jordan in May 1950 when the Political Committee of the League declared that Jordan's annexation of Arab Palestine was a violation of the resolution.

An illustrative time-table covering the first phase of our effort would read:

1. Development with the UK of the elements of a solution and agreement on strategy—January 1955.
2. Discussions with Turkey, concentrating on the part we hope it will play in the concurrent approach to Middle East defense arrangements—January 1955.
3. Frank and full discussions with Prime Minister Nasir of Egypt—late February or March 1955.
4. Depending on Nasir's receptivity, discussions with Israel—March or April 1955.
5. Approach to Jordan by the UK with the US in support role and with Egyptian support and advice if (as we hope) Egyptians show active interest in bringing about a settlement.

After the initial approaches to Egypt and Israel and once the process of reconciling the two positions is under way, the utmost flexibility would be maintained on the timing of approaches to the other Arab states. Although Egyptian views would be considered, they alone would not be allowed to control the timing of further moves.

As the addressees have been informed, we plan to determine with the UK in January the elements of a solution and tactics. Subsequently, we expect to work in the closest cooperation with the British. The problem of France gives us considerable concern since we feel her association with the venture would decrease its receptivity in the Arab states and yet, should she be excluded, France could exert considerable negative influence. It will probably prove advisable to keep her generally informed but we hope to avoid doing so at least until after the first approach to Egypt. We believe Turkey could play a particularly useful role in connection with the defense arrangements part of the over-all plan. As indicated in Deptel 548 to Ankara, we think it preferable for Turkey at present not to concern itself directly with the Arab-Israel problem. It will probably prove useful for Turkey to participate in any international commitment guaranteeing the final Arab–Israel boundaries. We would expect to keep the Turks informed of our thinking and of progress. Pakistan could possibly play a helpful part in connection with area defense arrangements.

The above line of thinking in NEA is highly tentative and should not be construed as a Departmental position. The views of the addressees on the entire problem are desired by despatch. It would be particularly helpful if, in addition to general thoughts, the reports covered the following:

1. The elements of a final settlement between the country of assignment and Israel, irrespective of assessments of the possibility of moving at this time. A detailed statement is desired referring where appropriate to the specific objectives set forth above.
2. The pros and cons of attempting an across-the-board settlement supplementing the present step-by-step approach.
3. General views on tactics including particularly the appropriateness of the Trieste technique.

    a. Would approaches to individual Arab countries singly be preferable to simultaneous approaches to two or more of the Arab countries?
    b. Under optimum conditions what timing would appear reasonable?
    c. What would be the reaction if the initial approach is made through Egypt?
    d. If Egypt did move towards a settlement, what would be the effect on the other Arab states of the Egyptian example and of Egyptian leadership?

4. What inducements from the US, UK or other outside countries would be most effective in the country of assignment? If economic or military aid is recommended, general estimates of the magnitude and duration would be helpful.

5. The usefulness of endeavoring to move forward simultaneously on area defense arrangements.

a. How could efforts in this field most effectively assist in progress towards an Arab-Israel settlement.

The Ambassador in Israel (Lawson) to the Department of State [1]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, November 30, 1954—8 p. m.

470. Prime Minister called British, French and myself independently to Jerusalem today to request three governments support of IG position in Bat Galim case before SC. He emphasized strongly very great importance SC decision to IG. After reviewing conditions of case, and particularly decision and final report of MAC to SC the Prime Minister described the proposed IG procedure as follows:

IG will endeavor to have SC pass resolution strongly and clearly defining rights of freedom of Suez passage for ships all flags and basing resolution specifically on Bat Galim case. This to be new resolution and not merely refer to September 1, 1951 resolution which Egypt has completely ignored in past. He felt that resolution reiterating terms of ignored 1951 resolution would be completely ineffective as Egyptians would grant it little respect in view of past experience. He is convinced that only clear, precise and strong resolution based on Bat Galim case and on principles clearly involved will settle basic issue and permit Israeli flagships pass unhindered through Suez in conduct Israeli foreign trade—an international right which should not be denied Israel alone among all nations.

He claimed that decision on this important principle clearly a responsibility of SC and was so recognized by its resolution September 1, 1951.

He said US Government had specific responsibilities as (a) permanent member SC, (b) as supporter September 1951 resolution, and (c) because of special relations with Egypt, especially economic aid commitments which made despite Egyptian attitude toward SC 1951 resolution. (I interrupted to point to fact this was commitment long before Bat Galim case. But he thought that due to fact we were so committed we had greater responsibilities with regard to Egypt's reaction to SC resolutions and actions involving Suez.) In connection effectiveness US action he pointed to recent sharp effect French démarche to Egypt over radio broadcasts condemning French action in North Africa, in which US support French position. (Of the latter I had no knowledge but made no comment.)

[1] Sent in two sections; repeated to Cairo, London, and Paris.

In describing seriousness of matter he pointed to greatly weakened position MAC would occupy due to failure of SC to back up recent MAC descisions on Bat Galim case; that SC itself would lose great prestige in eyes of world should it fail to face up to manifest responsibilities; Israel public would lose confidence in both MAC and SC; and that there would be widespread disappointment in US in that "it had deserted Israel". However, he was emphatic and expeditious in his statement that these opinions did not mean there was any "threat" on his part or that there would be any diminution in the IG's loyalty to the UN or to armistice commissions, with which it would continue to work "provided Egypt did not go completely mad".

However, he thought he should tell me that if the Security Council failed to meet its responsibility in the case and if, under instructions from my government I should at some future date complain to him about the failure of the IG to abide by Security Council resolutions or MAC decisions, I should not be surprised if he recalled this discussion to me. Apparently alluding to the logic and consistency of US action in supporting the IG position, he mentioned what he termed "the very strong position your government took with regard to Banat Yaacov" and the attitude the U.S. took at that time regarding strict adherence to Security Council resolutions by Israel.

He said that the IG based its case largely on terms of the September 1, 1951 Security Council resolution, and he read the complete text to me. He emphasized articles 5 to 8 inclusive. He said Egypt was citing in its defense Article 10 of Constantinople convention of 1888 which permitted Egypt to interfere with Suez shipping when essential to safety of shipping and the Canal. But the IG would cite other passages in this convention which definitely prohibited the seizure of ships or refusal of passage.

I inquired as to what he considered the likely decision of the Security Council. He said he was hopeful but had no tangible basis for opinion other than generally encouraging discussions with the U.S., British, and French delegates at UN of principles involved. He did not mention the probability of the Security Council referring the matter to ICJ but I feel he would consider that an unsatisfactory and unnecessary delaying procedure.

He said he had presented the IG case to Soviet Ambassador much as he had to the British Ambassador and me. He had done so because the Soviets are permanent members of the Security Council. He said, in confidence, he had talked as strongly and emphatically as he could in an effort to prevent a repetition of the Soviet veto to the New Zealand resolution on Suez transit early this year. He pointed out to the Ambassador the similarity in Soviet interest in principle involved in Suez and through Dardanelles. He received no impression or indication of Soviet reaction to his present request.

He expressed the very great hope that the U.S. would support the IG. I replied that I would report to my government this conversation, the several points he had emphasized and the very great importance he attached to the matter and to the benefits of effective support on our part. [2]

[2] Telegram 730 from Cairo, Dec. 3, reported that in recent conversations with an Embassy officer, several Egyptian Foreign Office officials had taken the line that the present case in the Security Council, which concerned the passage of Israeli flagships through the Canal, was entirely different from the 1951 Security Council case which only related to the passage of goods.

"Foreign Office officials have also stated categorically that, all other considerations aside, it is politically impossible for GOE to allow an Israeli flagship to transit Canal at this juncture. To do so would be catastrophic they say for RCC not only internally, but also in respect relations other Arab states whose Foreign Ministers presently gathered here in AL session are already aroused over Jerusalem credentials matter." Dept has no definite indication GOE intention, expects Egypt would now probably release crew and vessel and make some provision compensation perishable cargo already sold. Believed Dept could be helpful this repect. Doubted Egypt prepared permit Bat Galim or other Israel flag ship transit Canal.

Asked how Amb envisaged further action in SC, Eban replied he imagined Council would note such action by Egypt with gratification and voice hope this prelude to general compliance by Egypt with SC resolution 1951.

Byroade stated no question US position on freedom transit principle and Dept would endeavor encourage Egyptian compliance, preferably outside UN. However, since case now in UN would "try say right things" in Council discussion. End FYI.

For Cairo: Embassy Cairo requested inform Foreign Office Dept believes Egyptian action releasing crew and cargo and compensating for perishable goods already sold will be beneficial to Egypt, particularly for effect action would have international opinion. If such action to have greatest impact, should be taken at once, before SC resumes consideration issue.

Concerning release of ship itself, in view Egyptian decision not pursue suggestion to refer question to ICJ, Dept sees no way in which Egypt can prevent ship from transiting Canal without being in violation SC resolution Sept 1, 1951 (Embtel 714 Nov 29).[2] Believes Israel intends press issue eventually with additional test cases. Continue impasse will cause embarrassment United States and Egypt. Dept therefore hopes Egyptian decision re Bat Galim indicative intention relax restrictions generally on Israel shipping.[3]

For USUN: If IsraelDel shows signs pressing for early SC meeting, suggest USUN seek delay matters in line Eban–Byroade conversation.

301. Re Palestine in SC: Bat Galim. We favor use of consensus SC as best means handling Bat Galim case since we of opinion any resolution condemning Egyptian action or reaffirming September 1, 1951 resolution will be vetoed by Soviets. Consensus action will be entirely reasonable if, as we hope, Egyptians prepared release crew and ship and agree pay for cargo either prior to or during Council debate. If we can receive such undertaking from Egyptians we can actively oppose tabling of resolution. However if Egyptians will not release ship and crew and Israelis insist on resolution we must be prepared not only support but co-sponsor if necessary reasonable resolution: commending Chief of Staff of TSO for objective report to SC; reaffirming view that Egypt must comply with 1951 resolution; reaffirming Council support for actions and decision of MAC, UN observers, and Chief of Staff; and calling upon Egypt release crew and ship. If consensus is used our statement should be along lines above unless Egyptians have already indicated release of crew and ship, in which case our statement should follow lines above except it should endorse action of Egyptians as indication their intention not to remain in defiance of SC.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Politico-Economic Adviser in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Gardiner)

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 9, 1954.

Subject: Palestine Refugee Problems

Participants: The Secretary
Mr. Labouisse, Director of UNRWA
Mr. Gardiner, NEA

Mr. Labouisse explained the difficult problems of the UNRWA and emphasized the fact that, because of the high birth rate among the refugees, we should anticipate a continuation of a relief burden at about the current level of $25 million annually for some years to come. He indicated that programs in Sinai and the Jordan Valley would take some years to execute and could hardly serve to provide opportunities for much more than 150,000 of the refugee population. For the remainder, the best prospect lay in Syria and Iraq. It is impossible for a mass movement of refugees to go to these two countries which are unprepared both in their attitudes and in their resources to accept large scale refugee migration.

To break down Arab resistance, Mr. Labouisse suggested that the best approach would be some concessions on the part of Israel by (1) a token repatriation of refugees in certain areas of Israel (particularly in areas of Galilee not marked out for Israel under the Partition) and (2) the payment by the Israelis of substantial compensation which could only be done if Israel received a loan from abroad. This would require U.S. leadership. Mr. Gardiner pointed out that compensation claims did not match refugee needs in any great degree. Some of the largest claims lay with individuals who were already provided for. At the other end of the scale, there were thousands of needy refugees who had established no claims for compensation whatsoever. Mr. Labouisse thought that reactivation of the moribund PCC was called for.

The Secretary inquired as to whether Mr. Labouisse thought many of the Arab leaders were not keeping the problem alive as a political weapon against Israel and against the West. Mr. Labouisse thought this was true but that responsible Arab leaders, looking ahead, would agree privately that a great majority of the refugee population must find its future in Syria or Iraq.

The Secretary asked what would be the effect if relief were to cease. Mr. Labouisse felt that any such action could have only disastrous consequences and make for grave difficulties between the United States and the Arab world.

The Secretary indicated that the Palestine problem was one which he intended to give especially thorough study during the next two or three months, and that the Department would welcome Mr. Labouisse's views at any time.

In conclusion, the Secretary expressed his thanks and appreciation of the efforts made by UNRWA and Mr. Labouisse who had taken on such a thankless task and who deserved all the encouragement that could be given.

Memorandum by the Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan) to the Secretary of State

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, December 9, 1954.

Subject: Study of Arab-Israel Settlement

Attached is a study, for use at the [1] meeting with you on December 10, setting forth our preliminary views on how a final Arab-Israel settlement might be approached. We are preparing staff papers on specific aspects of the problem such as a security undertaking, frontier rectifications, Jerusalem, repatriation and resettlement of refugees, role of the United Nations, the price to the United States, etc.[2]

---

[1] At this point in the source text, an unknown hand inserted the following: "4:30".

It is our thought that after the meeting with you a definitive staff study would be drawn up. The study would then be used for the discussions with the United Kingdom in London which we suggest should take place about the middle of January.

The attached memorandum should be considered in conjunction with the Talking Paper[3] for your conversation with Sir Anthony Eden on December 16. This memorandum is, in effect, a summary of our present thinking on an Arab-Israel settlement. The Talking Paper deals more with the tactics you may wish to employ in your conversation with Sir Anthony.

ARAB-ISRAEL SETTLEMENT

Although concentrated re-examination confirms the complexities of the Arab-Israel problem and the fundamentally divergent interests which must be reconciled, the early months of 1955 appear as propitious a period to attempt a settlement as is likely to occur in the foreseeable future. This determination has been made with due recognition of the statement in the latest NIE estimate that the Arab states "will probably not be willing for some time to risk negotiation and compromise on the most important issues" with Israel. Secrecy is an essential element in such an approach. The leaders of the countries involved must be able to study our proposals carefully and with due deliberation. Premature public disclosure will only result in the public repudiation of any desire to seek a settlement. Furthermore, a breach of security could seriously endanger the now promising chances for the success of the negotiations for the unified development of the Jordan watershed—a major ingredient in any overall settlement.

Our study indicates that the best prospects for moving in a span of about two years from the present armistice agreements to formal peace are afforded by combining our present step-by-step approach with an across-the-board effort directed originally at securing an Egyptian-Israel agreement and then a Jordan-Israel agreement, utilizing the Trieste technique. An illustrative timetable covering the first phase of our effort would read: (1) development with the United Kingdom of the elements of a solution and agreement on strategy—January-February 1955; (2) discussions with Turkey, concentrating on the part we hope it will play in the concurrent approach to Middle East defense arrangements—February, 1955; (3) frank and full discussions with Prime Minister Nasir of Egypt—March–April, 1955; (4) depending on Nasir's receptivity, discussions with Israel—April, 1955. Contingent, to a certain extent, on developments in reconciling the Israel and Egyptian positions, the initial approaches might be made to Jordan and possibly Lebanon while negotiations for an Egypt-Israel settlement were going forward.

[2] On Dec. 9, Jernegan received a copy of the preliminary draft of a document entitled "Staff Study—Arab-Israel Settlement" from Parker T. Hart, Director of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs. (NEA files, lot 59 D 518, "Washington Talks, Jan.-Feb. 1955: Memos, etc. preceding actual meetings (Dated 11/15/54 thru 1/27/55)"

[3] Not printed.

We believe the first approach should be made to Egypt because: (a) she is less concerned over Israel and more likely to move; (b) her example, as in the case of Bunche's negotiations of the armistice agreements at Rhodes, would help induce the other Arab states to act; (c) the Suez Base Agreement and our aid programs place the United States and United Kingdom in a particularly favorable position to influence Egypt; (d) simultaneous approaches to several Arab states would considerably increase the danger of publicity and of the Arabs uniting on an extreme stand.

Among the specific objectives we could hope to achieve at an optimum are: formal peace between Israel and Egypt, Jordan and Lebanon (Syria, Saudi Arabia, Yemen and perhaps Iraq may prove more intractable); permanent boundaries for Israel after frontier rectifications; termination of the Suez Canal blockade and of efforts by the Arab states to enforce a secondary boycott; agreements on repatriation and resettlement of refugees with some implementation; agreements on compensation to the refugees; greater security along Israel's borders; a Jerusalem settlement; certain transit rights for the Arab states through Israel. If successful, we would still be faced with implementing certain of the agreements reached, particularly those concerned with the refugees.

Concurrently, we would endeavor to progress on area defense arrangements through a series of bilaterals linking certain Arab states to Turkey and Pakistan. Success would contribute to an Arab-Israel settlement by instilling in the Arab states a greater sense of security and by deflecting their concentration on Israel. Israel should eventually be linked to the defense arrangements possibly through a bilateral agreement with Turkey. It would be overly optimistic, however to hope that Israel's integration into the defense arrangements could take place within the two year period under discussion.

Within the limitations of our Constitutional processes, agreement on a government level should be sought beforehand on the following: (1) continuation of the present policy of impartiality; (2) a firm public undertaking to be given as part of a final settlement, and only in such a context, that the United States would take effective concerted action with the United Kingdom, France and Turkey both in and outside the United Nations, in the event of an armed attack by Israel or the Arab states on the other—such an undertaking is practically a sine qua non to breaking the psychological log jam which now prevents peace; (3) grant economic assistance to the Arab states and Israel expanded in some cases plus continued aid to the refugees; (4) a program of grant military assistance to certain Arab states and also some military assistance at the appropriate time to Israel.

France should not be associated with the initial undertaking, and should not be informed of the plan at least until after the approach to Egypt.

(NEA hopes that Francis Russell, who is due in the United States next week, may be assigned to work out our thinking on this problem. We hope he could have the aid and guidance of Ray Hare. We think that Russell and/or Hare should probably make the trip to London in January.)

The Ambassador in Saudi Arabia (Wadsworth) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET JIDDA, December 10, 1954.
No. 100

Ref: CA-3378, November 22, 1954

Subject: Prospects for Arab-Israeli Settlement

The Embassy's views covering the feasibility of undertaking steps at this time designed to bring about an Arab-Israel settlement are forwarded in accordance with the request made in reference airgram.

Prospects for Arab-Israeli Settlement

General Comments

Before actually tackling the problem of peace between the Arabs and the Israelis, every effort should be made to create a more favorable atmosphere. Any premature effort to seek a peace could conceivably touch off a fatal chain reaction of opposition. By creating an atmosphere of receptivity based on confidence in our general area objectives, we might eventually move the Arabs from their present intransigent position.

With regard to any approach to the problem it might be noted, by way of precedent, that there are still traces of bitterness in the U.S. between fellow American citizens over the civil war which ended nearly one hundred years ago. If the universal prosperity and opportunity in America have not been sufficient to heal the civil war wounds in a century, surely it is expecting too much that the Arabs and Jews will be able truly to bury the hatchet in the underdeveloped Near East in less than a decade. The most that can be hoped for in the foreseeable future is an uneasy modus vivendi by whatever name it be called.

Through 1948 the large powers dealt exclusively with the Arab leaders in an effort to reach a peaceful settlement of the Palestine issue. They failed. Today the entire situation has changed; a new force—i.e. the masses—has emerged which must be reckoned with in any attempt to solve either the general problem or that of the refugees.

Not only does bitterness lie deep in the hearts of the one million refugees, who have lost confidence in the U.N., the U.S., the U.K., and in their own Arab leaders, but those leaders themselves, once in a position to impose their will on the masses, also find this no longer possible. Today the U.S. must seek the support of the masses as a prerequisite to Arab-Israeli peace.

Thus rather than embarking on the time table outlined in reference airgram, it appears that the soundest approach would be to pursue a course designed to counteract the suspicions in the minds of the Arabs regarding U.S. aims and intentions, as well as its commitments to its principal allies, Britain and France, in and with respect to the Near East. Continued demonstration of our good intentions—e.g. our determination to treat Israel as just another state in the Near East—will help to create the required favorable atmosphere without which the seeking of specific objectives will be futile.

The degree to which the inducements described in reference airgram will enable us to prepare the population for a final settlement will largely depend on the extent to which we carry out our present policy of impartiality. Various degrees of economic, technical, and military assistance together with border security (Tripartite Declaration of 1950) have already been offered to the Arabs. Although such aid has been accepted in some cases, the familiar chant still rings in our ears that the U.S. cannot "buy the Arab support" with money alone.

It is believed, therefore, that, rather than risk refusal of premature peace overtures—something we can ill afford to do—emphasis at this time should be placed on creating the atmosphere of confidence and receptivity discussed above.

Saudi Arabia

The Sauds of Arabia are possessed of an adamant and long-standing hatred toward Zionism. There is nothing which suggests in the slightest a diminishing of this feeling.

The late King Abdul Aziz had no doubts about the absolute incompatibility of his principles and Zionism. He made this clear in 1938 to H. St. Philby who had posed the hypothetical question: What would the King do if Great Britain created a Jewish state and asked him to recognize it?

"The answer", Philby reports His Majesty as saying, "is obvious and very simple. If the Arabs—and there are many—refused to recognize the Jewish state, I, obviously, would be at their side. If, on the contrary, all of them recognized it, I, even if I were alone, would remain faithful to my opinions. The recognition of a Jewish state would be against my religion and my interests."

The late King's son and successor, Saud, is inbued with the same implacable feeling of opposition, intensified by the bitterness of the developments of recent years. In his speech of March 7 at the inaugural meeting of the Council of Ministers, he reminded his people: "All of us know that a cancer was established in the body of the Arab states . . . [1] That cancer is the Zionist Jews."

Crown Prince Faisal, who shares the King's bitterness and singleness of purpose, asked the Ambassador in a private conversation on December 4: "Why don't you let the Arabs and the Jews settle the Palestine problem themselves?" Asked, in reply, if he was referring to the United Nations, he answered: "Yes, if the United Nations would let us settle it between ourselves."

With regard to the involvement of the U.N. and the Western nations in the Palestine problem, it is apparent that King Saud has little or no confidence that their efforts will satisfy the Arab view of justice.

In the King's speech of November 12 which marked the first anniversary of his accession to the throne, he warned "those who have created this harmful disease (Israel) in the body of the Arab nation" that any remedy should not include "efforts to make peace between Arabs and Zionists . . . (which) cannot be realized."

The King and his government can conceive of peace between Arabs and Jews in Palestine, but are aware that their conception of peace—in substance a reunited Arab Palestine—is not within grasp at the present time.

In his public statement of September 7 to Mr. Alfred Lilienthal, the King described the conditions under which it would be possible to re-establish a state of affairs such as prevailed among Arabs and Jews "before and at the start of the British Mandate in Palestine."

1) "Return all the Palestine refugees to their homes, farms, and shops;

2) "Compensate them for all the things the Zionists caused to be spoiled, lost, ruined, or stolen;

---

[1] This and subsequent ellipses in quotations appear in the source text.

3) "Force the Zionists to carry out all United Nations decisions concerning the Palestine case; (Comment: It is difficult to reconcile this point with the King's reference to conditions before and during the early days of the Mandate.)

4) "Stop immediately the flow of Zionist immigration to this narrow strip of the Arab land."

Specific Elements of Consideration

Analysis of the political, economic and social conditions of Saudi Arabia fails to disclose any readily available elements or factors which could be exploited with a view to establishing a basis for final settlement between the Arabs and Israelis.

King Saud, who is emerging in the eyes of the masses as the leading defender of Islam, has pledged himself to use every available weapon to get rid of "the cancer in the body of the Arabs". Because of his uncompromising hostility to Zionism and his oft repeated promises in this vein, it is at present writing impossible to envisage his neutrality, let alone support, to attain peace.

In Saudi Arabia there are at best three elements worthy of consideration for exploitation purposes. These springboards are:

1) As the protector of the Moslem shrines, Saud accepts as axiomatic his special responsibility to undertake whatever is good for Islam.

In his special capacity as guardian of Mecca and Medina, it is logically conceivable that he might eventually be brought to realize that repatriating and resettling the largely Moslem refugees within favorably-adjusted Palestine frontiers and elsewhere in the Moslem World, and replacing the present unstable truce by an internationally-recognized peace settlement, would be to the overall interest of Islam as well as secure the Haram ash Sharif for the Moslems instead of exposing it to a fate similar to that of the Wailing Wall.

2) It is to Saud's personal advantage to take every step possible to increase the stability of his monarchy.

In this connection, we should continuously stress that the U.S. has consistently supported the Saud dynasty over the years. Then, by citing the coups in Egypt, Syria and Lebanon and by calling attention to the recent events in Bahrain and the fact that elements are developing in Saudi Arabia which might eventually jeopardize the security of his throne, we might bring him to realize that he must have our support and backing in order to retain his power. From this point, he should be led to believe that by joining with us in reducing tension in the Holy Land, he would by the same stroke increase his prestige and the stability of his monarchy.

3) Saud's tolerance regarding Christianity and Judaism (as opposed to Zionism).

Because Jerusalem is sui generis, world wide spiritual forces could be brought to bear to seek, find and implement an international solution of the problem of its future apart from general settlement of the Palestine problem.

During his meeting with Lilienthal, Saud distinguished between Judaism and Zionism and stated, "we . . . fight only Zionists. . . ." Earlier in 1954 Saud met with five Christians and one Moslem, members of the Moral Re-Armament movement, and disclosed a strong interest in the program which stresses moral values and de-emphasizes materialism. By turning first to the Jerusalem problem and placing stress on its spiritual aspects, it may be possible to enlist Saud's support for cooperation between Moslems and Christians first in the solution of that problem and, eventually, in the solution of the major problem of Palestine.

Conclusion

The above clearly shows the Saudi leaders' deep feeling of antagonism toward Israel. Their rigid attitude provides little area for compromise. They reject peace, and, as Saudi Arabia's concern with most of the specific problems involved (border rectifications, refugees, Jordan Valley development, etc.) is indirect, there is no real compulsion on its leaders to compromise for settlement of any of these points.

CONFIDENTIAL PRIORITY TEL AVIV, December 10, 1954—4 p. m.

494. Prime Minister separately saw British Ambassador and myself today at his request in Tel Aviv. He said purpose of conversation was that there would be no misunderstanding IG point of view re developments Bat Galim case.

Sharett said IG sees rather abrupt interruption SC proceedings as interim stage but is anxious US and GB know IG aim. Israel representative told by British, and he believes by US representative UN, best course was to have time to consider matter and take soundings Cairo and possibility influence Egypt release vessel.

He termed release proposals by GOE vague and he emphasized Israel's aim and main point of issue is to establish not a special privilege, but Israel's undisputed right to have its ships pass through canal under its own flag. He expressed the hope that US diplomatic efforts in Cairo were pointed this direction.

Israel, he said, would be patient and was not protesting reasonable delay for purposes mentioned but could not wait indefinitely; IG would not drop issue and did not want to let its cause go by default. He hoped US Government could let him know in a few days how Cairo démarche was progressing. There should be no misunderstanding, he repeated, as to Israel's aim, release of ship, crew, and cargo as a unit to proceed to its destination. He was grateful for Cairo effort but will welcome information as to how matters stand. IG will be guided by this information as to its next move.

[1] Repeated to London and Cairo.

In answer to my query that IG then had no objection to the postponement, if for a reasonable time, Sharett agreed but said again Israel would not stay quiet indefinitely. If too many days went by, Israel would have to ask for another meeting of SC, but in reply to my question as to what he thought was a reasonable time to receive information, he indicated that about middle of next week should produce reply from British and US and IG would be guided by report on Cairo thinking. Eban, he said, would also be in touch US representative at UN.

In brief exchange of views following above, he said IG felt GOE could explain giving in on this case to their public on basis of being up against a combined and solid international front and acknowledgement freedom of passage was part of bargain for British evacuation. I made no comment. Regarding my reference to Arab League meeting in Cairo and possible relation to desired delay by GOE, Sharett said IG not completely blind to tactical considerations but could not accept a dragging out of case to better Egypt's position if that was to remain intransigent.

The Ambassador in Egypt (Caffery) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET
No. 1145

CAIRO, December 11, 1954.

Ref: Dept's CA-3378, Nov. 22, 1954.

Subject: Arab-Israel Settlement.

The following comments are in response to the five points set forth at the end of the Department's instruction under reference.

1. The elements of a final settlement between the country of assignment and Israel, irrespective of assessments of the possibility of moving at this time. A detailed statement is desired referring where appropriate to the specific objectives set forth above.

Egypt is far less concerned over the Palestine question than any of the other Arab States. GOE objectives for a final settlement would probably boil down to the following points:

a. A land connection between Egypt and Jordan. Present GOE thinking on this point seems to involve the cession by Israel of a strip cutting across the southern and eastern Negev from Aqaba to the Mediterranean eliminating any Israeli port on the Gulf of Aqaba. (The Egyptians seem to feel that Jordan would not be interested in port facilities at Haifa if the Gaza corridor were achieved.)

b. Disposal of the Gaza Strip and its refugees.

c. In general any settlement would have to have minimum acceptability to the other Arab States.

2. The pros and cons of attempting an across-the-board settlement supplementing the present step-by-step approach.

Egypt would probably go along with an across-the-board settlement acceptable to the other Arab States but would not attempt one in the face of their opposition. It is believed that even the suggestion of an across-the-board settlement at this time would frighten the GOE and probably diminish their enthusiasm for the step-by-step approach. At the moment they are fully occupied in eliminating the Moslem Brotherhood and will be very timid for a time even about new moves in the step-by-step approach.

3. General views on tactics including particularly the appropriateness of the Trieste technique.

The Trieste technique would seem to be the most hopeful way of attacking the situation. In considering this technique, however, the following thoughts may open up a useful supplementary tactic.

The Palestine refugees are a key group which must be taken into consideration in seeking a settlement. Not only is it true that their assent is essential, but it is equally true that the Arab Governments would have the utmost difficulty in negotiating and agreeing to as reasonable a settlement as the refugees themselves could accept. Consequently it is suggested that a hand picked and cooperative "Palestine Goverment" might be created to replace the shadowy and dubious existing "Government." Such a Palestine Government could negotiate on behalf of the Palestinians and would be able to make bolder and more realistic decisions than could the Arab Governments. Moreover, the latter probably could not, or at least would not feel obliged to sound off publicly with intransigent tirades in the name of the refugees against any settlement such a Government might agree to.

There are a considerable number of Palestinian refugees who accept the fact of the existence of Israel and who believe that it would be possible to select and set up such a Palestinian Government if the US and the UK were prepared to give them strong support. This would help meet the refugees' need for social cohesion. Such a move, in addition to the benefits already indicated, would also have the advantage of neutralizing to some extent those individuals such as the ex-Grand Mufti of Jerusalem who seek to sabotage every constructive move. Finally, it would help to diminish the feelings of hostility and distrust directed against the present Arab Governments by so many of the refugees.

a. Would approaches to individual Arab countries singly be preferable to simultaneous approaches to two or more of the Arab countries?

The possibilities inherent in the above suggestion could be explored in Egypt first. If the idea appears promising these preliminaries will open the way to further exploration, particularly in Jordan. In any event, approaches to individual Arab countries singly would appear to open better prospects than simultaneous approaches.

b. Under optimum conditions what timing would appear reasonable?

Assuming that the first approach would be made to Egypt as the most receptive country, the timing should be gauged in the light of the GOE's internal situation (particularly vis-à-vis the Moslem Brotherhood) and the state of its current relations with the other Arab States. The latter is important if absolute secrecy can not be maintained.

c. What would be the reaction if the initial approach is made through Egypt?

Other considerations aside, the GOE would probably accept being chosen for the initial approach.

4. What inducements from the US, UK or other outside countries would be most effective in the country of assignment? If economic or military aid is recommended, general estimates of the magnitude and duration would be helpful.

In the case of Egypt economic and military aid are recommended as inducements. A major problem is to help Egypt overcome its inferiority complex vis-à-vis Israel, particularly in the sphere of military defense. This would probably require two or three years of carefully selected military aid.

5. The usefulness of endeavoring to move forward simultaneously on area defense arrangements.

Efforts to move forward on area defense arrangements should be continued since there is hope that Egypt will come along in time and quite possible start a rush to get on the band-wagon. By giving the Arab States a sense of participation, and consequently of importance, their intransigent attitude towards Israel may be partially sublimated as their feelings of frustration diminish.

The Ambassador in Syria (Moose) to the Department of State

TOP SECRET
No. 227

DAMASCUS, December 13, 1954.

Ref: Dept's CA–3378, November 22, 1954.

Subject: Arab-Israeli Settlement

Summary

The Embassy is in general agreement with the specific objectives of an Arab-Israeli settlement set forth in the Department's CA–3378. Syria is not at present in a position to be influential on this problem, and in any case is unlikely to be attracted by the items listed in CA–3378 as inducements to undertake negotiations. The most effective inducements for Syria to undertake discussions would be (1) prior settlement with Israel by Jordan as well as Egypt; and (2) evidence that Israel will negotiate in good faith and recognizes that she must make some concessions in order to reach a settlement. On the question of timing, it would appear advisable not to broach the subject except with the United Kingdom until there has been time to evaluate (a) the consequences of the execution of the Moslem Brethren in Egypt; and (b) the degree of progress on area defense arrangements made during the Turkish Prime Minister's forthcoming visit to Iraq. Because of the complexity of the problem, and the harm to United States objectives if an attempt at settlement should fail, it is believed that, once a course of action along the lines of CA–3378 has been adopted, the United States, in conjunction with the United Kingdom, should be prepared to employ "unusual measures" if necessary to attain our objective.

TOP SECRET PARIS, December 17, 1954—11 a. m.

Dulte 4. Eyes only Hoover. Secretary and Eden discussed Arab-Israel problem at dinner last night. At Secretary's request Shuckburgh gave brief résumé his impressions resulting from his recent trip. (With Eden's acquiescence, he gave us informally thirteen-page report, [1] as yet uncleared by Foreign Office, summarizing his personal impressions on Arab–Israel dispute and suggestions re a possible settlement. This is being airpouched to Ken Scott, S/S for appropriate distribution.)

[1] Not printed. The text of Shuckburgh's report, entitled "Notes on Arab-Israel Dispute", is in S/S-NEA files, lot 61 D 417, "Alpha Volume 1".

After some further discussion, it was agreed that a U.S.-U.K. WG would be constituted about mid-January to discuss and endeavor to agree on plan for seeking Arab-Israel settlement. It was recognized that absolute secrecy is imperative and that British Embassy would discuss with Department where WG should meet and cover plan to avoid any publicity.

Jebb raised question of whether French should be informed of this exercise, but it was agreed that this would be unwise. Similarly, there was query whether Turks should be brought in, but it was agreed that in first instance talks must be confined to U.S.-U.K. and that absolute secrecy was imperative. It was recognized that at some subsequent stage others might be brought in to assist in a settlement, but this would depend on results of U.S.-U.K. conversation.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan)

SECRET [WASHINGTON,] December 17, 1954.

Subject: United States Policy Toward Arab-Israeli Relations

Participants: Ambassador Abba Eban, Israel
Mr. Reuven Shiloah, Minister, Embassy of Israel
Acting Secretary Herbert Hoover, Jr.
Deputy Under Secretary Robert Murphy
Acting Assistant Secretary John D. Jernegan

Ambassador Eban began by referring to his previous conversations with the Secretary last Summer and Fall and said he had called this time to offer "reflections on familiar themes". These themes were (a) the security of Israel and (b) peace in the Middle East.

Since his last meeting with the Secretary in October, the Ambassador said there had been developments which were both encouraging and discouraging. On the negative side, Israel had noted no concrete steps to change the adverse situation created by America's policy of arming the Arabs and by the Anglo-Egyptian base agreement. Furthermore, Israel had noted a speech by the Syrian Prime Minister once again threatening Israel's extinction. Other discouraging developments included a recent turbulent period on the Israeli-Egyptian frontier, the seizure by the Egyptians of the Bat Galim, the Alexandria trial of Jews charged with espionage and a development of Arab League thinking looking toward a defense organization linked with the West but excluding Israel.

On the encouraging side, the Ambassador said Israel notes evidence that the Western Powers have a better realization of the reality of the threat to Israel's security. Many members of both parties of the British House of Commons had recently expressed their sympathetic understanding of Israel's exposed position. In the same debate Foreign Secretary Eden had made a very encouraging statement regarding the action Britain would take if necessary under the Tripartite Declaration of 1950 and Britain's policy of maintaining a military balance between Israel and the Arab States collectively. It was true that Mr. Eden's statement did not constitute a contractual obligation, but since he had made it publicly, Israel hoped he would be able to make it directly to the Government of Israel as well. Knowing the close cooperation among Britain, France and the United States on this subject, Israel hoped that all three countries could make similar official statements. There were other indications of the realization in several countries that Israel has a case in this security question. The Ambassador had had a conversation with the French Prime Minister who had shown his realization that the problem is real. A recent speech by the Solicitor General of the United States had likewise been encouraging. He had made four points:

1. That the Secretary of State was evaluating our policy in the Middle East;
2. That we understood Israel's feeling of insecurity:
3. That we thought we could take measures to allay these feelings; and
4. We hoped Israel would cooperate to this end.

This statement had had a calming effect in Israel by showing that the problem was not being ignored. At the same time, it had increased the expectancy of the people of Israel that something would be done.

The Ambassador interjected that some American newspapers attributed this increased awareness of Israel's problem to "non international factors". This was wrong.

In the Ambassador's view there were three immediate needs: First, to arrange a security guarantee to Israel; second, to maintain a balance of military strength between Israel and the Arab States; and third, to include Israel in any defense arrangements in the area. He thought we might be approaching the time when these needs could be resolved and Israel's security could cease to be the main subject of discussions between us.

He hoped that the resolution of this security question could be handled separately and eliminated before we went on to deal with the broader question of Arab-Israel relations. Israel had been pleased to note the great emphasis being placed in American statements on "peace" as a major objective of the United States in the Middle East. Israel would welcome any constructive and prudent initiative to solve some of the outstanding problems between herself and the Arabs. In this connection, the Israel Government had been interested in the recent visit of Mr. Shuckburgh and in his thinking on area matters. However, he had not said very much that was new or hopeful. The Ambassador feared that unless Britain and the United States had some further thoughts on the subject, we might get onto the wrong track. If we (presumably Britain and the United States) were to make suggestions calling for unilateral sacrifices by Israel, if Israel had to give up any of her extremely limited territory or repatriate refugees (thus creating an internal security problem), this would not lead to a solution but merely to a "running fight" between Israel and the United Kingdom and the United States, and to the maintenance of the status quo. The Ambassador hoped we would not adopt such a line.

Mr. Eban added that Israel did not wish to seem negative and thought she could be helpful in working toward a solution. Recently Mr. Eden had asked the Israeli Ambassador in London for suggestions. Ambassador Elath had been instructed to reply that Israel could offer a free port at Haifa for Jordan in return for a relaxation of the Arab boycott. This could be done even ahead of a general settlement. He had also suggested that Israel might arrange to pay compensation for lost refugee property in return for a lifting of the Egyptian blockade in the Suez Canal. (The blockade itself, by increasing Israel's financial costs contributed substantially to Israel's inability at present to pay compensation.) These were merely illustrations, Ambassador Eban said, and he was not authorized to make any proposals but settlement on the points he had mentioned would have great effect. He suggested that we tackle items of this kind rather than the extremely emotional territorial question.

In the meantime, the Ambassador went on, it was important to keep Arab-Israel relations from getting worse, especially in the case of Egypt. The Alexandria trial and the Bat Galim case held serious dangers. The Ambassador observed that he knew of the efforts we were making. He left the implication that we should do even more. He made the further remark that several maritime nations had indicated to Israel that they considered the Bat Galim case as of direct concern to them because it involved the right of freedom of navigation of international waterways.

The Acting Secretary thanked Ambassador Eban for his observations and proceeded to comment as follows, reading carefully from notes prepared by NEA for this purpose:

The Secretary's personal review of the Arab-Israel situation goes forward. It is to the interest of all concerned that these studies be pursued with due deliberation. He did not wish at this juncture to comment on Sir Anthony Eden's remarks. We are pleased to note that the situation as regards public opinion in Israel now appears somewhat calmer.

We have consistently held to the position that any military assistance which we may grant to the Near East states must be delivered under conditions whereby the security of Israel is not threatened.

We are continuing our efforts to persuade Egypt to conform with the SC resolution regarding the right of transit of the Suez Canal for all ships of all flags. We feel that there is a good chance of ultimately obtaining what Israel and other maritime states desire if we can have a quiet atmosphere to negotiate the gradual relaxation of the Egyptian restrictions. Israel should not crowd the issue and put Egypt publicly "on the spot".

We maintain our serious concern over the situation along Israel borders. We have in the past spoken to Egypt on this matter, not without some effect. We are prepared to do so again if we feel that the situation warrants such action.

Our Ambassador in Cairo has informally indicated to the Egyptian Government that Egypt's handing down death sentences to the accused eleven Jews could seriously affect the security situation in the area.

The Ambassador agreed that public opinion in Israel is now calmer. He attributed this partly to increased Israeli confidence in the UNTSO under the "statesman-like leadership" of General Burns, partly to the success of Ambassador Lawson in getting across the broader aspects of American-Israeli relations and partly to recent American statements such as that of the Solicitor General and the assurance that Israeli's problems had the personal attention of the Secretary of State.

He also agreed that the frontiers are more tranquil at this moment and said he did not suggest any new efforts by the United States in Egypt in this regard. He emphasized that an important element in the improvement on the frontiers is Israel's own contribution through a very purposeful policy of non-retaliation. Israel had shown restraint despite continued Arab provocations. Under the previous Israel security policy, these Arab provocations would have produced reprisals. The present policy of restraint is that of Prime Minister Sharett. There are elements in Israel which favor a more militant attitude. Ambassador Eban hoped the West would so act as to give support to the moderates.

The Ambassador concluded the substantive part of the conversation by referring to two instances in which Arab intransigence not merely blocked good relations between Israel and the Arab States themselves but also between Israel and third countries. One of these involved Israel's desire to save money by buying Iranian oil. Her relations with Iran, although not fully normal, were friendly and Israel could buy oil from that country. The difficulty was that Egypt probably would prevent its passage through the Suez Canal. The second instance involved a sale of twenty spitfire aircraft by Israel to Burma. The sale had been completed and the aircraft transferred to the Burmese flag. They were to have been flown to Burma by a British firm but those which had begun the journey had been held up in Beirut and Baghdad simply because they had originally come from Israel. This showed the extent to which the Arabs carried their boycott.

The Acting Secretary assured the Ambassador that he would report to the Secretary on their conversation as soon as Mr. Dulles returned.

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs (Jernegan)

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 17, 1954.

Subject: Proposed Talks on Arab-Israeli Settlement

Participants: Mr. Harold Beeley, British Embassy
NEA—Mr. Jernegan

Mr. Beeley came in with instructions from Mr. Eden to follow-up the talk Mr. Eden had with Secretary Dulles on December 16 on this subject. Specifically, Mr. Beeley was instructed to discuss the location, timing and "Cover plan" for the proposed Anglo-American discussions. He said it had been agreed by the two Secretaries of State in Paris that these talks should be held in early or mid-January.

I stated our views as follows:

1. Mid-January would suit us very well; we would probably not be ready to talk before that time.
2. Washington seems to us to be preferable to London as a location. It would lend itself more readily to a plausible cover story.
3. The cover story should be that Mr. Shuckburgh was coming to Washington for a general review of Middle Eastern problems with his new opposite number Assistant Secretary George Allen.[1] This would seem very natural and it would not be noticed if Mr. Shuckburgh actually spent most of his time talking to specialists in Arab-Israel Affairs. I explained further that we were thinking of assigning Francis Russell to full-time work on this project and that he would probably have the part-time collaboration of Ambassador Raymond A. Hare. If we sent those two men, both closely identified with the Arab-Israel question, to London, it would be very likely to arouse speculation.

Mr. Beeley agreed that there seemed to be much to be said for this argument and he promised to cable it to London. He observed however that the Foreign Office might find it very difficult to spare Mr. Shuckburgh for a trip to Washington. He had already been away from his desk some seven weeks and, unlike the American Assistant Secretary, he did not have a deputy who could take over in his absence.

Since it had a direct bearing on the substance, although not the procedure, of the operation we were discussing, I gave Mr. Beeley the essence of the presentation made by Ambassador Eban of Israel in his call on Acting Secretary Hoover this afternoon. (See separate memorandum of conversation.)[2] I pointed out that the Ambassador's statements seemed designed to warn us against making overall peace proposals and specifically against suggesting any territorial cessions by Israel.

The Chargé in Israel (White) to the Department of State[1]

CONFIDENTIAL TEL AVIV, December 17, 1954—2 p. m.

514. Substance Deptel 334[2] was given orally to Prime Minister this morning. Sharett expressed his appreciation for the Department's message and said that he had one observation to make. If you look back at the evolution of the Suez Canal problem, you will conclude that if Israel had done nothing the result would have been a complete hardening of the Egyptian position and a complete embargo on the movement of goods between Israel and the east. Instead, Israel by recurrently raising the issue of free passage had succeeded in making some progress, as evidenced by the two-way movement of goods between Israel and East Africa, an achievement which the Egyptians in the current debate point to with pride. If the Suez Canal issue had not been raised from time to time this progress would not have been possible.

In reply I said I had been impressed by the views recently expressed by his colleagues (Lavon and Herzog) that an accommodation between Israel and Egypt was the key to an ultimate Arab-Israel settlement, but that on the other hand, I was equally impressed with the thinking of our people in Cairo and Washington that while no one could be sure that such an accommodation was possible, it was clearly impossible as long as issues between the two countries were receiving so much publicity and public attention in each country. If progress were to be made it would have to come during a time period when Israel disappeared from the headlines of the Egyptian press and vice versa.

Sharett replied that if the Bat Galim could proceed on through the canal, we "could be assured of a long period of lull".

In closing the Prime Minister referred to the fact that while the Department's message held out hope of the release of the Bat Galim, it contained no expectation that the vessel would be permitted to proceed through the canal. He then said that if nothing happened he "guessed that Israel would have to raise the case again in the Security Council next week".

He cited the reference made by the Department to arousing the emotions in Israel and said "You can imagine the emotions here which would be directed at me if we were to allow the Bat Galim case to dangle in air".

Memorandum Prepared in the Department of State [1]

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 20, 1954.

CURRENT STATUS OF JORDAN VALLEY NEGOTIATIONS

When Ambassador Johnston left the Near East in June, 1954, the position was substantially as follows:

1. Both the Arabs and the Israelis had indicated acceptance of the principle of unified valley development, recognizing the larger benefit to be derived from a comprehensive approach. In general, the attitude on both sides was constructive.
2. No agreements had been reached with either side, Ambassador Johnston having deliberately left the situation as fluid as possible in order to permit further negotiation. However, during the second-round discussions, the positions of the respective parties on main issues had been clarified; and on most of the essential questions there had been indications that differences between the parties could ultimately be reconciled.
3. One of these was the question of using Lake Tiberias as a central storage facility for the Valley. While the Arabs were reluctant to put their water into an Israeli lake, it was understood that they would agree to do so provided the total plan allowed for "safety" storage on the Yarmuk and adequate neutral controls over the distribution of water from Tiberias. Ambassador Johnston indicated that he felt these Arab conditions could be met.

The Israelis were even more reluctant to utilize Tiberias as a central reservoir because they felt that "international supervision" of the Lake would impinge upon Israel's sovereignty. Their position revealed the political hazard of any undertaking which might be interpreted as a relinquishment of Israel's control over Tiberias. However, they stated that if and when necessity dictated the use of Tiberias as part of a total valley program, they would be favorably disposed, provided the control mechanisms were not of such a nature as to affect Israel's sovereignty. Ambassador Johnston indicated that he thought this condition could be met.

(On the question of storage in Tiberias, it might also be said that both sides perceive certain physical arguments in favor of using the Lake. Jordan needs Tiberias water to accommodate its total area of irrigable land; Israel needs fresh water from the Yarmuk to help compensate for upstream waters which now dilute the saline waters of the Lake itself.)

[1] Drafted, by George Barnes of the Foreign Operations Administration; Oliver L. Troxel, Jr., of the Office of Near Eastern Affairs; and Arthur Z. Gardiner, Politico-Economic Adviser in the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs.

4. Another question involved the nature of "international supervision" over the valley system. Here the difference in position was essentially one of degree, the Arabs being inclined toward a more elaborate mechanism and the Israelis toward minimal controls on a technical level. Both parties, having accepted the principle of unified valley development, however, were willing to concede that some form of control machinery would be necessary. Ambassador Johnston indicated that he believed a method of control acceptable to both sides could be evolved.

5. Another of the main issues involved Israel's right to divert water from the basin to other irrigable areas. Arab opposition was very firm on this point and there was no overt concession during the discussions; but Ambassador Johnston received substantial private indications that the Arabs would ultimately ease their opposition sufficiently to make an agreement possible.

Israel, on this point, was, of course, insistent, claiming that the arbitrary limitation of Israel's share of the River to the lands inside the basin would deprive her of the right to use those waters more economically and beneficially elsewhere.

Ambassador Johnston had taken the initial position that once a division of the waters was accepted, Israel's right to use her share where she pleased could not be contested. He maintained this position throughout the discussions.

6. The most difficult question which evolved during the second-round discussions was that of dividing the available waters. The Arabs indicated that they would accept for Jordan an amount approximating that proposed in the main report, plus additional increments for Lebanon and Syria. The Israelis agreed to the Arab proposals for Lebanon and Syria but refused to accept the main figures as the basis of division between Israel and Jordan. Ambassador Johnston, after exploring the question on both sides, indicated that he would, in due course, return with a proposal which might be acceptable on both sides.

Finding the basis for such a water division has therefore been the primary preoccupation of Ambassador Johnston and his staff since his return. During this period, considerable effort has been made to obtain precise information with respect to water availability and needs; and, quite independently of the Johnston mission, land classification surveys in Jordan have progressed virtually to the point of completion. When available as promised by mid-January, Baker/Harza land classification maps will definitively and finally furnish the factor of irrigable areas that can be economically served by Jordan/Yarmuk waters. Unit requirements have been determined by Baker/Harza and confirmed by Criddle. They call for 1260 cms per dunam in areas north of the Wadi Zerka, and 1588 cms per dunam south of the Wadi Zerka, as the requirement for diversion of river water. These quantities make allowances for losses in transit. They will support the perennial cropping patterns proposed in the UNRWA report on the Valley's potential.

Also, in general, certain significant developments have occurred since Mr. Johnston's June visit. Arab interest in the plan is undiminished. Jordan Valley development was advocated by the Lebanese delegate in a speech to the General Assembly. Jordanian interest in reaching an accepted division of the waters has been stimulated by recent Israeli diversions from the lower Jordan. In recent private conversations, the Jordanian Foreign Minister has voiced his desire to see work on the Jordan-Yarmuk put in hand. In Israel, our Embassy has reported that Israeli officials have come to realize that an agreement is not only desirable but necessary if Israel is to proceed with its own water development plans, and escape from its predicament at Jisr Banat Yaqub.

Taken together, these developments appear to indicate a reasonably favorable climate, and it is Ambassador Johnston's plan to bring his mission to a conclusion during the forthcoming talks in January and February.

In the meantime, Embassies may follow one or several of the following preparatory lines:

1. In Jordan, the Baker/Harza findings as to unit water requirements should be made known through technical channels. At the right time, WRD might plant the idea that the consultative services of Calvin Davis and R. Johns might be useful to Jordan during the Johnston negotiations.
2. Embassy Damascus should use its ingenuity to encourage Syria to be constructive. Syria will most likely get all the water Syria has requested, and Yarmuk power, although the KWHs that Syria might secure are still undertermined.
3. In Egypt, Selim should be advised of the water requirements per dunam indicated above. Continuing support of the plan on both the technical and political levels is of utmost importance.

As to tactics with respect to Ambassador Johnton's visit, it has been determined that Baker/Harza will submit an interim report to the Jordanians no later than January 15. This will indicate to the Jordanians the areas of land that can be economically served in the Jordan Valley by Jordan-Yarmuk waters and the water requirements necessary for this purpose. Despatch of this information, which will be hand carried to Amman, is timed for January 15. To make it as clear as possible to the Arabs that these figures have not been influenced by discussions with the Israelis, Mr. Johnston will let a week elapse before he follows with his visit to the area. This is now timed for January 23. A stop at an intermediate point, probably Athens, has been fixed to enable conferences to be held between Mr. Johnston and Mr. Labouisse of UNRWA. Thereafter, Mr. Johnston is scheduled to visit Israel from January 26 to February 1 to endeavor to obtain tentative but not final Israel agreement to an allocation of water and Israeli acceptance of a control plan and storage of Arab waters in Lake Tiberias. Then Mr. Johnston will meet with the committee, either in Beirut or Cairo, and explain our proposals for the division of waters and their control. Time would then be allowed for transmission of the views of the Arab committee to the heads of the various Arab governments. Mr. Johnston would call at Beirut, Damascus, Amman and Cairo. The purpose of these calls would be to obtain final acceptance of "heads of agreement" on the political level. If such agreements are secured, Mr. Johnston would return to Israel to secure Israeli agreement to a similar document. Mr. Johnston's other commitments require him to be in the United States on February 26.

Editorial Note

In accordance with the desire of Secretary Dulles and Under Secretary Hoover to keep the distribution of communications about the proposed Arab-Israel settlement to an absolute minimum, the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs, John D. Jernegan, suggested in a memorandum dated December 20 to the Director of the Executive Secretariat, Walter K. Scott, that the distribution of these materials within the Department of State should be restricted to the following: three copies for the Executive Secretariat to enable it to maintain a basic file as well as to provide the Secretary and the Under Secretary with individual copies of each document; one copy for the information of Deputy Under Secretary of State Robert Murphy; and three copies for the Bureau of Near Eastern, South Asian, and African Affairs to enable it to maintain a basic file as well as to provide one copy for the joint use of the Assistant and Deputy Assistant Secretary and one copy for the files of Francis H. Russell. To facilitate the distribution of these materials, Jernegan also suggested that these documents be captioned "Limited Distribution—Alpha". (NEA files, lot 59 D 518, "Washington Talks, Jan.-Feb. 1955: Memos, etc. preceding actual meetings (Dated 11/15/54 thru 1/27/55)")

Scott approved Jernegan's suggestions and issued appropriate instructions on December 21. (Memorandum by Walter K. Scott to Paul E. Pfeiffer, Chief of the Telegraph Branch, and to Walter H. Anderson, Chief of the Records Branch, Office of Communications and Records; S/S–NEA files, lot 61 D 417, "Alpha Volume 1") On December 21, Scott also approved the transmittal of instructions to the Chiefs of Mission at Amman, Ankara, Baghdad, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Jerusalem, Jidda, London, and Tel Aviv informing them that thenceforth any communications regarding the Arab-Israel settlement should be classified Top Secret, captioned Limit Distribution, given the code word "Alpha", and should receive minimal circulation within their missions. Suggested sending Bat Galim through Canal under guard (on some pretext such as need for further examination) before releasing it. Said US has reason believe if Bat Galim allowed transit Canal we could be reasonably assured long period lull without other test cases.

Ambassador Hussein replied had anticipated subject of conversation and telephoned Nasir explaining US difficulties including commitment to 1951 resolution. He had strongly advocated release of ship. Believed could assure US Nasir will be able within relatively short time effect release of ship to return to original point of departure. Hoped action would remove reason for US support Israeli case by US and other powers. Emphasized in view current public feeling impossible permit ship transit Canal. Said propaganda leaflets have accused Nasir carrying out secret peace negotiations with Israelis.

Francis H. Russell to the Chargé in the United Kingdom (Butterworth)

TOP SECRET WASHINGTON, December 21, 1954.

DEAR WALT: I am enclosing a letter which I would appreciate your passing along to Shuckburgh unless, of course, you see some objection in this procedure, in which case I hope you will give him its contents orally.

Our thinking at this date is still so fluid with respect to our tactics on the problem that I thought it unwise to be more specific than I was in the letter to Shuckburgh. I will make every effort to keep you au courant as, hopefully, we make some progress toward formulating our views.

Both the Secretary and Mr. Hoover have voiced to me personally their great concern that as near complete secrecy as possible be maintained. As one means toward this end we have set up the "Alpha" code word to limit distribution of all documents pertaining to the project. The code is, however, only for our own use and we are not informing the British of it.

It was good seeing you again in London and I am looking forward to an early renewal of our discussions.

Sincerely,

FRANCIS H. RUSSELL

P.S. I expect shortly to be designated as a Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary for Public Affairs. This is purely for cover purposes. Ostensibly I will be advising Carl McCardle on foreign policy aspects of USIA programs.

[Enclosure]

DECEMBER 21, 1954.

DEAR SHUCKBURGH: Secretary Dulles yesterday on his return from Paris filled me in on the discussions there and asked me to assume the responsibility here in the Department of reviewing the Israel-Arab relations problem, of formulating some ideas for bringing about a settlement, and of discussing with you the development of a common approach. Raymond Hare, until recently our Ambassador in Lebanon and a long-time expert in the area, presently Director General of our Foreign Service, has been asked by the Secretary to assist on this problem and at a later date may be able to devote more time to it. George Allen has just assumed his new responsibilities as Assistant Secretary for Near Eastern, South Asian and African Affairs and I will be going over the problem with him this coming week.

It is impossible to state now just how soon I will be in a position to meet with you. I would hope it might be sometime between the latter part of January and the middle of February. One factor that weighs heavily with us is that nothing be done which will endanger Eric Johnston's visit to the area between January 23 and February 26 on the Jordan development project.

In any event I will be in communication with you early in January either through your Embassy here or through Walt Butterworth concerning the progress of our thinking here and a date for our discussions.

I have read with great interest your memorandum report to Sir Anthony on your impressions from your trip through the area. I was impressed by how effectively you went to the heart of the problem.

We share your strong desire to maintain absolute secrecy on this effort and have taken the most stringent measures to prevent leaks. It is already evident that it is too much to hope for 100% success. Just this morning the Minister of the Israel Embassy here went on a fishing expedition concerning general reports of UK-US diplomatic activities on this front. Walt Butterworth will undoubtedly have informed you of the contents of a telegram[1] in which we informed him of the general response we are making to inquiries.

---

[1] In telegram 3295 to London, Dec. 18, the Department of State informed the Embassy that, in response to inquiries about American and British diplomatic activities, the Department intended to reply that the United States had been and would continue to be in constant communication with other governments interested in promoting security and lessening tensions in the Middle East, and that, pending the achievement of a formal peace, the United States was constantly searching for arrangements that would help resolve specific problems and would contribute to the area's economic development. (684A.86/12-1854)

I am thoroughly aware of the well-nigh insuperable difficulties that lie ahead of us but it is obvious that the surest road to a defeat would be inaction.

I am looking forward to seeing you early in the New Year,

Sincerely,

FRANCIS H. RUSSELL

No. 208

Ref: Department's Instruction CA–3378, November 22, 1954

Subject: Approach to Settlement of Palestine Problem

The Department's very interesting instruction on an approach to settlement of the Arab-Israel problem has been read with high interest. It is germane and timely. Due to a series of circumstances, a reply was not prepared prior to the Regional Economic Conference for the Near East held at the American Embassy in Damascus on December 14–16. At that meeting, an extensive discussion of the Palestine problem took place. Possible approaches in general, specific inhibiting factors and problems in individual countries were reviewed. Because of that discussion, participated in by Ambassador George Allen, this reply will be brief. With respect to any approach at this time, it is believed that an effort may well be made during the next six months. With the settlement of attention-catching disputes in other places, failure to approach this one which now looms so acute would raise questions on the sincerity of our motives and on the quality of our international leadership.

There are certain minima which are precedent to a successful outcome. Some should be devised or contrived before an approach is made; some should be ascertained in advance, or at least estimates made. As viewed from Jordan, they are:

(1) Determination or taking the risk that Israel will, in fact, conclude peace;

(2) Realization by Israel that she must agree to the principle of repatriation even realizing that few, if any, Arabs would return and remain in Israel;

(3) Some sort of compensation for Arab properties;

(4) Promote and engender Egyptian leadership in the matter, even to the extent of pushing her to a separate position in the Arab world;

(5) A determined and coordinated course of action on the part of the United Kingdom and the United States, and the virtual exclusion of the French.

These are mostly self-explanatory and self-evident. In addition, there are matters which could greatly help in concluding a settlement even though they might not be indispensable. They are:

(a) Progress on the negotiations for the unified development of the Jordan Basin. Such progress would assist in the settlement and should be undertaken prior to the general approach. Knowledge that a general approach were to be undertaken might result in holding off in order to use the Unified Plan as a pawn in the bargaining.

(b) The adherence of Iraq to the Turkish-Pakistan Pact. The indirect effect of this move on the members of the Arab League should be wholesome.

(c) Quiet on the Israeli-Jordan borders. It would be most desirable that Israel be informed that acts of armed forces or armed retaliation will be viewed severely—perhaps in a financial sense. Moreover, the Israeli posture on the border may be carefully watched during negotiations as an earnest of good intentions of Israel, which has been known to stir up the border just as the Arabs were about to take a constructive step.

With respect to timing, it is desirable that the negotiations of Ambassador Eric Johnston proceed even decision with the British of a timetable [sic]. That much probably would become known to the Israeli Government. Certainly there should be no thought of approaches to any government on this matter until after Ambassador Johnston has given the Arabs and the Israelis an opportunity to accept international cooperation or to refuse it. Further, it would be desirable to wait for a few months or at least wait until the Spring of 1955 in the hope that Turkish discussion with the Iraqis may result in adherence of Iraq to the Turkish-Pakistan axis. At that time it would be desirable to again scan the troubled Palestinian horizon for a timetable.

As far as Jordan is concerned, inducements either of the carrot or the stick type are not likely to be of much avail. The Jordanians are concerned primarily with questions of principle, face, and hurt pride, and economic or military aid granted or withheld would not loom large in their evaluation. Indirect influence with the British certainly would be stronger than from the United States directly but that alone does not suffice. Some public indication that Israel might have just perchance been slightly wrong at some time would be of far more value than large sums of aid. With respect to financial aid, per se, quite apart from the influence it might have on Israeli public opinion, the Jordanians (at least, the daily press) would be quite as happy to see aid to Israel reduced as for Jordan to receive it. Inducements to a settlement are primary points (2) and (3) mentioned above as precedent. All others fall into a secondary and more negotiable category. There are indications that some of the principal leaders of Jordanian political life are becoming weary of the present situation and have expressed privately the realization that some end or settlement must eventually ensue. Always, however, there is in the background, either voiced or taken for granted, that repatriation must be recognized and compensation given.

With respect to the specific objectives cited in the reference instruction, my reaction is as follows:

1. This appears sound. If there is to be any peace ever, it must be between Jordan and Israel. Leading to that peace, Egypt could be and probably should be the primary mover and force. In that connection, such matters as economic or grant military assistance which would have little influence in Jordan might be of importance to Egypt. With Egypt–Jordan–Israel more or less concurring, it is felt that Jordan would welcome Lebanon's participation.
2. Permanent recognized boundaries for Israel will be a difficult pill for Jordan to swallow, but it is implicit in any form of peace and can probably be arrived at. There will need to be certain frontier rectifications.
3. The problem of security on the border and control of infiltration has an inflated value in the eyes of the protagonists. If there is supposed to be a peace arrangement, both sides should be willing to forget the problem of infiltration and accept a certain amount of crossing and sheep stealing as fulfillment of the remark by the Frenchman that human nature is still very prevalent.
4. Termination of the Suez Canal blockade and of the Arab secondary boycott can likewise be achieved. Should we not also seek termination of the Arab primary boycott? Certainly it should be a considerable inducement to Israel to have Arab markets open for her produce and transit trade and, likewise, Jordan should welcome (even though she may not promptly realize the advantage of) the Israeli market for agricultural products from the Jordan Valley. This could, of course, come at a later date.
5. This has elsewhere been discussed.
6. This has elsewhere been discussed.
7. I am not sure what is meant by this caption. Other Arab States apparently would be glad to have Jerusalem internationalized, but Jordan would not. It happens that the Old City of Jerusalem is a part of Jordan under the sovereignty of its King. This doesn't mean so much to the Jerusalemite, especially the Christian inhabitants, but I can foresee no successful negotiation for peace which attempts in any way to divide Jerusalem from the Kingdom of Jordan. Such being the case, there would appear to be no place for an international authority limited to the holy places. The holy places are pretty much in the Old City, unless one includes Nazareth, parts of Galilee, etc., and this is probably not meant.

The weapons ban is worthwhile if the Israelis will agree to it together with United Nations supervision and inspection on Mt. Scopus which the Jordanians now feel, probably correctly, has been fortified. Mt. Scopus, be it not forgotten, is the key to the tactical situation of the whole of the Jerusalem area.

8. Desirable.

9. As pointed out above, it is desirable that agreement on the unified development of the Jordan Valley be achieved before over-all negotiations. If not, then it should form a part of the over-all peace since an old-fashioned water fight could break out at any time. It need not be a condition precedent to settlement, but its absence certainly could be a disturbing factor.

With respect to the final point on page 2 of the Department's instruction, it would be fruitful to achieve progress on area defense arrangements and a series of bilaterals linking certain Arab States. Turkey and Pakistan deserve primary consideration. This is from the positive standpoint. If Egypt can be brought along not to oppose such arrangements, it will be desirable. On the negative approach, Arab activity looking towards implementation or reinforcement of their common defense mechanism should be frustrated as it can only be an impediment to our larger aims.

The Department's tentative thinking that the best tactics would be a combination of a present step-by-step approach with an across-the-board effort would appear to be the only one at this time. It must be realized that there have not been many steps, and those have been purely within the field of policy decisions by the United States. We do not appear to have succeeded in causing any steps to be taken by either Israel or the Arabs. Nevertheless the improved, if still unspoken, attitude extant may be considered part of this approach. An across-the-board arrangement in combination with the British will be desirable although the actual negotiating techniques may require a long series of steps and bargainings. In this respect, it is to be recalled that although the word is nowadays applied primarily to the Jew that the Arab is also a semite.

It is agreed that the first approach should be to Egypt. In this respect I believe Egypt's demonstrated determination in dealing with the Moslem Brotherhood in the face of dismay and reluctance in other parts of the Arab world may well promote a position of Egyptian leadership and determination. There are those who judge that, on the contrary, Egypt may feel that having gone so far in the Moslem Brotherhood matter, she would not wish soon to again earn Arab displeasure. My personal experience with dictatorial-type governments would lead me to place credence in the former interpretation.

Concerning tactics, the Trieste technique would appear as appropriate as any. Certainly direct contact with Israel cannot be made by Jordanians—that is, if they wish to be alive the next morning. Even the Trieste technique poses problems for the Jordan Government and will probably increase the peril to the Prime Minister's life. Indirect negotiations through either the United States or Great Britain would arouse too many troubles to be entertained. Probably approaches to individual Arab countries would be preferable to simultaneous approaches to two or more of them. However, it would seem that if the initial approach is to Egypt and Israel appeared at all fruitful then Jordan should be brought into the matter fairly promptly. It might also be desirable to bring Lebanon in subsequently, especially if it appeared that she might be a moderating influence. If Egypt would move towards a settlement, her example and leadership would be very important. Jordan dares not move alone or initially, but possible might follow Egyptian leadership. The question of timing as set forth appears a little too soon and a little too precise. As previously indicated, it should be delayed for the Unified Plan and Iraqi defense discussions.

There would not appear to be inducements which might be offered by the United States or the United Kingdom to Jordan. Those inducements must come from Israeli willingness to move. Assurance of a longer term aid program would be some inducement, but it must be supplement to, and could not replace, the matters of principle.

With specific regard to Jordan, I do not see that moving forward simultaneously on area defense arrangements would be of much assistance. It might be of help with respect to Egypt, Iraq, etc. However, the negative effect of movement toward a common Arab defense scheme could be of importance and should be avoided.

SECRET PRIORITY CAIRO, December 23, 1954—3 p. m.

828. ReDeptel 932. [2] Riad has just informed Embassy officer he is drafting telegram to be sent Loutfi today instructing him to notify in writing all members SC that crew Bat Galim will be released January 1 and that ship "will be released".

---

[1] Repeated to Tel Aviv and London.

[2] Document 940.

Riad explained that crew will be released at kilo 95 Gaza strip and ship will be released "to the south". Asked if any instructions had been sent to Ambassador Hussein re question passage through Canal Riad said "there is no need since he knows our position that no Israeli vessel can go through Canal". [3]

For your information: Idea sending ship through Canal under guard or other pretext was suggested when case first arose, was considered at highest level and rejected. Since then no GOE official here has ever given slightest indication of possibility changing this decision which Embassy considers final. End for your information.

Re cargo Riad emphasized that delay its removal entirely due Israelis.

Re SC meeting Riad guessed it would take place first days January and added "let's dispose of this question then".

Memorandum of Conversation, by the Deputy Under Secretary of State (Murphy)

SECRET WASHINGTON, December 30, 1954.

Subject: Bat Galim

Participants: Mr. Eban, Ambassador of Israel
Mr. Shiloah, Minister of Israel
Mr. Murphy—G
Mr. Jernegan—NEA
Mr. Popper—UNP

The Israeli Ambassador called late today to request the United States to make a further approach to the Egyptian Government in the matter of the Bat Galim. He stated that the Israelis had the impression that the Egyptians would deposit the crew of the Bat Galim on the Gaza-Israeli border on January 1, despite the unwillingness of the Mixed Armistice Commission to assist in their repatriation. Before that step was taken, the Ambassador hoped we would inform the Egyptians that if the Bat Galim were moved through the Canal, even with an Egyptian crew, and released to its own crew at the north end for completion of its voyage, Israel would abandon the current proceedings in the Security Council and would refrain for some period of time from attempting to pass Israeli vessels through the Canal. Thus while Israel was not relinquishing its legal rights, a period of relaxed tension would ensue during which a general accommodation of this and other issues would be sought, perhaps with the assistance of third parties. However, if the Egyptians refused to permit the completion of the Bat Galim's voyage Israel would be compelled to continue to press for its rights both in the Security Council and by attempting to exercise its right of free passage with its shipping.

Mr. Jernegan mentioned a reported Egyptian broadcast indicating that the Bat Galim had been released by an Egyptian prize court on condition that it would not enter the Suez Canal Zone and stating that the ship could weigh anchor on December 29 or 30 with its entire crew. Messrs. Eban and Shiloah thought that even if this information were accurate, it should not be impossible for the Egyptians to find some way to release the ship to the north.

I agreed to convey the proposition made by the Israelis to the Egyptians, although I pointed out that the Egyptian Government might very well believe it more important to cater to domestic opinion by preventing the Bat Galim's transit than to end Security Council debate and future controversy by passing the ship through the Canal.

(Approach to Egyptians conveyed in Department's telegram 994 to Cairo, December 30.)[1]

The Secretary of State to the Embassy in Egypt[1]

SECRET PRIORITY WASHINGTON, December 30, 1954—7:25 p.m.

994. Please urgently convey following to GOE: Department has been reliably informed (in your discretion you may say officially informed by Israeli Embassy) that if Bat Galim were moved through Canal, even with Egyptian crew, and released to its own crew at Northern end, Israel would drop present Security Council complaint and would refrain for some period of time from attempting to pass Israeli vessels through Canal. We think this worthy serious consideration by GOE since it would assure them of quiet period.

[1] Repeated to New York and Tel Aviv.

Otherwise we fear continued harmful discussion in Security Council and repeated incidents similar to that of Bat Galim.

FYI Israelis understand Egyptians plan to put crew across Gaza frontier January 1 and say if this is done it will greatly impair possibility quiet settlement this matter. We realize unlikely Egyptians will respond this suggestion but believe important we do not neglect any possibility avoiding further dispute. Request prompt report. End FYI.

SECRET PRIORITY CAIRO, December 31, 1954—3 p. m.

867. Re Deptel 994. [2] Message conveyed Riad this morning persuasively as possible. He said it was out of question for ship to pass canal in any way explaining "Arabs already attacking GOE because we are releasing crew and ship and accusing us of trying make peace with Israel and we are not ready for more demonstrations against us. Release ship is contrary law of February 6, 1950 and we are making big concession to try reduce tension".

Riad then told Embassy officer in confidence he had sent Loutfi instructions yesterday to announce in SC on January 4 that cargo can be taken thru canal on any neutral ship and to suggest that arrangements for release of ship be discussed in MAC. Riad added he hoped all GOE legal arrangements for release ships would be completed by January 10. Re crew Riad said he will go ahead with plans release them at kilos 95 tomorrow. Gohar trying hard to get foreign newsman attend release but having little success due holidays. In absence neutral witnesses Gohar will get crew members sign document acknowledging release to prevent "any Israeli trick".
